DRUMMOND (Robert Hay), a distinguished prelate of the English church, was the second son of George Henry, the seventh earl of Kinnoul, by a daughter of Robert Harley, earl of Oxford. He was born in London Nov. 10, 1711, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was removed to Christ-church, Oxford, of which college he became student. About 1736 he entered into orders, and in 1737 was appointed chaplain to the king. In 1748 he attended his majesty abroad, and preached a thanksgiving sermon before him on the victory at Dettingen. On his return he was installed prebendary of Westminster; and in 1748 made bishop of St. Asaph. In 1761 he was translated to Salisbury, and had the honour to preach the coronation sermon before their majesties that year; soon after which he was removed to the see of York. He died in 1776. His grace married the daughter of Peter Auriol, of London, merchant, who died in 1773. He had several children, of whom three only survived him. His grace published six occasional sermons, which were collected; with an excellent Letter on Theological Study, in one vol. 8vo. 1803, with his Life prefixed.

DRURY (Robert), an English seaman, who in 1702 was shipwrecked on the coast of Madagascar, where he remained 15 years. After his return to England, he published a very exact and curious account of that island, 8vo. 1729.—Biog. Brit.

DRURY (Dru), an English naturalist, supposed to have been descended from sir Dru Drury, in the reign of Elizabeth. He was for several years a jeweller in the Strand, London, and a fellow of the Linnean society. He was a great collector of subjects on natural history, and wrote three volumes on insects. After his death, three large stones, of an oval shape, upwards of two inches long, and an inch deep, weighing each near two ounces, were found in the neck of the bladder. He died in January 1804.—Monthly Mag.

DRUSILLA (Livia), the daughter of Germanicus and Agrippina. She was guilty of incest with her brother Caligula, who declared her his heiress and successor. She died A. D. 38, aged 29.—Suetonius.

DRUSIUS (John), a learned divine, was born at Oudenard in 1555. He was educated at Ghent and Louvain, and learnt Hebrew at Cambridge. He became professor of the Oriental languages at Oxford, from whence he went to Franeker, where he became professor of Hebrew, and died in 1616. He wrote several learned works. His son John, who died in England at the age of 21, was uncommonly versed in the learned languages, particularly the Hebrew.—Bayle, Wood's A. O.

DRUSUS, the son of Germanicus and Agrippina. He was in great favour with Tiberius for some time, and held several great offices; but by the misrepresentations of Sejanus, that emperor ordered him to be starved to death, A. D. 93.

DRUSUS (M. Livius), a famous Roman, who revived the Agrarian law in a time of discontent. He also proposed that the Latins should be made Roman citizens. He was murdered as he was entering his own house by the adverse faction, B. C. 190.—Un. Hist.

DRUSUS (Nero Claudius), the son of Tiberius Nero and Livia. He was adopted by Augustus, and was brother to Tiberius, who afterwards became emperor. He behaved with great bravery in the wars in Germany and Gaul, and received the honour of a triumph. He died B. C. 9, aged 30.—Ibid.

DRUSUS, the son of Tiberius and Vipsania. He distinguished himself by his courage in the provinces of Illyricum and Pannonia, and filled some of the highest offices of the state; but having struck Sejanus, he out of revenge caused him to be banished, A. D. 23.—Ibid.

DRYANDER (John), a mathematician and physician of Wetteren, in the county of Hesse. He was a professor at Marburg, where he died in 1560. He wrote several books on physics and mathematics, which were once held in great esteem.—Morari.

DRYDEN (John), an English poet, was born at Aldwincle, in Northamptonshire, of an antient family, in 1631, and educated at Westminster school under Dr. Busby, from whence he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge, in 1650. He proceeded to the degree of M. A. and in 1657 removed to London, where he wrote the year following an elegy on the death of Cromwell; and at the restoration he complimented the king by a poem, entitled Affrea Redux. In 1665 he married lady Elizabeth Howard, daughter of the earl of Berkshire. On the establishment of the royal society, he was chosen one of the first members. In 1662 appeared his first play, called The Wild Gallant. Soon after the fire of London he engaged with the king's theatre for an annual stipend, on condition of furnishing a certain number of plays in each year. On the death of sir William Davenant he was nominated poet laureat; and about the same time he obtained the place of historiographer royal, with a salary of 200l. a year, and a butt of wine. His eminence as a dramatic writer exposed him to the envy of several rival wits: the duke of Buckingham held him up to ridicule in the character of Bays in The Rehearsal: and the earl of Rochester being offended at some things in an Essay on Satire, written jointly by our poet and lord Mulgrave, caused the former to be cudgelled by some hired ruffians as he came home from a coffee-house. At the accession of James II. Dryden turned Roman catholic, and, like most converts, endeavoured to defend his new faith at the expence of the old one, in a poem, called The Hind and Panther, which was admirably answered by Prior and Montague in The Country Mouse and the City Mouse. At the revolution he lost his posts, and was succeeded by Shadwell, whom Dryden keenly satirised under the name of Mac Flecknoe. In 1695 appeared his Translation of Virgil, which alone would immortalize his memory. He died in 1700, and was buried in Westminster abbey, where is a monument to his memory, erected by Sheffield, duke of Buckingham. His works are too numerous to be particularly distinguished. His critical prefaces are admirable: and his poetry is correct, harmonious, and strong, particularly his satires. As a dramatic writer he chiefly excelled in tragedy. He had three sons: Charles became usher of the palace to pope Clement XI. and was drowned in 1704; John wrote a comedy, called The Husband and his own Cuckold; and Henry entered into a religious order abroad. Though Dryden was addicted to astrology, yet the story of his predicting the fate of his eldest son is untrue.—Johnson's Poets. Malone's Life of Dryden.

DUAREN (Francis), a learned Frenchman, who was professor of civil law at Bourges, where he died in 1559; aged 53. His works were printed complete at Lyons in 1579.—Moreri.

DUBOCAGE (Marie Anne le Page), an ingenious French lady, who was a member of the academies of Rome, Bologna, Padua, Lyons, and Rouen, and born in the last mentioned city in 1710. She early distinguished herself by a taste for poetry, and translated Pope's Temple of Fame into French. In 1746 she obtained the first prize given by the academy at Rouen, and not long after translated Milton's Paradise Lost into her native language, which was followed by the Death of Abel in the same manner. In 1749 she produced a tragedy, called The Amazons, which was well received. The Columbiad, an epic poem on the discovery of America, is, however, her greatest work. She also published her Travels through England, Holland, and Italy, in the epistolary form. She died in August 1802.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUBOIS (Simon), a painter, was born at Antwerp. He settled in England, and painted portraits, battles, and cattle, in a good stile. He died in 1708.—Pilkington.

DUBOIS (William du), archbishop of Cambray, cardinal, and prime minister of France, was born in the Limosin country, where his father was an apothecary. He became valet to the superior of the college of St. Michael at Paris, where he studied, and entered into orders. Being appointed private reader and preceptor to the duke of Chartres, afterwards regent duke of Orleans, he ingratiated himself into his favour by aiding him in his pleasures, and was rewarded in 1693 with the rich abbey of St. Just. Afterwards he became counsellor of state, and in 1717 was sent to England as minister plenipotentiary to sign the triple alliance. On his return he was made minister and secretary of state, and obtained the rich archbishopric of Cambray, which gave great offence to all who venerated religion. This offence was heightened in 1721, when the pope advanced him to the cardinalate. The next year he was appointed first minister of state. He died in 1723, aged 67. He was a very debauched character, and a consummate hypocrite.—Moreri. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUBOS (Dorothea), the wife of a musician, was the daughter of Richard earl of Anglesea, by Anne Sympton, to whom he was married when only Mr. Annelley, in Devonshire, but on coming to his title he disowned both her and her daughter. Many ineffectual attempts were made to recover her right, and she has published her story in a novel, entitled Theodora, 2 vols. 1770. She also wrote a musical entertainment, called The Divorce, &c. She died at Dublin in 1774.—Hay's Female Biography.

DUBOS (Charles Francis), a French divine, was born in 1661, and became dean of St. Luçon, where he died in 1724. He wrote the life of M. Barillon, bishop of Lu-con, and continued the celebrated Luçon conferences in 17 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

DUBOS (John Baptist), a French writer, and abbot of Refons, was born in 1670, and died in 1742. He is principally known by his Critical Reflections on Poetry and Painting, 2 vols. 12mo a work of considerable taste. He also wrote some political pieces, and a Critical History of the Establishment of the French Monarchy in Gaul.—Ibid.

DUBRAW, or DUBRAVUS SCALA (John), bishop of Olmutz, in Moravia, born in Bohemia, and died in 1553. He wrote a history of Bohemia with fidelity and accuracy, printed at Frankfort in 1688.—Moreri.

DUC (Fronton du), a French jesuit, born in 1558, and died at Paris in 1624. He published an edition of St. Chrysostome, and a tragedy on the Maid of Orleans.—Id.

DUC (John le), a Dutch painter, born in 1636 at the Hague, where he became director of the academy of painting. He was the disciple of Paul Potter, and equalled him in painting animals.—Pilkington.

DUCAREL (Andrew Coltee), an eminent antiquary and civilian, was born at Caen, in Normandy, in 1713, and educated first at Eton, and then at St. John's college, Oxford, where he took his degree of I.L.D. In 1757 he was appointed keeper of the Lambeth library, after which he obtained the situations of commissary and official of Canterbury, and of the peculiar of St. Catherine's. He published Anglo Norman Antiquities, folio; History of St. Catherine's, near the Tower; a History of Croydon; History of Lambeth Palace, &c. He died in 1785.—Biog. Brit.

DUCART (Isaac), an eminent flower painter, born at Amsterdam in 1630, and died in 1697. He generally painted on satin.—Pilkington.

DUCAS (Michael), the author of a history of the Grecian empire, from the reign of Andronicus the elder, to the fall of that empire, printed at the Louvre in 1649.—Moreri.

DUCHAL (James), an eminent dissenting minister, born in Ireland in 1697, and educated at Glasgow, where he obtained the degree of D.D. He became pastor of a congregation at Cambridge, from whence he removed to Ireland, and succeeded Mr. Abernethy, first at Antrim, and lastly at Dublin. He died there in 1761. Three volumes of his sermons were printed in 1764.—Biog. Brit.

DUCHANGÉ (Gaspard), a French engraver, born in 1660, and died in 1757. He executed many fine pieces, which are held in high estimation among collectors.—N. D. H.

DUCHAT (Jacob le), a learned Frenchman, born at Metz in 1658. He was a protestant, and at the revocation of the edict of Nantes fled to Berlin, where he died in 1735. He published editions of the Menippean Satires, Rabelais's works, and assisted Bayle in compiling his dictionary.—Moreri.

DUCHE DE VANCY (Joseph Francis), a French writer, born at Paris in 1668, and died in 1704. He wrote the sacred dramas of Jonathan, Absalom, and Deborah, and some tragedies, also religious sonnets.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUCK (Arthur); a learned civilian, was born in Devonshire in 1580, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford, after which he was elected fellow of All Souls. He was made chancellor of London, and master of the requests. He died in 1649. He wrote, 1. Vita Henrici Chichele; 2. De Usu & Authoritate Juris civilis Romanorum in Dominis principum Christianorum.—Prince's Worthies of Devon. Wood.

DUCK (Stephen), an English poet, was originally a thresher. Some of his poetical essays being shewn to queen Caroline, she took him under her patronage, allowed him a small pension, and got him ordained. Duck afterwards obtained the living of Byfleet in Surry, but in a fit of melancholy drowned himself in 1756. He printed a volume of poems.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DUCLOS (Charles Dineau), historiographer of France, born at Dinant, in Brittany, in 1705. He became perpetual secretary to the French academy, and died in 1772. His principal works are, 1. Memoirs on the Manners of the 18th Century, 1 vol. 12mo.; 2. The History of Lewis XI. 3 vols. 12mo.; 3. The Confessions of Count .—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUDITH (Andrew), a learned divine, was born at Buda, in Hungary, in 1533. His merit procured him a bishopric, and he was sent to the council of Trent. Afterwards he turned protestant, resigned his bishopric, and married. He died in 1589. He wrote several books on polemical divinity, physics, and poetry.—Moreri.

DUDLEY (Edmund), a celebrated statesman, was born in 1462, of an ancient family in Staffordshire, and educated at Oxford, from whence he removed to Gray's inn. He was introduced when young to the court of Henry VII. with whom he became a favourite. In 1494 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Grey, lord Lisle. In the parliament of 1504 he was speaker of the house of commons, and two years afterwards obtained the stewardship of Hastings, in Sussex. On the king's death he and Empson were sent to the Tower, and in 1510 beheaded on Tower-hill. While in confinement Dudley wrote a piece entitled The Tree of the Commonwealth, which is still in MS.—Biog. Brit.

DUDLEY (John), son of the above, and duke of Northumberland, was born in 1502. Henry VIII. created him viscount Lisle, and knight of the garter. He also obtained several grants of church lands. In the next reign he was made earl of Warwick. On the execution of sir Thomas Seymour, he was appointed lord high admiral, and in 1551 he was created duke of Northumberland. He effected a marriage between his fourth son, lord Guildford Dudley, and lady Jane Grey, eldest daughter of the duke of Suffolk, and a branch of the royal family. On the decline of the king's health he prevailed upon him to set aside his sisters, Mary and Elizabeth, from the succession; in favour of lady Jane: and on the death of Edward, he caused his daughter in law to be proclaimed. But an insurrection was raised in favour of Mary, who was proclaimed in London, and the duke was executed Aug. 22, 1553. His son and daughter-in-law also fell victims to his inordinate ambition.—Biog. Brit.

DUDLEY (Ambrose), son of the above, was born about 1530. He was condemned with his father, but received a pardon. In 1557 he went with his two brothers to the Low Countries, and served in the Spanish army before St. Quintin. In the next reign he was created earl of Warwick. He died of a wound in defending New-Haven against the French, in 1589.—Ibid.

DUDLEY (Robert), earl of Leicester, another son of the duke of Northumberland, was born about 1532. On the accession of queen Elizabeth he rose rapidly into favour, and had numerous honours and places heaped upon him. Her majesty proposed him to Mary queen of Scots for a husband, but that unfortunate princess rejected him with disdain. Dudley appears to have indulged the ambitious idea of sharing his sovereign's bed; and to effect it, he is said to have murdered his own wife. In 1564 he was created earl of Leicester with great pomp. About 1572 he married privately lady Douglas, but never acknowledged her as his wife. However he had by her a son called Robert, whom he used to call his base son. He afterwards married the countess dowager of Essex, and finding lady Douglas intractable to his proposals of a separation, is said to have taken her off by poison. In 1584 a book was printed, entitled Leicester's Commonwealth, which was a severe attack upon his public and private character. The year following he was appointed governor of the protestant Low Countries, at the request of the inhabitants; however, his proceedings there did not satisfy the queen, and he returned to England the same year. In 1588 he was made lieutenant-general of the army assembled at Tilbury. He died the same year, and was buried at Warwick.—Ibid.

DUDLEY (sir Robert), the son of the earl of Leicester, by the lady Douglas Sheffield, and born at Sheen in Surrey, in 1573. His father, though he treated him as illegitimate, left him the bulk of his estate after the death of his uncle Ambrose. In 1594 he made a voyage to the South Seas. In 1605 he commenced a suit to prove his legitimacy, but the countess dowager of Leicester filed an information against him for a conspiracy, on which he went to Florence, where the grand duke appointed him chamberlain to his wife, the archduchess of Austria, sister to Ferdinand II. That emperor created him a duke of the holy Roman empire, on which he assumed the title of duke of Northumberland. He drained the morals between Pisa and the sea, by which Leghorn became one of the first ports in the world. He died at Florence in 1639. He wrote several things, the chief of which is, Del Arcano del Mare, &c. 1630.—Biog. Brit.

DUPRENY (Charles), a French comic writer, was born at Paris in 1638, and on account of his resemblance to Henry IV. was said to have been his grandson. He had a place at court, and was very ingenious in laying out gardens. On losing his place he turned dramatic writer. He died poor, in 1724. His works make six vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

DUGARD (William), a schoolmaster, was born at Bromfrove, in Worcestershire, in 1606, and educated at Sidney college, Cambridge. He was master of Merchant Taylors' school, and wrote several useful school books. He died in 1662.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DUGDALE (sir William), an English antiquary, was born in Warwickshire in 1605, and educated at St. John's college, Oxford. In 1628 he was made a pursuivant at arms, and devoted himself greatly to the study of antiquities. He was with king Charles I. in several engagements, and in 1642 was created M. A. by the university of Oxford. On the ruin of the royal cause he compounded for his estate, and went to London, where he completed his Monasticon Anglicanum, in 3 vols. folio. At the restoration he was made norroy, and afterwards garter king of arms, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. He died in 1686. Besides the above works he wrote, the History of Warwickshire, of which an enlarged edition appeared in 2 vols. folio; the History of St. Paul's Cathedral; the History of embanking and draining of Fens and Marshes; Origines Juridicales, or historical Memoirs of the English Laws, &c.; the Baronage of England, 3 vols.; a short View of the late Troubles in England; the ancient Usage in bearing of Arms, &c.—Biog. Br.

DUGUET (James Joseph), a French writer and ecclesiastic, born in 1649, and died at Paris in 1733. He wrote, Expositions on Genesis, and several other parts of scripture; Ecclesiastical Conferences; on the Education of a Prince; and other works of merit.—Moreri.

DUHALDE (John Baptist), a French jesuit, was born at Paris in 1674, and died in that city in 1743. He compiled, from the accounts of the missionaries, a historical and geographical Description of the Empire of China and Chinese Tartary, 4 vols. folio, a work of great authority and well composed. He also wrote Letters edifying and curious, Latin poems, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUILLIUS (surnamed Nepos, the first Roman who gained a great naval victory. He wholly defeated the Carthaginian fleet, by grappling, and took and destroyed ninety-three ships, for which a naval column was erected to his honour, B. C. 260.—Livy. Florus.

DUISBURG (Peter de), so called from the place of his birth in the duchy of Cleves. He wrote a Chronicle of Prussia, from 1226 to 1325.—Moreri.

DUKE (Richard), an English poet and divine, was educated first at Westminster and next at Trinity college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M. A. He obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Gloucester, and the living of Witney, in Oxfordshire. He died in 1711. He published a volume of poems, and another of sermons.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DULLAERT (Heyman), a Dutch painter and poet, born at Rotterdam in 1636, and died in 1684. He was a disciple of Rembrandt, whose manner he imitated. He wrote some poetical pieces, and had a taste for music.—Pilkington.

DUMAS (Lewis), an ingenious Frenchman, was the natural son of Montcalm, lord of Candiac, born at Nîmes in 1676. He was bred to the law, but applied himself to mathematical and mechanical studies. He invented an instrument called the bureau typographique, to teach children reading and writing mechanically. He also devised another for instructing them in music. On those subjects he wrote explanatory books, and also a history of Mary queen of Scots. He died in 1744.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUMKE (Jane), a learned French lady, born at Paris. She published in 1680 a work entitled Discourses of Copernicus on the Mobility of the Earth.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUMONT (John), baron of Carlsroon, and historiographer to the emperor. He wrote, Travels in France, Italy, Germany, Malta, and Turkey, 4 vols. 12mo. 1699, and other works. He died in 1726.—Mor.

DUMONT (George), born at Paris in 1725, and died in 1788. He was secretary to the French embassy at Petersburg, and wrote, among many other things, History of the Commerce of the English Colonies; present State of the Commerce of England; Treatise on the Circulation of Credit, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUN (David Erskine, lord), an ingenious Scotch nobleman, born in the county of Angus in 1670. In 1696 he was called to the bar in the court of session, and became eminent as an advocate. In 1711 he rose to the bench, and took the title of lord Dun. He died in 1755. He wrote an excellent little book called Advices, 12mo. 1752.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DUNBAR (William), a Scotch poet, born at Salton, in East Lothian, about 1465. He wrote several good poems for that age; as the Thistle and Rose, in 1503; the Friers of Berwick, &c. He died about 1530. His poems were published with notes by Sir David Dalrymple.—Biog. Brit.

DUNCAN (Martin), a zealous Romanist, was born at Kempen, in the diocese of Cologne, in 1505, and died at Amersfort in 1590. He laboured with great earnestness to recover protestants to the Roman catholic church, and it is said with considerable success. He wrote, de Vera Christi Ecclesia; De Sacrificio Missæ, &c.—Moreri.

DUNCAN (Mark), a Scotch physician, who became professor of philosophy at Saumur, in France, and afterwards principal of the college. He also practised as a physician with reputation, and died in 1640. He wrote several books.—Bayle. Moreri.

DUNCAN (Daniel), a physician of the same family, was born at Montauban, in Languedoc, in 1649. He received his medical education at Montpellier, where he took his degree. He resided at Paris till the death of Colbert, who was his patron, and then went to reside on his paternal estate at Montauban; but in the persecution against the protestants in 1690, he went to Geneva. He was afterwards successively physician to the prince of Hesse Cassel and the king of Prussia. He died in London in 1735. He wrote, an Explanation of the Animal Functions; Natural Chemistry; Salutary Advice against the Abuse of hot Liquors, particularly Coffee, Chocolate, and Tea.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUNCAN (William), a learned writer, born at Aberdeen in 1717. He received his education in his native city, and afterwards became professor of philosophy in the Marischal college there. He died in 1760. Mr. Duncan wrote an excellent treatise on logic, and translated several of the orations of Cicero, and also Cæsar's Commentaries.—Biog. Brit.

DUNCAN (Adam lord), a gallant admiral, was born at Dundee, in Scotland, in 1731, of an ancient and respectable family. Being a younger son, he was bred to the sea, and in 1761 attained the rank of post captain. He was very intimate with admiral Keppel, who chose him to be his captain. He was also on the court martial at the trial of that distinguished veteran. In 1787 he became rear-admiral; in 1793 vice-admiral; and in 1795 admiral of the blue. In the late war he was appointed to the North Sea station, where he blocked up the Dutch fleet in the Texel, till the summer of 1797, when an alarming mutiny broke out in his squadron. His conduct on that occasion was firm, and his speech to the crew of his ship, the Veteran, remarkably affecting.

The enemy taking advantage of his absence, slipped out; of which the English admiral soon gained intelligence, and by a masterly manœuvre placed himself between them and the Texel. An engagement ensued off Camperdown, October 11, within five miles of the coast; and the Dutch admiral, De Winter, after a brave resistance, was obliged to strike. Eight ships were taken, two of which carried flags. On the 21st of that month the gallant admiral was created viscount Duncan of Camperdown, and baron Duncan of Lundie, in the shire of Perth. A pension, also, of 2000*l.* per annum was granted to him, and the two next heirs of the peerage. Lord Duncan was of a manly, athletic form, six feet three inches high. His character was very amiable, and he united to his other great qualities, that of being a sincere Christian. He died in 1804.

DUNCOMBE (William), an English writer, born in Hertfordshire. He married the sister of John Hughes, the poet, whose works he edited, as he did some others. In 1734 he produced, at Drury-lane, the tragedy of Lucius Junius Brutus. He also published with his son a translation of Hosæ, with notes, 4 vols. 12mo. He died in 1769, aged 80.—Biog. Br.

DUNCOMBE (John), the son of the preceding, was born in 1730. He was entered of Bene't college, Cambridge, in 1745, where he took his degrees in arts, and in 1750 was chosen fellow. In 1757 archbishop Herring gave him the united livings of St. Andrew and St. Mary, Canterbury. In 1763 he married a daughter of Mr. Highmore, the painter. Archbishop Secker appointed him one of the preachers in Canterbury cathedral, and his successor, Dr. Cornwallis, gave him the living of Herne, near Canterbury. He died in 1785. Mr. Duncombe wrote several fugitive poems, three sermons, and some papers in the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica. He also edited the Correspondence of Mr. Hughes, the Letters of the earl of Cork from Italy, and the Letters of archbishop Herring.—Ibid.

DUNGAL, an Irish monk of the 9th century, who was consulted by Charlemagne about two eclipses of the sun in 810, and his answer is in the Spicilegium of d'Acheri. He also wrote a tract in defence of the worship of images.—Moreri.

DUNLOP (William), a Scotch divine, born at Glasgow in 1692. He was regius professor of divinity at Edinburgh, where he died in 1720. He wrote two volumes of sermons, and an essay on Confessions of Faith. His brother, Alexander, was Greek professor at Glasgow, and died in 1752. He wrote a Greek grammar.—Gen. Biog. Diç.

DUNN (Samuel), an English mathematician, was born at Crediton in Devonshire, where he kept a school for some years. He afterwards removed to Chelsea, where he kept an academy, and was mathematical examiner for the East India service. He published an Atlas, folio; treatises on Book-keeping, Navigation, &c. He died in 1792, and left his property towards founding a mathematical school at his native town.—Monthly Mag.

DUNNING (John), an eminent English lawyer, was the son of an attorney at Ashburton in Devonshire, where he was born in 1731. After studying under his father some time, he entered of the Temple, and was called to the bar. He soon rose to distinction in his profession as an able lawyer and a powerful orator. He also obtained a seat in parliament, and distinguished himself on the side of opposition. Afterwards he became solicitor-general and recorder of Bristol, and chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. In 1782 he was created lord Ashburton, but died the year following, leaving an infant son to inherit the title. His lordship was an upright lawyer, and often pleaded the cause of the poor unfeignedly and without a fee.—Cent. Mag. English Peerage.

DUNOD DE CHARNAGE (Francis Ignatius), professor of law at Besançon, where he died in 1751. He wrote, 1. A History of the Sequani, or Memoirs of the Count of Burgundy, 3 vols. 4to.; 2. History of Besançon, 2 vols. 4to. and some law treatises. Peter Dunod, a jesuit, of the same family, published in 1697, The Discovery of the Town of Antré in Frauche Comté.—Nouv. Diç. H.

DUNOIS (John), count of Orleans and Longueville, natural son of Louis duke of Orleans, was born in 1407. He gallantly defended Orleans against the English, over whom he gained many signal advantages, for which he was legitimated, and obtained several grants from the crown. He died in 1648.—Moreri.

DUNS (John), commonly called Duns Scotus, a famous Franciscan divine, was born at Dunstons in Northumberland. He was educated at Oxford, from whence he went to Paris, where he acquired a great reputation as a disputant, and was called the "subtle doctor." He opposed the notions of Aquinas, which produced two parties, the Thomists and the Scottists. He died at Cologne in 1308. His works were printed at Lyons in 10 vols. folio, 1639.—Cave. Hist. Lit. Moreri.

DUNSTAN (St.), archbishop of Canterbury, was born in 925, in the reign of Athelstan, who gave him lands at Glastonbury, where he founded a famous monastery. King Edgar made him bishop of Worcester, and in 959 archbishop of Canterbury. The pope confirmed the appointment, and made him his legate. Dunstan supported and extended the papal power in a most arbitrary manner, though opposed by the English clergy, for which he deprived many of their benefices, and placed monks in their room. On the death of Edgar in 975, by his influence he placed his son Edward on the throne, who being a minor, Dunstan assumed the regency. Under his successor Ethelred however, he lost his influence, and died of grief in 988.—Collier's Eccl. Hist. Mereri.

DUNTON (John), a noted bookseller, born in Huntingdonshire in 1659. He published the Athenian Mercury, which was reprinted in 4 vols. 8vo. under the title of The Athenian Oracle. In 1710 appeared the Projects of Mr. John Dunton. He also wrote a book called Dunton's Life and Errors. He died about 1725.—Gen. Biog. Diß. Mereri.

DUPATY, president in the parliament of Bourdeaux, died at Paris in 1788. He wrote Historical Reflections on Penal Laws, a work of great merit; also, Academical Discourses, and Letters on Italy, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

DUPIN (Lewis Ellis), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1657, and after going through a regular education, was received a doctor of the Sorbonne in 1684. About this time he commenced his great and valuable work entitled Bibliothèque Universelle des Auteurs Ecclesiastiques, &c. or History of Ecclesiastical Writers, which has gone through numerous editions, and been translated into several languages. It was, however, much censured by zealous Romanists for the freedom of sentiment expressed in many parts; which the author was compelled to retract. He was afterwards in trouble on account of a correspondence between him and Dr. Wake archbishop of Canterbury, on a projected union between the English and Gallican churches. He died at Paris in 1719. Besides the above work, he wrote several others on the scriptures, church government, and practical divinity.—Mereri.

DUPLEX (Scipio), historiographer of France, was born at Condom in 1566. He wrote a work on the liberties of the Gallican church, which he took to the chancellor Seguier to have licensed, but that magistrate threw it into the fire. This so preyed upon his mind, that he died from mere vexation in 1661. He wrote, 1. Memoirs of the Gauls; 2. History of France, 6 vols. folio; 3. Roman History, 3 vols. fol.; 4. A Course of Philosophy, &c.—Mer.

DUPLEX (Joseph), a celebrated French merchant, who in 1730 was sent as director of the colony of Chandernagore, which was in a declining way, but by his exertions was brought to a flourishing state, and he carried on an extensive commerce through all parts of the Indies. He was made, in 1742, governor of Pondicherry, which he defended against two English admirals in 1748, and for which he was created a marquis by the French king, and a nabob by the mogul. However he was recalled in 1753, and died soon after of vexation.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

DUPORT (James), an English divine, Greek professor at Cambridge, and master of Magdalen college. He was made dean of Peterborough, and died in 1680. Some of his lectures on Theophrastus's characters were printed by Needham in his edition of that work in 1712.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

DUPPA (Brian), a pious prelate, was born at Lewisham, in Kent, in 1589, and educated at Christchurch, Oxford, of which he was afterwards dean. In 1638 he was appointed tutor to the prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II. and about the same time made bishop of Chichester, from whence, in 1641, he was removed to Salisbury. He attended Charles I. in the isle of Wight, and is supposed to have assisted him in his Eikon Basilike. At the restoration he was made bishop of Winchester and lord almoner. He died in 1662. A little before his death Charles II. visited him, and kneeling down by his bedside, craved his blessing, which the expiring bishop gave him with great solemnity. He published a few devotional pieces, but his greatest works were those of charity.—Biog. Brit.

DUPRAT (Anthony), a French statesman. He became president of the parliament of Paris in 1507, and chancellor of France in 1515. He was also appointed tutor to the count of Angoulême, afterwards Francis I. He was the sole author of the famous Concordat, which rendered him so acceptable to the court of Rome, that he obtained several ecclesiastical preferments, and lastly a cardinalship; He died full of crimes and diseases in 1535.—Mereri.

DUPRE (Mary), a learned French lady of the 17th century, was born at Paris, and educated in the Latin and Greek languages, rhetoric and philosophy. She wrote some poetical pieces of considerable merit.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

DUPRE D'AUNAY (Lewis), a French author, who died in 1758. He wrote, Letters on the Generation of Animals; Reflections on the Transfusion of Blood, &c.—Ib.

DUPRE DE GRUYER (John), a hermit of Switzerland, who is said, with the help only of his servant, to have built the hermitage of Fribourg, the chimney of which runs to the height of 90 feet.—Ibid.

DUPRE DE ST. MAUR (Nicholas Francis), a French writer, who died at Paris in 1775, aged 80. He was a member of the academy, and translated into French, Milton's Paradise Lost. He also wrote an essay on the Coins of France; Enquiries concerning the Value of Monies, &c.—Ibid.

DURAND (William), an eminent French lawyer, born in Provence in 1237. He was honourably employed by several popes, and at length made a bishop, and ennobled. He died at Rome in 1296. He is known by a famous work entitled Speculum Juris, &c. His nephew, who was also a bishop, wrote on General Councils. Neither of these is to be confounded with William DURAND DE ST. POURCAIN, a French bishop, who was so famous for his acuteness and firmness as to be called the resolute doctor.

He wrote Commentaries on the Sentences, &c. and died in 1332.—Moreri.

DURANTI (John Stephen), first president of the parliament of Thoulouse in 1581. He was murdered by the leaguers in 1589. He wrote De Ritibus Ecclesiæ, printed at Rome in 1591.—Moreri.

DURBACH (Anne Louisa), a German poetess, born in 1722. Her birth was mean, and her occupation that of keeping cattle; yet she found means to cultivate her mind by reading, and composed some poems which attracted notice, and procured her friends, who conducted her to Berlin, where she was encouraged in her poetical pursuits. She died about 1780.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DUREL (John), an eminent divine, born at Jersey in 1626, and educated at Merton college, Oxford. He was ordained in France by a Scotch bishop, and at the restoration obtained some considerable church preferment. In 1677 he was made dean of Windsor, and died in 1683. He translated the Liturgy into French and Latin; and wrote A View of the Government and Public Worship of God in the Reformed Church of England, 4to.; and A Vindication of the Church of England against Schismatics.—Wood's A. O. Biog. Brit.

DURELL (David), a learned divine, was born in the island of Jersey in 1728, and bred at Pembroke college, Oxford; but after taking his degrees in arts there, he became fellow of Hertford college, of which, in 1757, he was appointed principal. In 1764 he took his doctor's degree, and in 1767 obtained a prebendal stall in the church of Canterbury. He died in 1775. He wrote, 1. The Hebrew Texts of the Parallel Prophecies of Jacob and Moses, relating to the Twelve Tribes, with a Translation and Notes, &c. 4to. 2. Critical Remarks on the Books of Job, Psalms, Ecclesiastes, and Canticles, 4to.—Biog. Brit.

DURER (Albert), an eminent painter and engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1471. He engraved more than he painted, so that his pictures are wonderfully scarce, and highly valued. The people of Nuremberg still shew, with pride, in the senators' hall, his portraits of Charlemagne and some other emperors. But he has gained the greatest name by his engravings. He was the first who engraved upon wood. The emperor Maximilian conferred on him a pension and patents of nobility. He died at Nuremberg in 1528. Durer wrote a book on the rules of painting, and some other works.—Pilkington.

DURET (Lewis), an eminent physician of the 16th century. He became physician to Henry III. and royal professor. He died in 1586, aged 59. He wrote a Comment on one of the works of Hippocrates, printed at Paris in 1621. His son followed his father's profession with success, and died in 1629, aged 66.—Moreri.

D'URFHEY (Thomas), a facetious English poet, was born at Exeter in 1628. He wrote a number of plays and songs, which are very licentious. He resided frequently with the earl of Dorset at Knowle, where is a portrait of him painted when he was asleep after dinner, for he had such an ordinary visage, that he could not bear to have his likeness taken. His ballads, &c. were printed in 6 vols. 12mo. under the title of Pills to purge Melancholy. He died in 1723.—Biog. Dram.

DURHAM (James), a Scotch divine, born in 1620, and educated at St. Andrews. He settled at Glasgow, and was greatly followed as a preacher. He died in 1658. He wrote a Commentary on Solomon's Song, another on the Revelations, and several sermons.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DURY (John), in Latin Duraus, a Scotch divine, who laboured all his life to bring about a union between the Lutherans and Calvinists, but in vain. He wrote several pieces in behalf of his project, and was in all points an amiable and pious man. He died about 1674.—Bayle.

DUSART (Cornelius), a painter, who excelled in representing conversations, dancings, and taverns. He was a native of Harlem, and the disciple of Adrian Ostade; born in 1665, and died in 1704.—Pilkington.

DUVAL (Peter), geographer-royal of France, born at Abbeville, and died at Paris in 1683, aged 65. The best known of his works is La Geographie Francoise, &c.—Moreri.

DUVAL (Nicholas), a Dutch painter, born in 1644, and died in 1732. He studied in Italy under Pietro da Cortona, whose manner he adopted. King William III. appointed him director of the academy at the Hague.—Pilkington.

DUVAL (Valentine Jamerai), an extraordinary person, born in 1695, in the province of Champagne. After serving a farmer and shepherd some years, at the age of 18 he became keeper of the cattle belonging to the hermits of St. Anne, near Luneville. Under these brothers he made a rapid progress in his studies, for whatever money he got he laid out in books. Being accidentally discovered by two noblemen while he was studying geography under a tree, they were so pleased with his conversation, that they introduced him to the duke of Lorraine, who placed him in the college of Pont à Mousson. The duke afterwards made him his librarian, and gave him the professorship of history in the academy of Luneville. Out of gratitude to his original benefactors, he rebuilt the hermitage of St. Anne's, adding a chapel and some ground to it. In 1788 he followed the grand duke Francis to Florence, and on the marriage of that prince with the heiress of the house of Austria, he accompanied him to Vienna, where the emperor took a great delight in his conversation, and appointed him keeper of his cabinet of medals. He died in 1775.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

DUVENEDÉ (Marc van), an eminent historical painter, born at Bruges in 1674, and died in 1750. He was the disciple of Carlo Maratti. Several of his works are to be seen at Bruges.—Pilgrimage.

DYCE (Thomas), an English divine and schoolmaster, at Stratford-le-Bow, in Middlesex. He published an English dictionary; a spelling-book, and several school books of considerable utility. He died about 1750.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

DYER (Sir James), an English judge, was born at Roundhill, in Somersetshire, about 1511, and educated at Broadgate-hall, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple. In 1556 he was made one of the justices of the common pleas, of which court, in 1559, he was appointed chief justice. He died in 1581. His reports are still in great request.—Wood's A. O.

DYER (John), an English poet, was born in 1700 at Aberglasney, in Caermarthenshire, and educated at Westminster school. He was bred to the law, which profession he abandoned for painting, and went to Italy, where he wrote his poem, entitled The Ruins of Rome, which he published in 1740. He had before favoured the public with a descriptive piece, called Grongar Hill. Not long after his return he entered into orders, and obtained the living of Calthorp, in Leicestershire, which he exchanged in 1757 for Belchford, in Lincolnshire. He also had the rectory of Coningsby, in the same county, to which was afterwards added that of Kirkby. In 1757 appeared his Fleece, a poem, which possesses great merit. He died the year following.—Eng. Brit.

E.

EACHARD (John), an eminent divine, was born in Suffolk about 1636. He became fellow, and afterwards master of Catherine-hall, Cambridge. In 1670 he published, but without his name, a piece entitled "The Grounds and Reasons of the Contempt of the Clergy and Religion inquired into." This he attributes to the improper education of young men for the ministry, and to the absurd stile of preaching too generally adopted. He blended much humour with his remarks, which occasioned considerable controversy. Dr. Eachard also wrote some Tracts on Mr. Hobbes's Notions. He died in 1697. All his works were collected into 3 vols. 12mo. in 1774.—Biog. Brit.

JAMES (John), an ingenious mathematician and tutor, was born in London, and educated at Merchant Taylors' school. He was bred to the ministry among the dissenters of the independent persuasion, but a defect in the organs of speech incapacitated him for a proper discharge of that calling, and he devoted himself to the instruction of young men for the ministry in a seminary supported by the independent fund. His first department was that of the languages, mathematics, and natural philosophy, but afterwards he occupied the chair of divinity. He was a member of the royal society, and was employed with another gentleman in abridging their Transactions. He was well esteemed by Sir Isaac Newton, and other eminent men. He died in 1744.—Monthly Mag. Apr. 1803.

EARLE (John), an English prelate, was born at York, and entered of Merton college, Oxford, in 1620. He became chaplain and tutor to Charles prince of Wales, and suffered much in the rebellion; at the restoration he was made dean of Westminster, and bishop of Worcester, from whence he was translated to Salisbury in 1663. He died in 1665. Bishop Earle wrote an Elegy on Francis Beaumont, the poet; and an ingenious little work, entitled Micro-Cosmography; or, a Piece of the World characterized in Essays and Characters, 12mo. He also translated King Charles's Icon Basiliké into Latin.—Wood's A. O.

EBERTUS (Theodore), a learned professor of Hebrew at Frankfort-on-the Oder in the 17th century, who wrote several profound works; as, 1. Chronologia sanct. Ling. Doctorum; 2. Poetica Hebraica, 1628, &c.—Moreri.

EBION, the founder of a sect called after his name in the first century. St. John's said to have written his gospel against the errors of Ebion, who denied the divinity of Christ, and received only a mutilated copy of the gospel of St. Matthew.—Eusebius. Hist.

ECCARD (John George), a German historian and antiquary, born in 1670. He succeeded Leibnitz in his professorship at Hanover, which, however, he quitted in 1723, and embraced the Roman catholic religion. He then settled at Wurtzburg, where he died in 1730. He wrote some learned works on the history of Germany in Latin.—Moreri.

ECCLES (Solomon), an English musician, who turned quaker, and destroyed his instruments. He pretended to the gift of prophecy, and the power of working miracles, but at last became a deist, and died at the close of the seventeenth century.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

ECHARD (James), a French dominican, who died at Paris in 1724, aged 60. He wrote an account of the learned men of his order, printed in 2 vols. folio, 1719.—Mr.

ECHARD (Lawrence), an English divine and historian, was born in Suffolk about 1671, and brought up at Christ college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M. A. in 1695. On entering into orders, he obtained two livings in Lincolnshire. In 1699 he published the Roman History, 3 vols. 8vo. In 1702 appeared his General Ecclesiastical History, 2 vols. 8vo. His principal work is the History of England, 3 vols. folio. His Gazetteer, or Newsman's Interpreter, was once a popular book, and the foundation of all of that class. In 1712 he was made archdeacon of Stowe, and some time after he obtained three livings in Suffolk. He died in 1730.—Biog. Brit.

ECHELLENSIS (Abraham), a Maronite, who was professor of the Oriental languages at Rome in the 17th century. He translated Apollonius's conics from the Arabic into Latin, and assisted le Jay in his Polyglot Bible. He died in 1654.—Moreri.

ECKIUS (John), a divine of the Roman church, who was professor at Ingoldstadt, and greatly opposed Luther, with whom he disputed in 1518 at Leipsic, and afterwards with other protestants. He wrote several polemical treatises, and died in 1549, aged 80.—Dupin. Moreri.

ECLUSE (Charles de l'), a physician of Arras, and professor of botany at Leyden, who died in 1609, aged 84. His works on botany were published at Antwerp, in 2 vols. folio, 1601.—Moreri.

EDLINCK (Gerard), an eminent engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1641. He retired in France, where he executed some fine pieces, as the picture of the holy family by Raphael, and the tent of Darius by le Brun. He died in 1707.—Moreri.

EDEMA (Gerard), a Dutch landscape painter, who went to Norway and Newfoundland to delineate the plants and insects of those countries. He came to London in 1670, and became famous for painting landscapes. He died about 1700.—Granger.

EDGAR, king of England, succeeded his brother Edwy in 959, at the age of 16. The moderation of his reign procured him the name of Peaceable. He vanquished the Scots, and laid Wales under a yearly tribute of a certain number of wolves heads, which cleared the country of those animals. He subdued part of Ireland, and maintained a large fleet, which secured his kingdoms from invasion. On the death of his queen Egelfrida, he sent earl Athelwold to see whether the report of the beauty of Elfrida, daughter of the earl of Devon, was true. The earl fell in love with the lady, gave his master a false report, and married her. He was afterwards slain in hunting, and Elfrida became the wife of Edgar, who died in 975, aged 33.—Rapin.

EDGAR, the 89th king of Scotland, and son of Malcolm III. Henry, king of England, married his sister, which produced a peace between the two countries. He died in 1107.—Buchanan.

EDMER, or EADMER, an English monk, who became bishop of St. Andrew's, in Scotland, about 1120. He wrote the history of his own time in six books, from 1066. to 1122; also the lives of St. Anselm, St. Dunstan, and other pieces.—Pitts. Moreri.

EDMONDES (sir Thomas), an English statesman, was a native of Plymouth, in Devonshire. In the reign of Elizabeth he was employed on several embassies, and in that of James he received the honour of knighthood, and was made a privy counsellor. He died in 1639. Some of his letters are in several collections of state papers.—Gen. Bio. Diſt.

EDMONDES (Clement), son of the preceding, was born in Shropshire, and educated at All Souls college, Oxford. About 1601 he was made remembrancer of London, master of requests, and one of the clerks of the council. He was knighted in 1617. He wrote Observations on the Commentaries of Cæsar, folio. He died in 1622.—Wood.

EDMUND (St.), king of the East Angles, was so illustrious for his piety as to obtain a place in the Roman calendar. In 870 he was defeated and taken prisoner by the Danes under Ivar, who caused him to be fastened to a tree, and to be shot to death with arrows. His remains were interred at St. Edmund's Bury.—Rapin.

EDMUND (St.), archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Abingdon, and studied at Paris. On his return to England he became an eminent preacher. Pope Innocent III. appointed him to the archbishopric, but incurring the resentment of king Henry III. he was obliged to retire to France, where he died in 1210. Innocent IV. canonized him in 1249.—Pitts. Moreri.

EDMUND I. king of England, son of Edward the Elder succeeded his brother Athelstan in 941. He subdued Mercia, Northumberland, and Cumberland. He was stabbed at a feast in Gloucester by Leolf, a robber, whom he had caused to be banished, in 948.—Hume.

EDMUND II. or Iron Side, son of Ethelred, whom he succeeded in 1016; but being opposed by Canute, he agreed to a participation of the kingdom. He was murdered in 1017 at Oxford by two of his chamberlains.—Hume.

EDWARD the Elder, son of Alfred the Great, succeeded his father in 901. He subdued Northumbria and East Anglia, and extended his dominions as far as Scotland. He died in 925.—Hume. Rapin.

EDWARD the Martyr, son of Edgar the Great, king of England, born in 962, and crowned in 975. He was murdered by order of his stepmother Elfrida, at Corfe Castle, after a reign of three years.—Ibid.

EDWARD, king of England, called the Confessor, was the son of Ethelred. He succeeded Hardi Canute in 1041. Having been bred in Normandy, he brought over many of the natives of that country, whom he preferred at his court, which gave great disgust to his subjects. He restored Malcolm to the throne of Scotland, which had been usurped by Macbeth. He consulted William of Normandy about the choice of a successor, which furnished that prince with a plea for invading the kingdom after the death of Edward, which happened in 1066.—Hume. Ropin.

EDWARD I. king of England, called Longshanks, succeeded his father Henry III. in 1272. He made his eldest son prince of Wales, and brought Scotland into subjection. Edward died at Carlisle in 1307, aged 68. His laws entitle him to the name of the English Justinian. He had two wives, Eleanor, daughter of Ferdinand III. king of Castile, and Margaret, daughter of Philip the Hardy, king of France.—Ibid.

EDWARD II. was the son of the preceding, and born at Caernarvon. He was governed by his favourites, Gaveston and the Spencers, which occasioned the barons to rise against him. After resigning his crown, he was confined in Berkeley castle, Gloucestershire, where he was murdered in a shocking manner, in 1327, aged 42.—Ibid.

EDWARD III. the son and successor of the above. His reign was active and glorious. He obliged the Scots to acknowledge Edward Baliol for their king, who did him homage for his crown. He also laid claim to the crown of France, and gained the battles of Cressy and Poitiers, the first in the reign of Philip, and the last in that of John, whom he took prisoner and sent to England. Edward also about the same time defeated David Bruce, king of Scotland, and took him prisoner. He died in 1377. The order of the garter was instituted in this reign. As his gallant son Edward the Black Prince died before him, he was succeeded by his grandson Richard II.—Ibid.

EDWARD IV. son of Richard duke of York, succeeded Henry VI. in 1461. He obtained the crown by six battles fought by his father, and maintained it by seven of his own. He married lady Elizabeth Grey, which so disgusted the earl of Warwick, commonly called the king-maker, that he joined the Lancastrian party, and defeated Edward's forces near Banbury in 1469. Soon afterwards he took Edward prisoner, who effected his escape, and obtained a victory over Warwick at Stamford Wells. That nobleman fled to France, from whence he returned with a supply of troops, and proclaimed Henry; Edward on this escaped beyond sea, and Warwick released Henry from the Tower, and set him on the throne; but Edward returned with succours, and marched to London, where he took Henry prisoner. He shortly after defeated Warwick, who was slain. Another victory at Tewkesbury secured to him the quiet possession of the throne. He died in 1483, aged 41.—Ibid.

EDWARD V. king of England, son of the preceding, whom he succeeded at the age of twelve years. Richard duke of Gloucester, his uncle, took the guardianship of him and his brother into his own hands, and placed them in the Tower, where they were smothered in their beds, in 1483. Their bodies were discovered in 1678, and removed to Westminster-abbey.—Ibid.

EDWARD VI. the son of Henry VIII. by Jane Seymour. He ascended the throne in 1547, at the age of ten years. He was a prince of promising talents, virtue, and piety. The reformation begun by his father went on vigorously in his reign, through archbishop Cranmer. His aversion to popery was so great, that he signed a will, in which he set aside his sisters, Mary and Elizabeth, from the succession, and settled the crown on lady Jane Grey. He died of a consumption in 1553, aged only 16. He founded the hospitals of Christ-church, Bridewell, and St. Thomas.—Ibid.

EDWARD, prince of Wales, commonly called the Black Prince, from the colour of his armour. He was the eldest son of Edward III. and born in 1330. He accompanied his father to France when he was but 16 years old, and distinguished himself there above all the warriors of his age, particularly at the battle of Cressy, where he took the standard of the king of Bohemia, embroidered with three ostrich feathers, and having this motto, Ich Dien, I serve. This he always wore; and it has continued to be the crest of the princes of Wales ever since. He also gained the victory at Poitiers, where he took John king of France and his son prisoners, and brought them to London. This prince married the daughter of Edmond, earl of Kent, brother to Edward II. a widow, by whom he had a son, who was afterwards Richard II. By the peace of Bretigny, he obtained the principality of Aquitaine, where he gave an asylum to Peter the Cruel, king of Castile, who had been driven from his throne by his brother Henry, count of Trastamare. Edward restored Peter to his seat, who behaved to him with the basest ingratitude, and refused to pay the English troops. He died in 1376, aged 46.—Ibid.

EDWARDS (Dr. Jonathan), an English divine of the 17th century, who wrote several pieces against the arians and socinians. He was of Jesus college, Oxford, of which he was elected principal in 1686; but the time of his death is not recorded.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

EDWARDS (George), an eminent naturalist, was born in 1693 at West Ham, in Essex. He was bred to trade, but on the expiration of his apprenticeship he renounced the shop, and went abroad. On his return to England he was appointed librarian of the college of physicians. He published the History of Birds, in 7 vols. 4to; Gleanings of Natural History, in 3 vols. 4to.; and a volume of Essays, in 8vo. He died in 1773.—Biog. Brit.

EDWARDS (Thomas), an ingenious writer, was born in London in 1699, and bred to the bar; but though he was a member of the society at Lincoln's-inn, he scarcely ever practised. In 1744 he attacked Warburton's Edition of Shakspeare, which was followed by a very keen and humorous publication, entitled Canons of Criticism, with a Glossary, which passed through several editions. To this work he added some poor sonnets, and an account of the trial of the letter Y. A tract of his on Predestination was published after his death, which happened in 1757.—Biog. Brit.

EDWARDS (Thomas), an English divine, was born at Coventry in 1729, and educated at Clare-hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1755 he printed a translation of the Psalms. In 1758 he was chosen master of the grammar school at Coventry, and presented to the rectory of St. John Baptist in that city. The year following he published a book, entitled The Doctrine of irresistible Grace proved to have no Foundation in the New Testament. In 1762 he defended bishop Hare's system of the Hebrew metre against Dr. Lowth, in which, however, he failed. In 1766 he took his doctor's degree, and in 1770 he obtained the living of Nuneaton, in Warwickshire, where he died in 1785. Besides the above works, he published selections from Theocritus, with notes, and some other pieces.—Ibid.

EDWARDS (Jonathan), an American divine, was born at Windsor, in Connecticut, in 1703, and educated at Yale college, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1722 he became a preacher at New York to a presbyterian congregation; and in 1724 was chosen tutor of Yale college. In 1726 he resigned that station, and became assistant to his grandfather, who was a minister at Northampton. Here he continued till 1750, when he was dismissed for refusing to administer the sacrament to those who could not give proofs of their being in a converted state. The year following he went as a missionary among the Indians, and in 1757 was chosen president of the college of New Jersey, where he died in 1758 of the small-pox. Mr. Edwards was an acute metaphysician, but a rigid calvinist. He wrote a Treatise concerning religious Affections; the Life of David Brainerd, a Missionary; Narrative of the Work of God in the Conversion of many Hundred Souls in Northampton; an Enquiry into the modern prevailing Notion of that Freedom of Will, which is supposed to be essential to moral Agency; The great Doctrine of original Sin defended; Sermons, &c. &c.—His Life prefixed to his posthumous Sermons.

EDWARDS (William), a remarkable bridge builder. He was only a common mason, but by the force of genius he acquired an uncommon skill in building bridges, the principal of which is that on the river Taase. It is the segment of a circle, the chord of which at the surface of the water is 147 feet. He also exercised the calling of a methodist preacher, and died in 1789, aged 71.—Europ. Mag.

EDWARDS (Richard), an English writer, born in Somersetshire, in 1523, and educated at Oxford. Queen Elizabeth made him gentleman of her chapel, and teacher of music to the children of the choir. He wrote several poems, to be found in a collection, called A Paradise of dainty Devices, 1578. He died in 1566.—Wood.

EDWARDS (Thomas), an English divine, was educated at Cambridge, where he took his degree of M. A. in 1609. He was a furious presbyterian, and wrote with equal zeal against the episcopalians and independents. When the latter party gained the ascendancy, he withdrew to Holland, where he died in 1647. His Gangræna exhibits a curious picture of the religious divisions of that period.—Biog. Brit.

EDWARDS (John), a divine of the church of England, was the son of the preceding, and born at Hertford in 1637. He received his education first at Merchant Taylors' school, London, and next at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow. In 1676 he married, and soon after was presented to the living of St. Peter's, Colchester. He did not continue there above three years, but removed to Cambridge, where he took his degree of D. D. and employed himself in writing. He published a prodigious number of books, many practical, but most of them controversial. His opinions were calvinistic. The most esteemed of his works is his Preacher, in three vols. He died in 1716.—Ibid.

EDWY, king of England, son of Edmund I. succeeded his uncle Edred in 955. He married Elgiva, his relation within the prohibited degrees of kindred, which proved the ruin of both. Archbishop Odo seized the queen, and having branded her in the face with a hot iron, sent her to Ireland, after which she was put to a cruel death. Edwy was driven from the throne, and died under excommunication, in 959.—Rapin. Hume.

ECKHOUT (Gerbrant van den), an eminent painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1621. He was a disciple of Rembrandt, whose manner he imitated, and excelled in the power of expression. He died in 1674.—Pilkington.

ECKHOUT (Anthony van den), a painter, was born at Brussels in 1656. He painted fruit and flowers in a fine taste. He settled at Lisbon, where he was murdered in 1695.—Pilkington.

EGBERT, the first who was king of all England, and last of the Saxon heptarchy. He was proclaimed king of Wessex in 800, and in 828 he united all the other kingdoms under him. He distinguished himself against the Danes, and died in 838.—Rapin.

EGEDE (John), superintendent of the Danish missionaries in Greenland, was born in 1686. He went to Greenland to convert the inhabitants in 1721, and resided there fifteen years. He died in 1758. Egede wrote a description of Greenland, published first in 1729. His son, Paul Egede, was born in 1708. He became assistant to his father, and afterwards bishop of Greenland. He published a new edition of his father's book abovementioned, and a curious journal respecting Greenland. He died in 1789.—Gen. Biog.

EGERTON (Thomas), lord chancellor of England in the reign of James I. He was the natural son of sir Richard Egerton in Cheshire, and born about 1540. He received his education at Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's-inn. In 1592 he received the honour of knighthood, and was made attorney-general; soon after master of the rolls, which was followed by the office of lord-keeper. In 1603 he was made baron Ellesmere, and lord chancellor. In 1616 he was created viscount Brackley, and died the year following. After his death were published, his "Privileges and Prerogatives of the High Court of Chancery," and his "Observations concerning the Office of Lord Chancellor."—Biog. Brit.

EGERTON (John), an eminent prelate, was the son of Henry Egerton, bishop of Hereford, and born in London in 1721. He received his education first at Eton, and next at Oriel college, Oxford. In 1745 he obtained the living of Ross in Herefordshire, and the year following a prebend in Hereford cathedral. In 1750 he obtained the deanry of Hereford, and afterwards was successively bishop of Bangor, Litchfield, and Durham. His charities were large, and he contributed to several important public works in his diocese. He died in 1787. He published some sermons on public occasions.—Hutchinson's History of Durham.

EGGELING (John Henry), a learned man, was born in 1639, at Bremen, of which place he became secretary. He died in 1713. He published some pieces on medallic history, and other antiquarian subjects.—Moreri.

EGINHART, a German historian, was bred up at the court of Charlemagne, who appointed him his secretary, and gave him his daughter Imma in marriage. He afterwards embraced a religious life, and became superintendant of several monasteries. He died in 839. Eginhart wrote a curious life of Charlemagne in elegant Latin; also the Annals of France from 741 to 829.—Bayle. Moreri.

EGMONT (Lamoral count of), a distinguished nobleman in Flanders, was born in 1522, and served in the armies of Charles V. with great reputation. He was made general of horse by Philip II. and distinguished himself at the battle of St. Quintin in 1557. But the duke of Alva, fearing his power, and that his designs were in favour of the prince of Orange, caused him to be beheaded at Brussels in 1568, together with count Horn.—Moreri.

EGMONT (Justus van), an eminent painter, born at Leyden in 1602. He became painter to the king of France, and one of the directors of the academy of painting. He died in 1674.—Houbraken.

ENATTO (John Baptist), a learned Venetian, born in 1473. He was so distinguished as a teacher, that the republic conferred several marks of distinction on him, and exempted him from all taxes. He obtained some ecclesiastical preferment and the professorship of eloquence at Venice. He died in 1553. He wrote Orations on several occasions; Epistles; a Panegyric in verse, on Francis I. of France; De Romanis Principibus vel Cesaribus; on the Origin of the Turks; De Exemplis Virorum illustrium, &c.—Moreri.

EGYPT is one of the most ancient kingdoms in the world. In 1445 Lower Egypt was conquered by the Canaanites. Upper Egypt at that time was divided into numerous kingdoms, which were united about 1157, and the Canaanites, or shepherd kings, were driven out in 1070. In 947 the Ethiopians conquered Egypt. In 671 it was conquered by Aserhaddon, king of Assyria, but in 668 it revolted from the Assyrian yoke. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, subdued it in 566. About 534 Egypt was subject to Cyrus. In 30 B. C. it was reduced to a Roman province, and continued to be so till the Saracens conquered it, A. D. 640. In 688 Al Tolun, being entrusted by the caliph of Bagdad with the government of Egypt and Syria, set up for himself, and maintained his authority notwithstanding all attempts to depose him; but in 904, Mahomet, general of the caliph Al Moerassi, recovered Egypt to the caliphate. In 933 Mahomet, the son of Tagzi, seized Syria and Egypt, and retained the whole, except a small part which Obeidallah Al Mohdi had conquered in 910. His successor, Abu Temin Mahud, conquered the rest of Egypt about 970. He built Grand Cairo. In 1176 the dominion was usurped by Saladin. In 1245 the Mamelukes, who were Tartar soldiers employed by the princes of this family, seized the kingdom, and held it till they were subdued by Selim I. emperor of the Turks.—Univ. Hist.

EHRER (George Dionysius), a botanical painter, was born in Germany in 1710. At an early age he applied himself to drawing and painting flowers. In 1736 he was employed by Mr. Clifford, in Holland, for whom he illustrated with beautiful figures the Hortus Cliffortianus. From thence he came to England, where he met with liberal encouragement. He painted a number of figures in the English botanical gardens, of which one hundred were engraved under the title of Plantæ Selectæ. He was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and died in 1770.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

EISENSCHMIDT (John Gaspar), a German physician and mathematician, born at Stralburg in 1656, and died in 1712. He wrote, 1. A treatise on the Weights and Measures of various Countries, and of the Coins of the Antients; 2. A treatise on the Figure of the Earth.—Moreri.

ELSGAUF (Rene de Lorraine, marquis of), the 7th son of Claude duke of Guise, died in 1566. Charles, his grandson, who died in 1657, married first Catharine Henriette, daughter of Henry IV. and 2dly, Gabrielle d'Estrees. His posterity in the male line ceased in the person of Emanuel Maurice, who died in France, aged 86, in 1763. To this nobleman is attributed the discovery of the city of Herculaneum.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ELBRUCHT (John van), a Dutch painter, born about 1600. He settled at Antwerp, and drew landscapes and sea pieces with great force and beauty.—Houbraken.

ELEANOR, duchess of Guienne, succeeded her father William IX. in 1137, at the age of 15, and the same year married Lewis VII. king of France, whom she accompanied to the Holy Land, where she is said to have intrigued with her uncle, Raymond prince of Antioch, and a young Turk named Saladin. A separation ensued between her and Lewis, and in 1153 she married the duke of Normandy afterwards Henry II. king of England, which occasioned a succession of wars between the two kingdoms. Her jealousy of Henry, and conduct to Fair Raimond, have afforded a copious subject to poets and romance writers. She excited her sons to rebel against their father, for which she was imprisoned sixteen years. On the accession of Richard I. she was released, and in his absence to the Holy Land she was made regent. She died in 1204, having, as it is said, turned nun in the abbey of Fontevault.—Moreri.

ELEAZAR, high priest of the Jews, succeeded his brother, Simon the Just, about 292 B.C. He is said to have given a copy of the Hebrew scriptures to Ptolemy Philadelphus, who caused the same to be translated into Greek by seventy interpreters, which version is now known by the name of the Septuagint.—Dupin. Moreri.

ELEUTHERIUS, a saint and pope, was born at Nicopolis, and elected to the papal chair in 170. He combated the errors of the valentinians with great zeal, and died in 185.—Moreri.

ELI, high priest and judge of Israel, who attained that office about 1156 B.C. Though a good man, he was timid, and did not exert himself in correcting the immoralities of his family. His two sons, Hophni and Phineas, were most abandoned characters, on which account the Lord appeared to Samuel, and denounced judgment upon the house of Eli, who received the tidings with pious resignation. Shortly after the Israelites were defeated by the Philistines, the ark taken, and the sons of Eli slain. When the news reached him he fell from his seat and broke his neck, aged 98.—1 Sam. c. i. Josephus.

ELIAS (Matthew), an eminent painter was born at Cassel in 1658. He was originally employed in tending cattle, but his genius being discovered by Corbeen, he took him under his care. Elias soon gained the esteem of his master, by evincing superior talents to his fellow students. He settled at Dunkirk, where he painted a grand altar piece. Some of his portraits are in high estimation. He died in 1741.—Pilkington.

ELIAS (Levita), a rabbi of the 16th century, who taught Hebrew with great reputation at Rome and Venice. He wrote, 1. Lexicon Chaldaicum; 2. Tractatus doctrinae; 3. Collectio locorum in quibus Chaldaei paraphrastra interjecit nomen Christi; 4. Several Hebrew grammars; 5. Nomenclatura Hebraica.—Moreri.

ELICHMAN (John), a physician of Silesia, who wrote a letter in Arabic, De usu Linguae Arabicæ in Medicina, 1636. He also published a Dissertation, De termino vitæ secundum mentem orientalium, 1639. His Latin translation of the Tablature of Cebes appeared with the Arabic version, and the original Greek, at Leyden, in 1640.—Moreri.

ELIEZER, a Jewish rabbi, said by some to have been cotemporary with Christ, but placed by others in the 7th century. He wrote chapters on sacred history, translated by Vorstius into Latin, 1641, 4to.—Ibid.

ELIJAH, an eminent prophet of Israel, in the reigns of Ahab and Ahaziah. He was greatly persecuted by the wife of Ahab, but escaped all her machinations, and was taken into heaven in a chariot of fire, about 895 B.C.—SS.

ELIOT (Thomas), an English writer in the reign of Henry VIII. He was a native of Suffolk, but resided chiefly at Cambridge, of which he was sheriff. He compiled a Latin and English Dictionary, and died in 1546.—Ger. Biog. Dict.

ELIOT (John), a pious English divine, was born in 1604, as it is supposed, either in Devon or Cornwall. His education seems to have been received at Cambridge, but on embracing puritanism he withdrew to New England in 1631, and became pastor of a congregation of independents at Roxbury, where he established a grammar-school. In 1646 he began to learn the Indian language, that he might devote himself to the conversion of the natives. In this he met with great success, and obtained a considerable influence over the various tribes. He translated the Bible into their language, and several pieces of posical divinity. He died at Roxbury in 1689.—Mather and Neale's Hist. of New England.

ELIOTT (sir John), a Scotch physician, born at Peebles, of humble parentage. He was bred a surgeon, in which capacity he went out in a private ship of war, which took a valuable prize, and thereby enabled Elliott to commence physician, and so great was his practice, that he realized 5000*l* a year by his profession, and obtained the rank of baronet. He died in 1787.—Europ. Mag.

ELIOTT (George Augustus, lord Heathfield), was the son of sir Gilbert Elliott, of Stubbs, in Roxburghshire, and born about 1718. When young he was sent to Leyden, and from thence to the military school in Picardy. He afterwards entered into the Prussian service as a volunteer, and returned to Scotland in 1755. Not long after this he entered into the engineer corps at Woolwich. He obtained an adjutancy in the 2d troop of horse grenadiers, with which he went to Germany, and was wounded at the battle of Dettingen. In 1759 he was appointed to raise the 1st regiment of light horse, with which he served on the continent with the greatest reputation. On his recall from Germany he was sent to the Havannah, in the reduction of which he had an eminent share. At the peace the king conferred on this regiment the title of royals. In 1775 general Elliott was appointed commander in chief in Ireland, from whence he returned soon after, and was made governor of Gibraltar, for which important post no man could be better fitted. He was very abstemious, his constant food being vegetables, and his drink water. He never allowed himself but four hours' sleep at a time; and was so accustomed to hardness that it was become habitual. Thus he was enabled to defend that important fortress against the most formidable operations which attracted the attention of all Europe, and the siege of Gibraltar will be found one of the most glorious incidents in military history. On his return to England he was raised to the peerage by the title of lord Heathfield, baron Gibraltar. He married Anne, daughter of sir Francis Drake of Devonshire, who died in 1769, leaving one son and a daughter. This gallant veteran died at Aix la Chapelle, in 1790, of a second stroke, of the palsy. His remains were brought to England, and buried at Heathfield in Sussex, where a monument is erected to his memory.—Annual Reg. Gen. Biog. Dict.

ELIOTT (Richard), an English divine, was born at Kingsbridge, in Devonshire, and educated at Bene't college, Cambridge. He became chaplain to St. George's hospital, Hyde park-corner, from whence he was dismissed in 1759, for preaching antinomianism. He afterwards turned arian, and took a meeting-house in Aldersgate-street, where he officiated till his death, which happened suddenly in the pulpit, in 1789. He published some controversial tracts, a volume of discourses, and many single sermons.—Europ. Mag.

ELISHA, a Hebrew prophet, and the successor of Elijah, who called him from the plough. He performed numerous miracles, and was held in great respect by the kings of Israel and Syria. He died about 830 B. C.—SS.

ELIZABETH, queen of England, was the daughter of Henry VIII. by Ann Boleyn, and born in 1533. She was educated in the protestant religion, and in the reign of Mary was sent to the Tower, from whence she was afterwards removed to Woodstock. On the death of her sister in 1558 she was proclaimed queen, to the great joy of the nation. Philip of Spain made her an offer of marriage, which she civilly declined. In restoring the reformation she conducted herself with great prudence and moderation. One of the first measures of her reign was to send succours to the reformed party in Scotland, which produced the treaty of Edinburgh, and the departure of the French from that country. Elizabeth was now considered as the head of the protestant interest, and she gave her assistance to the French hugonots, who put Havre de Grace into her hands. At home rigorous measures were adopted against the Roman catholics and puritans. Dudley, earl of Leicester, became the queen's favourite, and had the ambition to aspire to her hand. She, however, made an ineffectual effort to unite him to Mary queen of Scots. That unfortunate princess took refuge in England from her subjects in 1568, and was kept in confinement till 1586, when she was safely tried and executed. Elizabeth endeavoured to clear herself of the odium of this transaction, by causing her secretary, Davison, to be prosecuted for issuing a warrant for the execution without her knowledge. The French and Spaniards having formed a league for the extirpation of heresy, induced Elizabeth to protect the protestants, and this she did so effectually as to separate the United Provinces from the dominion of the latter power. The king of Spain, in return, sent a body of troops to invade Ireland, but they were all cut off by lord Grey, the deputy. In the mean time various offers of marriage were made to the queen, the most remarkable of which was that of the duke of Anjou, who came to England for the purpose, but after staying some time, the affair was broken off. In 1588 Philip sent against England his famous armada, to which the pope gave the appellation of invincible. On this occasion the queen distinguished herself by her great presence of mind and inflexible courage. She rode on horseback in the camp at Tilbury, and inspired her people with heroism by her deportment and her speeches. The English fleet, however, assisted by the winds, prevented the Spaniards from landing, and their boasted armada was destroyed. On the death of Leicester, Robert Devereux, earl of Essex, became the queen's favourite, who was, however, executed for treason in 1601. [See his article]. Elizabeth kept up a close connexion with Henry IV. of France, whom she assisted with men and money. She was endeared to her subjects by the glory of her reign, by the wisdom of her measures, and by the frugality of her administration, which rendered public impositions few and light. She had, however, much vanity, thought herself the most beautiful and accomplished of women, and was besides violent and haughty in her temper. She understood the learned languages, and some of her letters and prayers written with her own hand, are extant. This truly great princess died March 24, 1602, in the 70th year of her age, and 40th of her reign.—Rupin. Hume.

ELIZABETH of Austria, daughter of the emperor Maximilian II. and married to Charles IX. of France, in 1570. She sent to Margaret, queen of Navarre, two books of her writing, one on the Word of God, and the other a relation of the chief events in France, during the time she resided there. She died in a convent in 1592, aged 38.—Muscri.

ELIZABETH PETROVNA, daughter of the czar Peter the Great, was born in 1709. In 1741 she usurped the imperial throne, by dethroning the infant Ivan, which revolution was effected without shedding of blood. At her accession she made a vow that no capital punishments should take place in her reign. But her humanity was equivocal, as is instanced in the shocking punishment which she inflicted upon the countesses Bestuchef and Lapookin, who were publicly knouted, and had their tongues cut out, for betraying some of the empress's amorous secrets. Though she was very dissolute in her manners, she was at the same time extremely superstitious, and performed her devotions with rigorous exactness. In 1756 she joined Austria and France against Prussia. She died in 1761.—Coxe's Travels in Russia. Tooke's Hist. of Russ.

ELLER DE BROOKHUSEN (John Theodore), physician to the king of Prussia, born in 1689, and died at Berlin in 1760. He wrote a treatise on the Knowledge and Treatment of Diseases.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

ELLIGER (Ottomar), an eminent painter, born at Gottenburg, in 1633. He excelled in painting fruit and flowers. His son Ottomar was a disciple of Laireffe, and was distinguished as a historical painter. He died in 1732, aged 66.—Pilkington.

ELLIS (Clement), an English divine, born in Cumberland in 1630, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1660 he obtained the living of Kirkby in Nottinghamshire, and in 1693 a prebend in the collegiate church of Southwell. He died in 1700. He wrote the Scripture Catechist, and other books on practical divinity.—Wood's A. O.

ELLIS (John), an English poet, born in London in 1698, and brought up a scrivener. He was for many years deputy of his ward, and master of the scriveners company. Mr. Ellis was the intimate friend of Dr. Johnson, and wrote several pieces to be found in Doddsley's Collection. He also published separately, 1. The Surprize, or Gentleman turned Apothecary, a tale in Hudibrastic verse; 2. A Travesty of the Canto added by Maphæus to the Æneid in Hudibrastic. He died in 1791.—Eur. Mag.

ELLWOOD (Thomas), an English quaker, was born at Crowell in Oxfordshire, in 1639. He was bred in the church of England, but was converted to quakerism by Isaac Pennington, by which means he lost the favour of his father. He became reader to Milton, which tended greatly to his improvement in learning. Ellwood suffered imprisonment for his profession, and wrote a number of books in its defence. He also edited George Fox's Journal, and published a History of the Old and New Testament; a sacred poem on the Life of David, &c. He died in 1713.—Gen. Biog.

ELLYS (Anthony), an English prelate, was born in 1693, and educated at Clare hall, Cambridge. In 1724 he became vicar of St. Olave Jewry, with the united rectory of St. Martin. In 1725 he obtained a prebend of Gloucester, and in 1752 the bishopric of St. David's. He died in 1761. He published some single Sermons; an Answer to Hume on the Miracles; a Plea for the Sacramental Test; and after his death, appeared his Tracts on the Liberty, spiritual and temporal, of the Protestants in England, 1765, 4to.—Biog. Br.

EL-MACIN (George), an Egyptian author of the 13th century. He wrote a History of the Saracens, from Mohammed to A.D. 1118, which was printed in Arabic and Latin at Leyden in 1625.—Bayle.

ELPHINSTONE (William), a Scotch prelate, was born at Glasgow in 1431. He obtained successively the bishoprics of Ross and Aberdeen, and in 1495 he was made chancellor of Scotland. He died about 1513. He was a man of great learning, and a liberal benefactor to the university of Aberdeen. He wrote a History of Scotland, which was never printed.—Eur. Mag. xxvii.

ELSHEIMER (Adam), an eminent painter, born at Frankfort-upon-the-Maine in 1574. His landscapes are very beautiful, but extremely scarce. He died poor at Rome in 1620.—Pilkington.

ELSNER (James), a learned Prussian divine, was born 1699. He became professor of theology and the Oriental languages at Lingen, afterwards rector of Joachim's school at Berlin, which place he quitted in 1730 for the pastorate of a church in that city. He was made a counsellor of the consistory to the king of Prussia, and member of the academy of sciences at Berlin. He died in 1750. His chief works are, Observationes Sacre in Novi Testamenti Libros, Ut: 1720, 1728; State of the Greek Christians in Turkey, 8vo. 1737; Explanation of the Epistle to the Philippians, &c.—Formey's Eloges of the Academicians of Berlin.

ELSTOB (William), a learned English divine, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1673. He received his education at Eton, from whence he removed to Catherine-hall, Cambridge; but the air of that place not agreeing with him, he went to Queen's college, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of M. A. In 1702 he obtained the rectory of the united parishes of St. Swithin and St. Mary Bothaw, London. He died in 1714. Mr. Elstob was profoundly skilled in the Saxon language and antiquities, and published a Latin translation of the Saxon Homily of Lupus; and the Homily on St. Gregory's Day, in Saxon and Latin. He also wrote An Essay on the Affinity and Agreement between the two Professions of Law and Divinity; Sermons, &c.—Biog. Br.

ELSTOB (Elizabeth), sister of the above, was a very learned woman, and born at Newcastle in 1683. She resided with her brother at Oxford, and became a partner with him in his studies. She accompanied his Homily on St. Gregory with an English version, and a preface. In 1713 she printed Testimonies of learned Men in favour of the intended Edition of the Saxon Homilies. This intended edition she undertook by the advice of Dr. Hickee, and received a bounty from queen Anne to prosecute it, but it never appeared. In 1715 she published a Saxon Grammar. On her brother's death, she kept a school at Evesham. Queen Caroline allowed her a small pension, and in 1739 the duchess dowager of Portland took her into her family, to instruct her children. She died at Bulstrode in 1756.—Ibid.

ELSWICK (John Herman d'), a lutheran divine, born at Rensburg, in Holstein, in 1684, and died at Stade in 1741. He published some learned books of other scholars, with notes by himself.—Moreri.

ELSYNGE (Henry), an English writer, was born at Batterica, in Surrey, in 1598, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ-church, Oxford. Archbishop Laud procured him the place of clerk of the house of commons, which he resigned in 1648. He died in 1654. He wrote an excellent book, entitled The ancient Method and Manner of holding Parliaments in England, reprinted in 1768, with additions.—Biog. Brit.

ELVIUS (Peter), a Swedish mathematician, and secretary of the royal academy of sciences at Stockholm, was born at Upsal in 1710. He was an able mechanic, and particularly excelled in the construction of machines driven by water. He also made accurate surveys of the maritime coast, and the Swedish lakes. He likewise made celestial observations at Uraniburg, once the residence of Tycho Brahe. He died in 1749. A Journal of his Tour in Sweden was published at Stockholm in 1751.—Gen. Biog.

ELWES (John), an extraordinary miser. His family name was Meggot, which he altered in pursuance of the will of sir Harvey Elwes, his uncle, who left him at least 250,000*l.* and he was possessed of nearly as much of his own. At this time he attended the most noted gaming-houses, and after sitting up a whole night at play for thousands, he would proceed to Smithfield to meet his cattle, which were coming to market from his seat in Essex, and there would he stand disputing with a cattle butcher for a shilling. If the cattle did not arrive, he would walk on to meet them; and more than once he has gone the whole way to his farm without stopping, which was seventeen miles from London. He would walk in the rain in London sooner than pay a shilling for a coach; sit in wet clothes to save the expence of a fire; ate his provisions in the last stage of putrefaction; and he wore a wig a fortnight which he picked up in a lane. In 1774 he was chosen knight of the shire for Berkshire, and his conduct in parliament was perfectly independent. He died in 1789, aged about 77, leaving a fortune of 500,000*l.* besides entailed estates.—Life of Elwes by Topham.

ELXAI, a jew in the second century, who founded a sect which acknowledged that Jesus Christ was divinely commissioned. The Ebionites were derived from them.—Eusebius.

ELYS (Edmund), an English divine and poet, was born in Devonshire, and educated at Baliol college, Oxford. He published Divine Poems, and Miscellanies, in Latin and English verse. He became rector of East Allington in Devonshire, but at the revolution turned a nonjuror, and died about 1693.—Wood.

ELZEVIUS, famous printers at Amsterdam and Leyden. There were five of this name, Lewis, Bonaventure, Abraham, Lewis, and Daniel. Lewis began to be known at Leyden in 1595, and was the first who made the distinction between the v consonant and the u vowel. Daniel died in 1680. He published, at Amsterdam, in 12mo. 1674, a catalogue of books printed by his family.—Moreri.

EMANUEL, king of Portugal, succeeded John II. in 1495. He restored the nobility to their privileges, and greatly encouraged maritime adventures, by which means a new passage to India was discovered by Gama and Brazil in 1501, by Cabral. Emanuel also sent an expedition to Africa, and established a commercial intercourse with the kingdom of Congo. He died in 1591, aged 53.—Mod. Univ. Hist.

EMERSON (William), an English mathematician, was born in 1701, at Hurworth, in the county of Durham. He kept a school for some time, but quitted that employment, and contented himself with a small paternal estate. He was a profound mathematician, but of singular habits, being vulgar in his manners, fond of low company, and extremely shabby in his dress. He always walked to London when he had any thing to publish, and carefully revised every sheet himself. He died in 1782, at his native village. He wrote treatises on Fluxions, Mechanics, Algebra, Optics, Astronomy, Navigation, Arithmetic; a Commentary on the Principia of Newton, and several other esteemed works.—Hutton's Math. Dict. Europ. Mag.

EMLYN (Thomas), a nonconformist minister, was born at Stamford, in Lincolnshire, in 1663. After receiving a preparatory education, he was admitted a preacher, and became chaplain to the countess of Donegal, a dissenter, whom he accompanied to Ireland. In 1683 he returned to England, and became minister of a congregation at Lowestoff, where he turned arian. In 1691 he removed to Dublin, by an invitation of Mr. Boyce, to be his assistant, but his religious sentiments being discovered, the Dublin synod suspended him from the ministry; on which he wrote a book entitled, An humble Enquiry into the Scripture Account of Jesus Christ. For this he was persecuted by the dissenters, and the jury having found him guilty of blasphemy, he was sentenced to pay a fine of 1000*l.* and to suffer a year's imprisonment. The fine was afterwards commuted for 70*l.*, but he remained in confinement two years. On recovering his liberty, he went to London, where he served a small congregation a few years. He died in 1743. Besides the above work, he wrote several others on the side of arianism, and some sermons, all collected in 2 vols. 8vo. by his son, Sollom Emlyn, esq. a counsellor, who edited Hales on the Pleas of the Crown.—Biog. Br.

EMMA, daughter of Richard II. duke of Normandy, and mother of Edward the Confessor, king of England. She was first married to Ethelred, who was obliged to go to Normandy with his sons Alfred and Edward, when the Danes invaded the kingdom. After his death she married Canute. In the reign of her son the earl of Kent accused her of an improper intercourse with her relation, the bishop of Winchester, on which, to prove her innocence, she is said to have walked barefoot over burning ploughshares, without being hurt.—Moreri.

EMMIUS (Ubbo), a learned historian, was born in East Friesland, in 1547. He was rector of the college at Norden, and afterwards of that of Groningen. He died in 1625. He wrote Decades rerum Friscarum; Vetus Græcia illustrata, &c.—Ibid.

EMPEDOCLES, a philosopher and poet of Sicily, who lived 444 B. C. He was a follower of Pythagoras, on whose system he wrote a poem. He refused the sovereignty of his country, and was a great enemy to tyranny. His eloquence was powerful, and of the effects of his musical skill extraordinary things are related. He also was well acquainted with philosophy and medicine, and wrote some tragedies. Of his death very contradictory accounts are given; some say that he fell into the crater of mount Ætna accidentally, while others assert that he purposely cast himself into it, but neither is to be relied on.—Stanley's Hist. Phil.

EMPERRUR (Constantine I'), Hebrew professor at Leyden, died in 1648. His principal works are Clavis Talmudicæ; Mid-dot, or de Templo Hierosolymitano et de Mensuris Templi.—Moreri.

EMPSON (sir Richard), the son of a sieve-maker at Towcester, in the county of Northampton, who became a favourite with Henry VII. and on account of his oppressions rendered himself odious to the nation. He was beheaded with his coadjutor Dudley, in 1510.—Rapin.

ENFIELD (William), a dissenting minister, was born at Sudbury, in 1741. He was educated under Dr. Ashworth, at Daventry, and in 1763 became minister of a congregation at Liverpool. While here he published two volumes of sermons, which met with a good reception. About 1770 he removed to Warrington, as tutor in the belles lettres in the academy there. During his stay at Warrington, he published several works, as the History of Liverpool, Institutes of Natural Philosophy, &c. In 1785 he undertook the pastoral care of a congregation at Norwich, and continued there till his death in 1797. Besides the books above mentioned, he published, The Speaker, a school book of general use; a volume of Prayers and Hymns; biographical Sermons; and a History of Philosophy, in 2 vols. 4to. Since his death have appeared his Sermons, in 3 vols. with his Life prefixed, written by Dr. Aikin.

ENGELBRECHTSSEN (Cornelius), a painter, born at Leyden in 1468. Several pictures by him are in the churches of Leyden and Utrecht. He died in 1533.—Houbraken.

ENGELHAMS (Cornelius), a painter in water colours, born at Malines in 1527. His paintings are all on religious subjects. He died in 1583.

ENGHIEN (the duke de), son of the duke of Bourbon, and grandson of the prince of Condé. This amiable young prince resided at a seat which had been left him by his great uncle, the cardinal prince de Rohan, in the principality of Ettenheim, which appertains to the elector of Baden. Here he devoted himself, under the misfortunes of his family, in a peaceful retirement, to the cultivation of his estate; when Buonaparte's agents came by night, and having seized him in his bed, hurried him to France, where he was tried by a mock tribunal for having taken up arms against France in the time of Robespierre, and condemned. In the night of the 22d of March 1804, he was shot in the wood of Vincennes, by some of the body-guard belonging to the Corsican usurper, meeting his fate as became the descendant of an illustrious house.—Revolutionary Plutarch. Gent. Mag.

ENGLAND. The aboriginal inhabitants of the British islands were called Britons, and sprung from the same stock as the Gauls, that is, Celtic. Cæsar invaded it in 54 B. C. In A. D. 43, the Romans subdued part, and the whole was conquered by them in 78. In 410 they abandoned the country, and the old inhabitants being harassed by the Scots and Picts, called in the Saxons, who conquered the whole except Wales. The Saxons formed seven kingdoms, called the heptarchy, each of which had its separate chief, till 827, when Egbert completed the conquest of the whole. About 866 the Danes made a descent on England, and conquered Northumberland, East Anglia and Mercia. About 877 they were possessed of the whole kingdom, but soon after king Alfred totally defeated them. About 1003 Swein, king of Denmark, conquered all the northern parts of England, and on Ethelred's retiring to Normandy, the whole kingdom submitted to the invader. On his death the Danes proclaimed his son Canute. The Saxon line was restored in the person of Edward the Confessor in 1041; but the Normans, under William the Conqueror, subdued the kingdom in 1066. In 1283 Wales was subdued by Edward I. Llewellyn, their last king, being slain.—Rapin. Hume.

ENGLISH (Esther), a remarkable pen-woman. Some of her performances are still extant. One of them is entitled Oscornaries upon the Vanitie and Inconstancie of the World; written by Esther Inglis, the first of January, 1600. It is in French and English verse, ornamented with flowers and fruits, painted in water colours, and on the first leaf is her own picture. She married a Mr. Kello, by whom she had a son who was in orders.—Ballard.

ENJEDIM (George), a learned socinian of Hungary, who wrote, Explicatio locorum Scripturæ veteris & novi Testamenti ex quibus dogma Trinitatis stabiliri solet, 4to. He died in 1597.—Moreri.

ENNIUS (Quintus), an old Latin poet, born in Calabria B. C. 237. He resided at Rome, and was universally esteemed by all men of letters, though his life does not appear to have been very temperate. He was the first who wrote heroic verses in Latin. Fragments only of his writings have reached us, which may be found in the Corpus Poetarum of Maittaire, and in other collections. Voss. Poet. Lat.

ENNODIUS (Magnus Felix), a learned prelate, born about 473. He became bishop of Pavia, where he died in 521. His works, which serve to illustrate the history of that period, were printed at Paris, in 8vo. in 1611.—Moreri.

ENOCH, the son of Jared, and the seventh from Adam, is celebrated in scripture for his pious and upright life in an evil generation, and being translated into heaven without passing through death, B. C. 3017, and of his age 365. St. Jude has cited a prediction of Enoch respecting the last judgment. There is a book extant, called the Prophecies of Enoch, which, though very antient, is apocryphal.—SS. Moreri.

ENSENADA (Zeno Somo de Silva, marquis de la), a Spanish statesman, who rose from obscurity to the first offices in the government, and to the rank of nobility. His modesty appears from the title which he took of Ensenada, or "Nothing in itself." He was disgraced by the intrigues of the duke of Huefcar. He died in 1755.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ENT (George), an English physician, was born at Sandwich in 1604. He was educated at Cambridge, but took his doctor's degree at Padua. He was knighted by Charles II. and became president of the college of physicians. He died in 1689. His works are, Apologia pro Circulatione sanguinis contra Emilio Parisano, 8vo.; Animadversiones in Malachiz Thruston, de distributione de Respirationis usu primario.—Wood's A. O.

ENTICK (John), an English divine, who published a History of the War which ended in 1763, 5 vols. 8vo.; a History of London, 4 vols. 8vo.; a Latin and English Dictionary; an English Spelling Dictionary, and other works. He died in 1780.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

ENTINOPE, of Candia, an architect of the 5th century, who was one of the chief founders of the city of Venice. When the Goths invaded Italy in 403, Entinope fled into the marshes on the borders of the Adriatic, where he built a house, and his example was followed by other fugitives.—Mor.

ENZINAS (Francis), or Dryander, which is the Greek word for his name, was born at Burgos, in Spain, about 1515. He renounced popery at Wittenberg, and translated the New Testament into Spanish, for which he was thrown into prison at Antwerp, but contrived to make his escape, and went to Geneva, where he died. He wrote the History of the Low Countries, and of the Religion of Spain, 8vo.—His brother John was also a convert from popery, for which he was burnt at Rome in 1545.—Bayle. Moreri.

EOBANUS (Elias), professor of the belles-lettres at Erfurt, at Nuremberg, and Mari-burg. He died in the latter place in 1540, aged 52. He was a good poet and an honest man, but a hard drinker. His Latin Poems and Epistles have been published.—Moreri.

SON (de l'Etoile), a French fanatic of the 12th century, who pretended to be the son of God. He died in prison, and some of his followers were burnt.—Moreri.

EPAMINONDAS, a Theban general, illustrious for his talents and his virtues. He was the friend of Pelopidas, who by his advice delivered Thebes from the Lacedemonians. This produced a war, in which Epaminondas was appointed head of the Theban armies. He defeated the Spartans at the battle of Leuctra, about 371 B.C. and on his return to Thebes he was seized for violating the law, which ordered every public officer to resign his appointment within a limited period on pain of death. When brought before the senate, he calmly requested that after execution they would inscribe these words on his tomb: "Here lies Epaminondas, who suffered death for saving his country." This reproach affected his judges, that he was pardoned. He was again placed at the head of the troops, and assisted the Eleans against the Spartans. But in the moment of victory over the latter at Mantinea, he was wounded by a javelin, and expired in triumph on hearing that the Thebans were the victors, B. C. 363.—Corn. Nep. Univ. Hist.

EPAPHRODITUS, bishop of Philippi in Macedonia. He was the bearer of the contributions sent by the Christians of Philippi to St. Paul at Rome, who returned them an epistle by him, A. D. 62.—Philip. ii.

EPHORUS, an orator and historian of Cumæ, in Æolia. He was the disciple of Isoocrates, by whose advice he wrote a history, from the return of the Heraclidæ to Peloponnesus, down to the 20th year of Philip of Macedon. He also wrote some other pieces, but they are all lost.—Voss. Hist. Gr.

EPHRAIM, the son of Joseph, was born in Egypt about 1710 B.C. He was adopted, together with his brother Manasseh, by Jacob among the tribes.—SS.

EPHREM (St.), a Christian father of the 4th century, was born at Nisibis, in Mesopotamia. He settled at Edessa, was ordained deacon, and became superior of a society of monks. He wrote several religious discourses in the Syriac language, which have been translated into Greek and Latin. The best edition of his works is that of Rome, in 1747, in 6 vols. folio. He died in 778.

EPICHRAMUS, a poet and philosopher, was a native of Cos, but carried when a child to Sicily. He was of the Pythagorean school, and is mentioned as being the first writer of comedy. Aristotle attributes to him the invention of the letters Θ and Χ. He died, aged 97, in the 5th century B.C.—Voss. Poet. Grec.

EPICURUS, a stoic philosopher, was a native of Hierapolis, in Phrygia. He was the slave of Epaphroditus, the freedman of Nero. When Domitian banished the philosophers from Rome, he went to Nicopolis, but returned on the death of that tyrant, and was in great esteem with Adrian and Marcus Aurelius. He resided in a cottage which had no furniture but an earthen lamp, which sold after his death for 3000 drachmas, near 100l. of our money. Here he wrote his Enchiridion, or Compendium of the Stoic Philosophy. It abounds in pure maxims of morality. The best edition is that of Upton, in 2 vols. 4to. London, 1749. Mrs. Carter translated it into English, 1758, 4to. with notes.—Moreri.

EPICURUS, the founder of a celebrated sect of philosophers, was born at Gargettus, near Athens, about 342 B.C. He studied at Samos and Athens, from whence he removed in consequence of the war with Perdiccas, and opened a school, first at Mitylene, and next at Lampascus. He finally fixed his residence at Athens, where he obtained a number of disciples, owing to the pleasantness of his system and his deportment. They lived together, and had all things in common. Epicurus died in the 73d year of his age, and was succeeded by his friend Hermachus. His system had a tendency to atheism, by ascribing too little to the Deity, and extravagant powers to nature. His doctrine of pleasure being the supreme good, has been much misrepresented and abused, for the life of Epicurus was irreproachable, and he inculcated virtue as the essence of pleasure. It must be admitted, however, that his system was afterwards grossly perverted from the author's original meaning. His notion of the eternity of matter is peculiarly dangerous and absurd.—Stanley. Bayle.

EPIMENIDES, a Cretan poet and philosopher, of whom marvellous tales are related, as that he slept fifty years, and lived to be above one hundred and fifty years old. He was sent for by the Athenians to perform a solemn lustration when their city was visited by the plague. St. Paul is said to have quoted him in Titus i. 12.—Stanley's Hist. Phil.

EPIPHANIUS, a father of the church, who displayed great zeal against the writings of Origen. He was chosen bishop of Salamis, and died in 403. His works were published by Petavius, in 2 vols. folio, 1622.—Cave.

EPIPHANIUS, the scholastic, who translated, at the request of his friend Cassiodorus, the Ecclesiastical Histories of Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret. He lived in the sixth century.—Ibid.

EPIPHANIUS, an heresiarch, was the son of Carpocrates. He allowed his followers a community of wives. After his death he was worshipped by them as a deity.—Mor.

ERISCIPIUS (Simon), a learned divine, born at Amsterdam in 1583. In 1612 he was chosen divinity professor at Leyden, C c 2 but met with considerable trouble on account of his being an Arminian. He was the principal of the remonstrants, or Arminians, at the synod of Dort, which arbitrary assembly deposed him and the other deputies from their ministerial functions, and banished them the republic. He then went to Antwerp, but in 1626 he returned to Holland, and became minister to the remonstrants at Rotterdam. In 1634 he removed to Amsterdam, and was chosen rector of the remonstrants' college. He died in 1643. His works make 2 vols. folio.—Bayle. Moreri.

ERASISTRATUS, a celebrated Greek physician, who is said to have discovered the passion of Antiochus Soter for his mother-in-law Stratonice, by the agitation of his pulse. He and Herophilus of Chalcedon are mentioned as the first who dissected human bodies, to improve themselves in anatomy.—Plin. Nat. Hist. Moreri.

ERASMUS (Desiderius), an illustrious writer, was born at Rotterdam in 1467. He was the illegitimate son of one Gerard, a native of Tergou, by the daughter of a physician. It was the intention of Gerard to have married his mistress, but being deceived by a false report of her death while he was in Italy, he entered into orders, which completely destroyed his good design. Erasmus was called Gerard, which he afterwards altered to the Latin name Desiderius, and the Greek Erasmus, all signifying amiable. At nine years of age he was sent to Deventer, in Gelderland, where he made a great progress in his studies. While he was at Deventer his mother died there of the plague, and his father soon followed her, leaving our orphan to the care of three guardians, who determined on bringing him up to a religious life that they might enjoy his patrimony; for which purpose they removed him from one convent to another, till at last, in 1486, he took the habit among the canons-regular at Stein, near Tergou. The monastic life being very disagreeable to him, he gladly accepted an invitation from the archbishop of Cambrai to reside with him. During his abode with this prelate he was ordained priest; but in 1496 he went to Paris, where he supported himself by giving private lectures. In 1497 he visited England, where he met with a liberal reception from the most eminent scholars of the age, and applied to the study of the Greek language, of which he was before ignorant. His first literary works were philological, as his Adagia; De Copia Verborum; and De ratione Conscribendi Epistolas. In 1503 we find him at Louvain, where he studied divinity under Dr. Adrian Florent, afterwards Adrian VI. The next year came out his Enchiridion Militis Christiani, a book of practical religion. Not long after this he was again in England, for which country he had always a great regard. In 1506 he took his doctor's degree at Turin, and then went to Bologna, where he continued some time; thence he removed to Venice, and resided with the famous Aldus Manutius. From Venice he went to Padua and Rome, where many offers were made him to settle; but having received an invitation from Henry VIII. he set out for England, and arrived in 1510. He at first lodged with sir Thomas More, and while there, wrote his Encomium Morie, or Praise of Folly. Fisher, bishop of Rochester, invited him to Cambridge, where he was made lady Margaret's professor of divinity, and Greek professor. In 1514 we find him at Basil, preparing his New Testament, and Epistles of Jerome, for the press, which came out in 1516. This was the first time the New Testament was printed in Greek. The reformation now began under Luther, and though Erasmus approved of his principles and object, he was afraid to irritate the court of Rome. A friendly correspondence passed between these two great men, but afterwards a controversy ensued on the subject of free-will, and Luther treated Erasmus as a hypocrite. It is certain that Erasmus approved the reformation in his heart, but he had not courage to express himself openly; and the consequence was, that he was disliked by both parties. In 1522 appeared his Colloquies, which gave great offence to the monks, who used to say that "Erasmus laid the egg which Luther hatched." His next controversy was with Sealigner, and other scholars, who, in their great zeal for the purity of Latin composition, objected to the use of any word which was not to be found in the works of Cicero, whence they were called Ciceronians. Against these pedants Erasmus wrote an admirable dialogue, entitled Ciceronianus, printed in 1528. The same year appeared his learned work, "De recta Latini Græcique Sermone pronuntiatione." His last publication was his Ecclesiastes, or on the Manner of Preaching, 1535. He died at Basil in 1536, and was buried in the cathedral of that city. The inhabitants of Rotterdam still shew the house where he was born, and there is a statue erected to his memory in the great square of that city. His works were edited at Leyden in 1706, in ten volumes, folio, by Le Clerc.—Jortin's Life of Erasmus.

ERASMIUS (Thomas), a physician and divine, born at Baden about 1524, and died at Basil in 1582. He wrote some books on physic, but he is best known by a treatise, entitled De Excommunicatione Ecclesiastica, in which he denies that the church has power to inflict censures.—Moreri.

ERATOSTHENES, a Greek of Cyrene, who was keeper of the famous library at Alexandria. He died 194 B.C. He was the first who discovered the method of measuring the circumference of the earth. His fragments were printed at Oxford in 1672, 8vo.—Plin. Nat. Hist. Græc. Moreri.

ERCHENBERT of Lombardy, was at first a soldier, and afterwards a benedictine monk. He wrote a Chronicle of the Lombards, of which an abridgment was published at Naples in 1620, 4to. He flourished in the 9th century.—Voss. de Hist. Lat.

ERCILL-Y-ZUNIGA (don Alonzo d'), a Spanish soldier and poet, was born at Madrid in 1533. He was at the battle of St. Quintin in 1557, and afterwards went to South America, where he distinguished himself against the revolted Indians of Peru and Chili. He died at Madrid about 1600. He wrote a poem on the subject of this war, called Araucana.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ERCKERN (Lazarus), a German, who wrote on Metallurgy. He was superintendent of the mines of Hungary, Germany, and the Tyrol. His book was printed at Frankfurt in 1694, in Latin.—Ibid.

EREMITA (Daniel), a writer of the 17th century, was a native of Antwerp, and became secretary to the duke of Florence. He turned Roman catholic, but afterwards became a deist, and died at Leghorn in 1613. His Opera Varia appeared at Utrecht in 1702, in 8vo. The best part of the collection is that entitled De Aulica Vita ac civili.—Moreri.

ERIC IX. king of Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, succeeded Margaret in 1412. He married the daughter of Henry IV. of England. He made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, but was made prisoner in Syria, and paid a large ransom to obtain his liberty. Soon after his return the Swedes revolted, which was followed by that of the Danes, on which he withdrew with all his wealth to the isle of Gothland. In 1439 he was formally deposed. He afterwards settled in Pomerania, where he died in 1459. He compiled in his exile a History of Denmark to the Year 1288.—Mod. Un. Hist. Moreri.

ERIC XIV. son and successor of Gustavus I. king of Sweden. He courted princess Elizabeth, afterwards queen of England, but being refused, he married the daughter of a peasant. This alienated from him the hearts of his subjects, and, together with his cruelties, occasioned a revolt. Eric was taken prisoner, and compelled to renounce his throne in 1568. He died in prison in 1578.—Ibid.

ERIGENA (John Scotus), a learned man of the 9th century, was born in Scotland, though others make him a native of England. He is said to have travelled to Athens, where he acquired the Greek and Oriental languages. He resided many years at the court of Charles the Bald, king of France, with whom he lived on terms of the greatest familiarity. At the request of his patron he translated the works of Dionysius into Latin, which drew upon him the resentment of the pope, to avoid whose fury he went to England. His greatest work was the Division of Nature, or the Nature of Things, printed at Oxford in 1681. Some say that he was employed by Alfred in restoring learning at Oxford, and that he afterwards taught school at Malmesbury, where he was murdered by his pupils on account of his severity. Others say that he died a natural death in France about 874.—Biog. Brit.

ERINNA, a Grecian poetess, who was contemporary with Sappho, and wrote several pieces, fragments of which are extant.—Voss. Poet. Græc.

ERIZZO (Lewis and Marc Antony), two brothers of Venice, who caused their uncle, a senator of Ravenna, to be murdered in 1546, that they might gain possession of his wealth. Lewis was beheaded, but the other died in prison. Paul Erizzo, of the same family, was governor of Negropont, which he defended against the Turks, and at last surrendered on condition that his life should be spared. The sultan, however, caused him to be sawn in two; and with his own hands cut off the head of his daughter, because she would not yield to his desires, A. D. 1469.—Moreri.

ERIZZO (Sebastian), a learned Venetian nobleman, who died in 1585. He wrote, A Treatise on Medals; another on Logic; and one entitled Sei Giornate. He also translated some of Plato's works into Italian.—Tirabscbi.

ERLACH (John Lewis), a noble Swiss, born at Berne. He distinguished himself in the service of France, and obtained several victories, for which he was made commander in chief of the army by Lewis XIV. on the defection of Turenne. He died at Brisac the year following, aged 55.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

ERNESTI (John Augustus), a learned divine, and professor of theology at Leipzig, was born at Tennstadt in 1707. In 1742 he was chosen extraordinary professor of ancient literature, and in 1736 professor of eloquence. Two years afterwards he took his doctor's degree, and obtained the divinity chair, which he held with great reputation to his death in 1781. He published several valuable editions of Latin and Greek authors, as Xenophon, Cicero, Suetonius, Tacitus, Homer, and Callimachus, accompanied with learned notes. His Institutio interpretis Novi Testamenti, Leipzig, 1761, is a very excellent work; as also are his Opuscula Oratoria, Orationes, Prolusiones et Elogia, 8vo.; and Opusculorum Oratorum, Novum Volumen, 8vo. 1791; Opuscula Critica, 8vo.—Life by W. Aug. Ernesti.

EROSTRATUS, or ERATOSTRATUS, an obscure Ephesian, who, to acquire a name, set fire to the temple of Diana, 356 B.C. The magistrates of Ephesus passed an edict, prohibiting any to pronounce his name.—Moreri.

ERPENIUS, or ERFEN (Thomas), a learned Dutchman, born in 1584. He was educated at Leyden, after which he travelled into several countries to perfect himself in the Oriental languages. He returned to Leyden in 1612, and was chosen professor of the Oriental tongues. He died in 1624. He wrote Grammatica Arabica; Rudimenta Linguae Arabicae; Precepta de Lingua Graecorum Communi; Grammatica Hebraea; Orationes de Linguarum Hebraeae atque Arabicae dignitate. He also translated several Arabic works into Latin, with annotations; and the New Testament and Pentateuch into Arabic.—Moreri.

ERSKINE (Ebenezer and Ralph), two Scotch divines, of the class of seceders, or those who adhere to the solemn league and covenant. The first died at Stirling in 1755, and Ralph in 1751. Their sermons have been often printed, and are held in much request by high calvinists.—Lives prefixed to their works.

ERLSEN (John Christian Polycarp), a German naturalist, born at Quedlinburg in 1744. He studied physic at Gottingen, and gave lectures there on the veterinary art and natural history. He also wrote on those subjects. His Principles of Natural History, 8vo. 1768, is particularly valuable. He died in 1777.—Gen. Biog.

ERYCEIRA (Ferdinand de Meneses count), a Portuguese historian, born at Lisbon in 1614. He devoted himself to military service, and distinguished himself as an able general at Tangier. He wrote The History of Tangier, folio, 1723; History of Portugal, 2 vols. folio; The Life of John I, King of Portugal.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ERYCEIRA (Francis Xavier, Meneses, count), great-grandson of the above, was born at Lisbon in 1673. He also was a soldier and a writer, and died in 1743. He wrote on the Value of the Coins of Portugal; Reflections on academical Studies; Parallels of illustrious Men and Women; A Translation of the Henriade.—Ibid.

ESAU, the son of Isaac and Rebecca, born about 1836 B.C. He sold his primogeniture to his brother Jacob, who by deceit afterwards procured from him his father's blessing. Enraged at this, he would have slain Jacob had he not fled into Mesopotamia. On his return Esau met him, and behaved very generously to him. Esau died 1710 B.C. He was the father of the Edomites.—Genesis.

ESCOBAR (Bartholomew), a learned Spanish jesuit, who went to the Indies, and died at Lima in 1624, aged 66. He wrote several religious pieces. Anthony Escobar, another Spanish jesuit, died in 1669, aged 80. He wrote a Commentary on the Bible, in 9 vols. folio; and a work, entitled Theologia Moralis, 7 vols. folio.—Moreri.

ESPAIGNAC (John Baptist, baron d'), a gallant French general, born in 1713, and died at Paris in 1783. He served with great glory under marshal Saxe, and wrote a number of books on the military art, and a History of the Marshal, in 3 vols. 4to.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ESPAÑE (John d'), a French protestant minister, born in Dauphine. He came to London in the reign of James I. and officiated to a French congregation there till about the restoration. His Treatise on Popular Errors in Religion, dedicated to Charles I. has been praised by Bayle. He criticised therein some of Calvin's principles. His works were printed at the Hague, in 2 vols. 12mo. 1674.—Bayle.

ESPAGNET (John d'), a learned Frenchman of the 17th century. He was president of the parliament of Bourdeaux, and published two books, one entitled Enchiridion Physicæ Restitutæ; and another called Arcanum Hermeticæ Philosophiæ Opus, which is appended to the former.—Ibid.

ESPAGNOLET (Joseph Ribeira l'), a Spanish painter, born at Xativa, in Valencia, in 1580. He imitated the manner of Caravaggio, whom in some points he surpassed. He died at Naples in 1656. He also engraved in aquafortis.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ESPEN (Zeger Bernard van), a learned professor at Louvain, who opposed the formula and the bull Unigenitus, by which he brought himself into trouble, and went to Amersfort to avoid his enemies, where he died in 1728, aged 83. His works on the canon law were printed at Paris, 4 vols. folio, 1753.—Moreri.

ESPENCE (Claude d'), a French divine and doctor of the Sorbonne, born in 1511. He accompanied cardinal Lorraine to Rome, and distinguished himself at the council of Trent, and in many important negotiations. He died in 1571. His theological works were printed at Paris in 1619, folio.—Mor.

ESPER (John Frederic), a naturalist and astronomer, was born at Drossenfeld, in Bayreuth, in 1732. He studied theology at Erlangen, but devoted himself chiefly to botany and natural history. He died in 1781. He published, An accurate Description of the lately discovered Zoölites of unknown Animals, and of several Caverns, &c. Nuremberg, 1774, folio; A Method of determining the Orbits of Comets, and other celestial Bodies, without astronomical Instruments, or mathematical Calculations, 8vo.—Gen. Biog.

ESPERIENTE (Philip), a learned Italian, who formed a society at Rome, the members of which adopted Greek names, and that which he assumed was Callimachus. This giving offence to pope Pius II. he retired to Poland, where he was employed by king Casimir to educate his children. He died in 1496. He wrote, 1. Commentarii rerum Persicarum; 2. Historia de iis quæ à Venetis tentata sunt, Persiæ & Tartariæ contra Turcas movendis, &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ESPREMEIL (James Duval d'), a French advocate, was born at Pondicherry in 1746. He was the nephew and heir of Duval de Leyril, governor of that city, and the accuser of the unfortunate count Lally. D'Espremeil became counsellor of the parliament of Paris, and was a very eloquent orator. He distinguished himself by his violence in the French revolution, but perished on the scaffold with his old antagonist Chapelier, April 23, 1794. In going to the place of execution, he said to his companion: "We have at this moment a terrible problem to solve; to which of us two the shoutings of the mob are addressed?" He was the author of Remonstrances, published by parliament, 1788; Nullity and Despotism of the Assembly, 8vo.; Actual State of France, 1790, 8vo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ESPRIT (James), a member of the French academy, born in 1611, and died in 1678. His works are, 1. Paraphrases on some of the Psalms; 2. The Fallacy of human Virtues, 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

ESSEX (James) an English architect, born in 1723. He distinguished himself by the repairs and improvements of King's college chapel, Cambridge, and Ely and Lincoln cathedrals. He wrote some papers in the Archæologia, and the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica. He died at Cambridge in 1784.—Gen. Bio. Dict.

ESTAING (Charles Henry, count d'), a French commander, was born of a noble family in Auvergne. He served under count Lally in India, and was made prisoner by the English; but was released on his parole, which he broke. In the American war he was employed as vice-admiral and general of the French armies on that station, where he took the island of Grenada. In 1787 he became member of the assembly of notables, and commandant of the national guards at Versailles at the commencement of the revolution. He was guillotined April 29, 1793.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ESTAMPES (Anne of Pisseleu, duchess of), wife of the duke of Estampes, and mistress of Francis I. king of France. She carried on a correspondence with Charles V. and informed him of the state of the armies and the country, by which means he gained the greatest advantages, and nearly ruined France. After the death of Francis she retired to her country seat, where she died in 1576.—Moreri.

ESTCOURT (Richard), an actor and dramatic writer, born at Tewkesbury, in Gloucestershire. He was a second-rate performer at Drury-lane, and died in 1713. He wrote two dramatic pieces: 1. The Fair Example, a comedy; 2. Prunella, an interlude.—Biog. Dram.

ESTHER, a Jewess of the tribe of Benjamin, and cousin to Mordecai. Ahasuerus, king of Persia, married her after divorcing his queen Vashti. His favourite minister, Haman, out of resentment against Mordecai, plotted the destruction of all the Jews in the empire, which being communicated to the queen, she applied to the king, who revoked the decree, and ordered Haman to be hanged on the gallows which he had prepared for Mordecai. In memory of th deliverance, the Jews celebrate the yearly feast of Purim. Historians are not agreed as to the king who is called Ahasuerus, in scripture, but it seems most probably to have been Darius, son of Hystaspes.—SS. Stackhouse's Hist. of the Bible.

ESTIUS (William), a learned Roman catholic divine, was born at Gorcum, in Holland, in 1542. He became professor of theology, and afterwards chancellor of the university of Douay, where he died in 1613. He wrote Commentaries on the Epistles, 2 vols.; and Annotations in præcipua ac difficiliora S. Scriptura loca, fol.; Martyri Edmundi Campiani, &c.—Moreri.

ESTOILE (Pierre de l'), a French writer, and grand-auditor of the chancery of Paris, died in 1611. After his death were published, 1. His Journal of Henry III. 5 vols. 8vo.; 2. Journal of Henry IV. 4 vols. 8vo. His son, Claude, was a member of the French academy, and wrote some plays and poems. He died in 1652.—Ibid.

ESTRADES (Godfrey, count of), a French general and statesman. In 1661 he was sent ambassador to England, and again in 1666, where he strenuously maintained his right of precedence over the Spanish ambassador. The year following he went to Holland, and concluded the treaty of Breda. In 1673 he was at the conference at Nimeguen. He died in 1686, aged 79. The negotiations of the count d'Estrades were printed at the Hague in 1742, in 9 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

ESTREES (Francis Annibal d'), duke and marshal of France. He was the son of Anthony d'Estrees, grand master of the artillery, and born in 1573. He was educated for the church, and was appointed bishop of Laon, which he quitted for a military life. He died at Paris in 1670. He wrote Memoirs of the Regency of Mary de Medicis; Relation of the Siege of Mantua. His sister Gabrielle became the favourite mistress of Henry IV. by whom she had three children. She died, as it is said, by poison, in 1599.—Moreri.

ESTREES (Cæsar d'), cardinal and abbot of St. Germain des Prés, born in 1628. He was the son of the preceding, and raised to the see of Laon in 1653. Lewis XIV. employed him in several negotiations, particularly at Rome. He died in 1714.—Ibid.

ESTREES (Victor Marie d'), vice-admiral of France, born in 1660. He bombarded Barcelona and Alicant in 1691. In 1701 he was appointed lieutenant-general of the naval forces of Spain by Philip V. He was made marshal of France, and created a grandee of Spain. He died in 1737.—Ibid.

ESTREES (Louis Cæsar, duke d'), marshal of France and minister of state, was born in 1695. He distinguished himself in Flanders under marshal Saxe, and in the war in 1756 had the command of the army in Germany, where he obtained signal advantages.

He was afterwards recalled, and made a duke in 1763. He died in 1771.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

ETHELBERT, king of Kent in 560. He married Bertha, daughter of Caribert, king of France, by whose means he embraced christianity, which he had permitted to be preached to his subjects by Austin the monk. Ethelbert enacted a code of laws, and died in 616.—Rapin. Hume.

ETHELBERT, king of England, the second son of Ethelwolf, succeeded his brother Ethelbald in 860. He was a virtuous prince, and beloved by his subjects.—Ibid.

ETHELRED, king of England, the son of Edgar, succeeded his brother Edward the Martyr in 978. He paid a tribute to the Danes by a tax levied on his subjects called Dane geld. To free himself from this oppression, he caused the Danes to be treacherously massacred in one day. On this, Swein, king of Denmark, entered his kingdom, and compelled him to fly to Normandy, but Swein dying soon after, Ethelred returned, and died in 1016.—Ibid.

ETHELWOLF, king of England, came to the crown in 838. He was a mild and religious prince, and went to Rome with his youngest son Alfred. He died in 857, and was buried at Winchester.—Ibid.

ETHERAGE (George), an English dramatic writer, born about 1636, of an ancient family in Oxfordshire. In 1664 he produced a comedy, called The Comical Revenge, or Love in a Tub; encouraged by the favourable reception of which, he brought out another in 1668, entitled She Would if She Could. In 1676 appeared his Man of Mode, or Sir Fopling Flutter. He received the honour of knighthood about 1683. He died at Ratishon by a fall down stairs when drunk. His songs are sprightly.—Biog. Brit.

ETHRYS (George), or Etheridge, an English physician, born at Thame, in Oxfordshire, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Oxford, of which he was elected fellow. About 1553 he was appointed king's professor of Greek, after which he practised as a physician at Oxford. He was besides a good mathematician, and well skilled in music. He was a zealous Roman catholic, on which account he lost his professorship. He died about 1588. He wrote Hypomnemata quædam in aliquot libros Pauli Æginetæ, seu Observationes Medicamentorum quæ hæc ætate in usu sunt, 8vo. 1588. Some musical compositions and Latin poems of his are extant in MS.—Wood's A.O.

ETHIOPIA and ABYSSINIA. Sesostris, king of Egypt, conquered this country about 1008 B. C. In 956 the Ethiopians regained their liberties, and in 947 invaded Egypt, and drowned king Orus. In 671 Ethiopia was subdued by Afferhaddon, king of Assyria, but it revolted on his death in 608. Cyrus obtained a great part of the country about 534, but at the time of his death the Ethiopians were in a state of independence, since Cambyfes made an unsuccessful expedition against them in 525. A. D. 960, a woman called Fredda Gabey put to death del Noad of the Solomonic race, and placed her son on the throne. This race, however, was restored by Icon Amlac in 1300.—Un. Hist. Bruce's Travels.

ETMULLER (Michael), a physician, was born in 1644, at Leipfic, in which university he became professor of botany, anatomy, and chemistry. He died in 1688. He wrote several esteemed books on medical subjects, most part of which were published after his death, by his son, Michael Ernst Etmuller, in 3 vols. folio. The son, who was born in 1673, was chosen in 1702 extraordinary professor of physic at Leipfic.—Haller Bibl. Med. Moreri.

EVAGORAS I. king of Cyprus, recovered Salamis from the Persians, but afterwards he was defeated and deprived of the greatest part of his territories. He was assassinated 374 B. C.—EVAGORAS II. grandson of the preceding, and son of Nicocles. He was dethroned by his uncle Protogoras, on which he fled to Artaxerxes Ochus, who made him governor of a province, but at last put him to death.—Moreri.

EVAGORAS, a Greek writer in the time of Augustus, who wrote, a History of Egypt; the Life of Timagenes; De artificio Thucydides Oratorio; Lexicon in Thucydidem.—Moreri.

EVAGRIUS, a monk of the 5th century, who wrote a book called Altercatio Simonis Judæi & Theopholi Christiani, which is still extant.—Moreri.

EVAGRIUS, bishop of Antioch in 389. His election was disputed by Flavianus, and confirmed by the council of Capua, in 390. He died in 392.—Moreri. Dupin.

EVAGRIUS (Scholasticus), an ecclesiastical historian of Epiphania in Syria. He flourished in the 6th century, and wrote six books of ecclesiastical history, from 431 to 594, printed by Stephens at Paris in 1544. An edition appeared at Cambridge in 1720, in folio.—Moreri.

EVAGRIUS (Ponticus or Hyperborita), a monk of the 4th century, who was born near the Euxine sea. He embraced the monastic life at Jerusalem, from whence he removed to Syria, where he zealously defended the opinions of Origen. Fragments only of his writings remain.—Cave Hist. Lit. Moreri.

EVANS (Arise), an astrologer, was a native of Wales, and educated at Oxford. On entering into orders he obtained a curacy in Staffordshire, but was dismissed on account of his irregularities. He then went to London, where he taught the mathematics, and practised astrology. He also obtained fame as a necromancer. He died during the great rebellion. The noted Lilly was his pupil.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

EVANS (Cornelius), an impostor, was born at Marseilles, but his father was a Welshman. In 1648 he came to England, and pretended to be the prince of Wales, to whom he bore a great resemblance. After carrying on this farce a few weeks, he was sent to Newgate, from whence he effected his escape, but what became of him afterwards is not known.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

EVANS (Abel), commonly called Dr. Evans the epigrammatist, was one of the Oxford wits, and intimate with the most eminent poets of the age. He was a member of St. John's college, and took his degree of D. D. in 1711. He was vicar of St. Giles's, Oxford. Some of his poems are in Mr. Nichols's collection.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

EVANS (John), a dissenting minister, was born in 1680 at Wrexham in Denbighshire, and educated at some academies in London and Yorkshire, after which he resided with a private family in Shropshire. In 1704 he became assistant to Dr. Daniel Williams, pastor of a congregation in London, and succeeded him in the sole charge in 1716. He obtained the degree of D. D. from the universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen. He died in 1730. Dr. Evans is known as the author of two volumes of excellent sermons on the Christian Temper, and a volume of sermons for Young Persons.—Dr. Harris's Fun. Sermon for Dr. Evans.

EVANS (Caleb), an eminent baptist minister, was born at Bristol, where his father officiated to a respectable congregation. The son was educated at a dissenting academy in London, and afterwards became assistant and successor to his father. He also conducted a seminary for bringing up young men to the pastoral office with great reputation. In 1789 King's college, Aberdeen, conferred on him the degree of D. D. He died in 1791, aged 54. Dr. Evans published sermons on the Scripture Doctrine of the Son and Holy Spirit; a collection of Hymns adapted to public worship; Addresses to the serious and candid Professors of Christianity; Christ crucified, or the Scripture Doctrine of the Atonement, &c.—Funeral Sermon by Dr. Stennet.

EVANS (Evan), a divine and poet, was born in Cardiganhire about 1730, and entered of Jesus college, Oxford, in 1751. He never obtained any preferment in the church, which disappointment is supposed to be the cause of his addicting himself to drinking. He died in 1790. He published a quarto volume entitled Dissertatio de Bardis, with specimens of Welsh poetry; an English poem called the Love of our Country; and two volumes of Sermons by Tillotson and others, translated into Welsh.—Queen's Camb. Biog.

EVARISTUS, bishop of Rome, was elected A. D. 100, and martyred in 109. He presented to the emperor a book or apology on the excellence of the Christian religion.—Platina. Hist.

EUBULIDES, a philosopher and dramatic writer of Miletus, was a disciple of Euclid, and preceptor to Demosthenes and Alexinus. He wrote comedies, and a book against Aristotle. There was another of the same name, but of the cynic sect.—Moreri.

EUCHARIUS, or HOUGHAR (Eligius), a divine and poet of Ghent of the 16th century. He wrote, 1. The Lives of St. Levisus, St. Cotera, and Bertulius; 2. a Comedy of the Patience of Chrysellis, and other works.—Moreri.

EUCHERIUS, archbishop of Lyons. He obtained so great a name for his piety as to be canonized. He died about 454. He wrote several devotional pieces.—Moreri.

EUCLID, an eminent philosopher of Megara, and the disciple of Socrates, from whom he differed in the manner of teaching; for, instead of instructing his pupils in morals, he confined their attention wholly to the subtleties of logic. Hence his followers became noted wranglers.—Bayle. Moreri.

EUCLID, a celebrated mathematician of Alexandria, who flourished B. C. 300. He immortalized his name by his books on geometry, in which he digested all the propositions of the eminent geometricians who preceded him, as Thales, Pythagoras, and others. Ptolemy became his pupil, and his school was so famous, that Alexandria continued for ages the great university for mathematicians. The best edition of his whole works is that of Gregory, Oxford, folio, 1703. His Elements have gone through innumerable editions.—Moreri. Martin's Biog. Phil. Hutton's Math. Dict.

EUDZEMON (John Andrew), or John the bappy, a learned jesuit, who died at Rome in 1625. He was a native of Candia, and wrote a book entitled Admonitio ad regem Ludovicum XIII. 1625, 4to. in which he attacked the authority of the kings of France in church matters, which occasioned his order to be severely treated in that country.—Moreri.

EUNDES (John), founder of a religious society called after his name. He was an eloquent preacher, and died at Caen in 1680, aged 79.—Ibid.

EUDOCIA, a learned Athenian lady, whose original name was Athenais, was the daughter of Leontius the philosopher, who left her only a small legacy, bequeathing the rest of his property to his two sons. On this she went to Constantinople to lay her complaint before Theodosius the younger. Here she became the favourite of Pulcheria, sister of that emperor, and embraced the christian religion. In 421 she was married to the emperor, who afterwards divorced her in a fit of jealousy. She then went to Jerusalem, where she built churches, and led a life of great devotion. She died in 460. This empress wrote some Greek poems, and paraphrases on some of the prophets.—Moreri.

EUDOCIA, or EUDOXIA, widow of the emperor Constantine Ducas, on whose death, in 1067, she assumed the imperial diadem, and married the general Romanus Diogenes. When her son Michael ascended the throne, he shut her in a convent, where she amused herself in writing on the pagan mythology.—Moreri.

EUDOCIA (Feodorevna), first wife of Peter I. czar of Russia, and daughter of the boyard Feodor Lapookim. Peter married her in 1689, but a few years afterwards he sent her to a nunnery, on account of her complaints of his infidelity. She died in 1731, aged 59.—Coxe's Russia. Took's Hist. of Russia.

EUDOXIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, to which see he was preferred by the emperor Constantius, after having been deposed from the bishopric of Antioch for arianism. He died in 379.—Moreri.

EUDOXUS of Cnidus, an eminent astronomer of Caria, in Asia Minor. He studied in Egypt with Plato, and afterwards opened a mathematical school at Athens. It is said that he passed a great part of his time on a high mountain, where he made celestial observations.—Stanley's Hist. Phil.

EVELYN (John), an ingenious writer, was born at Wotton, in Surrey, in 1620, and educated at Baliol college, Oxford. By his marriage with the only daughter of sir Richard Brown, in 1647, he became possessed of Sayes court, a manor in Kent, where he led a retired life till the restoration, to which he had in some measure contributed. At the establishment of the royal society he became one of the first members. In 1662 appeared his Sculptura, or the History and Art of Chalcography and Engraving in Copper. This is a very curious and valuable work, and was reprinted in 1755. In 1664 came out his Sylva, or a Discourse of Forest Trees, folio, which has gone through several editions. He was appointed a commissioner for the sick and wounded seamen, one of the commissioners for rebuilding St. Paul's, and afterwards had a place at the board of trade. In the reign of James II. he was made one of the commissioners for executing the office of lord privy seal, and after the revolution appointed treasurer of Greenwich hospital. In 1697 appeared his Nuismata, or Discourse of Medals, in folio. Mr. Evelyn has the honour of being one of the first who improved horticulture, and introduced exotics into this country. Of his garden at Sayes court a curious account may be seen in the Philosophical Transactions. He died in 1706, and was buried at Wotton. He wrote several books besides those above mentioned. His son, Jacob Evelyn, wrote a Greek poem, prefixed to his father's Sylva; and translated Rapin's poem on Gardens into English; and the Life of Alexander from Plutarch. He was also the author of a few poems in Dryden's collection, and died in 1698, aged 44.—Biog. Brit.

EVERDINGEN (Cæsar van), an eminent Dutch painter, born at Alkmaer in 1606, and died in 1679. One of his finest performances is the victory of David over Goliath, painted on the folding doors of the organ in the great church at Alkmaer. His nephew, Albert, excelled as a landscape painter. He died in 1675.—Houbraken.

EUGENE (Francis), prince of Savoy, was born in 1663. His father was the count of Soissons; and his mother niece to cardinal Mazarine. He was intended for the church, but the death of his father altered the design, and he resolved to follow a military life. His mother being banished to the Netherlands, he went to Vienna, where the emperor gave him a regiment of dragoons, and he served with great reputation against the Turks in Hungary. In 1691 he was sent to Piedmont, where he relieved Coni, which was besieged by the French, and took Carmagnole. In 1697 he obtained the chief command of the Imperial army, and the same year defeated the Turks at the battle of Buda. On the death of the king of Spain, the emperor laid claim to that throne, and a new war breaking out, prince Eugene was sent to Italy, where he defeated Catinat the French general, who was succeeded by Villeroi; but while this general lay secure, as he thought, at Cremona, the prince entered the place by stratagem, and took him prisoner. Soon after this he returned to Vienna, and was made president of the council, and associated in the command of the allied army with the great duke of Marlborough. In 1704 he had a principal share in the famous battle of Blenheim. In 1707 he was repulsed at Cassano by Vendome, but he soon recovered his reputation by a bloody action near Turin, which was then besieged by the French, whose trenches he forced, and gained a complete victory. The same year he entered France, and laid siege to Toulon, but was unsuccessful. The next year he commanded the Imperial army in Flanders, and shared in the victory of Oudenard, as he afterwards did that of Malplaquet. In this last battle he was severely wounded, but would not quit the scene of action. In 1712 he was at London, to induce the English ministers not to make a separate peace, but his arguments were ineffectual: and he was left to finish the war alone. After this defection his progress was weak, and he was successfully opposed by marshal Villars, with whom he entered into a negotiation which produced the peace of Rastadt in 1714. Shortly after this a war broke out between the emperor and the Turks, on which the prince was again entrusted with the command in Hungary, where, in 1716, he defeated the grand vizier at Peterwaradin, which was followed by the capture of Belgrade. After the peace of 1718 he retired to a private life: but in 1733, when the election for the crown of Poland was disputed, he was again employed. His service, however, was short and unproductive of any remarkable action. He died at Vienna in 1736. The prince was very amiable in his private deportment, correct in his manners, serious, sincere and devout.—Moreri. Univ. Hist.

EUGENIUS I. a pope and faint, succeeded Martin in 654. He is praised for his liberality and piety, and died in 657.—EUGENIUS II. succeeded Paschal I. in 824, and died in 827. He defended the worship of images, though the practice was condemned by the council of Paris in 825.—EUGENIUS III. pope, ascended the papal chair in 1145. The Romans were at that time in a turbulent state, and finding that he could do little good with them, Eugenius retired to Pifa, and from thence to Paris. He died at Tivoli, in 1153.—EUGENIUS IV. (Gabriel Condolmere). He was a Venetian by birth, and succeeded Martin V. in 1431, in which year the council of Basil assembled. This pope and the members of that assembly differed in their judgment. Eugenius issued a bull against them, which they disregarded, and at last he was under the necessity of confirming their decrees. He afterwards called a council at Ferrara, to endeavour a reconciliation between the Greek and Latin churches. At this council appeared the emperor Paleologus, with several Greek bishops; but the plague breaking out at Ferrara, the council was removed to Florence, where a sort of union was agreed to, which was soon broken. Another council at Basil deposed Eugenius, and elected Amadeus VIII. duke of Savoy, who took the name of Felix V. Eugenius, however, triumphed over his adversaries, and died at Rome in 1447.—Cave Hist. Lit. Platina. Bruer.

EUGENIUS, an obscure man, who from being a grammarian, was proclaimed emperor in Dauphiné, by count Arbogastus, after the death of Valentinian the Younger, in 392. He crossed the Alps, and made himself master of Milan. But in 394 he was defeated and slain by the emperor Theodosius.—Moreri.

EULER (Leonard), a celebrated mathematician, was the son of a protestant minister, and born at Basil in 1707. He received his education in the university of that city with a view to the church, but he devoted himself principally to mathematical studies under the famous John Bernouilli. In 1727 he followed his friends Hermann and Daniel Bernouilli to Petersburg, where he was associated with them in the mathematical professorship. In 1730 he was appointed professor of natural philosophy, and on the departure of Daniel Bernouilli he succeeded him in the mathematical chair. In 1735 he lost the sight of one eye by intense application to the solution of a difficult problem. A memoir of his on "Fire" obtained the prize from the French academy of sciences in 1738, and in 1740 he divided another on the Flux and Reflux of the Sea, with Maclaurin and Daniel Bernouilli. In 1741 he went to Berlin, at the invitation of the king, to assist in establishing and regulating the academy there. He continued at Berlin twenty-five years, and then obtained leave to return to Petersburg, where he soon after entirely lost his sight. He still continued, however, his favourite pursuits, and dictated to his servant his Elements of Algebra. He also received another prize from the French academy, for three Memoirs on the Inequalities in the Motions of the Planets: which was followed by two others in 1770 and 1772, for his solutions of questions on the Theory of the Moon. In the last mentioned year appeared his Lunar Tables. This great man died of a fit of apoplexy Sept. 7, 1783. Besides the above works he wrote a prodigious number of papers in the Memoirs of several Academies; Opuscula Analytica; Introduction to the Analysis of Infinitesimals, &c.—Encyclopædia Brit.

EULOGIUS, patriarch of Alexandria in 581. He wrote some books against heretics, fragments of which only remain. He died in 608.—Moreri.

EULOGIUS the martyr of Cordova, was elected archbishop of Toledo, but before his consecration he was put to death by the Saracens, in 859. Some of his works are extant.—Ibid.

EUMENES, an eminent general under Alexander the Great, after whose death he became very powerful, but was conquered at last by Antigonus; and put to death 316 B. C. He was a man of strict probity, mild, and generous.—Plutarch. Corn. Nep.

EUMENES I. king of Pergamus, succeeded his uncle Philetarus, B. C. 263, and reigned 22 years.—EUMENES II. nephew of the preceding, succeeded his father, Attalus, 197 B. C. He assisted the Romans against Antiochus the Great, and reigned 38 years.—Univ. Hist.

EUMENIUS, a celebrated orator, who flourished about 310. Some of his orations are in the Panegyrici Veteres.—Moreri.

EUNAPIUS, a writer and physician of the 4th century, who wrote a book of the Lives of the Philosophers and Sophists, in which he speaks rancorously of christianity. He also composed the history of the Cæsars, which is lost, but the substance of it may be seen in Zosimus.—Voss. Hist. Græc.

EUNOMIUS, an heresiarch of the 4th century. He was a native of Cappadocia, and the secretary of Arius, whose errors he embraced and enlarged, which produced a sect called Eunomians. In 360 he was made bishop of Cyzicum by Eudocius

Bishop of Antioch, who was afterwards obliged to depose him by order of Constantius. He died in exile, in 394. Some of his works are extant.—Cave Hist. Lit. Moreri.

EUPHEMIUS, patriarch of Constantinople in 490. He had some disputes with the pope about admitting certain names into the calendar of saints, and the pope being supported by the emperor Anastasius, he was sent into exile, and died at Ancyra, in 515.—Ibid.

EUPHORIION, a Greek poet and historian, born at Chalcis in Eubœa, B. C. 274. Only a few fragments of his poems are extant. There were two others of the same name; the first was a son of Æschylus, and wrote some tragedies; the other was the author of epigrams in the Anthologia.—Moreri.

EUPHRATES, a heretic of the 2d century, who held that the serpent which deceived our first parents was Christ himself under that form, and therefore he and his followers paid reverence to serpents, on which account they were called ophites. There were besides two philosophers of this name, one a platonist, under Perdiccas; and the other a stoic, under Adrian.—Ibid.

EUPHRANOR, an Athenian painter and sculptor, who lived about 352 years B. C. He wrote some books on the arts which he professed, but they are lost.—Ibid.

EUPOLIS, a comic poet of Athens, who lived about 435 B. C. Alcibiades is said to have caused him to be cast into the sea for writing a play against him, but Ælian says that he died at Egina. Some fragments of his remain.—Voss. Poet. Græc.

EVREMONT, ST. (Charles de St. Denis, lord of), a French writer, was born in Normandy, in 1613, and being a younger son was designed for the law, which profession he quitted for the military life. He served some time under the duke of Enghien, as lieutenant of the guards, and in the civil wars of France was major-general. He attended Mazurine in the negotiation with Spain, but having betrayed some confidential secrets, in a correspondence with the marquis de Crequi, he was obliged to quit France. On this he went to England, where he was in great esteem with king Charles II. He died there in 1703, and was buried in Westminster abbey. He was a man of wit and ingenuity. His works were printed in 1728, in 3 vols. 8vo.—Life by Des Maiseaux.

EURIPIDES, a Grecian tragic poet, was born in the island of Salamis, B. C. 480. He studied at Athens under Anaxagoras the philosopher, and Prodicus the rhetorician. Euripides was twice married, but was very unfortunate in both his wives. He left Athens in disgust, on account of the rivalry of Sophocles, and the raillery of Aristophanes, and went to the court of Archelaus, king of Macedon. As he was walking one evening in a wood, he was assaulted by the king's hounds and torn in pieces. He was then in his 75th year. The Athenians, out of respect for his talents, went into mourning. Only 19 of his tragedies are extant, and the best editions are those of Barnes, Cambridge, 1694, folio; and Musgrave, Oxford, 1778, 4to. Euripides has been well translated into English by Wodhull and Potter.—Moreri.

EURYDICE, wife of Amyntas, king of Macedon, and mother of Alexander, Perdiccas, and of Philip, father of Alexander the Great. She conspired against her husband, from a criminal love she had for her daughter's husband. The plot, however, was discovered by Amyntas, who forgave her. On his death Alexander ascended the throne, but he perished through his mother's ambition, as did Perdiccas. But Philip preserved his crown from all her attempts, on which she died, but what became of her is unknown.—Bayle. Moreri.

EURYDICE, a daughter of Aridæus, the natural son of Philip. On the death of Alexander the Great, Aridæus ascended the throne, and was governed by his wife. Olympias, the mother of Alexander, conquered the usurpers, and put them to death, 319 B. C.—Ibid.

EUSEBEN (Laurence), an English poet born in Yorkshire, and educated at Trinity college, Cambridge. In 1718 he obtained the laureatship, which raised him several enemies, particularly Pope, who placed him in the Dunciad. He became rector of Coningsby, in Lincolnshire, where he died in 1730. Some of his poems are in Nichols's collection.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

EUSEBIUS, a Greek by birth, succeeded Marcellus as bishop of Rome in 310, and died the same year. He was violent against readmitting lapsed Christians to communion, which gave great offence at Rome, and the emperor Maxentius banished the pope to Sicily.—Plotina. Bower.

EUSEBIUS (Pamphilus), an ecclesiastical historian, was born in Palestine about 270. In the persecution by Dioclesian, he greatly assisted the suffering Christians by his exhortations, particularly his friend Pamphilus, whose name out of veneration he assumed. When that storm was over, Eusebius was chosen bishop of Cæsarea, about 313. He was at first the friend of Arius, because he considered him as persecuted, but on perceiving the dangerous extent of his opinions, he abandoned him and assisted at the council of Nice, which he opened with a panegyric address. He was also at that of Antioch. The emperor Constantine had a very particular esteem for him, and shewed him several tokens of favour. He died about 338. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History, the Life of Constantine, and other works. The best edition of his Ecclesiastical History is that of Cambridge, 3 vols. folio, 1720. He wrote besides this many other works, the principal of which is that of Evangelical Preparation, 2 vols. folio, Paris, 1628.—Fabricius. Cave. Moreri.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Berytus, of Nicomedia, and lastly of Constantinople. He was a turbulent arian, and a great persecutor of Athanasius. He died in 341.—Cave. Fabricius. Moreri.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Emesa in Syria, of whom some homilies are still extant. He also was an arian, and died in 360.—Ibid.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Vercelli in Piedmont, and a zealous defender of Athanasius, for which he was banished to Syria, but after the death of Constantius he returned to his see, and died in 371. Some Letters of his are extant.—Ibid.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Samosata. He was at first an arian, but afterwards became a zealous opposer of that sect. He was banished by the emperor Valens, and in 378 was killed by a tile thrown upon his head by an arian woman.—Moreri.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Dorylæum, in Phrygia, in the 5th century. He was at first a lawyer, but entering the ecclesiastical state, became bishop of Dorylæum, about 448. He was a zealous opponent of the Eutychians, by whose means he was deposed in 449. Some of his works exist.—Ibid.

EUSTACHE (David), a French protestant minister, and pastor of the church at Montpellier. In 1659 he was deputed by the national synod of Ludun to present their address to the king, on which occasion his speech was much applauded. He wrote some practical and polemical pieces.—Bayle. Moreri.

EUSTACHIUS (Bartholomew), an eminent Italian physician of the 16th century. He settled at Rome, where he formed his anatomical tables in 1552, which were not published till 1714. A second edition appeared in 1728. Boerhaave published this author's Opuscula Anatomica, in 1707. He died in 1570.—Tiraboschi.

EUSTATHIUS, a saint of the Greek and Roman calendar, and bishop of Antioch in 325. He strenuously opposed the arians, for which he was banished by Constantius, and died at Trajanopolis in 360.—Moreri.

EUSTATIUS, archbishop of Thessalonica, was born at Constantinople, and lived in the 12th century. His Commentaries on Homer were printed at Rome, in 1550, and those upon Dionysius the geographer, at Paris, in 1577, and at Oxford in 1697, 8vo.—Moreri.

EUSTOCHIUM, the daughter of Paula, an eminent Roman lady, and like her mother distinguished for her knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew languages. She resided in the monastery at Bethlehem, but was driven from it by the Pelagians, and died about 419.—Ibid.

EUSTRATIUS, archbishop of Nice, in the 12th century. His Commentaries, in Greek, on Aristotle's Analytics and Ethics, are extant, and were printed at Venice, 1534, and 1536, folio.—Moreri.

EUTHYMIUS, patriarch of Constantinople in 906. The emperor Leo VI. having deposed Nicholas Mysticus, placed Euthymius in his room; but Alexander II. banished him, and restored Nicholas. He died in 911, and was interred at Constantinople.—Moreri.

EUTHYMIUS (Zigabenus, or Zigadenus), a Greek monk, who wrote, at the command of the emperor Alexius Comnenus, a work entitled Panoplia, or a Defence of the Orthodox Faith. He also wrote a Commentary on the Psalms, printed in Latin in 1590, folio; a Treatise against various Heresies; Commentaries on the Epistles, &c. He died after 1118.—Ibid.

EUTOCIOUS, of Afcalon, in Palestine, a Greek mathematician of the 6th century. He wrote Commentaries on Apollonius's Conics, to be found in Halley's edition of that work; and also Commentaries on Archimedes, in the works of that writer, printed at Oxford in 1792, folio.—Hutton's Math. Dict. Moreri.

EUTROPIUS (Flavius), a Latin historian of the 4th century. He was secretary to Constantine the Great, and served under Julian in his Persian expedition. He wrote an Epitome of the History of Rome, of which numerous editions have been printed.—Moreri.

EUTROPIUS, the eunuch, and minister of the emperor Arcadius, who in 399 made him consul. His conduct in this situation was so oppressive, that his master was obliged to banish him. He was afterwards beheaded, A.D. 399.—Ibid.

EUTYCHES, a Greek monk, and abbot of a convent near Constantinople. In opposing nestorianism, he broached a new heresy, by denying the human nature of Christ, and asserting that his body was only an aerial vehicle. This heresy was condemned in the council of Constantinople, and Eutyches deposed. But his opinions had many supporters.—Mosheim. Cave. Moreri.

EUTYCHIANUS (Pope), succeeded Felix in 275, and suffered martyrdom in 283. He was a native of Tuscany, and a warm defender of the rights and orders of the church.—Platina. Bower.

EUTYCHUS, patriarch of Constantinople. He reproved Justinian when that emperor fell into an error, for which he was deposed and banished in 564, but in 578 he was restored to his see. He died in 585.—Moreri.

EUTYCHUS, a christian physician and divine, born at Cairo in 876. After practising physic for many years, he was ordained, and in 938 became patriarch of Alexandria. He died in 950. He wrote, in Arabic, Annals from the Creation to 900, published at Oxford by Pocock in 1659, 4to. Eutychius also wrote a History of Sicily, the MS. of which is in the public library at Cambridge.

Euzotus, a deacon of Alexandria, who was deposed for arianism, but on his submission was made bishop of Antioch, and died about 376. There was another of the same name, who was bishop of Caesarea in the 4th century. He was a great restorer of learning.—Moreri.

EWALD (John), a Danish poet, was born at Copenhagen in 1743. Being of a wandering and adventurous turn, he entered into the Prussian service, and rose to the rank of serjeant, but deserted and returned to Denmark, where he applied to the study of divinity, but never entered into the ecclesiastical state. He studied the English language, to make himself acquainted with our best poets. He died in 1781. He wrote a kind of dramatic poem, entitled Adam and Eve; Poems in the style of Ossian; a theatrical piece, called "The Fishermen;" and other works, which shew great fire and imagination. They were printed at Copenhagen in 1791, 4 vols.—Gen. Biog.

EXPILLI (Claude d'), president in the parliament of Grenoble, born at Voiron, in Dauphiné, in 1561, and died in 1636. He wrote Pleadings, printed at Paris in 1612, 4to; Poems, 1624; the Life of Bayard, 1620; and a book on French Orthography, 1618.—Ibid.

EXUPERIUS, bishop of Thoulouse, and a saint of the Roman calendar, who expended all his own property and the sacred vessels to maintain the poor in the time of famine. He died about 417.—Ibid.

ERYCK (Hubert van), an eminent painter, and founder of the Flemish school, was born at Maaseyk in 1366, and died in 1426. There is a fine picture, painted by him and his brother, in a church at Ghent, of the adoration of the Lamb. He at first painted in distemper, and afterwards in oil.—Pil- ington.

ERYCK (John van), brother of the above, was born in 1370, and died in 1441. He painted history, portraits, and landscapes; but is chiefly known now by his being the inventor of oil painting.—Ibid.

EYKENS (Peter), an historical painter, born at Antwerp in 1599. In a church at Antwerp is a fine picture by him, representing the last supper; and in another a noble piece of the Baptist preaching in the desert.—Ibid.

EZEKIEL, the third of the greater prophets. He was the son of Buzi, and a descendant of Aaron. In 597 B.C. he was carried captive to Babylon. Here he wrote his prophecies, the style of which, according to bishop Lowth, is bold, vehement, and tragical, and worked up occasionally to a kind of tremendous dignity.—SS. Lowth's Prælectiones.

EZEKIEL, a Greek Jew and poet, who composed tragedies on scriptural subjects. Fragments of one on the departure of the Israelites from Egypt are preserved by Clemens Alexandrinus, and Eusebius. He flourished about 300 years B.C.—Whitaker's Origin of Arianism.

EZRA, son of Seraiah, priest of the Jews, and a descendant of Aaron. He was carried into captivity to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar; but Artaxerxes Longomanus sent him to his own country with a colony of the Jews, and all the sacred vessels and ornaments of the temple, which he had in charge to rebuild. On his arrival at Jerusalem 467 B.C. he set about the reformation of abuses, particularly that of strange marriages. He restored the whole canon of the Old Testament. There is in the Bible a book under his name, and in the Apocrypha two others. Josephus says, that he died at Jerusalem; but others assert that he returned, and ended his days in Persia.—Ezra. Nehemiah. Prideaux's Connection.

F.

FABER (John), a German divine, born at Hailbron in 1500. He was created doctor at Cologne, and in 1526 was appointed confessor to Ferdinand, king of the Romans, who, when he became emperor, gave him the see of Vienna. He was called the mallet of heretics, and owed his preferment to the zeal which he shewed against Luther. He died in 1542, aged 63. His works were printed at Cologne, in 3 vols. folio. There was another of the same name and profession, who wrote at that period several publications against the protestants.—Moreri.

FABER (Basil), a learned German protestant, who published in 1571 a work, entitled Thesaurus Eruditionis Scholasticæ, since improved by Cellarius and others into 2 vols. folio. He died in 1576.—Ibid.

FABIAN, a pope and saint, according to the Roman calendar ascended the papal chair in 326. He built many churches, and sent bishops into Gaul to propagate christianity. He suffered in the persecution under Decius in 250.—Ibid.

FABIAN (Robert), an English chronicler of the 15th century. He was a tradesman of London, and filled the offices of alderman and sheriff. He died in 1512, and was buried in the church of St. Michael, Cornhill. His Chronicle of England and France was first printed at London in 1516, and again in 1553, in 2 vols. folio.—Biog. Br.

FABIUS (Maximus Rullianus), an illustrious Roman. Being appointed master of the horse by the dictator S. Papirius, censor in the war against the Samnites, he charged the enemy, and obtained a victory; but having done this in the absence of the dictator, and contrary to his orders, he was condemned to death, but was rescued by the people. In 303 B.C. he served the office of censor, and obtained the name of Maximus for lessening the power of the populace in elections. He triumphed over seven nations near Rome, and served the office of dictator a second time B.C. 237.—Livy.

FABIVS MAXIMVS (Quintus), surnamed Verrucosus, was a lineal descendant of the above. He distinguished himself by his prudence, valour, and generosity. He was consul the first time B.C. 233, when he gained a great victory over the Ligurians. When Hannibal defeated the Romans at the battle of Thrasymenus, he was nominated pro-dictator to oppose that general. Fabius surrounded Hannibal in a defile, from whence he escaped by stratagem, on which the Roman commander was recalled by the senate, who refused to confirm an agreement which he had made for the ransom of prisoners. On this Fabius sold his estates to raise the money. When the time of his dictatorship expired, he advised his successor, Paulus Æmilius, not to hazard an engagement, which, however, was neglected, and thus was lost the famous battle of Cannæ. Fabius was now looked upon as the only refuge of the Romans, and he quickly recovered Tarentum, which had been betrayed to Hannibal. In his advanced years he was superseded by Scipio, yet his death was lamented by the people as a common loss. He died B.C. 203, aged near 100.—Plutarch. Livy.

FABIVS (Pictor), the first writer of the Roman history, who flourished B.C. 225. There is a work extant under his name, but it is a manifest forgery.—Voss. Hist. Lat.

FABRE (John Claude), a French priest of the oratory at Paris, who compiled two dictionaries, translated Virgil into French, and continued Fleury's Ecclesiastical History. He died in 1753, aged 85.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FABRETTI (Raphael), an Italian antiquary, born at Urbino in 1619. He was an advocate, and filled several distinguished situations at Rome, in Spain, and Urbino. He died in 1700. He wrote, De Aquis & Aquæductibus Veteris Romæ, 1680; De Columna Trajani, 1683, folio; Inscriptionum Antiquarum Explicatio, fol. 1699.—Tiraboschi.

FABRI (Honorius), a learned French jesuit, born in 1607 at Bellay, and died at Rome in 1688. He wrote, Physica, seu reum corporearum Scientia, 6 vols. 4to.; Synopsis Optica, 4to.; De Plantis, de Generatione Animalium & de Homine, 4to. &c. He is said by some to have discovered the circulation of the blood before Harvey.—Moreri.

FABRIANO (Gentile da), an eminent historical painter, born at Verona in 1332, and died in 1412. He was ennobled by the state of Venice.—Pilkington.

FABRICIUS (Caius), a Roman general, who was twice consul, and gained several victories over the Samnites, and Lucanians; but his integrity and contempt of riches have done more honour to his memory than his military renown. Being sent ambassador to Pyrrhus, he rejected every attempt, both of bribery and threat, to corrupt his integrity. He also discovered to Pyrrhus a plot formed to poison him by his physician. He died in poverty about 250 B.C.—Bayle. Univ. Hist.

FABRICIUS (George), a learned German, was born in Misnia in 1516. His Latin poems were printed at Balle in 1567, in 2 vols. 8vo. He also wrote a Description of Rome; Saxonia illustrata seu origines Saxonica, 2 vols. folio, &c. He died in 1571.—Moreri.

FABRICIUS (Jerome), an Italian physician, usually called Aquapendente, from the place of his birth. He professed anatomy with extraordinary reputation at Padua forty years. He died in 1619. His works on anatomy have been printed in 2 vols. folio.—Tiraboschi.

FABRICIUS (John Albert), a learned divine, was born at Leipzig in 1668. He became professor of eloquence at Hamburg, where he died in 1736. The principal of his works are, Bibliotheca Latina, 2 vols. 4to.; Bibliotheca Græca, 14 vols. 4to.; Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti, 3 vols. 8vo.; Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti, 2 vols. 8vo.; Bibliographia Antiquaria, 4to.; Bibliotheca Latina Ecclesiastica, fol.; Bibliotheca medix et infimæ Latinitatis, 5 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

FABRICIUS (William), surnamed Hildanus, a famous surgeon, was born near Cologne in 1560. He became public physician at Berne, where he died in 1634. His Six Centuries of Observations and Cures were published in 1606, 4to.; besides which he wrote on Gangrene and Spacelus; on Burns; on Gun-shot Wounds; on Lithotomy, &c. All his works were published in folio at Frankfort, in 1682.—Halleri Bib. Anat.

FABRICIUS (Vincent), an ingenious Latin poet of the 17th century. He was born at Hamburg in 1613, and became syndic and burgomaster of Dantzic. He died in 1667. The best edition of his poems is that of Leipzig, in 1685.—Moreri.

FABRICIUS (John Lewis), a Swiss protestant divine, born at Schaffhausen in 1639. He became professor of theology and philosophy at Heidelberg, and ecclesiastical counsellor to the elector, who also employed him in state matters. He died at Frankfort in 1697. He wrote De Viis Dei, an et quoque sint similes Viis Hominum; De Symbolica Dei Visione; on Infant Baptism, &c.—Moreri.

FABRICIUS (Baron), a German writer, who was a great favourite of Charles XII. of Sweden, and of Stanilaus, king of Poland. He was also in favour with George I. king of England, and attended him in his last journey to Hanover. He wrote a volume of letters relative to Charles XII. during his residence in Turkey, 8vo. 1761, London.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

FABRICIUS (Charles), a celebrated painter of perspective and portrait, born at Delft. He was cut off in the flower of his age in a melancholy manner, for his house being near the powder magazine it suddenly blew up, and the painter and his disciple, Matthias Spoor, were killed on the spot.—Pilkington.

FABROT (Charles Hannibal), a learned French lawyer, born at Aix, in Provence, in 1580, and died in 1659. He published Basilicon, or the Constitutions of the Eastern Emperors, in 7 vols. folio, 1647; editions of Cedrenus, Nicetas, Anastasius, &c. 2 vols. folio; The Works of Cujacius, 10 vols. fol. &c.—Moreri.

FACCHETTI (Pietro), an eminent portrait painter, born at Mantua in 1535, and died at Rome in 1613. He painted with admirable taste.—Pilkington.

FACINI (Pietro), an historical painter of Bologna, born in 1560, and died in 1602. He was the disciple of Annibal Caracci.—Ibid.

FACIO (Bartholomew), a writer of the 15th century, born at Spezzia, in the territory of Genoa, was secretary to Alphonso, king of Naples. He died about 1457. His works are, De Bello Veneto Claudiano, 8vo. 1578; De rebus ab Alphonso I. Rege Neapolitano gestis, lib. x.; De Humanæ Vitæ Felicitate; De Viris illustr. sui Temporis.—Moreri.

FACUNDUS, bishop of Hermiana in Africa, who defended the books called the Three Chapters, at the council of Constantinople, in 547, for which he was banished. He wrote some pieces, which are extant.—Dupin. Mosheim.

FADLALLAH, or Chofu Raschid Addin Fadlallah, a Persian historian. He was vizir to the sultan Cazan, who reigned at Taurus, at whose command he compiled a History of the Moguls, which he finished in 1294. He added a supplement to this work by the order of Cazan's successor. The first part was translated into French by La Croix.—Moreri.

FÆRNO (Gabriel), a Latin poet of the 16th century. He wrote some Latin elegies, and fables in the same language in iambic verse. Bentley has given his notes upon Terence in his edition of that author. He died at Rome in 1561.—Ibid.

FAGAN (Christopher Barthélemi), a French comic writer, who died in 1755, aged 53. His plays were printed in 4 vols. 12mo. 1760.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

FAGUS (Paul), a German protestant divine, whose real name was Buchlein. He was born in 1504, and studied at Heidelberg and Strasbourg. For some time he exercised the office of a schoolmaster, but afterwards entered into orders. In 1541 the plague broke out at Isna, where he resided, but Fagius remained in the place, comforting and administering to the sick. In 1543 he and Bucer went to England, where archbishop Cranmer employed them in a new translation of the scriptures. Fagius died at Cambridge in 1550, and Bucer about a year after. In Mary's reign their bodies were taken up and burnt. Fagius wrote several books on the Hebrew language and the Targums.—Melch. Adami Vit. Germ. Theol.

FAGNANI (Prospero), an eminent Italian canonist of the 17th century. He was secretary to the holy congregation, and composed a Commentary on the Five Books of the Decretals. He died in 1678, aged 80.—Moreri.

FAGNANO (Julius Charles, count of), an excellent geometer of the last century. He had also the title of marquis of Toschi, and was born at Sinigaglia, in the Roman state, about the year 1690. His works were published by himself, at Pesaro, in the year 1750, in 2 vols. 4to. of which the greatest part contains his discoveries relative to the property and the use of the geometrical curve, which is commonly called the Lemniscate. He died about 1760.

FAGON (Guy Crescent), physician to Lewis XIV. was born at Paris in 1632. He defended the doctrine of the circulation of the blood, and collected numerous plants to enrich the royal gardens, of which he was superintendent. He died in 1718.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

FAGUNDY (Stephen), a Portuguese jesuit, who died at Lisbon in 1645, aged 68. He wrote Quæstiones de Christianis Officiis et Caribus Conscientiæ in vi Ecclesiæ Precepta; De Justitiæ, &c.—Moreri.

FAHRENHEIT (Gabriel Daniel), an experimental philosopher, was born at Ham-burgh in 1686. He improved the thermometer, by making use of mercury instead of spirits of wine, and formed a new scale for the instrument, grounded upon the most accurate experiments. The English have generally adopted this scale, but the French prefer Reaumur's. Fahrenheit wrote a Dissertation on Thermometers, and died in 1736.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

FAIRCLOUGH (Samuel), a pious minister of the nonconformist persuasion, was born at Haveril in 1594, and educated at Queen's college, Cambridge. On entering into orders, he became minister of Barnardiston, in Suffolk, and afterwards of Ketton, in the same county; from whence he was ejected in 1662 for nonconformity, and died in 1678. He was a man of exemplary character, moderate in his judgment, and a friend to episcopacy, though he scrupled against some things in the liturgy. He published a Funeral Sermon for Sir Nathaniel Barnardis-ton, 1653, and some others on public occasions. His son, Samuel Fairclough, was deprived of the rectory of Houghton Conquest, in Bedfordshire, and died in 1691; and his son Richard lost the living of Wells, in Somersetshire, on the same account. He died in 1682. They were both men of eminent piety and talents.—Calamy. Pa'mer's Nonconform. Mem.

FAIRFAX (Edward), an English poet, was the son of sir Thomas Fairfax, of Denton, in Yorkshire. He translated Tasso's poem of Godfrey of Bouillon into English verse, and wrote a curious book, entitled Demonology, in which he avows his belief of witchcraft. He died about 1632.—Biog. Br.

FAIRFAX (Thomas lord), general of the parliament's army in the civil wars, was the eldest son of Ferdinando lord Fairfax, and born at Denton, the family seat in Yorkshire, in 1611. He commenced his military career in the army under lord Vere in Holland; and when the difference broke out into hostility between the king and parliament, he took a decided part in favour of the latter, being, as well as his father, a zealous presbyterian. He had a principal command in the north, where he and his father were defeated in several engagements, particularly at Adderton Moor, in June 1643. Afterwards sir Thomas had better fortune, and distinguished himself so greatly at the battle of Marston-moor, that in the new-modelling of the army, he was nominated general in the room of the earl of Essex. In June, 1645, he defeated the king's forces at Naseby, after which he marched into the west, where he subdued a number of places. In 1648 he succeeded to the title by the death of his father, and the same year took Colchester, after a brave resistance by sir George Lisle and sir Charles Lucas, whom his lordship, after the surrender, safely caused to be shot. Though he pretended to be against the putting the king to death, he took no steps to prevent it, and at the time of execution was kept in prayer by major Harrison; a piece of canting hypocrisy scarcely to be credited. He lived retired till the restoration, when he made his peace with Charles II. and upon whom he waited at the Hague. He died in 1671.—Biog. Brit. Clarendon.

FAISTENBERGER (Anthony), a painter of Inspruck, born in 1678, and died in 1792. His landscapes are beautiful. He had a younger brother, called Joséph, who was also a good painter.—Pilkington.

FAITHORNE (William), an English painter and engraver. He was a soldier in the royal army during the civil wars, and was taken prisoner by Cromwell. On obtaining his liberty he went to France, where he studied under Champagne. At his return he practised painting in miniature and engraving, but chiefly the latter. He also published a book on drawing, graving, and etching. He died in 1691, aged about 75.

His son, William, was a good engraver in mezzotinto.—Strutt's Dict. of Engravers.

FALCANDUS (Hugh), the author of a history of Sicily under William I. and written in 1166. When he died is unknown.—Moreri.

FALCONBERG (Mary, countess of), the third daughter of Oliver Cromwell, and wife of Thomas viscount Falconberg. She was a woman of considerable talents, a constant member of the church of England, and contributed materially to the restoration of monarchy. She died in 1712.—Granger.

FALCONE (da Benevento), an Italian historian, and secretary to pope Innocent II. He wrote a Chronicle, or History of Naples, from 1102 to 1140.—Tiraboschi.

FALCONER (William), a Scotch poet, was born in the county of Fife, of humble parents, and bred to the sea. Though possessing few advantages arising from education, he had good natural talents, which he cultivated with assiduity. In 1751 he published a poem on the Death of the Prince of Wales, which possesses merit; but his reputation rests on the Shipwreck, a poem in three cantos, which is highly descriptive and pathetic. It originated in the circumstance of the author's being shipwrecked in a voyage from Alexandria to Venice, when only three of the crew escaped. Falconer also wrote an Ode to the Duke of York, which obtained him the post of purser to the Royal George. He likewise compiled a useful work, entitled The Marine Dictionary, 4to.; and published a poem against Wilkes and Churchill, under the title of The Demagogue. He sailed from England in 1769 in the Aurora for the East Indies, but after her departure from the Cape of Good Hope the ship was never heard of.—Dr. Anderson's Life of Falconer in Brit. Poets.

FALCONET (Camillus), a French physician, born at Lyons in 1671. He was a great collector of books, and died in 1762, aged 91. His works are, 1. A Translation of Villemot's Systema Planetarum; 2. Several editions of curious books, with notes; 3. Dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Belles Lettres.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FALCONIA (Proba), a Latin poetess in the time of Theodosius. She was a native of Horta, in Etruria, and composed a cento from Virgil, containing the sacred history from the creation, and the history of Christ in verse.—Moreri.

FALDA (John Baptist), an Italian engraver of the 18th century, whose etchings are held in great esteem. He executed views of palaces and views in Rome, which are valuable and curious.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FALLETI (Jerome), an Italian poet of the 16th century, born in the state of Genoa. He wrote a poem on the wars of Charles V. printed in 1557, and other pieces.—Ibid.

FALIERI (Ordelafo), doge of Venice, who sailed with a fleet to the assistance of Baldwin, king of Jerusalem, about 1102. He conquered Dalmatia, Croatia, and other provinces; but in laying siege to the city of Zara, he lost his life, 1120.—Moreri.

FALIERI (Marino), doge of Venice in 1354. He formed the design of murdering all the senators to render himself absolute, but the plot being discovered, he was beheaded.—Ibid.

FALK (John Peter), an ingenious Swede, was born in Westrogothia in 1727. He studied medicine at Upsal, where also he applied assiduously to botany under Linnæus, by whose recommendation he was appointed professor of botany in the apothecaries' garden, and keeper of a cabinet of natural history at Peterburgh, where he shot himself in a fit of melancholy, to which he was greatly subject, in 1774. His observations made in his travels were published at Peterburgh in 1785, 3 vols. 4to.—Supplem. to the Encyc. Brit.

FALKENSTEIN (John Henry), a voluminous writer of Franconia, was born in 1682. In 1714 he was appointed director of the nobles' academy at Erlangen; and afterwards, on turning Roman catholic, he entered into the service of the bishop of Eichstadt, on whose death he was patronised by the margrave of Anspach. He died in 1760. He wrote the Antiquities of Nordgau, in the Bishopric of Eichstadt, 3 vols. fol.; and several other works of a similar kind.—Gen. Biog.

FALLÉ (Philip), the author of a history of the isle of Jersey, where he was born in 1685. He received his education at Exeter college, Oxford, and on entering into orders, became rector of St. Saviour's, in his native island, where he died.—Gen. Biog. D.

FALLOPIO (Gabriel), an eminent physician and anatomist of Modena, born in 1490. He discovered the tubes of the uterus, which now bear his name. He was professor of anatomy, first at Pisa, and afterwards at Padua, where he died in 1563. His works were printed in 3 vols. folio, at Venice, in 1584.—Tiraboschi.

FALS (Raymond), an ingenious engraver of medals, born at Stockholm in 1658. He went to Paris, where he obtained a pension. He died at Berlin in 1703.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FANCOURT (Samuel), a dissenting minister, was born in the west of England in 1678. He became pastor of a congregation at Salisbury, from whence he was obliged to remove, for rejecting the Calvinistic notions of election and reprobation. He then went to London, where he established the first circulating library about the year 1740, in which he had little encouragement. He wrote some controversial tracts, and died poor in 1768.—Gent. Mag. 1784.

FANNIUS, surnamed Strabo, was twice consul of Rome, and rendered himself remarkable by a law, which prohibited any person from spending more than a certain sum daily. His son was distinguished for his eloquence. He was consul in the 631st year of Rome. There was another of the same name, who wrote a history of Nero's cruelties, the loss of which is greatly regretted. He lived in the time of Trajan.—Moreri.

FANSHAWE (sir Richard), a statesman and poet, was born in Hertfordshire in 1608, and educated at Cambridge. In 1635 he was sent ambassador to Spain, from whence, in 1641, he returned, and acted steadily for the royal cause. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester in 1651, and closely confined for a considerable time; but at last recovered his liberty, and went to Breda, where he was knighted by Charles II. in 1659. At the restoration he was made master of requests, and sent to Portugal, where he negotiated the marriage with the king and the infanta Catherine. In 1664 he was sent ambassador to Spain, and died there in 1666. He translated into English the Pastor Fido, or Faithful Shepherd of Guarini; also the Lusid by Camoens. His letters during his embassies in Spain and Portugal were printed in 1702, 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

FARDELLA (Michael Angelo), professor of natural history and astronomy at Padua, was born in Sicily in 1650, and died at Naples in 1718. He wrote several books, which are little known.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FARRÉ (Charles Augustus, marquis de la), a French writer, was born in 1644. He was a captain in the guards, and died in 1712. He began to write verses at the age of 60, and his poems are lively and ingenious. He also wrote Memoirs and Reflections on the reign of Lewis XIV. 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FAREL (William), a protestant divine, was born at Gap, in Dauphiné, in 1489. He studied at Paris, but having embraced the reformed religion, he thought it necessary to quit France; and after visiting several parts of Germany and Switzerland, he went to Geneva, where he laboured with great zeal against popery, and was the chief person in establishing the reformation there. He was banished from thence, together with Calvin, in 1538, for refusing to submit to the synod of Berne. Farel then settled at Neuchâtel, where he died in 1565. His writings are few.

FARIA DE SOUSA (Emanuel), a Portuguese knight, who died at Madrid in 1650. He wrote, A History of Portugal to the reign of Henry Cardinal; A History of the Portuguese dominions in Europe, Asia, and Africa; and some other works.—Moreri.

FARINATO (Paul), an Italian painter and architect, born at Verona in 1522. There is a picture by him in the church at Verona, not inferior to one of Paul Veronese, placed next to it. He died in 1606.—Pilk.

FARINELLI; see BROSCHI.

FARRINGTON (Anthony), an English divine, was born at Sunning, in Berkshire, in 1576, and admitted a scholar of Trinity college, Oxford, in 1612. He was chosen fellow of that society in 1617, and three years after took the degree of M. A. In 1634 he obtained the vicarage of Bray, in Berkshire, of which he was cruelly deprived in the civil wars, and reduced to great straits, when he was invited by the paritioners of St. Mary Magdalen, Milk-street, London, to be their minister. He died there in 1658. His Sermons, in 3 vols. folio, have been published.—Wood's A. O.

FARMER (Hugh), a learned dissenting divine, was born at Shrewsbury in 1714. He completed his academical studies under Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton, after which he became chaplain in the family of a Mr. Coward, at Walthamstow in Essex, where also he officiated to a small congregation. Owing to the oddness of Mr. Coward's temper, Mr. Farmer went to live with a Mr. Suett, a gentleman in the same neighbourhood, still continuing his connection with the congregation at Walthamstow, till 1761, when he was appointed one of the lecturers to the congregation of Sadlers' hall. Mr. Farmer's first publication, except a thanksgiving Sermon, was, An Enquiry into the Nature and Design of our Lord's Temptation in the Wilderness, 8vo.: in this work he considers that event as a divine vision, representing the different scenes of our Saviour's future ministry. It was answered by several writers. In 1771 he published his principal performance, "A Dissertation on Miracles." His next publication was "An Essay on the Demoniacs of the New Testament," which he maintains to have been only natural diseases: this work was replied to by Dr. Worthington and Mr. Fell; to the former Mr. Farmer returned a temperate answer, but on the other he was unmercifully severe. His last performance was entitled "The general Prevalence of the Worship of Human Spirits in the ancient Heathen Nations asserted and proved:" this was also attacked by Mr. Fell, in an acute and learned treatise, in 1785. That year Mr. Farmer was almost deprived of his sight, but was relieved by a surgical operation, and enabled to pursue his studies. He died at Walthamstow, in 1787. He directed his executors to burn all his papers, but some of his letters and fragments of a Dissertation on the story of Balaam were published in 1804, with his Life prefixed.

FARMER (Richard), a divine and antiquary, was born at Leicester in 1735, and educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M. A. in 1760, and the same year was appointed classical tutor. In 1767 he took the degree of B. D. and became one of the preachers at Whitehall. The year before he published his Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare, in which he completely proved that all the knowledge of ancient history and mythology possessed by our immortal bard, was drawn from translations. In 1775 Mr. Farmer was chosen master of his college, and took his degree of D.D. He also became chancellor and prebendary of Litchfield; librarian to the university of Cambridge, and prebendary of Canterbury, which last he resigned for a residentiaryship of St. Paul's. The doctor had collected ample materials for a history of Leicester, but those with the plates he gave to Mr. Nichols for the use of his history of that county. He died in 1797. His collection of scarce and curious books, which was very extensive, as sold by auction a short time after his death.—Necrology, 1798.

FARNABY (Thomas), an eminent schoolmaster, was born in London about 1575, and admitted a servitor of Merton college, in 1590. From thence he was drawn away by a Jesuit, whom he accompanied to a college of that order in Spain. But being disgusted with his new connection, he escaped and entered on board the English fleet; after which he served as a soldier in the Low Countries. On his return to England he kept a school at Martock, in Somersetshire, from whence he removed to London, where he gained a great reputation as a teacher. In 1616 he was admitted to the degree of M. A. at Cambridge. In the civil wars he was imprisoned for his loyalty. He died in 1647. He published Juvenal and Persius; Seneca's Tragedies; Martial; Lucan's Pharsalia, and other classical authors with notes: Index Rhetoricus & Poeticus; Florilegium Epigrammatum Græcorum; & Systema Grammaticum.—Biog. Brit.

FARNESE (Peter Louis), first duke of Parma and Placentia. He was the son of pope Paul III. by a secret marriage, before he became a cardinal. He was assassinated by his subjects, on account of his oppressive conduct, in 1547.—Moreri.

FARNESE (Alexander), a Roman cardinal, was the eldest son of the above, and born in 1520. Charles V. said, that if all the members of the sacred college were like Farnese, it would be the most august assembly in the world. He died in 1589.—Ibid.

FARNESE (Alexander), third duke of Parma, and nephew of the preceding. He distinguished himself as an able general in the Low Countries, and afterwards in the catholic army in France, in support of the league against Henry IV. He was wounded at the siege of Caudebec, and died soon after at Arras, in 1592, aged 46.—Moreri.

FARNEWORTH (Ellis), an English divine, born in Derbyshire, and educated at Jesus college, Cambridge. In 1762 he obtained the rectory of Carlington in Derbyshire, where he died the year following. He translated the Life of Pope Sixtus V. from the Italian, 1754, folio; Davila's History of the Civil Wars of France, 1757, 2 vols. 4to.; the works of Machiavel, 1761, 2 vols. 4to.—Gen. Biog. Diss.

FAUCONER (George), a comic writer, was born at Londonderry in Ireland in 1678, and educated at Trinity college, Dublin, which he soon quitted to join a company of comedians. Not succeeding in Ireland, he went to London, where he received from the earl of Orrery a lieutenantancy in his lordship's regiment. In 1698 appeared his first dramatic piece, entitled Love in a Bottle, which met with success. This was followed, in 1700, by the Constant Couple, or Trip to the Jubilee; the same year we find him in Holland, of which country he has given a humorous description in his Letters. In 1701 appeared the comedy of Sir Harry Wildair, and the year following his Miscellanies. In 1703 he brought out the Inconstant, or the Way to Win Him. His next piece was the popular play of the Recruiting Officer. His last performance was the Beaux Stratagem, which also had a great run. He died in the midst of its success in 1707, leaving two orphan daughters unprovided for. Farquhar's comedies are lively, natural, and full of business; but they are also extremely licentious.—Biog. Dram.

FASTOLF (sir John), a famous general, born at Yarmouth in Norfolk, in 1377. He served with great glory in France, where he obtained several high posts while the English held possessions in that kingdom. In 1440 he returned to his own country, where he distinguished himself as a friend to the poor, and an encourager of learning. He was a considerable benefactor to the university of Cambridge, and to Magdalen college, Oxford. Fastolf died in 1459. Though there be a strong similarity in the names, yet he is not to be taken for the whimsical knight rendered ridiculous by Shakspeare.—Biog. Brit.

FAVART (Charles Simon), a French composer of operas, born at Paris, in 1710, and died there in 1793. His pieces are very numerous and excellent. They make ten vols. in 8vo. His wife was an admirable actress and singer. She died in 1772, aged 45.—New. Dict. Hist.

FAUCHET (Claude), a French antiquary, who died in 1601, aged 72. His works are, Gaulish and French Antiquities; on the Liberties of the Gallican church; on the Origin of Knights, Armorial Bearings, and Heraldry; Origin of Dignities and Magistracies in France. All printed together at Paris, in 1610, 4to.—Moreri.

FAUCHET (Claude), a French priest, was born at Dorne, in the Nivernois, in 1744. He embraced the ecclesiastical state, and became vicar-general to the archbishop of Bruges, and preacher to Louis XVI. That monarch, however, was disgusted with his excessive vanity and theatrical mode of action; which, it is said, made Fauchet espouse the revolutionary cause with ardour. He took a leading part in storming the Bastille, and preached a thanksgiving sermon on the occasion. In another he had the impudence to call Jesus Christ the first sans culotte of Judea. He entered among the Illuminati, and in 1791 became what was called the constitutional bishop of Bayeux. He was also deputy for the department of Calvados, to the legislative assembly, and afterwards a member of the convention. He was guillotined in 1793. His works are, a Panegyric on St. Lewis, pronounced before the French academy; a Funeral Oration for the Duke of Orleans; Eloge on Benjamin Franklin; Discourse on Universal Manners, &c.—New. Dict. Hist.

FAUCHEUX (Michael le), a French protestant divine, who was greatly admired for his eloquence. The marquis de la Force said, after hearing him preach against duelling, "If a challenge were to be sent to me, I would refuse it." He died at Paris in 1667. He wrote, a treatise on oratorical Action; Sermons; Christian Prayers and Meditations; a treatise on the Eucharist.—Bayle.

FAULKNER (George), a celebrated Irish printer at Dublin, and the friend of dean Swift and lord Chesterfield. He carried on business many years with great reputation. Having the misfortune to lose his leg, Foote took him off in his Orators in 1762, under the title of Peter Paragraph. Faulkner commenced an action against the poet, but the affair was terminated by lord Townshend. He was chosen one of the aldermen of Dublin, and died there in 1775.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

FAVORINUS, a Platonic philosopher, was born at Arles, in Gaul, and flourished in the time of Adrian. He also taught rhetoric at Rome with great reputation. An historical work by him is quoted in Luccretius.—Fabric. Bibl. Græc.

FAVORINUS (Varinus), a disciple of Politian, and a benedictine monk. In 1514 he was made bishop of Nocera, and died in 1537. He published a Greek Lexicon at Rome, which was reprinted at Venice in 1712. He also wrote Cornucopia & Horti Adonis.—Ibid.

FAUR (Guy de), lord of Pibrac, born at Toulouse in 1528. He became an eminent advocate, and was sent by Charles IX. to the council of Trent, where he well defended the liberties of the Gallican church. He afterwards became advocate-general in the parliament of Paris, and counsellor of state. He died in 1584. He wrote, an Apology for the Massacre of Paris, and Quatrains, or Moral Maxims in French verse, which have been translated into several languages.—Moreri.

FAVRE (Antony), in Latin Faber, an able lawyer, born in 1557 in the duchy of Savoy, and died in 1624. His works form 10 volumes in folio.—Ibid.

FAUST, or FUST (John), a goldsmith of Mentz, who is said by some to have been the inventor of printing. He is, however, supposed only to have assisted Guttenberg and his son-in-law Schaeffer, in bringing this noble discovery to perfection. The first production, by the new process of metallic types, was, Durandi rationale divinarum officiorum, by Faust and Schaeffer, in 1459; which was succeeded by the Catholicon Joannis Januensis. But the greatest work of all was the Bible in 1462; previous to which they had executed two beautiful editions of the Psalter. The story of Faust's being taken up as a magician at Paris, on account of the exactness of the copies of the Bible, which he took thither for sale, is not entitled to credit. He was there in 1466, and is supposed to have died soon after. —Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FAUSTA (Flavia Maximiana), the second wife of Constantine the Great. By her false accusations the emperor put his son, Crispus, by a former wife, to death; but her infidelity becoming notorious, she was suffocated in a bath A. D. 327.

FAUSTINA (Anna Galeria), called the Elder, was the daughter of Annus Verus, and the wife of Antoninus Pius. Notwithstanding her debaucheries, the emperor would not divorce her. She died in 141, aged about 37. Her daughter was the wife of Marcus Aurelius, and exceeded her mother in dissoluteness. She died in 175.

FAUSTUS, a learned prelate of the 5th century, was a native of Britain, and in 455 became bishop of Riez, in Provence. He wrote against the doctrines of election and reprobation, which pieces have been abridged by Dupin. He was banished from his see in 481, and died soon after. —Dupin.

FAWKES (Francis), an English poet and divine, was born in Yorkshire about 1721, and educated at Jesus college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. On entering into orders he settled at Bramham in his native county, but afterwards he obtained the vicarage of Orpington in Kent, which he exchanged in 1774 for the rectory of Hayes, where he died in 1777. He published a volume of poems and translations of Anacreon, Sappho, Bion, Moschus, and Theocritus. His version of the Argonautics of Apollonius, was published in 1780. Mr. Fawkes also lent his name to an edition of the Bible with notes. —Nichols's Anc. of Brit.

FAYDIT (Anselm), a provençal poet or troubadour, who was patronized by Richard Cœur de Lion. He died in 1190. He wrote a poem on the Death of Richard I. The Palace of Love; and several comedies. —Moreri.

FAYDIT (Peter) a French priest of the congregation of the Oratory, from whence he was compelled to remove for publishing a book on the Cartesian philosophy, contrary to a prohibition from his superiors. He also wrote Illustrations of Ecclesiastical History, &c. A Treatise on the Trinity, for which he was imprisoned; and a wretched critique on Telemachus. He died in 1709. —Moreri.

FAYETTE (Mary Magdalen, countess of), the wife of the count de la Fayette. She wrote the romances of Zaide, and the Princesses of Cleves, also the Princess of Montpensier; Memoirs of the court of France; the history of Henrietta of England; and other works. She died in 1698. —Moreri.

FEARLY (Daniel), an English divine, born at Charlton, in Oxfordshire, in 1632. He was educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, and afterwards became fellow of Corpus Christi college. He was for some years chaplain to the English embassy in France, and soon after his return became chaplain to archbishop Abbot, who gave him the rectory of Lambeth. Dr. Fearly was the last provost of Chelsea College, which station he quitted on his marriage in 1625. He wrote several polemical treatises, principally against the church of Rome. At the commencement of the civil war he was chosen one of the assembly at Westminster, but his correspondence with archbishop Usher at Oxford being intercepted, he was sent to prison. On regaining his liberty he retired to Chelsea College, where he died in 1644. —Wood's A. O.

FECUT, or FECUTIUS (John), of Brisgaw, a Lutheran divine, born in 1636, and died in 1716. He wrote a History of Cain and Abel; a treatise on the Religion of the Modern Greeks, &c. —Moreri.

FECKENHAM (John de), the last abbot of Westminster, was born at a village of that name in Worcestershire. When the reformation commenced he opposed it with spirit, and was sent to the Tower, where he continued till queen Mary's accession, soon after which he was made abbot of Westminster. Queen Elizabeth, whose life he had saved by his remonstrances with Mary when she designed her death, would have given him the archbishopric of Canterbury if he would have conformed, but this he refused. He sat in her first parliament, and protested strongly against the reformation, for which he was committed to the Tower in 1560. He continued in confinement till 1563, and then was delivered to the charge of the bishop of Winchester. He died in the castle of Wisbeach in 1585. He was a learned and liberal man, and very charitable to the poor. He wrote some controversial pieces. —Wood.

FELIJO (Benedict Jerom), a learned Spaniard of the order of St. Benedict, who died in 1765. He endeavoured to reform the vitiated taste of his countrymen, and to introduce enlarged and liberal notions in philosophy and medicine. His Treatise Critica in 14 vols. 4to. is full of curious matter, and very free on the licentiousness of the priests and the ignorance of the monks. He also exposed the abuses of pilgrimages, exorcisms and false miracles: for which he narrowly escaped the most violent persecution, but was protected by several eminent men of that nation.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

FERRIUS (Evrard), a learned German protestant of the 16th century, who in the troubles of the Low Countries retired to France, where he was greatly esteemed by Cafaubon and De Thou. One day while walking in Rochelle he was invited into a house, and was never seen afterwards. His Antiquitates Homericae appeared at Strasbourg, in 12mo. 1742.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

FELIBIEN (Andrew), historiographer and counsellor to the French king, born at Chartres in 1619, and died in 1695. He wrote Entretiens sur les Vies et sur les Ouvrages des plus excellens Peintres, 5 vols. 4to. The Principles of Architecture, Painting and Sculpture, 4to; and Conferences of the Royal Academy of Painting. His two sons John Francis, and Michael, were also ingenious men. The first succeeded him in his places, and wrote the Lives of celebrated Architects, 4to.; and a Description of Versailles. He died in 1733. Michael was a benedictine of St. Maur, and wrote the History of the Abbey of St. Dennis, folio: and began the History of Paris, which was afterwards completed by Lobineau in 5 vols. folio. He died in 1719.—James FELIBIEN, the brother of Andrew, was canon of Chartres and archdeacon of Vendome. He wrote several religious works, and died in 1716.—Moreri.

FELIX, governor of Judea, A. D. 53. St. Paul, when brought before him, delivered an admirable discourse, which made him tremble. Nero recalled him on account of his rapacity.—Ibid.

FELIX I. succeeded pope Dionysius in 269. He suffered death in 274, and was canonized. An epistle by him against Sabellius and Paulus Samosatenus is extant.—FELIX II. antipope. He was placed in the papal chair in 355, by the emperor Constantine, during the exile of Liberius, on the return of whom he was expelled. Constantine would have had the two popes reign together, but the people exclaimed, One God, one Christ, and one bishop! Felix was then exiled, and died in 365.—FELIX III. succeeded Simplicius, in 483. He had a violent dispute with the emperor Zeno in behalf of the western church, and died in 492.—FELIX IV. a native of Beneventum, ascended the chair after John I. in 526. He governed the church with zeal and piety, and died in 530. He introduced extreme unction.—Moreri.

FELIX, bishop of Urgella, in Catalonia. He espoused the notion of his friend Eilpand, archbishop of Toledo, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God only by adoption. For this Charlemagne caused him to be deposed and banished to Lyons, where he died in 815.—Moreri. Mabiusim.

FELL (John), a learned prelate, was born at Longworth in Berkshire in 1623, and educated at Christchurch, Oxford, of which his father was dean. In the rebellion he was ejected from the college for his loyalty. At the restoration he was made canon and dean of Christ church, to which college he was a liberal benefactor. He served the office of vice-chancellor several times, and in 1675 was made bishop of Oxford, with leave to hold the deanry in commendam. He died in 1686. His works are: The Life of Dr. Hammond; a Paraphrase on St. Paul's Epistles; editions of several ancient authors with notes, as Cyprian and others. The bishop's father was turned out of his deanry by the rebels in 1647, and died of grief for the murder of the king.—Biog. Br.

FELL, (John), a dissenting minister, was born at Cockermouth, in Cumberland, in 1732, and bred a taylor; which occupation he followed in London for some time, but his love of letters being discovered, he was enabled by a friend to pursue his studies at an academy, after which he became pastor of a congregation at Beccles, near Yarmouth, from whence he removed to Thaxted, in Essex, where he also kept a boarding-school. After residing there several years, he accepted an invitation to be resident tutor in the dissenting academy at Homerton. But he had not been there long before a misunderstanding arose between him and the managers of that institution, which ended in his dismissal without suffering him to be heard in his own defence. Some respectable friends then subscribed a yearly stipend of one hundred pounds, for which he was to deliver a course of lectures on the evidences of christianity. Four of these were preached by him in 1797, but the treatment he had received brought on a complaint of which he died, Sept. 6, in that year. The lectures were completed and published by the late Dr. H. Hunter. Mr. Fell was the author of an answer to Mr. Farmer's Essay on the Demoniacs; and another in reply to that gentleman on the Idolatry of Greece and Rome; an Essay on the Love of one's Country; Genuine Protestantism; A Letter to Mr. Burke on the Penal Laws; An Essay towards an English Grammar, &c.—Necrology. Fun. Sermon by Dr. Hunter.

FELLER (Joachim Frederic), a learned German, born in 1673, and died in 1726. He was secretary to the duke of Weimar, and published Monumenta varia inedita, 1714, 4to. Miscellanea Leibnitiana: Genealogy of the House of Brunswick, &c.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

FELLER (Francis Xavier), an ex-jesuit, was born at Brussels in 1735, and died at Ratisbon in 1802. He published at Luxembourg an historical and literary Journal, from 1774 to 1794; a Geographical Dictionary; and the Historical Dictionary, in 8 vols. 8vo. at Liege. The editors of the last edition of the Nouveau Dictionnaire Historique are very severe on him, on account of this last work, which they pronounce to be a piracy, committed on their own. Feller also wrote Observations on the Philosophy of Newton an impartial Examination of the Époques of Nature, by Buffon, &c.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

FELTON (John), a catholic gentleman, who placed the pope's bull, excommunicating queen Elizabeth, upon the gates of the bishop of London, for which he was executed in 1570.—His son Thomas was an ecclesiastic of the order of St. Francis, and visiting England as a missionary, was apprehended and executed in 1588.—Moreri.

FELTON (John), an obscure man, who rendered himself remarkable by stabbing George Villiers duke of Buckingham, at Portsmouth, in 1628. He had been a lieutenant of a foot company, the captain of which was killed in the unsuccessful attack on the isle of Rhé; and being disappointed in the expectation of succeeding him, Felton left the army, and turned puritan and malcontent. Fanaticism and revenge operating on his mind, he flattered himself that he should render God service by committing this action, for which he was soon afterwards executed.—Clarendon's Hist. R. rebellion.

FELTON (Henry), an English divine, was principal of Edmund hall, Oxford. He dedicated to his pupil the duke of Rutland, an ingenious little volume entitled, "A Dissertation on reading the Classics, and forming a just style." He was also the author of a volume of sermons, and died in 1739.

FENELON (Francis de Salignac de la Motte), archbishop of Cambray, was born of an illustrious family, at the castle of Fenelon, in 1651. He completed his studies at Paris, where, when quite young, he distinguished himself as a preacher. In 1686 he was employed as a missionary in Saintonge to convert the protestants. In 1689 he became tutor to the dukes of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berri, which office he so well discharged, that in 1695 he was preferred to the archbishopric of Cambray. About this time he fell into trouble, on account of his book, entitled, The Maxims of the Saints, which was charged with favouring the principles of madame de Guyon. Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, who was a violent enemy of that celebrated mystic, immediately attacked the archbishop, and by his influence with the king, obtained an order for his banishment to his diocese. The book was also condemned at Rome; and to this censure Fenelon submitted with profound deference, and even read the pope's decrees himself from the pulpit. He spent the remainder of his days in his diocese, for he never recovered the king's favour, which was in a great measure owing to his composing for his royal pupil the duke of Burgundy, that inestimable work for the instruction of a prince, Telemachus, which Lewis considered as a satire upon himself. The good archbishop, however, bore his exile with the serenity of conscientious integrity; uniting in his deportment the dignity of a nobleman, with the exemplary care of a prelate; and the tender affection of a good pastor. His charities were unbounded, and so revered was his character, that the duke of Marlborough and other generals of the allies, when possessed of that part of Flanders, particularly exempted his lands from pillage or exaction. He died in 1715, without money and without a debt. Besides the above works, he wrote Dialogues of the Dead; Dialogues on Eloquence; a treatise on the Education of Daughters; a Demonstration of the Existence of God; and Spiritual Works.—Moreri.

FENTON (sir Geoffrey), an English writer, was born in Nottinghamshire, and died at Dublin in 1608. He translated Guicciardini's History of the Wars of Italy, and some other books.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

FENTON (Elias), an English poet, was born at Shelton, in Staffordshire, and educated at Jesus college, Cambridge, for the church, but this design was frustrated by his refusing the oaths to William and Mary. He was for some time usher of a school in Surrey, and afterwards master of one at Sevenoaks in Kent. He removed from thence in 1710, to be secretary to the earl of Orrery, and tutor to his son. He afterwards lived with lady Trumbull as tutor to her son, and died at her seat in Berkshire in 1730. He wrote some poems; the Life of Milton; the Tragedy of Mariamne, and assisted Pope in his translation of the Odyssey.—Johnson's Lives of the Poets.

FERRAJOLI (Nuzio), an Italian painter of landscape, was the disciple of Luca Giordano, and born in 1661. His pictures are beautiful.—Pilkington.

FERDINAND I. emperor of Germany, succeeded his brother Charles V. in 1558, at which time Ferdinand was king of the Romans, and of Hungary and Bohemia. He made peace with the Turks, and died in 1564, leaving the character of a wise and humane prince.—FERDINAND II. was the son of the archduke of Styria; elected king of Bohemia in 1617, and of Hungary in 1618. Soon afterwards he succeeded Matthias as emperor. The Bohemian states having chosen the elector palatine Frederick to be their king, Ferdinand marched against him, and defeated him at Prague in 1620. A league was then formed against the emperor by the protestant princes, headed by Christian IV. of Denmark, who was defeated by Tilly, and forced to make peace. Another league was then formed, of which Gustavus Adolphus had the lead: he defeated the imperialists in different battles, and was himself slain at that of Lutzen in 1632. A partial peace was afterwards made between the emperor and some of the protestant princes. He died in 1637.—FERDINAND III. surnamed Ernest, was the son of the preceding, born 1608, made king of Hungary in 1625, of Bohemia in 1627, and succeeded his father in 1637. Sweden and France being in alliance, gained several advantages over the imperialists, which terminated with the peace of Munster in 1648. The emperor died in 1657.—Moreri.

FERDINAND I. king of Castile and Leon, called the Great, was the second son of Sancho III. king of Navarre. By the death of Bermudo, who was slain in 1037, he became king of Leon: on which he made war against the Moors, from whom he took a number of cities, and pushed his conquests as far as Portugal. He next declared war against his brother Garcias IV. king of Navarre, in which that prince lost both his kingdom and life. Ferdinand died in 1065.

—FERDINAND II. son of Alphonso VIII. king of Leon and Castile. He gained great advantages over the Portuguese, and made their king, Alphonso Henriquez, prisoner, whom he used with moderation. He died in 1187, after reigning 30 years.—FERDINAND III. son of Alphonso IX. He obtained the crown of Castile by the abdication of his mother, Berengere, in 1217, and that of Leon by the death of his father, in 1230. He took many places from the Moors, and while he was projecting an expedition against Morocco, he died in 1252. He was canonized by pope Clement X.—FERDINAND IV. succeeded to the throne of Castile in 1295, at the age of six years, under the guardianship of his mother, who governed the kingdom with great prudence. He died in 1312.—FERDINAND V. called the Catholic, son of John II. king of Arragon. He married Isabella of Castile, sister of Henry IV. and thereby united the two kingdoms of Castile and Arragon. Ferdinand declared war against Alphonso, king of Portugal, and defeated him at Toro in 1476. He next conquered Grenada, and in 1516 he expelled the Moors out of Spain; but the most remarkable event of his life was the discovery of America by Columbus. He also rendered himself master of part of Navarre. He died in 1516.—FERDINAND VI. son of Philip V. and of Mary of Savoy, ascended the throne in 1746. This prince distinguished his reign by acts of beneficence. He restored liberty to the prisoners, proclaimed pardon to smugglers and deserters, and assigned two days in a week to render justice to his subjects. He took part in the war of 1741, and signed the peace in 1748, by which means one of his brothers obtained the crown of the two Sicilies, and the other the dukedom of Parma and Placentia. He re-established his marine, and reformed and promoted the arts and agriculture. He died at Madrid without issue, in 1759, aged 46.—Univ. Hist. Moreri. Nov. Dict. Hist.

FERDINAND, king of Portugal, succeeded his father Peter the Justicer in 1367. On the death of Peter the Cruel, king of Castile, he assumed that title, on which a war ensued between him and Henry of Trantamare, who ravaged Portugal, and forced Ferdinand to make peace on condition of marrying his daughter. This marriage he afterwards disowned and entered into an alliance with John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, who laid claim to the Castilian throne. This war proved very disastrous to the Portuguese, and Ferdinand was obliged to sue for peace. Another war was again entered into, in which he was supported by the English, and was for a time successful, but was at last under the necessity of making peace. He died in 1383.—Id.

FERDINAND, king of Naples, and of Sicily, succeeded Alphonso in 1458. He died in 1494, aged 70, detested for his debaucheries and cruelties; yet he enacted many good laws, and restored the University of Naples.—Univ. Hist.

FERDINAND of Cordova, a learned Spaniard of the 15th century. He is said to have been master of numerous languages and sciences, and perfectly accomplished in all the polite arts. He wrote a treatise, entitled, De Artificio omnis Scibilis; also Commentaries on the Almagest of Ptolemy.—Moreri.

FERDINAND (John), a jesuit of Toledo, who died at Palantia in 1595, aged 59. He wrote a book entitled, Divinarum Scripturarum, juxta Patrum sententias locupletissimus Thesaurus, in 1594.—Moreri.

FERDINAND de Jesus, a Spanish monk, of the order of Carmelites, at the beginning of the 17th century. On account of his eloquence he was called Golden-mouthed. He wrote commentaries on Aristotle and the Scriptures.—Moreri.

FERDINANDI (Epiphanius) a celebrated physician, born in Otranto in 1569, and died in 1638. He published Observationes & Casus Medici; Theoremata Medica; De Vita Propaganda; De Peste.—Ibid.

FERDOUSI, a Persian poet, whose principal piece is called the History of the Persian Kings. He died A.D. 1020.—Ibid.

FERG, or FERGIE (Francis Paul), an eminent landscape painter, born at Vienna in 1689. He settled in London, where his talents were greatly admired, but he was reduced to poverty by an imprudent marriage, and died in misery in 1740. He adorned his landscapes with ruins in a grand taste.—Pilkington.

FERGUS I. king of Scotland. He was the son of Fergus, king of the Irish Scots, and was invited to Scotland to repel the Picts, for which he was chosen king. He was drowned in his passage to Ireland about 404.—Boetius.

FERGUSON (Robert), a nonconformist of considerable notoriety in his day. He was ejected in 1602, from the living of Godmerham in Kent; after which he became a schoolmaster, but distinguished himself by his political intrigues, and was accounted a court spy. He joined the duke of Monmouth, whom he is supposed to have betrayed. He was never steady to any party, and died very poor in 1714. Ferguson wrote the Interest of Reason in Religion, &c.; a discourse concerning Justification, &c.—Galexy, Burnet's Hist. of his own Times.

FERGUSON (James), an ingenious philosopher and astronomer, was born in 1710, at Keith, a village in the shire of Bamf, in Scotland. His parents being poor, he was placed out as servant to a farmer, who employed him in keeping sheep; in which situation he acquired a surprising knowledge of the stars, and his abilities being discovered by some neighbouring gentlemen, one of them took him home to his house, where he learnt decimal arithmetic and the rudiments of algebra and geometry from the butler. From a description of the globes in Gordon's grammar, he made one in three weeks sufficiently accurate to enable him to work problems. He afterwards made a wooden clock and a watch, in consequence of which he was employed by some of the gentry in repairing and cleaning clocks; and having a taste for drawing, he earned something by drawing patterns for ladies work. He next began to draw portraits with Indian ink, by which he supported himself creditably some years. In 1743 he went to London, where he published some astronomical tables and calculations, and gave lectures in experimental philosophy, which he repeated with success throughout the kingdom. In 1754 he published a brief description of the solar system, with an astronomical account of the year of our Saviour's Crucifixion, 8vo.; also an Idea of the Material Universe, deduced from a Survey of the Solar System. But his greatest work is his "Astronomy explained upon Sir Isaac Newton's Principles, and made easy to those who have not studied Mathematics." It first appeared in 1756, 4to. and has been several times reprinted in 8vo. On the accession of the present king, to whom he had read lectures, Mr. Ferguson obtained a pension of fifty pounds a year. In 1763 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, without paying the admission fee, or the annual subscriptions: the same year appeared his Astronomical Tables and Precepts, 8vo. In 1767 he published Tables and Tracts relative to several Arts and Sciences, 8vo. Besides these works he was the author of Select Mechanical Exercises; the Young Gentleman and Lady's Astronomy; an Easy Introduction to Astronomy; an Introduction to Electricity; the Art of Drawing in Perspective made easy; and several tracts and papers in the Philosophical Transactions. He died in 1776. Mr. Ferguson was a man of unassuming manners, meek, innocent, and religious.—Life prefixed to his Mechanical Exercises. Hutton's Math. Dict.

FERGUSON (William), a Scotch painter, who excelled in painting dead birds and still life. He died about 1690.—Pilkington.

FERGUSON (Robert), a Scotch poet, was born at Edinburgh in 1750. He was educated for the ministry, but a love of poetry and dissipation disqualified him for that profession, and he obtained a place in the clerical clerk's office at Edinburgh. He died insane in the Asylum for lunatics at that city in 1774. His poems, which are pastoral, humorous, and lyric, are in Dr. Anderson's collection.—Life by Irving, 1799.

FERMAT (Peter), a French mathematician, born at Toulouse in 1590, and bred to the profession of the law. He became councillor to the parliament of Toulouse, and died in 1664. His mathematical works, which are highly valued, were printed at Toulouse, in 2 vols. folio, 1679. His son Samuel Fermat was also a learned man, and the author of several works.—Moreri.

FERMOR (William), count von, a celebrated Russian general, was born at Plaskow in 1704. His father was a native of Scotland, in the Russian military service. In the war against the Turks in 1736, young Fermor displayed great bravery and was made a general. In 1755 he obtained the chief command, and made himself master of Prussia, for which the emperor Francis made him a count of the empire. He gained the famous battle of Zorndorff against Frederick II. of Prussia, and had a considerable share in taking Berlin. He died in 1771.—Gen. Biog.

FERNANDEZ (Anthony), a Portuguese Jesuit, who was for many years superior of his order in India, and died in Portugal in 1628. He wrote commentaries on Isaiah, and the visions of the Old Testament. He is not to be confounded with Benedito Fernandez, another Portuguese of the same order, who wrote commentaries on Genesis and the gospel of St. Luke. He died at Lisbon in 1630. Nor with Alphonso Fernandez, a Spanish monk of the dominican order, who published an Ecclesiastical History of his time, and other works. He died about 1640.—Moreri.

FERNEL (John Francis), physician to Henry II. was born at Mont Didier, in Picardy, in 1506, and died 1538. His works, which are wholly on medical subjects, have been often printed.—Moreri.

FERRACINO (Bartholomew), a self-taught genius of Padua. He was born in 1692, and bred a sawyer. His first invention was a saw worked by the wind. He made curious clocks, and hydraulic engines, but his greatest work is the bridge over the Brenta, which is remarkable for the boldness of the design, and its firmness. He died about 1764.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

FERRAND (Louis), a lawyer, born at Toulon in 1645. He became advocate in the parliament of Paris, and died in 1699. His collection of Ecclesiastical Canons was published at Paris in 1588, 8vo. There are also extant two of his letters, an exhortation on the duties of a Christian Soldier, and other remains.—Cave Hist. Lit. Merri.

FERRAR (Robert), an English bishop, was born at Halifax, in Yorkshure, and received his education at Cambridge and Oxford. About 1533 he became chaplain to archbishop Cranmer, by whose means he obtained the bishopric of St. David's, but he was imprisoned at the latter end of king Edward's reign, on some charges alleged against him. In that of Mary he was condemned as a heretic and burnt at Caermarthen in 1555.—Fox's Acts and Mon. W. cod.

FERRAR (Nicholas), a pious gentleman, was born in London in 1591. His father was an East India merchant. He received a liberal education at Cambridge, after which he travelled over most part of Europe. On his return he became secretary of the new Virginia company, and was chosen in 1624 member of parliament, by whom he was appointed, with two others, to draw up articles of impeachment against the lord treasurer Cranfield. Soon afterwards, being of a pious and ascetic turn, he and his family retired from public life to a seat in Huntingdonshire, called Little Gidding, which they converted into a kind of protestant monastery. Mr. Ferrar also entered into deacon's orders in 1626, and died in 1637. He translated Valdesso's Considerations on Religion, from the Spanish into English.—Peckard's Life of Ferrar, &c. 1792.

FERRARI (Anthony), one of the founders of the Barnabites, in 1520; the other was James Morigia. This order was confirmed by pope Paul III. in 1535, and multiplied exceedingly. Ferrari became superior of it, and died in 1544.—Moreri.

In 1694 he entered into orders, and soon after obtained a living in his native county; but the air of the place proving unhealthy, he was suddenly deprived of his speech, which he never perfectly recovered. After this he was appointed chaplain to the garrison at Hull, of which he was deprived on the death of queen Anne. He died at Putney in 1725. His principal works are, the Life of Cardinal Wolsey, which brought on him the charge of being popishly affected; a Body of Divinity, folio, for which the University of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D. D.; Fifty-two practical Discourses; a Treatise on Morality, &c.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

FIELD (Richard), a learned English divine, was born in Hertfordshire in 1561, and educated at Oxford. In 1598 he was made chaplain to queen Elizabeth, and in 1609 dean of Gloucester. He died in 1616, just as he was about to be nominated to the see of Oxford. He wrote a learned work "Of the Church" in folio.—Wood's A. O.

FIELDING (Henry), a celebrated writer, was born at Sharpham, in Somersetshire, of a good family, in 1707. After receiving the rudiments of education at home, he went to Eton, from whence he was sent to Leyden, where he studied two years, and then returned to England. The narrowness of his father's circumstances and the largeness of his family, prevented him from providing for his eldest son in a proper manner. He then commenced writer for the stage, his first piece being entitled, Love in several Masques, which met with a favourable reception; as did his next performance, called The Temple Beau. Some of his dramatic efforts, however, were not so successful, and he had the courage to prefix to one of them, "As it was damned at the theatre-royal, Drury-lane." He afterwards had the good luck to marry a lady of some fortune, and by the death of his mother, he came into the possession of 200*l.* a-year. His extravagancies, however, were such, that at the age of thirty he had reduced himself to his former condition, on which he entered the Temple, and studied the law with considerable ardour, still exercising his pen for immediate support. One of his publications was, The History of Jonathan Wild, a notorious character, whose story Fielding wrought up into an entertaining romance. In 1742, appeared his Joseph Andrews, a novel, full of humour and admirable delineations of human nature. During the rebellion of 1745, he published some spirited patriotic pieces, for which he was made a Middlesex justice, in which situation he gained considerable reputation, by his Enquiry into the Causes of the late Increase of Robberies; and his Proposal for the Maintenance of the Poor. About this time he wrote his principal work, the novel of Tom Jones, which exhibits a great knowledge of life, and is equally rich in comic delineation and pathetic expression. The moral, however, is suspicious. His Amelia, which followed in 1751, is more correct in its sentiment, but deficient in humour and variety. A complication of complaints had now produced a dropsy, and after undergoing the operation of tapping, he went with his family to Lisbon, where he died Oct. 8, 1754. All his works have been printed uniformly in 12 vols. 8vo. with his life prefixed, by Mr. Murphy, from whence this is taken.

FIELDING (Sarah), sister of the preceding, was born in 1714, and died unmarried in 1761. She wrote the novels of David Simple and the Cry; and translated Xenophon's Memoirs of Socrates into English.—Biogr. Br.

FIELDING (Sir John), half brother of Henry and his successor as a justice for Middlesex. Though blind from his childhood, he discharged his office with great credit, and in 1761 received the honour of knighthood. He died in 1780. He published some tracts on police; a Charge to the Grand Jury of Westminster, &c.—Ibid.

FIELING (William), Lord Say and Sele, was born at Brighton, in Oxfordshire, in 1582, and educated at New college, Oxford. In 1624 he was made a viscount. In the rebellion he sided with the most violent of the parliament party, for which he was declared an outlaw by the king, after whose murder he joined the independents, and during the protectorate retired to the isle of Lundy, on the coast of Devon, where he continued till Cromwell's death. As the restoration he was made privy seal, and chamberlain of the household. He died in 1662. His lordship wrote some pamphlets against the quakers.—Granger. Wood.

FIENNES (Nathaniel), second son of the above, was born in 1608, and educated at New college, Oxford, after which he went to Geneva. Being entrusted with the command of Bristol, he surrendered it to prince Rupert, for which he was condemned by a council of war, but his father's interest saved his life. Cromwell, with whom he was in great favour, made him one of his lords. He was a considerable leader of the independent party, and printed some speeches and pamphlets. He died in 1669.—Wood's A. O.

FIENUS (Thomas), a physician, born at Antwerp in 1566. He was chosen professor of physic at Louvain, and died there in 1631. His works are, De viribus Imaginationis; De Formatione & Animatione Fetus; Apologia pro eodem; De Cauteris; Libri Chirurgici.—Moreri.

FIESCO (John Lewis), a noble Genoese, who out of ambition and hatred to the famous Andrew John Doria, formed a conspiracy, with the assistance of France and pope Paul, to revolutionize Genoa in 1547. In the attempt to seize the galleys Fiescho fell overboard and was drowned. The conspirators disheartened gave up the enterprize, and the family of Fiescho was proscribed.—Mod. Univ. Hist.

FIGINO (Ambrozio), an Italian painter, was born at Milan. Lord Pembroke has a fine picture of the ascent from the cross by him. He died in 1590.—Pilkington.

FIGRELIUS (Edmundus), a learned Swede, who was professor of history at Upsala and died in 1676. He wrote De Statu illustrium Romanorum.—Gen. B. D.

FILANGERI (Gaetano), a political writer, was born at Naples in 1752. He studied the law but never practised. In 1777, he entered into the service of the court, was appointed a gentleman of the bedchamber, and an officer in the marine. In 1780 he published the beginning of his work on Legislation, and the 8th volume in 1791. It was never completed. In 1787 he obtained a place in the royal college of Finance, and died the same year. His work has gone through several editions.—Gen. Biog.

FILARCO (Francis), or Philadelphus, one of the restorers of letters, was born in Aucona in 1398, and after studying at Padua, he opened a school of rhetoric at Venice, the state of which appointed him chancellor and ambassador to Constantinople. While there he assiduously studied the Greek language, and married a daughter of Chrysoloras. On his return to Venice he brought with him many Greek manuscripts. In 1428 he removed to Bologna, where he was appointed professor of moral philosophy, but in 1429 he went to Florence. A difference between him and Cosmo de Medici, obliged him to go to Sienna, and afterwards to different other places. He died at Florence in 1481. He was a man of great learning and abilities, but restless and quarrelsome. His epistles were printed at Venice in 1502. His eldest son GIAMMARIA, or Murius Philolophus, was also a good scholar, and died at Milan in 1480.—Moreri. Tiraboschi.

FILESAC (John), a French divine and doctor of the Sorbonne, and dean of the faculty of theology at Paris. He died in 1638. His works were printed in 1621, 3 vols. 4to.—Moreri. Dupin.

FILICAIA (Vincenzio da), an Italian poet, was born of a noble family at Florence in 1642, and died in 1707. His poems in Latin and Italian are very elegant.—Tiraboschi.

FILMER (sir Robert), an English writer, born in Kent, at the beginning of the 17th century, and educated at Trinity college, Cambridge. He wrote The Anarchy of a limited and mixed Monarchy; Patriarcha, in which he proves that government was monarchical in the patriarchal ages; and the Freeholder's Grand Inquest. He died about 1688. Mr. Locke wrote against his book of government.—Gen. B. D.

FINZUS (Orontius), or Finé, professor of mathematics in the Royal college at Paris. He was born in 1494. Notwithstanding his great reputation, he died poor in 1755, and left a family greatly distressed. His works were printed in 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

FINCH, (Heneage), first earl of Nottingham, was the son of sir Heneage Finch, recorder of London. He was born in 1621, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford, and afterwards to the Inner Temple. Charles II. made him solicitor-general, and created him a baronet. He was returned to parliament for the university of Oxford in 1661. In 1670 he was appointed attorney general, and soon after lord keeper, with the rank of a peer. In 1675 he was made lord chancellor, and in 1681 created earl of Nottingham, but died the year following. Several of his speeches are in print.—Collins's Peerage.

FINCH (Daniel), eldest son and heir of the above, was born in 1647, and finished his education at Christ church, Oxford. In 1680 he was appointed first lord of the Admiralty, and in 1682 succeeded his father as earl of Nottingham. He opposed the arbitrary measures of James II. but though he favoured the prince of Orange he was against his taking possession of the throne, and strenuously supported the convention in favour of the regency. However, William offered him the post of lord chancellor, which he declined, but he was for a short time secretary of state. On the death of queen Anne, he was one of the lords justices for the administration of affairs, and soon after was made president of the council, but in 1716 he was dismissed on account of a speech which he made in the behalf of the Scottish lords, condemned for high treason. In 1729 he became earl of Winchelsea on the death of John, fifth earl, in virtue of his descent from Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of sir Thomas Heneage, and wife of sir Moyle Finch, his great grandfather. He died in 1730, aged 83. He was an able speaker and also a man of learning, as appears from his reply to Whiston on the Trinity, for which he received the thanks of the university of Oxford, and of the bishop and clergy of London.—Collins's Peerage. B. B. Cox's Hist. of sir Robert Walpole.

FINCH (sir John), a man of wit in the courts of James I. and Charles I. He was born in Kent in 1571, and died in 1641. He wrote a book, entitled, Fineti Philoxenus, or Observations touching the Reception, Precedency, &c. of foreign Ambassadors in England.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

FINCK (Thomas), a Danish mathematician, was born in South Jutland in 1561. He took the degree of doctor in physic at Basil, after which he became physician to the duke of Sleswick. In 1591 he was appointed professor of mathematics at Copenhagen, in 1603 professor of eloquence, and the year following that of medicine. He died in 1656. He wrote Geometriae rotundi; de Constitutione Matheseos; de Medicina Constitutione, &c.—Moreri.

FIRENZUOLA (Angelo), an Italian writer, born at Florence in 1493. He was in orders and had a rich abbey at Rome, where he died in 1545. His works were printed at Florence in 1763, in 3 vols.—Tiraboschi.

FIRMICUS MATERNUS (Julius), a christian writer of the 4th century, whose book De Erroribus profanarum Religionum has been frequently printed; an Astronomical or Astrological Treatise, printed first at Venice in 1497, has also been ascribed to this author.—Fabric. Bibl. Lat. Moreri.

FIRMILIAN, bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia. He was the friend of Origen, and took part with St. Cyprian in the dispute concerning the rebaptization of converted heretics. He presided at the first council of Antioch against Paul of Samosata, and died in 269.—Cave's Hist. Lit.

FIRMIN (Thomas), a benevolent English tradesman, was born at Ipswich in Suffolk in 1632, and apprenticed to a tradesman in London. When out of his time, he began business for himself in the linen trade, in which he had good success. His uprightness, piety, and charity were so distinguished, that some of the greatest divines of the age were glad of his friendship, particularly archbishop Tillotson. He erected a warehouse for the employment of the poor in the linen manufacture, and when the French protestants came over he set up another for their use at Ipswich. He was one of the governors of Christ's and St. Thomas's hospitals, to which he was a liberal benefactor, nor was there any public charity in which he had not some concern. This truly good man died in 1697. He published in 1678, "Some Proposals for the employing of the Poor, and especially in and about the city of London and for the Prevention of Begging," 4to.—Life of Firmin by Cornish.

FIRMIN (Giles), an English divine of the nonconformist persuasion. He was a native of Suffolk, and educated at Cambridge, after which he went to New England, and practised as a physician. On his return he was ordained in the Presbyterian way, and became minister of Shalford, from whence he was ejected in 1662. He then resumed the practice of physic, and died in 1697. He wrote 'The real Christian, a book of practical Religion; a Treatise of Schism, and other works.—Culamy.

FIRONZABADI, surnamed Shirozi, a Persian doctor of the 11th century, who wrote a work highly esteemed among the Mussulmans; entitled, Al Tanbidh, or General Information on the Mohammedan Law. There was another of the same name, who compiled a dictionary of the Arabic language; called, The Ocean. He died A.D. 1414.—D'Herbelot. Moreeri.

FISH (Simon), an English lawyer of the 16th century, who on account of his activity for the reformation, was obliged to fly to Germany, where in conjunction with William Tyndale, he wrote the Supplication of Beggars against Monks and Friars. This piece so pleased Henry VIII. that Fish had liberty to return. He also translated from the Dutch, a little book, entitled, The Sum of the Scriptures. He died of the plague in 1571.—Wood.

FISHER (John), an English prelate, was born at Beverly, in Yorkshire, in 1459, and educated at Cambridge. He became confessor to Margaret, countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII. who by his advice founded St. John's and Christ's colleges, Cambridge. He was afterwards chosen chancellor of that university, and was a liberal encourager of learning. In 1504 he was made bishop of Rochester, from which he would never remove to a better see. He was a zealous opponent of the reformation, and of the king's divorce from queen Catherine. Great efforts were made to bring him to acknowledge the king's supremacy, which proving ineffectual, he was sent to the Tower. While in confinement the pope made him a cardinal, which so enraged the king, that he caused him to be tried for high treason, condemned and beheaded in 1535. He was a man of considerable learning, strict integrity, and fervent piety. He wrote a commentary on the seven penitential psalms; a Defence of the king's book against Luther; a funeral Sermon for the lady Margaret, &c.—Biog. Brit.

FISHER (Mary), a quaker of the 17th century, who took it into her head to go to Constantinople, to convert the grand seignor. The sultan Mahomet IV. heard her patiently, and then caused her to be sent back to her own country, where she married a preacher of her own sect. This couple afterwards went to Languedoc, to preach the tenets of quakerism among the protestants there.—New. Dict. Hist.

FITZHERBERT (sir Anthony), a learned judge in the reign of Henry VIII. was born in Derbyshire, and educated at Oxford, from whence he was removed to one of the inns of court. In 1523 he was made a judge in the court of common pleas, and died in 1533. He wrote The Grand Abridgment; a Collection of Cases; The Office and Authority of Justices of the Peace; The Office of Sheriffs; Natura Brevium, &c. He is also supposed to have written of the Surveying of Lands, and of the Book of Husbandry.—Biog. Brit.

FITZHERBERT (Thomas), grandson of the preceding, was born in Staffordshire in 1552, and educated at Oxford. On account of his zeal for the Roman catholic religion he found it necessary to go abroad; and in 1614 he entered among the jesuits at Rome, after which he removed to Brussels to preside over the English mission. Being appointed rector of the English college at Rome, he returned thither, and died in 1640. His writings are wholly controversial.—Biog. Brit.

FITZHERBERT (Nicholas), another grandson of the judge, was born about 1550, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford. About 1572 he went to Italy, and resided with cardinal Allen. He was accidentally drowned in 1612. He wrote a Description of the University of Oxford; on the Antiquity and Continuance of the Catholic Religion in England; the Life of Cardinal Allen, &c.—Ibid.

FITZJAMES (James), duke of Berwick, natural son of James II. by Arabella Churchill, sister to the duke of Marlborough. He was born at Moulins in 1671, and entered early into the French service. At the age of 15 he was wounded at the siege of Buda. In 1688 he was sent to Ireland, where he distinguished himself at the siege of Londonderry, and the battle of the Boyne. He was afterwards employed on various services, for which he was rewarded with the rank of marshal of France. He gained the victory of Almanza over the English and their allies, which fixed Philip V. on the throne of Spain. He was killed by a cannon ball at the siege of Philipsburgh, in 1734.—Moreci.

FITZ-STEPHEN (William), a monk of Canterbury, in the 12th century, who wrote the life of his master Thomas Becket, in which he gives a curious description of London. He died in 1191.—Leland. de Script. Brit. Cuvr. Hist. Lit.

FIXLWILLNER (Placidus), a German astronomer, was born near Linz, in Austria.

He displayed a turn for mathematics very early in life, and pursued it with ardour at Stralsburg under professor Stuard, after which he embraced the monastic life, and entered into orders. He became professor of ecclesiastical law, in the academy attached to his monastery at Kremsmunster, and discharged it with reputation forty years. An observatory was also erected there under his direction of which he became astronomer, and he published an account of numerous observations, besides other works relative to the celestial science. He was also the author of some books on the canon and the origin of the church. He died in 1791, aged 71.—Schlichtegroll's Necrology.

FIXES (Anthony), an eminent physician of Montpellier, who died in 1765, aged 75. He published Opera Medica, 4to.; Leçons de Chymie, 12mo.; Tractatus de Febribus, 12mo.; Tractatus de Physiologia, 12mo.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

FLACCOURT (F. de), director general of the French East India company, who commanded a colony in the island of Madagascar in 1648, but was at last obliged to abandon it and return to France, where he wrote a history of that island in one volume, 4to.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

FLACCUS (Caius Valerius), a Latin poet, who lived in the reign of Vespasian. A poem of his on the Argonautic expedition is extant, the best edition of which is that of Burman 1723.—Voss. Poet. Lat. Moreri.

FLACIUS, or FRANCOWITZ (Mathias), a Lutheran divine, born in Istria, which being a part of the ancient Illyrium, he assumed the name of Flacius Illyricus. In 1541 he became a disciple of Luther and Melancthon at Wittemberg, where he taught privately the Hebrew and Greek languages, and afterwards became professor. He was the principal author of the Centuriæ Magdeburgenses, and a great defender of the rigid principles of Luther against those who were for moderate doctrines, on which account he settled at Magdeburg, and afterwards removed to other places. He died at Frankfurt in 1575, aged 55. He wrote Clavis Sacre Scripturæ, 2 vols. folio; Catalogus Testimonii Veritatis, folio; De Translatione Imperii Romani ad Germanos, de Electione Episcoporum quod æque ad plebem pertineat, 8vo.—Melch. Adami Vit. Germ. Theol. Bayle.

FLAMAEL (Pertholet), a Flemish painter, born at Liege in 1614. After studying the principles of his art in his own country he went to Italy, where he greatly improved himself. In 1647 he returned to Liege, which city he adorned with many excellent works. He died in 1675.—D'Argenville. Pilkington.

FLAMEL (Nicholas), a notary of Paris in the 14th century, who accumulated a vast property, which he appropriated to benevolent purposes, and the endowment of hospitals and churches. The ignorant multitude ascribed his great wealth to his being possessed of the philosopher's stone, but it is supposed to have risen from commercial speculations. Two foolish books on alchemy are falsely attributed to him.—Moreri.

FLAMINTO (Giovanni Antonio), a learned Italian, was born at Imola in 1464. He became an eminent teacher of the belles lettres at Bologna, where he died in 1536. He wrote Latin poems; Epistles, and the lives of St. Dominic, Albertus Magnus, &c. His son Marc Antonio was also a man of letters. He accompanied cardinal Pole to the council of Trent, and died at Rome in 1550, aged 52. He wrote Carmina quinque illustrium poetarum, 1549; An Exposition of the Psalms; Epistles—Tiraboschi.

FLAMINIUS, or FLAMININUS (Titus Quintus), a Roman general, who served the office of consul, B. C. 198. He defeated Philip, king of Macedon, in the desiles of Epirus, and afterwards in Thessaly, and restored Greece to freedom, for which the people paid him a profusion of honours at the Isthmian games. In 190 he secured the office of censor, and afterwards was ambassador to Prusias, king of Bithynia, whom he prevailed upon to deliver up Hannibal, who then poisoned himself to prevent his falling into the Roman power.—Livy Plutarch.

FLAMINIUS (Nobilis), an Italian divine and critic, who died at Lucca in 1590. He corrected the Vulgate translation of the Scriptures by the Septuagint, and wrote a book on Predestination.—Moreri.

FLAMSTEED (John), an English astronomer, was born at Derby in 1646, and educated at the grammar school there. When very young he discovered a great turn for mathematical learning, and in 1669 he calculated an eclipse of the sun which was to happen next year; and also five appulses of the moon to the fixed stars. He sent the same to the royal society, for which he received the thanks of that learned body. Soon after this he went to London, where he was introduced to the most learned mathematicians of the time. From thence he went to Cambridge, and entered himself of Jesus college. One of his best friends was sir Jonas Moore, who introduced him to the king, and most of the nobility at court. In 1674 that gentleman procured for him the place of astronomer royal, and the same year he entered into orders. In 1675 the foundation of the royal observatory at Greenwich was laid, and as he was the first resident and astronomer royal, it was called Flamsteed-house, by which name it continues to be known. In 1725 appeared his great work, entitled, Historia Cœlestis Britannica, in 3 vols. folio. In the Philosophical Transactions are many of his papers, and in sir Jonas Moore's System of Mathematics is a tract by Mr. Flamsteed, on the Doctrine of the Sphere. He died in 1719. Mr. Flamsteed never received any other church preferment than the crown living of Burflow, in Surry.—Biog. Brit.

FLASSANS (Taraudet de), a Provençal poet of the 14th century, who wrote a piece on the Treacheries of Love. Joan the queen of Navarre sent him ambassador to the emperor Charles IV. when he passed through Provence.—Moreri.

FLATMAN (Thomas), an English poet, was born in London in 1633, and educated at Winchester-school, from whence he removed to New college, Oxford. On leaving the university he entered himself of the Inner Temple. He died in 1688. His poems, which are licentious and poor, were printed in 1682, 8vo.—Wood's A. O.

FLAVEL (John), a nonconformist divine, was born in Worcestershire, and educated at University college, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. In 1650 he was ordained in the presbyterian way at Salisbury. Afterwards he settled at Dartmouth, in Devonshire, where he wrote his Navigation Spiritualized. He was ejected from his living in 1662, but continued to preach privately. At the accession of James II. he returned to Dartmouth. He died suddenly at Exeter in 1691. His works, which are held in considerable esteem, and have been extensively beneficial, make 2 vols. folio, and 6 vols. 8vo.—Life prefixed to his Works. Calamy.

FLAVIAN patriarch of Antioch, in which see he was confirmed by the council of Constantinople in 382, but it occasioned a schism, numerous bishops adhering to Paulinus and others to Flavian. The prudence of the latter at length restored peace to the church. He was a zealous opposer of the Arians, and died in 404.—Cave Hist. Lit. Moreri.

FLAVIAN, patriarch of Constantinople, to which he was elected on the death of Proclus in 447. He condemned the Eutychian heresy, in a synod held at Constantinople, but the followers of Eutychius afterwards got Flavian banished to Lydia, where he died.—Ibid.

FLAVIGNI (Valerian de), doctor of the Sorbonne, canon of Rheims, and professor of Hebrew in the royal college of France, was born at Laon, and died at Paris in 1674. He attacked le Jay's Polyglot, and defended the purity of the Hebrew text of the Pentateuch against Morin.—Moreri.

FLAVITAS, patriarch of Constantinople. When Acacius, patriarch of Constantinople, died, the emperor Zeno was weak enough to leave a blank paper under the altar, in expectation that an angel would write upon it the name of a person to succeed him. Flavitas, by bribing the grand chamberlain, gained admittance into the church, and inscribed his own name in the letter; on which he was chosen patriarch. He died about three months afterwards, and the cheat being discovered, the chamberlain was executed.—Moreri.

FLAUST (John Baptiste), an advocate in the parliament of Rouen, who spent fifty years in compiling an Explication of the Jurisprudence Usage of Normandy, in 2 vols. folio. He died in 1783, aged 82.—Th.

FLECHIER (Esprit), a famous French bishop, born in 1632, at Pernes, in the country of Avignon. He was greatly admired as a preacher at Paris, and his funeral orations put him on a level with Bossuet. In 1679 he published his History of Theodosius the Great. In 1685 he was made bishop of Lavaur; on which the king said, "I should have rewarded you much sooner, but that I was afraid of losing the pleasure of hearing your discourses." Shortly after he was promoted to the see of Nismes. As a bishop he was exemplary, and by the mildness of his behaviour he drew several protestants to the Roman church. When a famine raged in 1709, his charity was unbounded, and manifested to all persons without any respect to religious persuasion. He died in 1710. His works are: Miscellaneous Works, 12mo.; Panegyrics of the Saints; Funeral Orations; Sermons; the Lives of Cardinals Ximenes and Commendon; Letters; Posthumous Works: they were all published together at Nismes in 1782, in 10 vols. 8vo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

FLEETWOOD (William), an English lawyer, and recorder of London, was born in Lancashire. He received his education at Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple. He died about 1592. He wrote the history of Edward V. Richard III. Henry VII. and VIII. 1597.; the Office of a Justice of peace, &c.—Wood's A. O.

FLEETWOOD (William), an English prelate, was born in London in 1656, and educated at Eton, from whence he was sent to King's college, Cambridge. Soon after the revolution he became chaplain to William and Mary, and fellow of Eton. In 1702 he obtained a canonry of Windsor, and in 1706 he succeeded bishop Beveridge in the see of St. Asaph, from whence in 1714 he was translated to Ely. He died in 1723. He wrote Inscriptionum Antiquarum Sylloge, &c.; Chronicon Preciosum, or an Account of the English Money, the Price of Corn, &c. 8vo.; A plain Method of Christian Devotion, 8vo.; An Essay upon Miracles, 8vo.; The reasonable Communicant; Sermons on the relative Duties, 2 vols. 8vo.; Tracts and single Sermons.—Biog. Brit.

FLEMING (Robert), a Scotch presbyterian minister, born at Bathens in 1630, and educated at St. Andrews. At the age of 23 he was called to a pastoral charge, but at the restoration he went to Rotterdam, where he officiated to the Scotch congregation, and died in 1694. He is best known by a book entitled The fulfilling of the Scriptures.—Fun. Sermon by D. Burgess.

FLEMING (Robert), son of the above, was born in Scotland. He studied at Leyden and Utrecht, and became minister of an English congregation at the former place, from whence he removed to the Scotch church at Amsterdam. After residing there some years he went to London, where he officiated to the Scotch church in Lothbury, and was lecturer at Salters' Hall. He died in 1716. He wrote several sermons and tracts, but he is principally known by a work entitled Christology, 3 vols. 8vo.; and a discourse on the rise and fall of Popery; in which are many passages that correspond very strangely with the early events in the French revolution.—Eur. Mag. 1793.

FLEMING (Caleb), a nonconformist minister, was born at Nottingham in 1698. In 1738 he became pastor of a congregation of dissenters in London, and in 1752 was chosen assistant to Dr. James Foster at Pinners' Hall. He died in 1773. Dr. Fleming was of the Arian party, and published several books, the principal of which is, "A Survey of the Search after Souls," 8vo.—Fun. Sermon by J. Palmer.

FLEMMING, or FLEMMYNGE (Richard), an English prelate, was born at Croston, in Yorkshire. He received his education at University college, Oxford, and in 1408 obtained a prebend in the cathedral of York. He was for a time a zealous defender of Wickliffe's doctrines, but he afterwards strenuously opposed them. In 1442 he became bishop of Lincoln, and soon after was sent deputy to the council of Constance, where he greatly distinguished himself by his eloquence. At his return he executed the decree of that assembly in digging up Wickliffe's bones and burning them. He was next raised to the see of York by the pope, but the king refusing his consent, he was obliged to remain at Lincoln. He founded Lincoln college, and died in 1431.—Wood's A. O.

FLETCHER (Richard), an English prelate, born in the county of Kent, and educated at Cambridge. In 1583 he was made dean of Peterborough; and in 1586 he attended Mary queen of Scots at her execution, with a view of drawing her over to the protestant religion, but in this he failed. In 1589 he was preferred to the bishopric of Bristol, from whence he was afterwards translated to Worcester, and lastly to London. On the death of his first wife he married again, which gave such offence to queen Elizabeth, that she caused him to be suspended from his episcopal function. He died suddenly in 1596.—Godwin de Preful.

FLETCHER (Giles), brother to the above. He received his education at Eton, and King's college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of LL.D. in 1581. In 1588 he was sent ambassador to Russia, and on his return was made secretary to the city of London, and treasurer of St. Paul's. He died in 1610. He wrote a piece, entitled, "Of the Russe Commonwealth;" which is a very curious description of that country, 1591, 8vo. in Hackluyt's Voyages.—Biog. Br.

FLETCHER (John), an English dramatic poet, was the son of the bishop of London, and born in 1576. He received his education at Cambridge, and wrote several plays in conjunction with Beaumont. He died of the plague at London in 1625, and was buried in St. Saviour's church, Southwark. The principal piece of his own writing is a dramatic pastoral, entitled, "The Faithful Shepherdess."—Biog. Brit.

FLETCHER (Phineas), son of Giles Fletcher, was born about 1582, and educated at Eton and Cambridge. In 1621 he obtained the living of Hilgay, in Norfolk, where he died in 1650. He is best known by a poem, entitled, The Purple Island, which is an allegorical description of man, in the manner of Spenser, reprinted at London in 1783. His Piscatory Eclogues were printed at Edinburgh in 1772. His younger brother Giles was also a divine and poet, and wrote Christ's Victory. He died in 1623.—Ibid.

FLETCHER (Andrew), a political writer, was the son of sir Robert Fletcher, of Saltoun, in Scotland, and born in 1653. He was bred up under the care of Dr. Burnet, afterwards bishop of Salisbury, after which he went abroad. On his return to his own country, he became commissioner for East Lothian in the Scotch parliament, in which he so strongly opposed the court measures, that he found it expedient to withdraw soon after to Holland. In 1685 he landed in the west of England with the duke of Monmouth, but was dismissed for shooting a gentleman who had remonstrated with him for stealing his horse. One of Fletcher's biographers says, that "he was a man of breeding and nice honour, in whose constitution anger was extremely predominant," and this is all the reflection he makes upon the murder. But Fletcher was a republican. After this he was engaged in the Hungarian service against the Turks. At the revolution he returned to his own country, and was a member of the convention for settling the government of Scotland. He died at London in 1716. His publications, which are wholly political, and filled with the boldest extravagancies, were collected into one volume, 8vo. 1732.—Life by Lord Buchan.

FLETCHER (Abraham), an ingenious mathematician, was born at Little Broughton, in Cumberland, in 1714, and bred to his father's business, which was that of a tobacco-pipe-maker. He learned to read and write entirely by his own application, after which he taught himself arithmetic, mathematics, and botany. At the age of thirty he turned schoolmaster, to which profession he added those of astrologer and doctor, by which means he acquired a fortune of 3000*l.* He died in 1793. He published a compendium of practical mathematics, under the title of the Universal Measurer, 1 vol. 8vo. a book of merit.—Hutchinson's History of Cumberland.

FLEURY (Claude), a French writer, born at Paris in 1640. He was at first a lawyer, but afterwards embraced the ecclesiastical state, and obtained the abbey of Loc Dieu, in the diocese of Rhodéz. He was also appointed confessor to Louis XV. and died in 1723. The chief of his works are: 1. The Manners of the Israelites; 2. The Manners of Christians; 3. Ecclesiastical History, 13 vols. 4to.; 4. Treatise on Public Law, 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

FLEURY (Andrew Hercules de), cardinal and prime minister of France, was born in 1653, in Languedoc. In 1698 he was appointed bishop of Frejus, by Lewis XIV. who also nominated him in his will tutor to his successor Lewis XV. over whom he gained a great influence. In 1726 he was made a cardinal, and notwithstanding his great age, he managed the affairs of government with great vigour and political wisdom. In 1733 he concluded a peace with the emperor, and gained Lorraine to France. He died in 1743, and was magnificently buried in the church of the Louvre.—Moreri.

FLINK (Govert), an eminent Dutch painter. He was the disciple of Rembrandt, whose manner he imitated with success; but afterwards he studied the best Italian masters. He died in 1660.—Houbraken.

FLODOARD, or FRODOARD, a French historian. He was an ecclesiastic in the church of Rheims, and wrote a Chronicle from 919 to 966; also a History of the Church of Rheims to 949. He died in 966, aged 79.—Moreri.

FLOEGL (Charles Frederic), a German writer and professor of philosophy in the academy of nobility at Leignitz, and died there in 1788, aged 59. He wrote a history of the Human Understanding; present State of the Belles Lettres in Germany; History of Comic Literature, &c. all in German.—Gen. Biog.

FLORENTINO (Stephano), an historical painter, born at Florence in 1301. He studied under Giotto, and died in 1350.—Pilkington.

FLORIAN (John Peter Claris de), a French writer, was born in 1755, of a genteel family, in Languedoc. He was related to, and educated under Voltaire, who procured for him the place of page to the duke de Penthièvre. The duke had a great regard for him, made him his confidential friend, and obtained him a captain's commission in his regiment. He devoted himself, however, principally to letters, and produced a great number of works, chiefly of the romantic kind. His first production was Galathée, published in 1782, which was followed by his Theatre, containing Les deux Bilets, le bon Ménage, le bon Pere, la bonne Mere, and le bon Fils. His Voltaire et le Serf du Mont Jura gained him the prize given by the French academy, of which society he afterwards became a member. His Estelle is reckoned equal to Galathée, and his Numa is also highly esteemed. For the latter he was sent to prison in the tyranny of Robespierre. In his confinement he began a poem on the story of William Tell, and finished another, entitled, Ebrahim. He gained his liberty after the fall of Robespierre, and died at Seaux, Sept. 13, 1794.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FLORIMOND de Remond, a French writer, was born in Guienne. He became counsellor of the parliament of Bourdeaux, and died in 1602. He was a zealous defender of the Romish tenets against the Calvinists: the principal of his works are on Antichrist; and on the Origin of Heresies.—Moreri.

FLORIO (John), a French refugee of the protestant persuasion, who settled in England in the reign of Elizabeth. He taught the French and Italian languages at Oxford, and died in 1625, aged 80. He compiled a dictionary, Italian and English, 1597, folio, and translated Montaigne's Essays.—Wood's A. O.

FLORIS (Francis), a painter of Antwerp, born in 1520. He studied the works of Michael Angelo in Italy, and on his return to his own country he became so greatly employed as to acquire a good fortune. He died at the age of 50.—Houbraken.

FLORUS (Lucius Annaeus), a Latin historian, of the same family as Seneca and Lucan. He wrote an abridgment of the Roman History, in four books, which is concise and elegant. He flourished A.D. 116. The best editions of Florus are Duker's, 2 vols. 8vo. L. Bat. 1722, Grævius, Lips. 1760, and that of Fischer, 8vo. Lip. 1760.—Voss. Hist. Lat. Biog. Classica.

FLORUS, surnamed the Master, a deacon of the church of Lyons in the 9th century. He answered Erigena on Predestination, which piece is to be found in the Bibl. Pat. tom. 8. He was also the author of Commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul, and other works.—Cave Hist. Lit. Moreri.

FLUDD (Robert), an English philosopher, was the son of sir Thomas Fludd, and born at Milgate, in Kent, in 1574. He received his education at St. John's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and then travelled abroad. In 1605 he returned to England, and took his degree of M.D. after which he settled in London, and became fellow of the college of physicians. His writings are wholly on alchemy, and the mysticism of the Rosicrucians. He died in 1637.—Wood's A. O.

FOES, or FORESIUS (Anutius), a learned physician, born at Metz in 1528. He translated the works of Hippocrates into Latin, and died in 1596.—Moreri.

FOOLIETTA (Uberto), a Genoese historian and divine, born in 1518. He was banished from Genoa for the freedom of his writings. He then retired to Rome, where he died in 1581. His principal works are; 1. Historia Genuensium, 1585; 2. De Causis Mag- titudinis Turcarum Imperii; 3. Della Repubblica di Genoa. &c.—Tiraboschi.

Fo hi, the first Chinese monarch, who is said to have founded that kingdom 900 years after the deluge. To him the Chinese are indebted for musical instruments, a code of laws, and the regulation of marriages.—Dubalde.

FOINARD (Frederic-Maurice), a French priest, was born at Conches, in Normandy. He was learned in the Hebrew, and became vice-principal of the college of du Pleffis. He died in 1743. He published Breviarium Ecclesiasticarum, 2 vols. 8vo.; The book of Genesis explained, Latin and French, 2 vols. 12mo.; The Psalms in historical order, &c.—Moreri.

FOIX (Mark Antony de), a French Jesuit, was born in 1627. He was a distinguished preacher, and died provincial of the college of Billon in Auvergne, in 1687. He wrote the Art of Preaching, and the Art of Educating a Prince, 12mo.—Moreri.

FOIX (Odor de), lord of Lautrec, a French general of eminence. He was wounded at the battle of Ravenna, in 1512, and afterwards driven out of Italy. In 1528 however he returned into that country, took Pavia, and died the same year before Naples.—Moreri.

FOLARD (Charles), a French officer, born at Avignon, in 1669. In 1702 he became aid-du-camp to M. de Vendome, who undertook nothing without consulting him. For his services he was rewarded with a pension, and the cross of St. Louis. He was wounded at the battle of Cassano, and taken prisoner in that of Malplaquet; being exchanged he was sent to Malta, to assist in its defence against the Turks. He afterwards served under Charles XII. of Sweden, and was present at the siege of Fredericksburg, when that prince was killed. He then returned to France, and served under the duke of Berwick. He died in 1752. He wrote commentaries upon Polybius, 6 vols. 4to.; A book of new Discoveries in War; and a treatise on the Defence of Places.—Moreri.

FOLENGO (Theophilus), an Italian poet, who assumed the name of Merlin Coccaye. He was born near Mantua in 1491, and became a benedictine, but being of an amorous turn, he quitted his habit and resumed it again, after leading a rambling life some years. He died in 1544. He distinguished himself by writing Macaronic verses, the first edition of which appeared at Venice in 1513. He also wrote a licentious poem, entitled, Orlandino; and an obscene piece called Chaos del Triperuno, and other works.—Tiraboschi.

FOLENGIO (John Baptist), an Italian benedictine monk, born at Mantua in 1490. He died abbot of Treviso in 1559. He wrote Commentaries on the Epistles of St. James, St. Peter, and the first of St. John, 1655, 8vo. which work was placed in the Index expurgatorius, as was his Commentary on the Psalms, 1557, folio.—Moreri.

FOLKES (Martin), an English philosopher and antiquary, was born in Westminster in 1690. After receiving a private education, he was sent to Clare-hall, Cambridge. At the age of twenty-three he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and in 1723 was nominated by sir Isaac Newton, one of the vice-presidents. In 1741 he succeeded sir Hans Sloane as president of that learned body, and was elected about the same time a member of the royal academy of sciences at Paris. He was also created doctor of laws by both universities. He died in 1754. Mr. Folkes wrote, besides a number of papers in the Philosophical Transactions, a Table of English Silver Coins, from the Norman conquest to the present time, 1745. A new edition of this valuable work appeared in 1763.—Biog. Br.

FONSECA (Anthony de), a Portuguese monk of the order of St. Dominic. He was preacher to the king, and professor of theology in the university of Coimbra. He wrote Remarks on cardinal Cajetan's Commentaries on the Bible, folio. There was a learned Portuguese jesuit, called Peter Fonseca, who published a System of Metaphysics, in 3 vols. folio. He died in 1559.—Moreri.

FONT (Joseph de la), a French comic writer, who died in 1725, aged 39. He wrote five comedies and some operas.—ib.

FONT (Peter de la), a French divine of the jansenist party, who wrote, Entretiens Ecclesiastiques, 5 vols. 12mo. and four volumes of Sermons. He died in 1798.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FONTAINE (John de la), a French poet, was born at Chateau-Thierry in 1621. He was educated first at Rheims, and afterwards under the fathers of the Oratory. He was a man of excessive simplicity of manners, credulous, fearful, and uncommonly absent. He lived for some time with the superintendant Fouquet, who allowed him a pension. Afterwards he was in the service of princess Henrietta of England, and next lived with madame de la Sabliere. He was married, but his wife had as little knowledge of economy as himself. He died in 1695, and on being laid out, a hair shirt was found next his skin. His Tales are very licentious, but his Fables are usually put into the hands of young people. They are very natural, poetical and entertaining. He also wrote Les Amours de Psyche, a romance; some Comedies; Letters, &c. to be found in his miscellanies.—Moreri. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FONTAINE (Nicolas), a member of the society of Port Royal, and superintendent of the students there. In 1664 he was sent to the Bastille, and released in 1668. He died at Melun in 1709, aged 84. His works are; Illustrations of the New Testament, 2 vols. 8vo.; Lives of the Patri- archs, Prophets, and Saints; on the Figurative Language of the Bible, published under the name of Royaumeont; Memory of the Solitaries of Port Royal.—Moreri.

FONTAINES (Peter Francis Guyot des), a French critic, born at Rouen in 1685. He was educated under the jesuits, and was admitted a member of that society, which he quitted at the age of 30. In 1724 he succeeded the abbé Bignon in the management of the Journal des Sçavans. He conducted several periodical publications, and died in 1745. He translated Virgil into prose, with notes, 4 vols. 8vo.; and a number of other books.—Moreri.

FONTANA (Domenico), an eminent architect and mechanic, born at Milan in 1543. He raised the Roman obelisk from the dust in the front of St. Peter's, a work deemed impracticable, and which many others had attempted in vain. He died at Naples in 1607.—Life by Bellori.

FONTANA (Prospero), an historical painter, born at Bologna in 1512. He was preceptor to Ludovico and Annibal Carracci. His daughter Lavinia was also an excellent artist in portrait, and was patronized by pope Gregory XIII. She died in 1602.—Pilkingtoun.

FONTANINI (Giusto), archbishop of Ancona, born in 1666, in the duchy of Frioul, and died at Rome in 1736. His principal works are; Bibliotheca della Eloquenza Italiana; a Literary History of Aquileia, 1742; a Collection of Bulls of Canonization.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FONTE MOBERATA, a Venetian lady, whose real name was Modesta Pozzo, born at Venice in 1555, and died in 1592. She wrote two poems, one entitled Il Floridoro; the other on the Passion and Resurrection of Jesus Christ; also a book in prose, in which she holds that the women are not inferior in understanding to the men.—Ibid.

FONTENAY (John Baptiste Blain de), a French painter, born at Caen in 1654. He was a disciple of Monnoyer, and had a happy taste in painting fruits and flowers, with insects. He died in 1715.—D'Argenville.

FONTENAY (Peter Claude), a French jesuit, was born at Paris in 1683. His learning in ecclesiastical antiquities occasioned his being employed to continue Longueval's History of the Gallican Church. He died in 1742.—Moreri.

FONTENELLE (Bernard le Bovier de), a celebrated French writer, was born in 1657 at Rouen, where his father was a counsellor. Young Fontenelle was also bred to the same profession, which however he abandoned. His first literary efforts were in the dramatic line, under the auspices of his uncle Thomas Corneille, but in this he did not succeed. In 1683 he published his Dialogues of the Dead, which met with a good reception. His Conversations on the Plurality of Worlds, which appeared in 1686, gained him a great reputation. The year following, he published the History of Oracles, taken chiefly from Van Dale. In 1688 he printed pastorals, which also became popular. He was admitted a member of the French academy in 1691, and afterwards became secretary of that eminent body, which office he filled with honour forty-two years. He wrote a History of the Academy, and distinguished himself by the excellent eulogies which he wrote of deceased members. He died in 1757. Besides the above works, he wrote a History of the French Theatre; Elements of the Geometry of Infinites; Moral Discourses, &c.—Moreri.

FONTENU (Louis François), a French antiquary and historian, born at Lilledon, in Gatinois, in 1667. He wrote several dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions, and died in 1750.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FONTIUS (Bartholomew), an Italian writer, born at Florence in 1445. He was librarian to Matthew Corvinus, king of Hungary, and died in 1513. He wrote a Commentary on Perſius, and some orations.—Ibid.

FOOTE (Samuel), an English dramatic writer and actor, was born at Truro, in Cornwall, in 1722. His father was a justice of peace for that county, and his mother sister to sir John Dinely Goodere, of Herefordshire. Foote was educated at Worcester college, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Temple, but he quitted the study of the law and took to the stage. His first performance was in the character of Othello. In 1747 he opened the little theatre in the Haymarket, with a dramatic piece of his own, called, The Diversions of the Morning, which succeeded very well, as did another. The exhibition next season, was called An Auction of Pictures, in which he took off some of the most noted characters of the day. He still continued to play at one or other of the theatres, and frequently produced new pieces. In 1760 he brought out the Minor at his own House, in the Haymarket. In 1766 he had the misfortune to break his leg in such a manner that it was obliged to be amputated. The duke of York, out of compassion, procured for him a patent for life for the theatre in the Haymarket. In 1776 he attacked the duchess of Kingston in a piece, which was suppressed by authority. Soon after this a man-servant, whom he had dismissed, charged him with an unnatural offence; and though he was honourably acquitted, the circumstance made so deep an impression on his spirits, that he never recovered it. He died at Dover, on his way to France for his health, in October, 1777. His remains were interred in Westminster abbey. Foote had an infinite fund of comic humour, both in writing and conversation; but he took unwarrantable liberties in taking off persons merely on account of some natural failings and peculiarities of manner. His farces have procured him the title of the English Aristophanes.—Biog. Brit.

FOPPENS (John Francis), a Flemish divine, born about 1689, and died in 1761. He was divinity professor at Louvain, and archdeacon of Mechlin. He compiled the Bibliotheca Belgica, 2 vols. 4to. containing the works of some learned Belgians. He also published a new edition of Miræus's Opera Historica & Diplomatica, and other works.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

FORBES (Patrick), a Scotch prelate, born in 1564, of a noble family in the shire of Aberdeen. In 1618 he was made bishop of Aberdeen, and died in 1635. His Commentary upon the Revelation was printed at London in 1613. He was a pious prelate, and a liberal patron of learned men.—Biog. Brit.

FORBES (John), son of the above. He also became bishop of Aberdeen, but the covenanters obliged him to go abroad. He continued in Holland about two years, and then returned to his own country, where he led a retired life, and died in 1648. His works were printed at Amsterdam, in 2 vols. folio, 1703.—Ibid.

FORBES (William), the first bishop of Edinburgh, was born at Aberdeen in 1585. After studying at several universities, he went to England, where he was offered the Hebrew professorship at Oxford, which he declined. When Charles I. erected Edinburgh into an episcopal see, he appointed Dr. Forbes to fill it, but he enjoyed this dignity only three months, dying in 1634. He wrote Considerationes modestæ & pacificæ controversiarum de Justificatione, &c. 8vo. reprinted by Fabricius at Frankfort in 1707.—Ibid.

FORBES (Duncan), an eminent Scotch judge, and an excellent writer, was born at Culloden in 1685, and educated first at Edinburgh, and afterwards at Utrecht. In 1708 he commenced advocate at the Scotch bar, and gained considerable reputation. In 1717 he was appointed solicitor general of Scotland, and in 1725 lord advocate. He afterwards became president of the court of session. He died in 1747. His lordship was a man of great piety and learning, and well versed in the Hebrew scriptures, as appears from his Letter to a Bishop on Hutchinson's Writings and Discoveries, in 1732; Thoughts concerning Religion, natural and revealed, 1735; and Reflections on Incredulity; the whole collected into one volume, 12mo. 1750.—Life of Duncan Forbes, 8vo. 1748.—Encycl. Brit.

FORBIN (Claude, chevalier de), a French naval commander, born in 1656. He served in the East Indies some years, and was admiral to the king of Siam. He greatly distinguished himself afterwards in Europe, and was in great favour with Lewis the Fourteenth. He died in 1733. His Mémoirs were published in 1749, in 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

FORCE (James, duke de la), son of Francis, lord de la Force. He was a child, in bed with his father and elder brother, when they were murdered in the massacre of St. Bartholomew; and being unperceived by the assassins, he escaped. He signalized himself greatly under Henry IV. and afterwards joined the protestants against Lewis XIII. However, he soon made his submission to the king, and was appointed marshal of France, lieutenant-general of the army, and created a duke. He took Pignerol, and defeated the Spaniards at Carignan in 1630. He died in 1652.—Moreri.

FORDUN (John de), a Scotch historian of the 14th century. He wrote a history of Scotland, which was printed by Hearne at Oxford, in 5 vols. 8vo. and by Goodal at Edinburgh, in 1 vol. folio.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

FORDYCE (David), an ingenious writer, was born at Aberdeen in 1711. He was educated at that university, and became professor of moral philosophy in the Marischal college. Though licensed as a preacher, he never became a stated minister. In 1750 he made a tour to Italy; and on his return the following year was drowned on the coast of Holland. He wrote Dialogues concerning Education, 2 vols. 8vo. The Elements of Moral Philosophy, which first appeared in Doddsley's Preceptor. Theodorus, a Dialogue, concerning the Art of Preaching. The Temple of Virtue, a Dream.—Preface to Theodorus.

FORDYCE (James), an eminent divine, was born in 1720 at Aberdeen, and educated at that university. His first settlement, as a minister, was at Brechin, from whence he removed to Alloa; and while in that station he distinguished himself by some elegant pulpit compositions, particularly one preached before the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, on the folly, infamy, and misery of unlawful pleasures, for which the university of Glasgow conferred on him the degree of D.D. About 1762, he removed to London, where he became assistant to Dr. Lawrence of Monkwell-street, and afterwards his successor. Here he drew crowded audiences by his eloquence, and the beauty of his sermons. In 1782 he resigned his situation, and went to live first in Hampshire, and next at Bath, where he died in 1796. He published a Sermon on the Eloquence of the Pulpit, printed with his brother's Theodorus; Sermons to Young Women, 2 vols. 12mo.; Addresses to Young Men, 2 vols.; Addresses to the Deity; a volume of poems and single sermons.—Encycl. Brit. Gen. Mag.

FORDYCE (George), an eminent physician, was the nephew of the preceding, and born near Aberdeen in 1736. He received his education in that university, where he obtained the degree of M.A. at the age of 14,

The year following he was placed with his uncle, who was a surgeon and apothecary at Uppingham in Rutlandshire. He went from thence to Edinburgh, and next to Leyden, where, in 1758, he took his doctor's degree. In 1759 he settled in London, and commenced lecturer on the materia medica and practice of physic, in which he acquired an unrivalled reputation for many years. In 1770 he was chosen physician to St. Thomas's hospital, and in 1776 a fellow of the royal society. In 1787 he was elected speciali gratia, a fellow of the college of physicians, which is a very unusual distinction. He died in 1802. Dr. Fordyce is known, as a medical writer, by his Essays on Fever; an Essay on Digestion; Elements of the Practice of Physic; and various miscellaneous papers. He was also an excellent experimental chemist, and published Elements of Agriculture and Vegetation.—Monthly Mag. Gen. Biog.

FORZIRO (Francis), a Portuguese monk, of the dominican order, was born at Lisbon. The king of Portugal sent him to the council of Trent, where he was greatly admired as a preacher, and was appointed, with two others, to draw up a catechism. He died at Lisbon in 1587. He published at Venice, in 1562, a Latin translation of the Prophecy of Isaiah, with a commentary. — Moreri.

FOREST (John), painter to the king of France, born at Paris in 1636, and died in 1712. His landscapes are very beautiful. — Moreri.

FORESTI or FORESTA (James Philip of), usually called Philip of Bergamo, was an Augustinian monk. He wrote a chronicle from Adam to 1503; also a Confessional, printed at Venice in 1487; and a Treatise on illustrious Women, in 1497. — Bayle.

FORESTUS (Peter), a Dutch physician, born in 1522. He studied in Italy, and afterwards became medical professor at Leyden. He died in 1597. His Observations on Medicine were printed at Frankfort in 1623, in 6 vols. folio. — Halleri Bibl. Anat.

FORMEY (John Henry Samuel), a Prussian writer, was born at Berlin in 1711. He was for some years pastor of a French church in that city; which office he resigned on being chosen professor of philosophy in the French college. On the restoration of the royal academy of sciences at Berlin, he was appointed secretary to the philosophical department, and afterwards sole secretary. He was also made a privy counsellor. He died in 1797. Formey conducted, in conjunction with Beausobre, the Bibliothèque Germanique. He also wrote Le Philosophe Chrétien; Pensées raisonnables; Anti-Émile against Rousseau; the History of Philosophy abridged; an Abridgement of Ecclesiastical History; [these two have been translated into English]; Researches on the Elements of Matter; Considerations on the Tusculans of Cicero, &c.

— Eloge de M. Formey in Mem. Acad. de Berlin.

FORMOSUS, bishop of Porto, in Italy, succeeded pope Stephen V. in 891. The Roman people were greatly displeased with him, and when he died in 896, they threw his body into the Tiber. — Platina. Bower.

FORSKAL (Peter), a Swedish naturalist, was born in 1736. He studied at Göttingen, and afterwards at Upsal, where he became a pupil of Linnæus. In 1761 he went, at the request of the king of Denmark, with Niebuhr and others to Arabia, to make discoveries. He died at Jerim, in that country, in 1763. In 1759 he printed a tract, entitled, Thoughts on Civil Liberty; and from his papers Niebuhr published Descriptions Animalium, & eque in itinere orientali observavit, 4to.; Flora Ægyptiacq Arabica, 4to.; Icones rerum naturalium quas in itinere orientali depingi curavit Forskal, 4to. — Gen. Biog.

FORSTER (John), a learned protestant divine, born at Augsburg in 1495. He taught Hebrew in the university of Wittenberg, where he died in 1556. A Hebrew lexicon by him was published at Basle in 1564, folio. He is not to be confounded with another John Forster, who published Commentaries on some parts of scripture. — Melch. Adam's Vit. Germ. Theol.

FORSTER (John Reinhold), a celebrated naturalist, was born in Prussia in 1729. He made, when young, a great progress in the learned and modern languages. In 1748 he entered the university of Halle, where he studied divinity: from thence he removed to Dantzic, and commenced preacher. He afterwards went to Russia, in expectation of some considerable preferment; but being disappointed, he proceeded to England, where for some time he was tutor in the French and German languages at Warrington. In 1772 he accompanied Captain Cook on his second voyage round the world. He returned to England in 1775, and was honoured by the university of Oxford with the degree of LL.D. Having published, contrary to the engagement entered into with government, a botanical account of plants discovered in this voyage, he was treated with such coolness, that he quitted England and went to Halle, where he was made professor of natural history. He died in 1798. He was the author of Observations made in a Voyage round the World; History of Voyages and Discoveries in the North; on the Byssus of the Antients; several Papers in the Philosophical Transactions, &c. — Monthly Mag. Suppl. Encyc. Brit.

FORSTER (George), son of the above, was born at Dantzic in 1754. He accompanied his father in his voyage round the world. After his return he became professor of natural history at Cassel; from whence he removed to Wilna, in Poland, and next to Mentz, where he was appointed president of the university. He was nominated by the people of Mentz as their representative at Paris, in the beginning of the revolution, and died there in 1792. He wrote a Voyage round the World, 2 vols. 4to.; a Defence of the same against Mr. Wales, 4to.; a philosophical and picturesque Journey along the Banks of the Rhine, 2 vols. 8vo.; a Journey through England in 1790.—Life of Forster by Poggens.

FORSTER (Nathaniel), a learned divine, was born at Plymstock in Devonshire in 1717. He was educated first at Plymouth, and next at Eton. In 1733 he was entered of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, in which he proceeded to his degrees in arts, and was elected fellow. His first church preferment was the rectory of Hethe in Oxfordshire. In 1750 he became chaplain to bishop Butler of Durham, who made him his executor. At this time he took his degree of D.D. In 1752 he was appointed chaplain to archbishop Herring. In 1754 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Bristol, and the vicarage of Rochdale in Lancashire. In 1756 he was appointed chaplain to the king; and next year preacher at the Rolls. He died the same year in Westminster. His works are, Reflections on the Antiquity, &c. of Egypt; Platonis Dialogi quinque, &c. 1745; Appendix Liviana, 1746; Poetry destructive of the Evidence of Christianity, a Sermon; a Dissertation on the Account given of Jesus Christ by Josephus; Biblia Hebraica, sine Punctis, 4to.; on the Marriages of Minors, 8vo.—Gin. Biog.

FORSTNER (Christopher), a German lawyer, born in 1598, and died in 1667. He wrote, 1. De principatu Tiberii; 2. Notæ politicæ ad Tacitum; 3. Hypomnemata, Politica; 4. Epistola.—Moreri.

FORT (Francis le), a soldier and statesman. He entered into the service of Peter the Great, who entrusted him with the siege of Azoph, where he shewed so much bravery, that the emperor made him his first minister of state, and commander of all his forces. He died at Moscow in 1699.—Moreri.

FORTESCUE (sir John), an English judge, was born in Devonshire, and educated at Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's-inn. He was made, in 1442, chief justice of the king's-bench. He was zealously attached to Henry VI. and accompanied him in his exile to Scotland. Henry made him chancellor, but he never exercised the office. He was afterwards in Flanders, and while abroad wrote his famous book, entitled, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, which however was not published till the reign of Henry VIII. since which it has been frequently printed. He returned to England with queen Margaret, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Tewkesbury in 1471. Edward IV. granted him a pardon, on which he retired to his seat at Ebrington, in Gloucestershire, where he died at the age of 90.—Biog. Brit.

FORTIGUERRA (Nicholas), an Italian prelate and poet, was born in 1674, and made a bishop by pope Clement XI. He died in 1735. He wrote a poem, in burlesque of Ariosto, entitled, Ricciardetto, and translated Terence into Italian.—Tiraboschi.

FOSCARI (Francis), a doge of Venice, who conquered Brescia and Bergamo; but the expence attending these acquisitions proved so offensive to the Venetians, that they deposed him, and he died in 1457, aged 84. His son died in prison, into which he was thrown upon a false charge of having murdered a senator.—Moreri.

FOSCARINI (Michael), a Venetian senator, who completed Nani's History of Venice, published in 1692. He died in 1692, aged 64. He also wrote some novels.—Tiraboschi.

FOSSE (Charles de la), a French painter, and pupil of Le Brun. After studying in Italy he returned to Paris, and gained a great reputation by several public works which he executed. A pension was granted him, and he became rector of the academy of painting. The duke of Montague invited him to England, and employed him in ornamenting his house, now the British Museum. He died in 1716.—D'Argenville.

FOSSE (Anthony de la sieur d'Aubigny), nephew of the above, was born at Paris in 1658. He wrote some tragedies and poems in French, and several pieces in Italian. His Manlius Capitolinus is the best of his dramatic compositions. He died in 1708.—Moreri.

FOSTER (Samuel), an English mathematician, was born in Northamptonshire, and educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1696 he was chosen professor of astronomy in Gresham college. He was one of the first members of the scientific association, which afterwards obtained the name of the Royal Society. He died in 1652. The chief of his works are, the Art of Dialling; a Description of sundry Instruments, invented or improved by him; and Miscellanies. There were two other mathematicians of his name in the same century: WILLIAM FOSTER, who was a pupil of Oughtred, and afterwards a teacher in London; and MARK FOSTER, the author of a Treatise on Trigonometry.—Biog. Brit.

FOSTER (James), an eminent nonconformist minister, was born in 1697 at Exeter, and educated there under Mr. Hallet. In 1718 he commenced preacher at Exeter; but the disputes which broke out in that place, respecting the doctrine of the Trinity, occasioned his removal to Milborne-port in Somersetshire, and afterwards to Trowbridge in Wiltshire. At this place he turned baptist; and in 1724 was chosen successor to Dr. John Gale, in the meeting in Farbam, London. In 1741 he succeeded Dr. Jeremiah Hunt in the congregation at Pinners'-hall. In 1748 the degree of D.D. was conferred on him by the university of Aberdeen. He died in 1753. Dr. Foster was a man of considerable learning; and so celebrated as a preacher, that Pope has bestowed a fine compliment on him in the epilogue to his Satires. He wrote a Defence of the Christian Revelation against Tindal; Tracts on Heresy; Sermons, in 4 vols. 8vo.; Discourses on natural Religion and social Virtue, 2 vols. 4to.; &c.—Biog. Brit. Gen. Biog.

FOSTER (John), a learned divine, was born in 1731 at Windsor, and educated at Eton, from whence he was sent to King's college, Cambridge. He afterwards became an assistant in Eton school, and in 1765 head master, which station he soon resigned in consequence of his infirmities; and in 1779 obtained a canonry of Windsor. He died the year following at Spa, whither he had gone for his health. He published an essay on the nature of accent and quantity, with their use and application in the pronunciation of the English, Latin, and Greek languages, 8vo.; and a prize dissertation at Cambridge, on the moral Doctrines of Epicurus and the Stoics.—Genl. Mag.

FOSTER (Michael), an eminent lawyer, was born at Marlborough in Wiltshire in 1689. He was educated at the free school of Marlborough, from whence he was removed to Exeter college, Oxford. In 1707 he was entered of the Middle Temple, and in regular course called to the bar. In 1735 he was chosen recorder of Bristol. The same year he published a pamphlet, entitled, an Examination of the Scheme of Church Power, laid down in the Codex by Bishop Gibson. In 1745 he was appointed one of the justices of the King's Bench, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. In 1762 he published a Report of some Proceedings on the Commission for the Trial of the Rebels in the year 1746, in the county of Surrey. He died in 1763.—Genl. Biog.

FOTHERGILL (George), an eminent divine, was born in Westmoreland in 1705, and educated at Kendal school, from whence he removed to Queen's college, Oxford, where he became fellow and tutor. In 1751 he was elected principal of Edmund hall, and presented to the vicarage of Bramley in Hampshire. He died in 1760. He wrote two volumes of sermons.—Genl. Mag.

FOTHERGILL (John), an eminent physician, was born in 1712 at Carr End, in Yorkshire, of reputable parents, who were quakers. He served his time to an apothecary; after which he went to Edinburgh, where, in 1736, he took his doctor's degree. In the same year he became a pupil at St. Thomas's hospital, and in 1740 went abroad. On his return he settled in London; and in 1748 acquired a great reputation, by a tract, entitled, an Account of the Sore Throat attended with Ulcers. This disease was at that time very prevalent and fatal. In 1754 he became a member of the Edinburgh College of Physicians; and in 1763 a fellow of the Royal Society. When the differences broke out between this country and the American colonies, he laboured much to prevent hostilities, and had conferences with the celebrated Dr. Franklin for that purpose. Dr. Fothergill was a man of most amiable manners, a skilful physician, a great encourager of learning, and an excellent botanist. He died in 1780. His works, consisting chiefly of medical pieces, have been printed in 3 vols. 8vo. with his life prefixed. He was at the expence of printing Purver's translation of the Bible, and of an edition of Percy's Key to the New Testament, for a seminary of quakers in Yorkshire. His brother Samuel was a considerable preacher among the quakers, and died in 1773.

FOUCAULT (Nicholas Joseph), a French antiquary, was born at Paris in 1643. He discovered, in 1704, the ancient town of the Viducassians, near Caen, of which he gave an account to the Academy of Inscriptions. He also discovered the MS. of Lactantius de Mortibus Persecutorum. He died in 1721.—Moreri.

FOUCHER (Simon), a French priest, born at Dijon in 1644. He died at Paris in 1696. He wrote a Treatise on the Wisdom of the Ancients; Letters, tending to exhibit the History and Principles of the academic Philosophy, 6 vols; a Treatise on Hygrometers, &c.—Moreri.

FOUCHIER (Bertram de), a Dutch painter, born at Bergen-op-Zoom in 1609. He painted portraits and conversations; and died in 1674.—Houbraeken.

FOUCQUET (Nicholas), marquis of Belleisle, was born in 1615. He became superintendent of the finances under Mazarine; but he abused the trust in such a manner, that in 1661 he was arrested at Nantes, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. He died in the citadel of Pignerol in 1680.—Moreri.

FOUCQUET (Charles Louis Augustus), count of Belleisle, grandson of the above, was born in 1684. His gallant conduct at the siege of Lille, where he commanded a regiment of dragoons, brought him into favour with Lewis XIV. after whose death he was for some time in disgrace, and confined in the Bastille. In the war of 1733 he was appointed to command in Germany, and became the confidant of cardinal Fleury. In 1741 he was created marshal of France, and the year following attended the diet of Frankfort as plenipotentiary from the court of Versailles. In 1743 he was taken prisoner near Hanover, but soon obtained his liberty. He died in 1761.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

FOUILLON (James), a French ecclesiastic, of the jansenist persuasion, born at Rochelle in 1670. He was educated among the jesuits, whom he afterwards forsook. He died at Paris in 1736. He had a concern in writing the History of the Case of Conscience, 1705, 8 vols.; and in the work against the bull Unigenitus, called Hexaples, 7 vols. He was also the editor of Arnauld's Letters, &c.—Moreri.

FOULON (William), a modern Latin poet, born at the Hague, where he kept a school. He died in 1558, aged 75. He wrote three Latin comedies: Martyrium Johannis Pistorii; Hypocrisis, 1554; Acolastus, de filio prodigo. He is not to be confounded with John Foulon, a learned Jesuit of Liege, who died in 1668. He wrote a Commentary in the Maccabees; and Historia Leodienfis, 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

FOUNTAIN (Sir Andrew), an English antiquary, was born at Narford in Norfolk, and educated at Christ church, Oxford, where he studied the Anglo-Saxon language; and wrote a piece inserted in Dr. Hickes's Theaurus, entitled, Numismata Anglo-Saxonica et Anglo-Danica. King William conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He had also a taste for the fine arts, and made a noble collection of antiquities and curiosities. He drew the designs for the Tale of a Tub, by Swift, with whom he was very intimate. In 1727 he was appointed warden of the Mint. He died in 1753.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

POUQUIERES (James), a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1580. He was the disciple of Velvet Breughel, and became so excellent in painting landscapes, as to be ranked with Titian. He died in 1659.—Pilkington.

FOURMONT (Stephen), professor of the Arabic and Chinese languages at Paris, was born in 1683. He succeeded M. Galland as Arabic professor in the royal college, and died at Paris in 1743. His principal works are; Critical Reflections upon Ancient History, to the Time of Cyrus, 2 vols. 4to.; Meditationes Sinicæ, folio; and a Chinese Grammar in Latin, folio. His brother Michael was a professor of Syriac in the royal college, and member of the academy of inscriptions. He died in 1746.—Moreri.

FOURNIER (Peter Simon), an eminent engraver and letter-founder, was born at Paris in 1712. He published, in 1737, a Table of Proportions, to determine the height and relation of letters; but his chief work is entitled Manuel Typographique, 2 vols. 8vo. He died in 1768.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FOURQUVAUX (Raimond of Pavia, baron of), an Italian writer and soldier. He was of an ancient family of Pavia; but when the wars raged between the Guelphs and Ghibelines he went to France, where he was appointed governor of Narbonne. He died in 1574, aged 66. He wrote the Lives of eminent French Generals, printed at Paris in 1543, 4to.—Moreri.

FOWLER (John), an English printer, was born at Bristol. He was for some time a fellow of New college, Oxford, which he resigned in 1559, and went to Louvain, where he conducted the printing business, chiefly in defending the tenets of the Roman church, to which he was zealously attached. He died in 1578.—Wood's A. O.

FOWLER (Edward), an eminent prelate, was born at Westerleigh, in Gloucestershire, in 1632, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Oxford. In 1673 he obtained the rectory of Allhallows, Bread-street. In 1675 he was made prebendary of Gloucester, and in 1681 vicar of St. Giles's, Cripplegate. The same year he took his doctor's degree. For his zeal in promoting the revolution, he was promoted to the see of Gloucester in 1691. He died in 1714. Besides several sermons and tracts he wrote, The Principles and Practices of certain moderate Divines of the Church of England, abusively called Latitudinarians, 8vo. 1670; The Design of Christianity, 8vo. 1671; (this last is an excellent book and has been several times printed;) Libertas Evangelica, or a Discourse of Christian Liberty, 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

FOX (Edward), an English bishop and statesman, was born at Dursley, in Gloucestershire, and educated first at Eton and next at King's college, Cambridge; of which, in 1528, he was elected provost. Cardinal Wolsey took him into his service, and gained him the appointment of ambassador to Rome, in conjunction with Gardiner, to promote the divorce of Henry VIII. He was afterwards sent in the same capacity to France and Germany; and in 1535 promoted to the see of Hereford. He died in 1538. This bishop was a great friend to the reformation. He wrote De vera differentia Regiæ Potestatis et Ecclesiasticæ, et quæ sit ipsa Veritas et Virtus utriusque.—Biog. Brit.

FOX (Richard), an English prelate, was born of low parentage at Grantham, in Lincolnshire, in the reign of Henry VI. He was educated first at Boston school, and afterwards at Magdalen college, Oxford, from whence, on account of the plague, he removed to Pembroke hall, Cambridge. He next went to Paris, where he gained the friendship of Dr. Morton, bishop of Ely, who recommended him to the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII. On the accession of that monarch, Dr. Fox was made privy counsellor, and preferred to the see of Exeter. He was also sent on several embassies, and after obtaining different church preferments, was advanced to the see of Durham, from whence he was removed to Winchester. He founded Corpus Christi college, in Oxford, and several free schools. He died in 1528.—Biog. Brit.

FOX (John) an English divine, was born at Boston, in Lincolnshire, in 1517, and educated at Brazen-nose college, Oxford, from whence he removed to a fellowship in Magdalen college. In 1545 he was expelled on a charge of heresy, which reduced him to great distress. At length Sir Thomas Lucy, of Warwickshire, took him into his house as tutor to his children. Afterwards he removed to London, and was employed by the duchess of Richmond as tutor to the earl of Surrey's children. Here he continued till the reign of queen Mary, when his life being in danger on account of his principles, he withdrew with his wife and other protestants to the Continent. Mr. Fox settled at Basil, and earned his subsistence by correcting the press for Oporinus the printer. On the accession of queen Elizabeth, he returned to England, where, by means of secretary Cecil, he obtained a prebend of Salisbury. In 1563 he published his Acts and Monuments of the Church, better known by the name of Fox's Book of Martyrs, in one large volume folio. In the edition of 1583, it made two volumes; and in the subsequent ones, three. This book has been always highly esteemed by protestants, though it is stigmatized by the romanists with the name of Fox's Golden Legend. He died in 1587, and was buried in the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, of which he was some time vicar. Besides his Acts and Monuments, he published several books, particularly some Latin comedies on scripture subjects. Mr. Fox was a man of great learning, piety, and humility.—Biogr. Brit.

Fox (George), the founder of the sect of quakers, was born at Drayton in Leicestershire, 1624. He was at first placed with a shepherd, and afterwards bound apprentice to a shoemaker. In 1643 he became a religious itinerant; and about 1647 commenced public preacher, inveighing, not only against the prevailing vices, but the stated ministers and religious services, affirming that the light within or Christ in the heart is alone the means of salvation, and the true qualification for the ministry. He suffered frequent imprisonment and other rough treatment, which he seems in general to have brought upon himself by his indiscretions in opposing the clergy and vilifying them in their public ministry. The name of quakers was given to him and his followers first at Derby, on account of the strange contortions and trembling which accompanied their preaching. In 1669 he married the widow of a Welsh judge, but still continued his course of itinerant preaching, and visited Holland, Germany, and America. Fox died in London in 1690. His Journal was printed at London in 1694, his Epistles in 1698, and his Tracts in 1706; all in folio.—Swetel's Hist. of Quakers. Neale's Puritans.

Fox DE MORZILLO (Sebastian), a Spanish writer, was born at Seville in 1528. He was drowned on his voyage from Louvain, to undertake the tuition of Don Carlos, son of Philip III. He wrote De Studi Philosphici ratione; De Natura Philosophorum, &c.—Moreri.

FRACASTORIO (Jerom), an Italian poet and physician, was born at Verona in 1483. He studied at Padua, where at the age of 19 he became professor of logic. He afterwards settled at Verona, where he gained a wonderful reputation. He was appointed physician to the council of Trent; and died in 1553. His principal poem is, De Syphilis; and his medical pieces are, De Sympathia & Antipathia; De Contagiosis Morbis; De Causis Criticorum dierum, &c. His works were printed entire in 2 vols. 4to. at Padua in 1785.—Moreri.

FRACCHETTA (Jerom), an Italian political writer, was a native of Rovigno, and died at Naples the beginning of the 17th century. His principal work is entitled Seminario di Governi di Stato, et di Guerra.

FRAGUIER (Claude-François), a French writer, born at Paris in 1666. He assisted abbé Bignon in the Journal des Sçavans, and died at Paris in 1723. His Latin poems were printed at Paris in 1729, 12mo.—Moreri.

FRANCESCA (Peter), painter to the state of Florence, who died in 1443. He excelled in representing battles and night-pieces.—De Piles.

FRANCE. The ancient inhabitants of this country were called Gauls. That part of the country which was called Gallia Narbonensis became a Roman province, B. C. 118. In 57 B. C. Julius Cæsar conquered the Helvetii, and afterwards the Belgæ. Honorius permitted the Goths to reside in the southern parts of Gaul, A. D. 400. In 413 the Burgundi, a people of Germany, seized that part of Gaul next the Rhine; but in 534 the Franks put an end to their kingdom, and in 410 they completed the entire conquest of the country. In 880 the Normans seized Britany, Picardy, and Champagne. In 1204 Philip Augustus, king of France, took Normandy from John king of England. In 1347 Edward I. of England took Calais. About 1372 the French took from the English all their possessions in France, except Calais; but in 1415 Henry V. subdued the greatest part of the kingdom; and on his death in 1422, his son, Henry VI. then a minor, was crowned king of France at Paris; but soon afterwards the English lost almost all their acquisitions in that country. In 1477 Lewis XI. added a part of the duchy of Burgundy to France, and Lewis XII. obtained that of Bretagne. In 1558 the French took Calais. In 1789 a revolution broke out at Paris, the Bastille was destroyed, a new constitution was formed, and after a variety of sanguinary changes, Lewis XVI. was brought to trial, and murdered on the scaffold, January 21. 1793. His queen, Maria Antoinette, of Austria, shortly after suffered the same fate. The same year a confederacy was formed against France, in which England had a share. In 1799 Buonaparte returned from Egypt, abolished the directory, created a new constitution, and was declared first consul. In 1802, he was proclaimed first consul for life; and in 1804 he assumed the title of emperor of the French.—Univ. Hist. Henault's Hist. of France. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FRANZESCHINI (Mark Anthony), a painter of Bologna, born in 1648, and died in 1729. He was the disciple of Cignani, whose manner he imitated with great success.—Pilkington.

FRANCHI (Antonio), an Italian painter, born at Lucca in 1638, and died in 1709. He painted several altar-pieces at Florence.—Ibid.

FRANCIA (Francesco), an eminent painter, born at Bologna in 1450. He had been a goldsmith and an engraver of medals, but afterwards applied himself wholly to painting. Being employed by Raphael to place a picture of his in a church at Bologna, he was so struck with its beauty, and convinced of his own inferiority, that he fell into a desponding state, of which he died in 1518.—Ibid.

FRANCIS of Lorraine, emperor of Germany, born in 1708, and married in 1736 Maria Theresa, daughter of Charles VI. On the death of her father in 1740, Maria Theresa appointed her husband to the administration of the government, and on the death of Charles VII. in 1745, he was elected emperor. He was a prince of amiable character and a promoter of the arts. He died in 1765.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FRANCIS I. king of France, ascended the throne in 1515 at the age of 21. He was the son of Charles of Orleans, and of Louisa of Savoy, grand-daughter to Valentine duke of Milan, in right of whom he laid claim to that duchy. The Swiss opposed his passage through their territories, and were defeated at the battle of Marignano. Francis then entered the Milanese, and forced Maximilian Sforza to relinquish the sovereignty. A war afterwards broke out between him and the emperor Charles V. in which Francis lost a considerable part of his territories, was made prisoner and conveyed to Madrid. In 1526 he regained his liberty, after renouncing his claim to Naples, the Milanese, Flanders, and Artois. In 1535 he marched again into Italy, and possessed himself of Savoy, but a peace was hastily made up, which was soon after broken, and Francis again lost a good part of his own dominions. He died in 1547, leaving two sons and four daughters by his first wife, Claude of France. He was a great patron of learned men, and founded the royal college of Paris.—Moreri. Robertson's Ch. V.

FRANCIS II king of France, succeeded his father Henry II. in 1559, at the age of 16. He married Mary Stuart, daughter of James

V. of Scotland, but died the year after his accession.—Ibid.

FRANCIS, duke of Alençon and Anjou, the youngest son of Henry II. of France, was born in 1554. He stirred up a revolt against his brother Henry III. for which Catherine de Medicis, his mother, sent him to prison, but the king soon gave him his liberty. In 1581 he went to England, with a view of marrying queen Elizabeth, in which he was disappointed. The year following he was crowned duke of Brabant and count of Flanders. His conduct, however, proved so offensive to the Brabanters, that they obliged him to fly into France, where he died in 1584.—Ibid.

FRANCIS of Lorraine, duke of Guise. He distinguished himself by his military exploits, and took Calais from the English, and Thionville from the Spaniards. He also defeated the Germans at Renty, and obliged Spain to make peace with Paul IV. After the battle of St. Quintin, he was made lieutenant-general of the army of France. In 1562 he took Rouen and Bourges, and defeated the Hugonots at Dreux. The same year he was slain or assassinated at the siege of Orleans.—Ibid.

FRANCIS, of Assisi, a Romish saint, and founder of a religious order, called by his name. He was born at Assisi in Italy in 1182, and brought up a merchant, but led for some years a debauched life. At last a severe illness had such an effect on him, that he resolved to renounce the world, and accordingly resigned all claim to his paternal estate. He then gathered some disciples, who entered into vows of voluntary poverty, and their number increasing, pope Innocent III. confirmed the order in 1210. Francis in his zeal went to the east to convert the Sultan, who treated him civilly, and sent him back to Europe. He died at Assisi in 1226. Pope Gregory IX. canonized him in 1230.—Moreri.

FRANCIS (of Paulo), another saint of the Roman church, who founded the order of Minims, was born in 1416 at Paulo, in Calabria. Louis XI. of France, being dangerously ill, sent for this devotee, hoping to be healed by him. His successor Charles VIII. built a convent for Francis and his monks, where he died in 1507. He was canonized by pope Leo X. in 1519.—Ibid.

FRANCIS (Xavier), called the apostle of the Indies, was born at Xavier in Navarre, in 1506, and educated at Paris, where he formed an intimacy with Ignatius Loyola, and bound himself with some others to attempt converting the heathen. In 1541 he embarked at Lisbon for Goa, and laboured with great zeal in various parts of India and Japan. He died on a voyage to China in 1551. He was canonized in 1622. His works are; Epistles, Paris, 1631, 8vo.; a Catechism; Opuscula.—Moreri.

FRANCIS (de Sales), a Romish saint, was born at the castle of Sales, near Geneva, in 1667. In 1602 he was made bishop of Geneva, in which station his conduct was very exemplary. He founded a society of religious, called the order of the Visitation. He died in 1622, and was canonized by Alexander VI. His works are, an Introduction to a devout Life; a Treatise on the Love of God; Letters.—Ibid.

FRANCIS DE BORGIA, another saint of the Roman calendar, was born in Spain about 1511. He was the grandson of pope Alexander VI. and hereditary duke of Candia. After filling several high offices, on the death of his wife he embraced a religious life, and entered among the jesuits. He refused the dignity of cardinal, and died at Rome in 1572. Pope Clement X. canonized him in 1671. He wrote some pious pieces in Spanish, which have been translated into Latin.—Moreri.

FRANCIS (Lucas), called the Old, born at Mechlin in 1574, and employed for some years by the kings of France and Spain. He painted history and portrait, and died in 1643. His son Lucas, called the Young, was born at Mechlin in 1606. He studied under Gerhard Segers, and died in 1654.—Ibid.

FRANCIS (Simon), a portrait painter, born at Tours in 1606, and died in 1671. He acquired great eminence in his profession.—Ibid.

FRANCIS (Laurence), a French writer, born in Franche Comté in 1698, and died at Paris 1782. He wrote an elementary Treatise on Geography; Evidences of the Christian Religion, 4 vols. 12mo.; an Examination of the Catechism of an honest Man; on the Philosophy of History, &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

FRANCIS (Philip), an ingenious divine, was a native of Ireland, where his father was a dean. The son became rector of Barrow in Suffolk, and chaplain to Chelsea hospital. He translated Horace and Demosthenes into English, and wrote two tragedies, Eugenia and Constantia. He died at Bath in 1773.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

FRANCIUS (Peter), a Greek and Latin poet, was born at Amsterdam in 1645. He studied under Gronovius at Leyden; after which he spent some time in England and France. In 1674 he became professor of history and rhetoric at Amsterdam, where he died in 1704. He wrote Specimen Eloquentiæ Exterioris; Poemata; Orationes, &c. His Greek and Latin poems are very fine.—Gen. Hist. Dict. of Luiscius.

FRANCK (Francis), called the Old, a Flemish painter, who died in 1616, aged 72. He painted sacred historical pieces, of considerable merit. His son, called Young Frank, was also a good painter, born in 1580, and died in 1642.—Pilkington.

FRANCK (George), a German physician, born at Naumbourg in 1643. At the age of 18 he received the poetic crown for his verses in German, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. After taking his degree in physic, he became professor in that faculty at Heidelberg and at Wittemberg. He died in 1704. His works are, Flora Francica, 12mo.; Satyræ Medicæ, 4to.; Epistola—Novæ. Diæ. Hist.

FRANCK (Augustus Herman), a pious German divine, born at Lubeck in 1663. He became professor of the oriental languages, and afterwards of divinity, in the university of Halle. Here he laid the foundation of an orphan-house, which in 1727 had 2196 children, and more than 130 preceptors. He also carried into effect a mission for propagating the gospel in Malabar. This good man died in 1727. His works are, Sermons and Books of Devotion; Methodus studii Theologici; Introductio ad lectionem Prophetarum; Commentario de scopo Librorum veteris & novi Testamenti; Manuductio ad lectionem Scripturæ sacræ; Observationes Biblicæ. Some of his practical books have been translated into English.—Moreri.

FRANCKEN (Christian), a German divine, was at first a jesuit, but quitted that order, and embraced the socinian creed, on which he went to Poland, and joined the unitarians there. Afterwards he returned to the Roman communion, and died at the close of the 16th century. He wrote a severe satire on the jesuits, entitled, Breve Colloquium Jesuiticum; de Honore Christi, and other works.—Moreri.

FRANCKENSTEIN (Christian-Godfrey), an advocate of Leipsic, born in 1661, and died in 1717. He wrote a Continuation of the Introduction to History, by Puffendorf; Life of Christina, Queen of Sweden; History of the 16th and 17th Ages. His son James, who died in 1733, wrote De Collatione bonorum; de Juribus Jûdæorum singularibus in Germania.—Moreri.

FRANCKLIN (Thomas), an English divine, was born in London about 1720, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was removed to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he proceeded to the degree of D.D. He was also chosen professor of Greek in that university. In 1758 he obtained the vicarage of Ware, to which was afterwards added the rectory of Braisted in Kent. He was also chaplain in ordinary to the king, and died in 1784. Dr. Francklin translated Phalaris, Sophocles, and Lucian into English, and wrote three plays: the Earl of Warwicl and Matilda, tragedies, and the Contract, a comedy. He also published a volume of sermons on the relative duties, and permitted his name to be prefixed to a translation of Voltaire's works.—Europ. Mag.

FRANCO (Battista), an historical painter of Venice, born in 1498, and died in 1561. He imitated the manner of Michael Angelo.—Pilkington.

FRANCO (Nicolo), an Italian satirist, born at Benevento in 1510. He was the friend of Aretine, whom he afterwards wrote against. He was hanged at Rome for a satire on Pius V. in 1569.—Moreri.

FRANKLIN (Benjamin), an American patriot and philosophical writer, was born at Boston, in New England, in 1706. His father was a soap-boiler and tallow-chandler in that town, and being a man of good understanding, educated his son himself. His elder brother was bred a printer, and Benjamin was placed under him; but a difference happening between them, he removed secretly to New York, from whence he went to Philadelphia, where after serving as a journeyman some time, he attracted the notice of sir William Keith, the governor, who persuaded him to set up for himself. Accordingly he went to England to procure printing materials, but on his arrival he found that the governor had deceived him by false promises, on which he worked as a journeyman printer in London, and in 1726 he returned to Philadelphia, where he became clerk to a merchant. He next entered into partnership with a young man named Meredith, in the printing business, which he afterwards conducted alone. In 1730 he was united to a widow lady, whom he had courted before her first marriage. About this period he contributed to the forming of the public library at Philadelphia, and in 1732 he published his Poor Richard's Almanack, in which he inserted some useful aphorisms or maxims of prudence. In 1736 he was appointed clerk to the general assembly of Pennsylvania, and the year following post-master of Philadelphia. In the French war of 1744 he proposed and carried into effect a plan of association for the defence of that province. It was about this time that he commenced his electrical experiments, of which he published an account. He had the honour of making several discoveries in this branch of philosophy, the principal of which was the identity of the electric fire and lightning. In 1747 he was chosen a representative of the general assembly, in which situation he distinguished himself by several acts of public utility. By his means a militia bill was passed, and he was appointed colonel of the Philadelphia regiment. In 1757 he was sent to England as agent for Pennsylvania. At this time he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and honoured with the degree of doctor of laws by the universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and Oxford. In 1762 he returned to America, but two years afterwards he again visited England, in his former capacity as agent, and it was at this period that he was examined at the bar of the house of commons concerning the stamp act. In 1775 he returned home, and was elected a delegate to the congress. He was very active in the great contest between England and the colonies, and was sent to the court of France, where in 1778 he signed a treaty of alliance offensive and defensive, which instantly produced a war between that country and England. In 1783 he signed the definitive treaty of peace, and in 1785 returned to America, where he was chosen president of the supreme council. He died in 1790. Besides his political, miscellaneous, and philosophical pieces published in 4to. and 8vo. he wrote several papers in the American transactions, and two volumes of essays, with his life prefixed, written by himself, 2 vols. 12mo.

FRANKS (Sebastian), a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp, in 1573. He painted landscapes and historical subjects. John Sebastian Franks, of Antwerp, who painted after Vandyck and Rubens, is supposed to have been his son.—Pilkington.

FRANTZIUS (Wolfgang), a German lutheran divine, born in 1564. He was professor of divinity at Wittenberg, and died there in 1620. His works are; Historia Animalium sacra. Tractatus de Interpretatione Sacrarum Scripturarum. Schola Sacrificiorum Patriarchalium sacra; Commentarius in Leviticum, &c.—Moreri.

FRATELLINI (Giovanna), an Italian artist, born at Florence in 1666. She painted historical subjects and portraits in miniature, and died in 1721. Her son Lorenzo Maria Fratellini was a good painter of history and landscape. He died in 1729.—Pilkington.

FRAUWENLOB (Henry), a German author, who died in 1317. Having written in behalf of the ladies, a number of females attended his funeral, and poured so large a quantity of wine over his grave as to overflow the church.—Gen. B. D.

FRASSEN (Claude), a learned French monk, was born at Peronne, in Picardy, in 1620. He was superior of the Franciscan convent at Paris, doctor of the Sorbonne, and theological professor. He died in 1711. His System of Philosophy, 2 vols. 4to. has been well esteemed, also his Disquisitiones Biblicæ, 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

FREDEGARUS, called the Scholastic, an old French historian, who wrote a chronicle which extends to the year 641, to be found in the collection of Duchesne.—Moreri.

FREDERIC I. surnamed Barbarossa, emperor of Germany, the son of Frederic duke of Suabia, was born in 1121, and crowned emperor in 1152. He was a warlike and enterprising prince, and marched into Italy to settle the tumults which distracted that country in 1155. He was crowned at Rome by pope Adrian IV. who dying in 1160, no less than three antipopes were chosen, who were all opposed by the emperor. The Milanese profiting by these divisions, endeavoured to shake off the imperial yoke, on which Frederic marched into Italy, and took Milan, after which he entered Rome, and set Calixtus on the papal throne, instead of Alexander. The Venetians, however, maintained the cause of the latter with so much vigour, that Frederic was glad to make his submission to Alexander. He next embarked against the infidels, obtained some victories over them, took Iconium, and penetrated into Syria, where he was drowned in 1190.

—FREDERIC II. the grandson of the preceding, and son of Henry VI. born in 1194, elected king of the Romans in 1196, and emperor in 1210, in opposition to Otho. In 1220 he was crowned by pope Honorius III. at Rome. He afterwards went to the Holy Land, and concluded a truce with the sultan of Babylon, which so provoked pope Gregory IX. that he anathematized him. On this Frederic returned to Europe, and laid siege to Rome, which occasioned the famous parties of the Guelphs and the Ghibelines, the former being on the side of the pope, and the other on that of the emperor. Gregory was obliged to make peace, but in 1236 he again excommunicated Frederic, and the war was renewed, which proved unsuccessful to the emperor, whose German subjects also revolted against him. He died in his kingdom of Naples, in 1250.—FREDERIC III. was the son of Albert I. and chosen emperor in 1314, by some of the electors, but the majority elected Lewis of Bavaria. Frederic died in 1330.—FREDERIC IV. called the Pacific, ascended the throne in 1440, and was crowned at Rome in 1452. He died in 1493, in consequence of the amputation of his leg.—Morri. Univ. Hist.

FREDERIC, king of Sweden, was the eldest son of Charles, landgrave of Hesse-Cassel. He married the sister of Charles XII. on whose death, in 1719, the states of Sweden elected her queen, but the year following they consented to her resigning the crown to her husband. He had a long and unsuccessful war with Russia, which ended in a disadvantageous peace to Sweden. He died without issue in 1751.—Mol. Univ. Hist.

FREDERIC I. king of Denmark, succeeded his nephew, Christian II. on his deposition in 1523. He made an alliance with Gustavus I. king of Sweden. After taking Copenhagen, the capital of the kingdom, he gained over all the nobility, and introduced lutheranism into his dominions. He died in 1533.—FREDERIC II. the son and successor of Christian III. He was a great friend of learning, and patronized Tycho Brahe and other men of science. He had a long war with Sweden, which ended in 1570. He died in 1588, aged 54.—FREDERIC III. succeeded his father Christian IV. in 1648, and died in 1670, aged 61, after changing the constitution from an elective to an hereditary monarchy.—FREDERIC IV. ascended the throne on the death of Christian V. in 1699. He leagued against Charles XII. of Sweden, who forced him to make peace. But when Charles was obliged to fly to Turkey, Frederic drove the Swedes out of Norway. He died in 1730, aged 59.

—FREDERIC V. grandson of the preceding, came to the throne in 1746, and died in 1766. He said on his death-bed, to his successor Christian VII. "It is a great consolation to me, my son, that I have not injured any person, and that my hands are not stained with one drop of blood."—Univ. Hist. Nov. Dict. Hist.

FREDERIC Augustus I. king of Poland, born at Dresden, in 1670. His father was John George III. elector of Saxony, whom he succeeded in 1694, and made several campaigns against the French and Turks. Having embraced the catholic religion, he was elected king of Poland in 1697. He joined Russia and Denmark against Charles XII. of Sweden, and was for some time successful, but at last fortune changed; Charles took Warsaw, and defeated Augustus at the battle of Cliflow. In 1706, the Swedish monarch entered Saxony, of which he took possession, and Augustus was forced to sign a treaty, renouncing the crown of Poland. After the battle of Pultowa, Frederic recovered the throne, and died in 1733. He was a man of prodigious strength and undaunted courage.—FREDERIC AUGUSTUS II. son of the above, was born in 1696, and elected king of Poland in 1734. In 1756, the king of Prussia invaded Saxony, and kept it till the peace of 1763. Frederic-Augustus died October 5; the same year.—Ibid.

FREDERIC-WILLIAM, elector of Brandenburg, and commonly called the Great Elector, was born in 1620. He succeeded his father in 1640, and obtained the investiture of Prussia from the king of Poland in 1642. He had a war with Sweden, but was obliged to make peace in 1655, in which year he joined that power against Poland. In 1672 he joined the Imperialists in opposition to Lewis XIV. but soon after he made a separate treaty with France. In 1674 he again joined the allies, on which the French prevailed with the Swedes to attack his dominions. Frederic, however, defeated the invaders, and took several places from them, which he was obliged to restore by a treaty in 1679. He now turned his attention to the improvement of his states, and died in 1688.—Memoirs of the House of Brandenburg.

FREDERIC I. king of Prussia, was the son of the preceding, and born in 1657. In 1700 a treaty was concluded at Vienna, to which all the northern powers agreed, and by virtue of which he was crowned king of Prussia the year following. He augmented his dominions by the county of Tecklenburgh, and the principality of Neuchatel and Valengin. He died in 1713. He founded the university of Halle, the royal society of Berlin, and the academy of the nobles. His queen Sophia-Charlotte, of Hanover, was a woman of fine understanding.—FREDERIC-WILLIAM II. son of the above, was born in 1688, and commenced his reign in 1713. In 1715 he declared war against Charles XII. of Sweden, and in conjunction with Denmark took Stralsund, but on the death of Charles he made peace. He died in 1740. Frederic married Sophia, daughter of George elector of Hanover.—FREDERIC III. king of Prussia, commonly called The Great, the son of the preceding, was born in 1712. He obtained but a scanty education, owing to his father's contempt of letters and predilection for military discipline. On growing up, however, the young prince shewed so strong an inclination to literature and music as to incur his father's displeasure. The severe treatment he received led him, in 1730, to meditate an escape from Prussia, but the scheme being discovered, the prince was confined in the castle of Custrin, and his young companion, Katte, was executed before his face. After a confinement of some months, he obtained his pardon, and in 1733 married the princess of Brunswick Wolfenbüttele, in obedience to his father's command, but he never cohabited with her. In 1740 he succeeded to the throne, and taking advantage of the defenceless state of Maria-Theresa, queen of Hungary, he marched into Silesia, which was added to his dominions by the treaty of Breslaw. In 1744 the war was renewed against the queen of Hungary, and the same year Frederic took Prague, which, however, he was forced to quit by the approach of a Saxon army under the prince of Lorraine. In 1745 he defeated that prince, at Friedburgh, and then marched into Bohemia, where he also defeated an Austrian army which was superior to his own. Shortly after he took Dresden, and laid it under heavy exactions. A treaty of peace was concluded at the end of this year by the mediation of the English minister; and the interval of tranquillity was employed by Frederic in regulating his dominions, forming a body of laws, and in composing some literary works. In 1750 Voltaire visited Prussia, and was received with the most flattering marks of attention by the king; but the friendship at last ended in a violent quarrel, and the French philosopher quitted Prussia abruptly, and in disgrace. In 1756 a treaty was concluded between England and Prussia, which produced another between France, Austria, and Russia. The seven years war, as it is called, began by the march of Frederic into Saxony and taking the camp of Pirna. The following year he gained the battle of Prague over the Austrians, on which he laid siege to that city; but after reducing it to great straits, he was compelled to retreat by marshal Daun, and retire into Saxony. Frederic was now surrounded by enemies, the French entered Hanover, the Russians and Swedes advanced towards Prussia from the north, and the Imperialists pursued him into Saxony. Still undaunted, he attacked and defeated the French and Austrians at Rosbach; then marching into Silesia, he beat another army at Lissa. The Russians and Swedes retreated precipitately from Prussia; and the Hanoverians took the field under the prince of Brunswick. In 1758 he received a large subsidy from England; and the same year he entered Moravia, where he laid siege to Olmutz, which was relieved by marshal Daun. He then marched against the Russians, who had laid siege to Custrin, and defeated them after a bloody battle at Zorndorff. But not long after he was surprised and beat by Daun, at Hockkirchen. The next year the king was defeated after a very obstinate and doubtful engagement, at Cunnersdorff, by the Russians; and in 1761, the confederates entered Brandenburg, and took Berlin. Frederic, however, by defeating Daun at Torgau, gave a turn to his affairs, and the Russians and Swedes quitted his territories. In 1762 peace was restored between him and Russia and Sweden, and in 1763 a treaty much in his favour was concluded with the empress queen, by which Silesia was confirmed to Prussia. Still intent upon aggrandizement, he planned the partition of Poland in 1772, and obtained for his share Western Prussia. In 1778 he opposed the design of the emperor Joseph to dismember Bavaria, and marched in person against that monarch, who was assisted by the famous general Laudohn. But no action took place, and by the treaty of Teschen, in 1779, the Austrian court renounced the design. After a long and active life, Frederic died in 1786, aged 67. He was very courteous in his manners, lively in conversation, an acute politician, and in general fond of justice and humanity. But he was an avowed infidel, and actuated by no better principle than pleasure and self-interest. He never had any issue. His works published in his lifetime are in 4 vols. 8vo.; and since his death fifteen more have been printed. The principal are, the Memoirs of the House of Brandenburg: a poem on the Art of War: the History of his own Time, and the History of the Seven Years War—Towers's Memoirs of Frederic III. of Prussia.

FREDERICK (Colonel), son of the unfortunate Theodore, commonly called king of Corsica, of whose misfortunes and imprudence he partook. He was bred to the military profession, and obtained the rank of colonel, with the cross of the order of merit from the duke of Wirtemberg, for whom he acted as agent in England. Being greatly reduced in circumstances, he shot himself in the portal of Westminster abbey, in 1796. He wrote; 1. Memoirs pour servir l'Histoire de Corse, 1768, 8vo. 2. The Description of Corsica, with an Account of its Union to the Crown of Great Britain, &c. 1798, 8vo.—Necrology Monthly Mag.

FABRIZIO (Baptist), a doge of Venice in 1478, who was deposed and banished to Fregui for his arbitrary and oppressive conduct. He wrote on Memorable Actions; the Life of Pope Martin V.: on learned Women, &c.—Moreri.

FREHER (Marquard), a German writer, born at Augsburg in 1565. He studied under Cujacius, and at the age of 23 was made professor of law at Heidelberg. Afterwards he became vice-president of the court of the elector palatine. He died in 1614. His principal works are De Re Monetaria veterum, Romanorum, & hodierni apud Germanos Imperii, lib. ii.: Rerum Germanicarum Scriptores a Carolo Magno ad Fred. III.: Corpus Histor. Franciæ.—Ibid.

FREGIUS (John Thomas), a learned German, born at Friburg in the 16th century. He studied the law, and became rector of the new college at Altorf in 1575. He died in 1583. The chief of his works are, Questiones Geometriæ et Steriometricæ: Logicis Consultorum: Ciceronis Orationes perpetuis Notis, &c. 3 vols. 8vo. Basil, 1753.—Id.

FREIND (John), an English physician, was born in 1675, at Croton, in Northamptonshire, and educated at Westminster school; from whence he was elected to Christchurch, Oxford. In 1699 he communicated to the royal society the case of a remarkable hydrocephalus, and in 1701 another of a singular instance of spasmodic affections. In 1703 he distinguished himself by an able work entitled Emmenologia, in qua Fluxus muliebris Menstrui phenomena, periodi, vitæ, cum medendi methodo, ad rationes mechanicas exiguntur, 8vo. The next year he was appointed chemical professor at Oxford, and in 1705 he accompanied the earl of Peterborough in his expedition to Spain as physician to the army. On his return in 1707, he published a vindication of the earl's conduct in Spain, which gained him a considerable reputation. The same year he took his doctor's degree, and published his chemical lectures in Latin. In 1711 he was chosen a member of the royal society, and the same year accompanied the duke of Ormond, as his physician, to Flanders. In 1716 he was elected a fellow of the college of physicians, and the same year had a controversy with Dr. Woodward, on the mode of treating fevers in the small-pox. In 1722 he was elected into parliament for Launceston. The year following he was sent to the Tower on suspicion of being concerned in Atterbury's plot, but was soon released on bail. At the accession of George II. he was appointed physician to the queen. He died in 1728. Besides the above works, he wrote the History of Phylis, 2 vols. 8vo. and all his writings were collected and published in Latin by Dr. Wigan, 1 vol. folio.—Dr. Robert Freind, his brother, was master of Westminster school, and died in 1754. He published an edition of Cicero de Oratore.—Biog. Brit.

FREINSHEMIUS (John), a learned writer, was born at Ulm, in Suabia, in 1608. He became professor of eloquence at Upsal, in Sweden, and historiographer to queen Christina. He died in 1660. He is best known by his Supplement to Quintus Curtius and Livy; besides which, he wrote notes upon Tacitus, and Latin poems, &c.—Moreri.

FREIRE DE ANDRADA (Hyacinthe), a Portuguese writer, born in 1597. He was abbot of St. Mary de Chans, and died at Lisbon in 1657. His Life of Don John de Castro is an excellent work. He also wrote poems.—Ibid.

FREMINET (Martin), a French painter, born at Paris in 1567, and died in 1619. He was chief painter to Henry IV.; and Lewis XIII. conferred on him the order of St. Michael.—D'Argenville.

FREMONT D'ABLANCOURT (Nicholas), a learned French protestant writer, was the nephew and pupil of Perrot d'Ablandcourt. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to Holland, and became historiographer to the prince of Orange. He died in 1693. He translated Lucian's Dialogue between the Letters and the Supplement to the True History. He also defended his uncle's version of Tacitus against De la Houfflaye; and after his death appeared his Memoirs on the History of Portugal, 12mo.—Bayle.

FRENICLE DE BESSY (Bernard), a French mathematician, was the friend of Descartes, Merfenne, and Fermat. He was also a member of the French academy, and died in 1675. He wrote a treatise of Right-angled Triangles: on Combinations: on resolving Problems by Exclusions, &c.—Moreri.

FRENET (Nicholas), a learned Frenchman, born at Paris in 1688. At the age of 25 he was chosen a member of the academy of inscriptions; on which occasion he presented to the society a dissertation on the Origin of the French, for which, however, he was sent to the Bastille. On his release he wrote some pieces against revealed religion, and several memoirs in the papers of the academy of inscriptions. He died in 1749.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FRERON (Elie Catherine), a French critic, born at Quimper in 1719. He was bred among the jesuits, whose society he quitted in 1739. His critical works were much read, but owing to some strictures which he passed on Voltaire's writings, that writer attacked him with great asperity. In 1749 he commenced his Letters on certain Writings of the Times, which extended to 13 volumes. He then began his Année Littéraire, which he continued till his death in 1776. Besides the above works, he wrote, Miscellanies; Les Vrais Plaisirs; part of a translation of Lucretius.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FREYBAYE (John Vauquelin de la), an old French poet. He was king's advocate at Caen, and president of that city. He died in 1606, aged 72. His works are; 1. Satires. 2. The Art of Poetry. 3. Miscellaneous Poems.—Moreri.

FRESNOY (Charles Alphonfus du), a French painter and poet, was born at Paris in 1611, and after studying under Perrier and Vouet, he went to Rome, where he copied the works of the best masters, and planned his Latin poem on the art of painting. He died at Paris in 1665. His poem was printed after his death, with a French translation, by de Piles. Two English translations of it have appeared, one by Dryden, and another by Mason.—D'Argenville.

FREWEN (Accepted), an English prelate, was born in Kent, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, of which he was elected fellow in 1612. In 1622 he accompanied prince Charles as chaplain to the embassy. In 1681 he obtained the deanery of Gloucester, and in 1643 the bishopric of Lichfield and Coventry. At the restoration he was translated to York, and died at Thorpe castle in 1664, aged 75.—Wood.

FREY (John Cecil), a German physician, was born in the 16th century. He boasted of being the first who defended theses in philosophy in the Greek language in Europe. He took his degree of doctor in medicine, and died of the plague in 1631. His Opuscula were printed after his death by Baledrens.—Moreri.

FREYTAG (Frederic Gotthelb), burgomaster of Nuremberg, was born in 1723, and died in 1776. He wrote, Rhinoceros veterum scriptorum monumentis descriptus, 1747. Analecta Literaria, de Libris varioribus, 1751. Oratorum & Rhetorum Græcorum quibus Statuæ honoris Causa positæ fuerunt, 1752. An Account of scarce and valuable Books, vol. i. 1776.—Gen. Biog.

FREZZER (Amedé Francis), a French mathematician, was born at Chambéry, in 1682, of a family which came from Scotland. He was employed in taking a survey of the Spanish colonies of Peru and Chili in 1711, of which he gave an account published in 1716. He was afterwards employed in fortifying St. Maloe's and other places, for which he was rewarded with the cross of St. Louis. He died at Brest in 1772. He wrote, Traité des Feux d'Artifice: Elements de Stereotomie, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FRICHE, or FRISCHE (James du), a French benedictine monk, born in Normandy in 1641, and died at Paris in 1693. He edited the works of St. Ambrose at Paris in 10 vols. folio. He also wrote the life of St. Augustine.—Moreri.

FRISCH (John Leonard), a German naturalist and divine, born at Sultzbach in 1666. He became a member of the academy of sciences at Berlin, where he died in 1743. He was the founder of the silk manufactory in Brandenburg, and was the first who cultivated mulberry trees in that country. He was the author of a Dictionary German and Latin: A Description of German Insects: Dictionnaire nouveau des Passagers

Francois-Allemand, & Allemand-Francois, 8vo. &c.—Gen. Biog.

FRISCHLIN (Nicodemus), a learned German, was born at Balingen in 1547. At the age of 20 he obtained a professorship in Tübingen. He wrote so vehemently in praise of a country life and on the corrupt manners of the great, in a commentary on Virgil, that he was obliged to quit his native country. At length he was imprisoned at Aurach, and in attempting to make his escape fell from the window, and was killed on the spot, in 1590. He wrote a Latin grammar, and poems in that language.—Moreri.

FRISCHMUTH (John), a learned German, was born in Franconia in 1619, and died rector of the university of Jena in 1687. He wrote Illustrations and Dissertations on difficult Passages of Scripture.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FRISIUS (John), a learned Swiss divine, was born in the canton of Zurich, in 1505. He became president of the college at Zurich, where he introduced the study of the Hebrew and other oriental languages. He died in 1565. He translated several of the Hebrew scriptures into German, and published a Latin and German dictionary. His son John James was professor of philosophy and theology. He died about 1610. His other son succeeded him as professor at Zurich, and died there in 1611.—Henry FRISIUS, of the same family, was professor of languages at Zurich, where he died in 1718. He wrote de Sede Animæ rationalis: De Communione Sanctorum, &c.—Moreri.

FRITH (John), a protestant martyr, was born at Sevenoaks in Kent, and educated at Cambridge, from whence he removed to Oxford, where he became one of the canons in Wolfsey's college. Through his acquaintance with Tyndall, he embraced the principles of the reformation, for which he was imprisoned in his college. In 1528 he obtained his liberty, and went abroad. On his return he zealously promoted the doctrines of the gospel, for which he was apprehended and burned in Smithfield in 1533. He wrote several books against popery, collected into 1 vol. folio.—Wood's A. O.

FRIZON (Peter), a French jesuit, and grand master of the college of Navarre at Paris, who died about 1650. He published an edition of the Bible in French, as translated by the divines of Louvain, with notes. He also wrote a History of the French Cardinals: a History of the Grand Almoners of France: The Life of Spondzus, &c.—Moreri.

FROBENIUS (John), a German printer, who flourished at Basil in the 16th century, and was greatly esteemed by Erasmus, whose works he printed, as he did those of Augustine and Jerom. He died in 1529.—Moreri.

FROISSEUR (sir Martin), an English navigator, was born near Doncaster, in Yorkshire, and bred early to the sea. The discovery of a north-west passage to India was an object which constantly exercised his thoughts; and after applying to several merchants to engage in the enterprise, he obtained the patronage of the earl of Warwick and other noblemen, who enabled him to fit out three small vessels, with which he sailed from Deptford in June 1576. After exploring the coast of New Greenland, he entered the straits which still bear his name, and then returned to England, bringing with him a piece of black stone, which is said to have contained gold. In consequence of this, he was sent out again to search for ore, with a quantity of which he returned. A third voyage was undertaken, with a proper number of ships to bring home the riches supposed to exist in the newly-discovered countries; but on the return of the expedition the delusion was discovered. In 1585 Frobisher served under Drake in the West Indies, and in 1588 he had a share in the defeat of the Spanish armada. The same year he was knighted. This gallant officer was killed in assaulting a fort near Breff, Nov. 7, 1594.—Hackluyt. Biog. Brit.

FROELICH (Erasmus), a learned jesuit, was born at Gratz, in Styria, in 1700. He was a good mathematician and medallist, and died in 1758. His works are Quatuor Teutermia in re Nummaria, 4to.; Annales Rerum et Regum Styriae, folio.; De Figura Telluris, 4to.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

FROILA I. king of Spain, was the son of Alphonfus I. and began his reign in 757. He made good laws, and opposed the progress of the Moors. In 760 he obtained a victory over the Saracens in Galicia, but he sullied his character by the murder of his brother Vimazan, which was avenged by his other brother Aurelius, who deprived him of his crown and his life in 768.—FROILA II. succeeded his brother Ordugno, in 923. He was a cruel prince, which occasioned the province of Castile to revolt against him. He died of the leprosy in 925.—Univ. Hist.

FROIDMONT (Libert), an ecclesiastic, was born near Liege, in 1587. He was professor of philosophy and dean of St. Peter's at Louvain, where he also became interpreter of the scriptures to the students. He died in 1653. He wrote Dissertatio de Cometa; Meteorologicorum, lib. v.; Brevis Anatomica Hominis; In Actus Apostolorum Comment. &c.—Moreri.

FROISSARD, or FROISSART (John), an historian, born at Valenciennes in 1337. His Chronicle, which narrates the transactions of France, Spain, and England, from 1326 to 1400, is very accurate. The best edition is that of Lyons, in 4 vols. folio, 1559. He was an ecclesiastic, but given to gaiety. He died about 1410.—Ibid.

FROMAGE (Peter), a French jesuit, who resided many years in Egypt and Syria as superior of the missions, and died in the latter country in 1740. He established a printing-press in the monastery of St. John, near Antura, from whence he issued a number of pious pieces in the Arabic language.—Moreri.

FRONTÉAU (John), a French divine, born at Angers in 1614. He became chancellor of the university of Paris, and afterwards prior of Benay in the diocese of Angers, and lastly of St. Magdalen of Montargis, where he died in the 48th year of his age. He published, The Philosophy of Alamandus; Antitheses Augustini & Calvinii; and De Diebus Festivis, folio.—Ibid.

FRONTINUS (Sextus Julius), a Roman writer, who died under Trajan. He wrote, De Aquæ ductibus Urbis Romæ; Tres Libros Stratagematum; De Re Agraria; De Limitibus: which are extant.—Voss. Hist. Lat.

FRONTO (Marcus Cornelius), a Roman orator, who was preceptor to Verus and M. Aurelius. The latter made him consul, and erected a statue to his honour.—Moreri.

FROWDE (Philip), an English poet, was educated at Oxford. His Latin poems in the Musæ Anglicanæ are elegant. He also wrote two tragedies: The Fall of Saguntum, and Philotæa. He died in 1738.—Biog. Dram.

FRUGONI (Charles Innocent), an Italian poet, born at Genoa in 1692. He was bred an ecclesiastic, which state he quitted, and became secretary to the academy of arts at Parma, where he died in 1768. His works were printed at Parma in 1779, in 9 vols. 8vo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

FRUMENTIUS (St.), the first who preached the gospel in Ethiopia, of which country he was ordained bishop by St. Athanasius in 331. He died about 360.—Moreri.

FUCHS (Leonard), a German physician and botanist, was born in 1501, at Wembdingen in Bavaria. Charles V. honoured him with the equestrian dignity. His greatest work is Historia Plantarum, printed at Basil in 1542. He also wrote several medical books. He died in 1566.—Haller's Bibl. Med. et Nat.

FUSSLER (John Gaspard), an ingenious Swiss, was born at Zurich in 1706. He was an excellent artist, and generally esteemed for his amiable qualities. He wrote a history of the artists of Switzerland, which is a good work. He died in 1782. His son John Gaspard was a bookseller at Zurich, and died there in 1786. He published some esteemed works on entomology.—Gen. Biog.

FUGGER (Huldric), a liberal encourager of learning, born at Augsburg in 1526. He expended considerable sums in purchasing ancient MSS. and getting them printed, which so provoked his relations, that they instituted a lawsuit against him, by which he was pronounced incapable of managing his affairs. He died at Heidelberg in 1584.—Moreri.

FULBERT, a French bishop was a native of Italy, and a pupil of pope Sylvester II. On going to France as a public lecturer, he gained a great reputation, and at length the bishopric of Chartres. He was very zealous against Berengarius on the eucharist, and introduced the worship of the Virgin into France. His letters and other works are extant. He died in 1028.—Ibid.

FULDA (Charles Frederic), an ingenious Lutheran divine, was born at Wimpfen in Suabia in 1729, and died at Einzingen in 1788. He wrote a Dictionary of the German Roots; An Enquiry into Language; On the Origin of the Goths; On the Cimbri; On the Deities of the Germans; and a Chart of History. He was also an excellent mechanic.—Gen. Hist.

FULGENTIUS (St.), a father of the church, was born at Lepta, about 468, of a noble family. When young, he was appointed to a lucrative post, which he abandoned for the monastic profession. In 507 he was chosen bishop of Rufpa. He was afterwards banished with all the African bishops who adhered to the orthodox faith, by Thrasimond, king of the Vandals, who professed arianism. On the death of that monarch they were recalled. Fulgentius died in 553. His works were printed at Paris in one vol. 4to. 1684.—Cave. Hist. Lit.

FULKE (William), an English divine, born in London, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow in 1564. The earl of Leicester presented him to the livings of Warley in Essex, and Diddington in Suffolk. He afterwards was made master of Pembroke-hall, and Margaret professor of divinity. He died in 1589. Of his works the most noted is his Commentary upon the Remish Translation of the New Testament, printed in 1580.—Wool's A. O.

FULLER (Nicholas), a learned English divine, was born at Southampton, and educated at the free school in that town, after which he became secretary to the bishop of Winchester, on whose death he went to Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered into orders. He obtained a prebend in the church of Salisbury, and the living of Bishop's Waltham in Hampshire. He died in 1622. His Miscellanea Theologica, printed at Oxford in 1616, may be justly pronounced a valuable body of sacred criticism.—Ibid.

FULLER (Thomas), an English historian and divine, was born at Aldwinckle in Northamptonshire in 1608, and educated at Queen's college, Cambridge. In 1631 he was chosen fellow of Sidney college, and about the same time obtained a prebend of Salisbury. He was also presented to the rectory of Broad Windsor in Dorsetshire,

He afterwards removed to London, and became lecturer at the Savoy. He adhered strenuously to the royal cause, and became chaplain to lord Hopton, who left him at Basinghouse, which was shortly after besieged by sir William Waller, but the garrison being spirited up by Fuller, made so vigorous a resistance, that Waller was obliged to retire. On the ruin of the king's affairs he was chosen lecturer of St. Bride's, Fleet street. About 1648 he obtained the rectory of Waltham in Essex; and between that time and the restoration he published a number of books, the principal of which was the Church History of Britain, folio. At the restoration of the king he was made chaplain-extraordinary, restored to his prebend and created D. D. by mandamus at Cambridge. He died in 1661. The year following appeared his History of the Worthies of England, a work of value. Besides the above mentioned, he published, The History of the Holy War folio; The Holy State, folio; Pisgah's Sight of Palestine, folio; Abel Redivivus, or Lives of eminent Divines, 4to.; Sermons and Tracts. He is said to have had so strong a memory as to tell in their exact order the names of the signs then placed over every tradesman's door, after a walk between Temple-bar to the Royal Exchange. His style is exceedingly quaint, and he was too fond of punning.—Biog. Brit.

FULLER (Isaac), an English painter in the reign of Charles II. He painted the Resurrection at All Souls' college, Oxford; another at Magdalen college; and a picture at Wadham college; which last is the best. He studied in France under Perrier. He died in 1676.—Walpole's Anec. of Painters.

FULLO (Peter), an heretical bishop of Antioch in the 5th century. He embraced the eutychian heresy, to which he added a notion of his own, that all the persons of the Trinity suffered on the cross. He usurped the see of Antioch from Martyrius, for which he was deposed, but Zeno the emperor restored him to it again.—Moreri.

FULVIA, the wife of Marc Anthony, was a woman of a most vindictive spirit. When Octavius returned to Rome, and had a quarrel with her, Fulvia took up arms against him, which gave so much offence to Anthony, that he treated her with roughness. This behaviour operated upon her so much, that she retired to Greece, and died there of grief. When the head of Cicero was brought to her, she took it in her lap, spit upon it, and then thrust repeatedly a silver bodkin through the tongue.—Bayle.

FURETIERE (Anthony), a learned Frenchman, born at Paris in 1620. After practising with reputation as an advocate, he entered into orders, and became abbot of Chalivoy and prior of Chuvines. He was expelled from the French academy for undertaking his dictionary of the French tongue, in opposition to their own. It was printed in 1690, in 2 vols. folio. He died in 1688.—Moreri.

After receiving an academical education for the ministry, he became assistant in a presbyterian congregation in Southwark, and afterwards one of the lecturers at Salters'-hall. In 1758 he succeeded Mr. Lowman as pastor of a congregation at Clapham. He obtained his doctor of divinity's degree from one of the Scotch universities, and died in 1783. Dr. Furneaux wrote Letters to Judge Blackstone concerning his Exposition of the Act of Toleration; and An Essay on Toleration.—Genl. Mag. Dec. 1783.

FURST (Walter), one of the founders of the liberties of the Swiss. In 1807 he headed some other brave men, and took the forts belonging to the Austrians and destroyed them, which was the first step to the restoration of the Swiss independence.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FURSTEMBERG (Ferdinand de), an eminent prelate, was descended from an antient and noble family in Westphalia, and born in 1626. Pope Alexander VII. gave him feveral ecclesiastical benefices, and in 1678 he obtained the see of Munster, at which time he was also declared apostolical vicar of the north of Europe. He was a liberal encourager of learning, and supported several foundations for the propagation of Christianity in distant countries. He died in 1683. This bishop published a valuable work, entitled Monumenta Paderbornensia, 1672, 4to.; and a Collection of Latin Poems.—Moreri.

FUSI (Anthony), a French ecclesiastic, who turned protestant at the beginning of the 17th century. He was a doctor of the Sorbonne, and held the living of St. Bartholomew in Paris; but having expressed free opinions and declared war against the jesuits, he was thrown into prison on the charges of lewdness and heresy. After a long confinement he was liberated and went to Geneva, where he openly renounced popery, and died about 1630. He wrote an account of his case, and a book against the Romish errors and corruptions.—Ibid.

FOZELIER (Lewis), a French dramatic writer, and one of the editors of a periodical work called the Mercury. He died in 1752, aged 80. His pieces are written with spirit.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

FYOT DE LA MARCHE (Claude), count of Bosjam, a French ecclesiastic, born at Dijon in 1630. Lewis XIV. conferred on him several distinctions, particularly that of a counsellor of state and prior of Notre Dame. He died at Dijon in 1721. He wrote a History of the Abbey of St. Stephen, folio, and some religious pieces.

G

GAERTNER (Joseph), an eminent naturalist, was born at Calu, in Suabia, in 1732. His father was physician to the duke of Wirtemberg. He received his education at Tubingen, where he studied theology, being destined for the church. An ardent thirst for natural history and mathematics drew him from this profession, and he applied to medicine. From Tubingen he went to Gottingen, where he attended the lectures of Haller. He afterwards travelled through several parts of Europe, and on his return to his own country, took the degree of M.D. In 1759 he went to Leyden, where he carefully attended the botanical lectures, and about this time applied himself to vegetable anatomy. With this view he went to England, where he communicated some interesting papers to the Philosophical Transactions, the principal of which is a Memoir on the Fructification and Propagation of Conserve, &c. Here he gained the friendship of some of the most eminent men of the age, and was admitted a fellow of the royal society. In 1768 he went to Petersburg, where he was appointed professor of botany and natural history. After filling that place with the greatest credit, and exploring the Ukraine for botanical discoveries, he returned to his native place in 1770. In 1778 he went again to London, to make drawings and descriptions of fruits to illustrate the great work in which he was then engaged, his Carpology, the first volume of which he dedicated to sir Joseph Banks. He died in 1791. He left a number of valuable MSS. behind him.—Life of Gaertner by Delessert.

GAICHNIK (John), a French writer, was born in 1648. He became a priest of the oratory, and was for many years a prebendary at Soissons. He died at Paris in 1731. He wrote Academical Discourses, Maxims for Pulpit Orators, &c.—Ibid.

GAILLARD (de Lonjumeau), bishop of Apt, in Provence, who died in 1695. He was the first who projected a great universal historical dictionary, and employed Moreri, who was his almoner, to execute the work; causing researches to be made for it in all valuable libraries. Moreri dedicated to him the first edition of his dictionary.

GAINAS, a Goth, who became a general in the Roman army under Arcadius. He put Eutropius, the favourite of that emperor, to death, as likewise the prefect Rufinus. Being refused a church for the Arians, he took Constantinople; but after ravaging Thrace, he was defeated by the Huns, and his head sent to Arcadius, A. D. 400.—Univ. Hist.

GAINSBOROUGH (Thomas), an English painter, was born at Sudbury, in Suffolk, in 1727. He was self-taught, and used to entertain himself by drawing landscapes from nature, in the woods of his native county. From Sudbury he went to London, where he commenced portrait painter, in which line he acquired great eminence. His greatest excellence, however, was in landscape, in which he united the brilliancy of Claude with the simplicity of Ruysdael. He died in 1788. His eldest brother was also a good artist; and another, who was a dissenting minister at Henley, in Oxfordshire, was a very ingenious mechanic.—Europ. Mag. Pilkington.

GALADIN (Mahomet), emperor of the Moguls in the 16th century. He gave audience to his subjects twice a day; and that none might be repulsed, he ordered a bell to be fixed in his apartments, with a cord that descended into the street; and when he heard the bell, he either went down, or caused the petitioner to be brought to him. He died in 1605.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GALANTINI (Hippolito), a painter and capuchin, whence he is frequently called Capuchino, born at Genoa in 1627. He painted history and portraits in miniature. He died in 1706.—Pilkington.

GALANUS (Clement), an Italian monk of the order of Theatins, who was employed as missionary in America many years. He published at Rome in 1695 a grammar of the Armenian language, and in 1650 various treatises in that tongue, accompanied with Latin translations, in 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

GALAS (Mathew), one of the greatest generals of his time, was born at Trent in 1589. He served in Italy and Germany under the celebrated Tilly, in the command of the Imperial armies, and rendered eminent services to the emperor Frederic II. and Philip IV. king of Spain. He was deprived of the command, after being defeated by the Swedes near Magdeburg, but was afterwards restored, and died at Vienna in 1647.—Moreri.

GALATEO (Antonio), a learned physician, was descended from a Greek family, and born in 1444 at Galatino in the territory of Otranto. He was appointed physician to the king of Naples, and died at Lecce, in his native province, in 1516. He wrote De Situ Iapygiæ; De Situ Elementorum; De Situ Terrarum; De Mari et Aquis, &c.—Ibid.

GALATIN (Peter), a franciscan monk, who flourished about 1590. He wrote De Arcanis Catholicæ Veritatis, a work of considerable reputation, the best edition of which is that of 1672, folio.—Ibid.

GALBA (Servius Sulpicius), emperor of Rome, was descended from the ancient family of Sulpitii. He was successively prætor, proconsul of Africa, and general of the Roman armies in Germany and Spain. He retired at length to avoid the jealousy of Nero; but the tyrant having issued an order for his death, Galba proclaimed himself emperor, and Gaul declaring for him, Nero put himself to death. Galba gave himself up to the government of three obscure men, whom the Romans called his school-masters. He was slain by the prætorian band, who proclaimed Otho in his stead, A. D. 69.—Cæsar.

GALE (John), an eminent divine among the baptists, was born at London, in 1680. At the age of 17 he was sent to Leyden, where he received the degrees of master of arts and doctor of philosophy in his 19th year. From Leyden he went to Amsterdam to study under professor Limborch; and there he became acquainted with Le Clerc. The History of Infant Baptism, by Mr. Wall, published in 1705, attracting his notice, he wrote a reply to it; which, however, did not appear till 1711. About this time he was chosen minister of the baptist congregation in Barbican. Mr. Wall published an answer to Dr. Gale in a work, entitled, A Defence of the History of Infant Baptism; for which he received the degree of D.D. from the university of Oxford. A premature death prevented the execution of a reply which Gale meditated. He was seized with a fever, of which he died in 1721. Four vols. of his sermons were printed after his death.—Biog. Brit.

GALE (Theophilus), an eminent nonconformist divine, was born in 1628 at King's-Teignton in Devonshire. He received his academical education at Magdalen college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and was chosen fellow. He was invited to Winchester in 1657, where he preached till 1661, when he was deprived for nonconformity. He then became tutor to the sons of lord Wharton, with whom he went to Caen in Normandy. In 1665 he returned to England, and became pastor of a dissenting congregation and master of a seminary at Newington. He died in 1678. He wrote many works, the principal of which is, his Court of the Gentiles, 3 vols. 4to; in which he proves, that the theology and philosophy of the pagans were borrowed from the scriptures.—Prince's Worthies of Devon. Wood. Calamy.

GALE (Thomas), a learned English divine, was born in 1636, at Scruton, in Yorkshire. He was educated at Westminster school, and elected from thence to Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow.

In 1666 he was chosen Greek professor at Cambridge, and, in 1672, master of St. Paul's school. He was a member of the royal society, of which he became one of the honorary secretaries. In 1697 he was promoted to the deanry of York, where he died in 1702. He published a collection of the Greek Mythologists; Historiæ Poeticæ antiqui Scriptores Græcæ & Latinæ; Jamblichus de Mysteriis; Herodoti Halicarnassensis Historiarum; an edition of Cicero; Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores; Historiæ Britannicæ, Saxonicæ, Anglo-Danicæ; a volume of sermons; Antonini iter Britanniarum, &c.—Biog. Brit.

GALE (Roger), the eldest son of the above. He received his education at Trinity college, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1697. He was member of parliament for Northallerton, in Yorkshire, in three parliaments, the first vice-president of the society of antiquaries, and treasurer to the royal society. He died in 1744. Mr. Gale published some valuable books, the principal of which was an edition of his father's Commentary on Antoninus. Samuel Gale, his brother, was also eminent for his knowledge of antiquities. He died in 1754, at the age of 72.—Biog. Brit.

GALEANO (Joseph), a physician of Palermo, born in 1605, and died in 1675. Besides several works on medical subjects, he published a collection of the Sicilian poets, in 5 volumes.—Moreri.

GALEN (Claudius), a celebrated physician, was born at Pergamus in Asia, in 131. After obtaining a most liberal education, he applied to the study of medicine, and attended all the eminent schools in Greece and Egypt. He practised four years in his native city, and then went to Rome, but was driven from thence by the persecution of the physicians, who attributed his success to magic. From Rome he returned to Pergamus, but by the favour of the emperor Marcus Aurelius he regained his footing at Rome. He died at the age of 70. He wrote 300 volumes on physic, and also on many other sciences. The remains of his works were published at Basil, with a Latin version, in 5 vols. folio, 1598.

GALEN (Mathew), a learned divine of the Roman church, was a native of Zealand. He became professor, and at last chancellor, of the university of Douay, where he died in 1573. GALEN (Bernard van) bishop of Munster, was born of a noble family in Westphalia in 1604. In his youth he commanded a regiment in the service of the elector of Cologne, but on entering into orders obtained a canonry in the cathedral of Munster. In 1650 he procured himself to be elected bishop; but the pope refused to confirm the appointment. Bernard, however, secured his seat, and endeavoured to introduce a garrison of his own troops into the city, which occasioned a war between him and the citizens. The matter was at last compromised, and the bishop was chosen one of the leaders of the army against the Turks, but peace being restored prevented his taking the command. In 1665 he took up arms against the United States and captured several places, but the interference of France forced him to make peace. In 1672 he entered into a league with France and England against the States, and again took some places from them. He afterwards joined Denmark against Sweden. He died in 1678.—Moreri.

GALEOTI (Martio), a native of Narni in Italy, was private secretary to Matthias Corvinus, king of Hungary, tutor to his son John Corvinus, and keeper of the library at Buda. Lewis XI. of France inviting him to his court, he went to Lyons, where he died in 1478. He published a collection of bon-mots of Matthias Corvinus; and a work entitled, De homine interiore, & de corpore ejus.—Moreri.

GALEOTI (Nicholas), an Italian jesuit, who died in 1748. He wrote lives of the generals of his order, published in Latin and Italian at Rome, in 1748: also notes on the Museum Odescalcum, 2 vols. folio.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

GALERIUS (C. Valerius Maximianus), a Roman emperor, was a herdsman of Dacia; and entering into the army as a private soldier rose to several military posts of distinction. Diocletian gave him his daughter in marriage, and in 292 took him as a partner in the empire. In 296 he commanded in Mesopotamia, where he was defeated by Narses, king of Persia, but he soon after retrieved his reputation by a great victory, in which the wives, children, and property of that prince fell into his hands. He infligated Diocletian to persecute the christians, and on his abdication Galerius rose to supreme power. Towards the close of his life he desisted from persecuting the christians, and requested their prayers. He died in 311.—Crevier. Univ. Hist.

GALGACUS, chief of the Caledonians, who resisted with uncommon valour the Romans under the command of Agricola. After several skirmishes the two armies came to a pitched battle, previous to which Galgacus made a noble speech to his troops. He was however defeated with prodigious loss.—Tacitus.

GALIANI (Ferdinand), an Italian writer, was born of a noble family at Chieti in Abruzzi, in 1728. His first and principal work was on Money and Specie, published in 1750, occasioned by the sudden scarcity of cash in the two Sicilies. This procured him some preferment in the church for which he had been educated, by his uncle the archbishop of Tarento. In 1772 he published a catalogue of stones found about Vesuvius, which collection he presented to pope Benedict XIV. and, on one of the boxes, wrote this inscription, "Beatissime pater, fac ut lapides isti panes fiant." This piece of wit had its effect, and the pope gave him a valuable living. In 1759 he was appointed secretary to the French embassy; and during his residence at Paris his company was universally courted, on account of his wit and talents. He wrote, while there, Dialogues on the Corn Trade, which excited considerable notice, though anonymous. In 1779 he returned to Naples, where he died in 1787. Besides the above works he wrote a Commentary on Horace; a Treatise on the natural Duties of Princes to other belligerent Powers, &c.—Life of Galiani, by Diodati, Naples, 1788.

GALILEI (Galileo), a celebrated astronomer, was the son of a Florentine nobleman, and born at Pisa in 1564. His father was desirous that he should study medicine; but he attached himself to mathematics, and at the age of 25 was made mathematical professor at Pisa, from whence in 1592 he removed to Padua. In 1609 having heard that Janfen had invented a glass by which objects at a distance were rendered as visible as if near, he turned his attention to the subject and constructed a telescope, by means of which he discovered the irregularities of the Moon's surface and that of Venus. He also found that the Via Lactea is an assemblage of fixed stars; and by his assiduous application of his invention, he made many other important discoveries in the heavens. But his assertion of the earth's motion gave such offence to the inquisitors, that in 1615 he was cited to Rome, and required to recant these propositions, that the sun is the centre of the world, and that the earth is not the centre of the world, but has a diurnal motion. After being confined a few months, he was released, and strictly charged not to defend these heretical opinions either by word or writing. In 1632 he published at Florence his Dialogues on the Ptolemaic and Copernican Systems of the World, for which he was again cited to Rome, and committed to the prison of the inquisition. His book was ordered to be publicly burnt; the author sentenced to be imprisoned, to make another recantation of his errors, and, by way of penance, to recite the seven penitential psalms once a week. This sentence however was changed by the pope, and Galileo obtained his liberty. He then retired to his house near Florence, where he continued his observations till he became blind by intense application. He died in 1642. His principal works are, The Operations of the Compass; on the Swimming of Bodies; Mechanics; Nuncius Sidericus; on the Trepidation of the Moon; Discourse of the solar Spots; Mathematical Discourses and Demonstrations; Treatise of the Mundane System. His son Vincenzo Galilei was the first who applied his father's invention of the pendulum to clock-work. The father of Galilei wrote some esteemed works on music.—Martin's Biog. Phil. Hutten's Math. Diss.

GALLAND (Anthony) a learned French writer. He was born at Rollo in Picardy, in 1646; and died at Paris in 1715. He was sent by Colbert to the East; and on his return to France was made a member of the academy of inscriptions, and professor of Arabic in the royal college of Paris. He wrote several dissertations on medals: but the work by which he is best known is the Translation of the Arabian Nights Entertainments. He is not to be confounded with Augustus Galland, author of a History of France and Navarre.—Moreri.

GALLE OF GALLEUS (Servatius), a Dutch divine, and pastor of the Wallood church at Haerlem, who died in 1709. He edited Lactantius with notes, 1660, 8vo.; and wrote Dissertationes de Sybillis earumque Oraculis, 1688, 4to.: he also published an edition of the Sybilline Oracles, with corrections and notes.—Moreri.

GALLIENUS, a Roman emperor, was son of Valerian, and associated with him in the empire in 253. His father being taken prisoner by Sapor, king of Persia, in 260, he became sole emperor, from which time he degenerated into effeminacy and cruelty. He was assassinated in 268.—Univ. Hist. Grecien.

GALLITZIN (Basil), a Russian nobleman, who was in great favour with the regent princess Sophia, sister of the czars Peter I. and Iwan. He was of an ambitious character; and suspected of a design to ascend the throne. He was unsuccessful in war; and the intrigues of Sophia against her brother Peter being discovered, she was confined in a monastery, and Gallitzin exiled. He died in a monastery, in 1713, at the age of 80.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

GALLITZIN (Michael Michaelowitz prince of), of the same family as the preceding, was born in 1674. He served under Peter the Great, both by land and sea. In 1725 he was made field-marshal, and afterwards president of the college of war. He died in 1730.—Ibid.

GALLOCHE (Lewis), a French painter, was the disciple of Boullongne and the master of le Moine. He died rector and chancellor of the royal academy in 1761, at the age of 91.—D'Argenville.

GALLONIUS (Anthony) a priest of the oratory at Rome, who died there in 1603. He wrote a History of Virgins; Lives of Martyrs; Life of Philip Neri; and Apologeticus liber pro assertis in annal. Eccle. Baronianis de Monachatu Sancti Gregoriz Papæ, 4to. Put his most famous work is one on the different Sorts of Cruelties exercised on the primitive Martyrs, with plates, 1594, 4to.—Moreri.

GALLUCCI (Tarquinio), an Italian jesuit, who had a contest with madame Dacier, on on the merits of Virgil and Homer, in which he contended for the pre-eminence of the former. He was born in 1574, and died in 1649.—Ibid.

GALLUCCI (John Paul), an eminent Italian astronomer, who died about 1600. He was a member of the academy of Venice, and wrote several treatises, the chief of which are Theatrum Mundi et Temporis, folio, 1589; De Themate erigendo, Parte Fortunæ, Divisione Zodiacæ, Dignitatibus Planetarum et Temporis ad Medicandum Accommodatis, 1584, fol.; Speculum Uranicum, fol. &c.—Moreri.

GALLUS (Cornelius), a Roman poet, was born at Frejus, then called Forum Julii or Frejus. Augustus gave him the government of Egypt, but afterwards deprived him of his estate, and banished him for maladministration, on which he put an end to his life A. D. 26. Virgil's 10th eclogue is written on the love of Gallus for Lycoris.—Voss. Poet. Lat.

GALLUS (C. Vibius), a Roman emperor, was born about the year 906. He served under the emperor Decius, whom he is said to have betrayed to the Goths that he might succeed him. On his death, in 251, the soldiers elected Gallus, who was slain by them in 253.—Crevier. Un. Hist.

GALLUS (Flavius Claudius Constantinus), brother of the emperor Julian, was created Cæsar in 351, by the emperor Constantius. He acquired reputation in war; but afterwards abandoned himself to the counsels of his wife, who was cruel and avaricious. He was arrested by the orders of Constantius; and beheaded in 354.—Ibid.

GALLY (Henry), a learned divine, was born at Beckenham in Kent, in 1696, and educated at Benet's college, Cambridge. In 1721, he took his degree of M. A. and at the same time was chosen lecturer of St. Paul, Covent Garden, and preferred to the rectory of Wavenden in Buckinghamshire. In 1728 he took his degree of D. D. and obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Gloucester, which was followed by the grant of the rectory of Ashton in Northamptonshire, and a prebend of Norwich. In 1739 he was presented to the rectory of St. Giles in the Fields. He died in 1769. Dr. Gally published, besides single sermons, The Reasonableness of Church and College Fines Asserted, 8vo.; Some Considerations upon clandestine Marriages.—Gen. B. D.

GALVANI (Lewis), a celebrated physiologist, was born at Bologna, in 1737. He studied medicine under Galeazzi, whose daughter he married. In 1762 he became lecturer in anatomy at Bologna, and obtained a considerable reputation. By accidental experiments on frogs, he discovered, that all animals are endued with a peculiar kind of electricity; and he followed up this discovery with so much perseverance and success, as to give his name to a system of physiology, which has excited universal attention. His first publication on this subject was in 1791, and entitled "Aloysii Galvani de Viribus Electricitatis in Motu Musculari Commentarius." Upon this system the famous Volta made vast improvements. Galvani, on the death of his wife, in 1790, almost fell into a total state of melancholy. He died in 1798. Besides the above work, he wrote several memoirs upon professional subjects.—Eloge de Galvani, par Alibert.

GALVANO (Antony), was born in the East Indies, and made governor of the Molucca islands, in which he distinguished himself, particularly by clearing the seas of corsairs. His liberality was so great, that he reduced himself to poverty; and died in a hospital at Lisbon, in 1557.—Mor.

GAM (David), a native of Wales, and an officer in the army of Henry V. Having returned from reconnoitring the enemy on the evening preceding the battle of Agincourt, he reported, that there were enough of the enemy to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away. He was killed defending his sovereign, who was exposed to imminent danger, and was knighted by him on the field.

GAMA (Vasco or Vasquez de) an illustrious navigator, was born at Sines, a maritime town of Portugal, of a good family. Emanuel, king of Portugal, sent him in 1497 to endeavour to double the Cape of Good Hope, which he accomplished, and then sailed along the eastern coast of Africa. Having proceeded as far as Calicut, he again doubled the Cape in 1499, and returned to Lisbon. In 1502 he went out with twenty ships, and returned in the following year with thirteen rich vessels, which he had captured in the Indian Seas. John III. of Portugal appointed him viceroy of India; after which he went there a third time, and established his government at Cochin, where he died in 1525.—Moreri.

GAMACHES (Philip de), a French priest, and professor of divinity in the university of Paris, where he died in 1625. He opposed with zeal the encroachments of the papal power on the rights of the Gallican church, and published two volumes of Commentaries on the Summa of Aquinas.—Moreri.

GAMACHES (Stephen Simon), a French writer, was born at Meulan, about 1672. He was an ecclesiastic, and member of the academy of sciences, and died in 1756. He wrote Physical Astronomy, 2 vols. 4to; Literary and Philosophical Dissertations, 8vo.; the System of a Christian Philosopher, 8vo.; the Elegancies of Language reduced to their Principles.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

GAMALIEL, a Jewish doctor, and a disciple of Jesus Christ. He defended the apostles in an assembly held by the Jews, to concert measures for their destruction; and when St. Stephen was stoned to death, Gamaliel caused him to be buried.—Act.

GAMBARA (Lorenzo), a Latin poet of Italy, who died in 1586, at the age of 90. His principal poem is entitled Columbus, or the Discovery of America.—Moreri. Tiraboschi.

GAMBARA (Veronica), an Italian lady of considerable genius, was born at Brescia, in 1485. She married the lord of Corregio; after whose death she devoted herself to the education of her two sons. She died in 1550. Her poems have been often printed, and a complete edition, with her letters, was published at Brescia, in 1759.—Tiraboschi.

GAMBOLD (John), an English divine, was a native of Haverfordwest in Pembrokeshire. He was educated at Christ church, Oxford, where he took the degree of M. A. About 1739 he was presented to the vicarage of Stanton Harcourt, in Oxfordshire, which he afterwards quitted, and joined the sect of the Moravians, of which he became bishop, in 1754. He died at Haverfordwest in 1771. Mr. Gambold published an edition of the Greek Testament; Maxims and Theological Ideas; Sermons; and a religious poem of the dramatic form called Ignatius.—Nichols's Anecd. of Bowyer.

GANDY (James), an eminent painter, who was brought to Ireland by the duke of Ormond, and died there in 1689. He was a very able portrait painter, and had been the disciple of Vandyck.—Pilkington.

GARAMOND (Claude), a French engraver and letter-founder, was a native of Paris, where he died in 1561. He was the first who banished the gothic or black letter printing, for which he substituted the Roman letter.—Moreri.

GARASSE (Francis), a French jesuit, born at Angouleme. He was a man of considerable talents, but very scurrilous in his writings. In 1625 he published a book, entitled, A Summary of the principal Truths of the Christian Religion, which was condemned by the Sorbonne. He was also the author of Latin Poems and some controversial works. Garasse died of the plague, which he caught at Poitiers, while attending persons afflicted with that disorder, in 1631.—Moreri.

GARIBERI (Lorenzo), an historical painter of Bologna, and the disciple of Ludovico Caracci. He died in 1654, aged 64.—Pilkington.

GARBO (Raphael del), an historical painter of Florence, born in 1476, and died in 1534. His picture of the Resurrection is his masterpiece.—Ibid.

GARCILASSO, or Garci lasso de la Vega, an eminent Spanish poet, was descended from a noble family, and born at Toledo in 1503. He accompanied the emperor Charles V. in his military expeditions, and died of a wound, which he received in Provence in 1536. His works were printed at Naples in 1664, in 8vo. There was another of both his names, who was a native of Peru, and wrote a History of Florida, and another of his own country.—Moreri. Month. Magazine.

GARDIE (Pontus de la), a French adventurer, who served first under marshal Briasac. Afterwards he went into the service of the Danes; from whence he passed over to that of the Swedes, and was created a baron. The king of Sweden sent him ambassador to the emperor and the pope, and in 1580 he commanded against the Russians with great success. He was accidentally drowned in 1585, in the port of Revel.—Moreri.

GARDINER (Stephen), a celebrated prelate and statesman, was born at Bury St. Edmund's in Suffolk, in 1483. He was the illegitimate son of Dr. Woodville, bishop of Salisbury, the brother to Elizabeth queen of Henry IV. He was educated at Trinity hall, Cambridge; from whence he went into the family of the duke of Norfolk, and afterwards into that of cardinal Wolsey, who made him his secretary. In this situation he acquired the confidence of Henry VIII. to whom he was serviceable in procuring his divorce from queen Catharine; he also defended the king's supremacy in a book, entitled, De vera Obedientia. For these services he was promoted to the see of Winchester. Gardiner long afterwards drew up articles accusing Henry's last queen, Catharine Parr, of heresy; but the queen avoided the storm, and Gardiner fell into disgrace. At the accession of Edward VI. he opposed the reformation, and was committed first to the Fleet, and afterwards to the Tower, where he was a prisoner during the remainder of that reign. He was also deprived of his bishopric; but on the accession of Mary he was restored to his see, and appointed chancellor of England. His conduct towards the protestants was cruel and sanguinary. He died in 1555. He was a learned man, but of little principle, and very crafty and ambitious.—Biog. Brit.

GARDINER (James), a brave and pious colonel in the army of George II. He was a native of Scotland, and in his youth was very gay and licentious, but the accidental perusal of a religious book, entitled, Heaven taken by Storm, made him serious, and from thence he became distinguished for his piety. He was killed by the rebels at the battle of Preston Pans, within sight of his own house, Sept. 21, 1745.—Life by Doddridge.

GARENGOT (Rene Jacques Croissant de), a French surgeon, was born at Vitri in 1688, and died at Paris in 1759. He was royal lecturer in surgery at Paris, and a fellow of the royal society in London. His works are Traité des Operations de Chirurgie, 2 vols. 8vo.; Nouveau Traité des Instrumens de Chirurgie, 2 vols. 12mo.; Splanchnologie ou l'Anatomie des Visceres, 12mo. &c.—Nov. Diss. Hist.

GARET (John), a French benedictine monk of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Havre de Grace about 1625, and died in 1694. He edited the works of Casiodorus, 2 vols. folio, with curious notes.—Moreri.

GARISSOLES (Anthony), a French Protestant divine, was born at Montauban in 1587. He became professor of theology at his native place, and was moderator of the synod of Charenton. He died in 1650. He wrote the Way to Salvation; De Christo Mediatore; Explicatio Catecheseos Religionis Christianæ; and some Latin poems.—Bayle.

GARNET (Henry), an English Jesuit, memorable for being concerned in the gunpowder plot, was educated at Winchester school. He took the Jesuit's habit at Rome in 1575, and returned to England in 1586, as provincial of his order. He was executed for high treason in 1606. He owned the crime for which he suffered, and was placed by the Jesuits among their martyrs.

GARNETT (Thomas), an ingenious English physician, was born in Westmoreland, where his father enjoyed a small estate. He received his education at Sedburgh in Yorkshire, under Mr. Dawson; after which he went to Edinburgh, and became a pupil of Dr. Brown. After taking his degree he removed to London, and studied surgery. He next settled at Harrogate in Yorkshire, but his practice being small, he went to Liverpool, with a view of emigrating to America. From this scheme he was diverted, at the request of some of his friends at Liverpool, who persuaded him to commence a course of lectures on chemistry and natural philosophy. He repeated this course at Manchester; after which he was chosen Anderson's lecturer in the university of Glasgow. On the formation of the royal institution in London, Dr. Garnett was invited to become the lecturer there, with which he complied. His lectures during two seasons were uncommonly popular. He then resigned that situation, and began to read lectures at his own house in Great Marlborough-street, where he died of a fever, June 28, 1802. He wrote an Analysis of the Mineral Waters at Harrogate; a Tour through Scotland, 2 vols. 4to.; a Lecture on Health, 12mo.; several papers and essays on medical and physical subjects; and since his death have appeared his Lectures on Zoonomia, 4to. published for the benefit of his orphan daughters.—Monthly Magazine, Aug. 1802.

GARNIER (Robert), a French tragic poet, was born at Ferté Bernard, in the province of Maine, in 1545, and died in 1601. His dramatic works were printed at Lyons in 1 volume 12mo. 1597.—Moreri.

GARNIER (John), a learned Jesuit, and professor of rhetoric, was born at Paris in 1612, and died at Boulogne in 1681. He wrote Organæ Philosophiæ Rudimenta; Theses de Philosophia Morali; and several other esteemed works.—Moreri.

GARNIER (Julian), a French Benedictine monk, born in 1670, and died in 1723. He edited the works of St. Basil, 3 vols. folio.—Ibid.

GAROFALO (Benvenuto), an Italian painter, was born at Ferrara. He was celebrated chiefly for accurately copying the pictures of Raphael. He died in 1695.—Pilkington.

GARRARD (Mark), a painter, was born at Bruges in Flanders, in 1561. He was principal painter to Elizabeth queen of England, and also to Anne, consort to James I. He died in 1635.—Ibid.

GARRICK (David), a celebrated English actor, was descended from a French family, who, being Protestants, fled to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. His father, Peter Garrick, was a captain in the army, and generally resided at Lichfield; but being on a reconnoitring party at Hereford, David was born there in 1716. He received his education, partly at the grammar school at Lichfield, and partly under Dr. Johnson, with whom he went to London in 1735. He was for some time under Mr. Colson, an eminent mathematician, and afterwards went into partnership with his brother in the wine trade. This business he soon quitted for the stage. His first attempt was made at Ipswich in 1741, under the assumed name of Lyddal; and the applause he met with, induced him to make his appearance at the theatre in Goodman's fields, in the character of Richard III. The other theatres were quickly deserted, and Goodman's fields became the resort of people of fashion, till that theatre was shut up. Garrick then made an engagement with Fleetwood, the patentee of Drury-lane. In the summer of 1748 he played in Dublin, to such full houses, that the heat of the weather and the crowds occasioned a fever, which was called the Garrick fever. In 1747 he became joint-patentee of Drury-lane theatre; and in 1749 he married Mademoiselle Violetti, an Italian stage-dancer. In 1763 he and Mrs. Garrick made a visit to Italy, and at Paris he saw the celebrated Mademoiselle Clairon, whose future eminence he predicted. He returned to England in 1765, and in 1766 he brought out the Clandestine Marriage, a comedy, written in conjunction with the elder Colman. In 1769 he celebrated a remarkable fete in honour of Shakespeare, called the Jubilee at Stratford upon Avon. It was afterwards made an entertainment at Drury-lane, under the same title, and had a prodigious run. In 1776 he gave up his concern in the theatre for 35,000*l.* The last character he performed was Don Felix in the Wonder. He died in 1779, and was buried in Westminster abbey, where a handsome monument has been erected to his memory by private friendship. Mr. Garrick was hospitable and generous, but very vain and fond of flattery. He wrote several dramatic pieces, prologues, epilogues, songs, and epigrams; in the last he excelled.—Life of Garrick by Murphy. Ditto by Davies.

GARRIEL (Peter), a French priest in the 17th century, who was a native of Montpellier, of which city he wrote a description. He was also the author of an Account of the Cathedral of Montpellier, 1631, 12mo.; a Chronological View of the Governors of Provence; and Series Præfulum Megalonenium et Montispelienium, ab Ann. 451 ad Ann. 1652. folio.—Moreri.

GARTH (sir Samuel), an English poet and physician, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M. D. in 1691. He greatly contributed to the carrying into execution the establishment of dispensaries, which was opposed by the apothecaries, whom he severely lashed for their venal spirit, in his poem of the Dispensary. In 1697 he spoke the Harveian oration before the college. At the accession of George I. he was knighted, and appointed the king's physician in ordinary, and physician-general to the army. He died in 1719. His poems are of the middling class.—Johnson's Poets.

GARZI (Lewis), a painter, the disciple of Andrea Sacchi, was born at Pistoia in Tuscany. At the age of 80 he painted the dome of a church in Rome, by order of Clement XI. which is deemed his finest work. He died in 1721, at the age of 83.—D'Argenville.

GASCOIGNE (sir William), chief justice of the king's bench in the reign of Henry IV. was born at Gawthrop in Yorkshire, about 1350. He was a man of inflexible integrity and firmness, as appeared on two memorable occasions. When Henry required him to pass sentence on archbishop Scroope, taken in arms against the king, he refused to obey, as contrary to the laws of the realm; and when the prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V. insulted him when on the bench, he committed him to prison till his majesty's pleasure should be known. He died in 1413.—Biog. Brit.

GASCOIGNE (George), an old English poet, was born in Essex, and died at Stamford, in Lincolnshire, in 1577. He served with reputation in the wars in the Low Countries. His poems are not without merit.—Granger.

GASPARINI, surnamed Barzizio, from Barzizia, the place of his birth, an Italian writer, was born about 1370, and died in 1431. There have been several editions of his Letters, the best of which is that of 1723.—Tiraboschi.

GASSENDI (Peter), a French philosopher, was born in 1592, at Chanterliac, in Provence. He displayed an acute and inquisitive mind at a very early age, and made so rapid a progress in learning as to be appointed teacher of rhetoric at Digne before he was sixteen. About three years afterwards he became professor of philosophy at Aix, when he ventured to oppose the system of Aristotle, and his lectures were published under the title of Exercitationes paradoxicae adversus Aristotelem. This work procured him the friendship of the celebrated Peiresc, president of the university of Aix, by whose interest he was preferred to a canonry in the cathedral of Digne. In 1615 he was appointed royal professor of mathematics at Paris, where he applied so intensely to his studies, and to astronomical observations, as brought him into a consumption, of which he died in 1655. Gassendi is deservedly ranked among the first mathematicians of his age. He opposed the philosophy of Des Cartes with great success, and obtained a number of followers, who were called after his name. His printed works are the Lives of Tycho Brahe, Copernicus, Purbachius, and Regiomontanus; a Commentary on Diogenes Laertius; astronomical and philosophical pieces; the whole collected into 6 vols. folio, 1658.—Moreri. Martin's Biog. Phil.

GASSION (John de), marshal of France, was born at Pau in 1602. He entered early into the army, and served under the duke de Rohan, on the side of the protestants. He afterwards joined Gustavus of Sweden, and became captain of his body guard. He rendered eminent services to that prince in Germany, and after his death returned to France, where he engaged under the marshal de la Force. He had a considerable share in the victory at Rocroy, and was severely wounded at the siege of Thionville, for which he received the marshal's staff in 1643. He next served in Flanders, and was mortally wounded at the siege of Lens in 1647.—Moreri.

GASTALDI (John Baptist), physician to the king of France, was born at Sisteron in 1674, and died at Avignon in 1747. He wrote, 1. Institutiones Medicinæ Physico-Anatomicæ, 12mo. 2. Some Medical Tracts on curious and interesting subjects.—Ibid.

GASTAUD (Francis), a French ecclesiastic, a native of Aix, in Provence, was a father of the oratory, a preacher at Paris, and lastly a counsellor in his native city. He died in 1732 at Viviers, to which place he was banished, by means of the jesuits, against whom he had written. His corpse was also refused the rites of Christian interment. He published a Collection of Homilies, Orations, &c.—Moreri.

GASTON DE FOIX, duke of Nemours, son of John de Foix, count d'Etampes, and of Mary of Orleans, sister of Louis XII. signalized himself at the age of twenty-three, in his uncle's wars in Italy. He beat an army of Swifs, and gained the battle of Ravenna; soon after which he was killed, at the age of 24, in 1512.—Moreri.

GASTON of France (John Baptist), duke of Orleans, son of Henry IV. and brother of Louis XIII. was born in 1608. He is chiefly known by his intrigues against cardinal Richelieu, and for bringing almost all his abettors to the scaffold. He died in 1660.—Ibid.

GASTRELL (Francis), an English bishop, was born about 1662 in Northamptonshire. He was educated first at Westminster school, and afterwards at Christ church, Oxford. In 1697 he preached the Boyle's lecture, which he published as one discourse, to which he afterwards added another, on the Necessity of the Christian Revelation. In 1702 he was presented to a canonry of Christ church, Oxford; at which time he published Considerations concerning the Trinity. In 1707 he printed his excellent scriptural manual, entitled, Christian Institutions. In 1714 he was promoted to the bishopric of Chester, and the same year answered Dr. Clarke's book on the Trinity. The bishop opposed the degrees granted by the archbishop of Canterbury, for which he received the thanks of the university of Oxford. He died in 1725.—Biog. Brit.

GATAKER (Thomas), an English divine, was born in 1574 at London, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge. On entering into orders he became preacher at Lincoln's inn, and in 1611 he obtained the rectory of Rotherhithe in Surrey. In 1619 he published a curious Treatise on the Nature and Use of Lots, which gained great celebrity, and occasioned considerable controversy. In 1642 he was chosen one of the famous assembly at Westminster, though he did not approve of the presbyterian plan. He zealously opposed the murder of Charles I. and died in 1654. Besides the above he wrote Opera Critica, folio; and other eminent works, chiefly of biblical criticism. His son Charles was also a considerable writer and divine. He died in 1680.—Biog. Brit.

GATIMOZIN, the last of the kings of Mexico, was driven from his throne in 1523, by Cortez. He was put to the fiery ordeal by the Spaniards, to make him discover his treasures; and was hanged, three years after, in his own capital.—Townsend's Hist. of the Conquest of Mexico.

GAVANTI (Bartholomew), an Italian monk, of the order of Barnabites, was born in the Milanese about 1568, and died at Milan in 1638. He wrote Thesaurus Sacrorum Rituum, on the Ceremonies, &c. of the Roman Church, 5 vols. 4to. with plates; also Manuale Episcoporum; and on conducting of Diocesan Synods.—Moreri.

GAUBIL (Anthony), a French missionary in China, was born at Caillac in 1708, and died in 1759. He was interpreter at the court of Pekin; and published a History of Gengis Khan, and a translation of the Chou King.—New. Dict. Hist.

GAUBIUS (Jerome-David), a celebrated physician, was born at Heidelberg in 1705. After studying medicine some time, under his uncle, a physician at Amsterdam, he went to Handerwyck, and from thence to Leyden, where he contracted an intimate friendship with Boerhaave. In 1725 he took his doctor's degree, and published his Thesis on the Solids. He succeeded Boerhaave, as lecturer in botany and chemistry, in 1731, and in 1734 he obtained the medical professorship. His Treatise on the Method of Prescribing, or of Writing Recipes, which appeared in 1738, contains the wisest rules ever framed on that important subject. But his greatest work is his Principles of Nosology. He next published Institutiones Pathologiæ Medicinalis, 1758, 4to. Besides these publications, he was the author of Adversus Variis Argumenti, &c. and the editor of Cramer's Elementa Artis Docimasticæ; Albinus de Presagienda Vita et Morte, &c. He died in 1780.—Hist. de la Soc. Royale de Medicine à Paris, 1782.

GAUD (Henry), a painter and engraver of Utrecht, who engraved seven pieces of singular beauty, from pictures by Elshajmer. He died in 1639.—Pilkington.

GAUDEN (John), an English bishop, was born in 1605, at Mayland in Essex. He received his education first at Bury St. Edmund's, and afterwards at St. John's college, Cambridge. He next entered himself of Wadham college, Oxford, where he took his degree of D.D. At the beginning of the civil wars he sided with the parliament, and had a piece of plate given him for a sermon preached before the house of commons. In 1641 he obtained the deanry of Bocking, and in 1643 was nominated one of the assembly of divines at Westminster, but did not sit among them. He wrote against the Covenant, but complied with it to keep his preferment. In 1648 he published a tract against the bringing of the king to trial. He had also committed to his management the collating and publishing the king's meditations, to which he gave the title of Εἰκὼν Βασιλική, or the Portraiture of his Sacred Majesty in his Solitude and Sufferings. This book had a wonderful effect upon the public mind, and led Gauden, after the restoration, to assume the merit of having wrote it himself, though his own style is the very opposite to that of the Εἰκὼν. In 1659 he became preacher at the Temple, and when Charles II. was restored, he was made chaplain in ordinary. At the same time he was preferred to the see of Exeter, and in 1662 to that of Worcester, where he died soon after. He wrote several books on the hierarchy of the church of England, and Sermons.—Biog. Brit.

GAUDENTIO, an historical painter of Milan, was born about 1480. He painted his fresco and oil a number of pictures for the churches in his native city.—Pilkington.

GAUDENTIUS (St.) bishop of Brescia in the 5th century; to which he was appointed by St. Ambrose and other prelates much against his own wishes. He died about 427. He wrote the life of his predecessor Philaster; fifteen sermons, and letters, published together at Brescia in 1738, fol. There was a bishop of the Donatists of the same name and age, who wrote two apologies for his sect.—Cave. Dupin.

GAVESTON (Peter), a favourite of Edward II. was the son of a gentleman of Gascony, who had rendered considerable services to Edward I. He was a worthless character, and after a great abuse of his power, and changes in his fortune, he was beheaded in 1312.—Rapin.

GAULI (John Baptist), a painter, born at Genoa in 1639, and died at Rome in 1709. He was eminent for historical painting and portraits.—Pilkington.

GAULMIN (Gilbert), a French writer, was born at Moulins in 1585. He was a counsellor, and accounted a considerable orator and critic. He wrote Latin poems and commentaries of little merit. Gaulmin died in 1665.—Moreri.

GAUFF (John), a German protestant divine and mathematician, was born at Lindau in Suabia in 1667. He was educated at Jena, and in 1693 became a pastor at his native place, where he died in 1738. He wrote Gnomonica Mechanica Universalis, 4to; several astronomical and chronological tracts; and sermons.—Moreri.

GAURICO (Luca), an Italian astronomer and astrologer, was born in 1475 in the kingdom of Naples. He became professor of astronomy at Ferrara, but he was very severely handled by John Bentivoglio for predicting that he would lose the sovereignty of Bologna. He then went to Venice, and afterwards to Rome. Pope Paul, who had a great faith in astrology, gave him the bishopric of Civita in Naples, which he resigned in 1550 and retired to Rome, where he died in 1558. His astronomical and astrological works were printed at Basil in 1575 in 3 vols. folio. His brother Pomponio was a man of letters and a professor in the university of Naples. He wrote Latin Poems; Treatises on Architecture and Physiognomy.—Moreri. Tiraboschi.

GAUTHIER or GAULTIER (John Baptist), a French priest, was born at Louvain in the diocese of Evreux in 1685. He studied at Paris, but was refused his degrees on account of his attachment to the Jansenist doctrines. Langle, bishop of Boulogne, gave him orders and a canonry in his cathedral, with some other preferment. On the death of that prelate he went to reside with M. Colbert, bishop of Montpellier, and when he died Gauthier went to Paris, where he died in 1755. He wrote against Pope's Essay on Man; Letters against Irreligion; the Life of the Bishop of Senes; History of the Parliament of Paris; Theological Letters against the Jesuits, 3 vols. 12mo.; &c.—Nova. Diss. Hist.

GAY (John), an English poet, was born at or near Barnstable in Devonshire in 1688, and educated at the grammar school in that town under Mr. Luck, a man of wit and a poet. He was afterwards apprenticed to a silk-mercator in London, which situation he did not like, and in a few years bought out the remainder of his time. His first poem, entitled, Rural Sports, printed in 1711, and dedicated to Mr. Pope, gained him the friendship of that poet, which lasted till death. The year following he was appointed secretary to the duchess of Monmouth: at this time he printed his Mock heroics, entitled, Trivia, or the Art of walking the Streets of London, which is very humorous, and in the composition of which the author was assisted by Swift. In 1714 appeared his Shepherd's Week, a series of pastorals, intended to ridicule Philips, but they possess more merit as a genuine picture of rustic life than as a satire. The same year he became secretary to the earl of Clarendon on his embassy to Hanover. On the death of queen Anne he returned to England, but his expectations of preferment from the new court were disappointed. In 1720 he published his Poems, by subscription, which produced him a profit of one thousand pounds; but embarking it in the famous South-Sea bubble, he lost the whole, and was reduced thereby to such a state of despondency as was nearly fatal. He next produced the tragedy of the Captives, which met with a good reception, and occasioned his being employed by the princess of Wales to write his Fables for the use of the young duke of Cumberland. In 1727 appeared on the stage his Beggar's Opera, which had uncommon success, and doubtless infinitely beyond what it deserved both in a dramatic and a moral point of view. Though it was a favourite with the town, it was not so at court; and when he produced his Sequel to it, under the title of "Polly," it was prohibited by the lord chamberlain. Gay, however, cleared more by printing it than he would have done by its performance. The duke and duchess of Queensbury took him into their house, where he died in 1732. His remains were interred in Westminster-abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory by his worthy patrons, with an epitaph on it written by Pope. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote some lesser dramatic pieces, ballads, and poems, making 2 vols. 12mo.—Johnson's Poets.

GAZA (Theodore), a learned Greek, was born at Thessalonica, and when that place was taken by the Turks in 1430 he escaped to Italy, where he studied the Latin language with so much assiduity that he became an elegant writer, and speaker of it. He was for several years a professor at Ferrara, and at length rector of that university. From thence he went to Rome under the patronage of pope Nicholas V. and cardinal Bessarion. He died in Calabria in 1478. He wrote a Greek Grammar printed by Aldus, 1495; a Treatise on the Grecian Months. He also translated Aristotle on

GAZALI, or Abou Hamed Muhammed Zein Eddin al Thousi, a famous musliman doctor, was born in Khorassan, A.D. 1058, and died there about 1112. His famous work is entitled Alia oloum Eddin, or the Several Classes of Sciences which concern religion. There were two others of the same name, one of whom wrote on the mercy of God.—D'Herbelot.

GAZET (William), a Flemish ecclesiastic, was born at Arras in 1554, and died in 1612. He wrote a Chronological History of the Archbishops of Cambray; Ecclesiastical History of the Low Countries, and other works.—Moreri.

GAZZOLI (Benozzo), an Italian painter, born at Florence in 1400, and died in 1478. He painted a number of pictures from the sacred history, also landscapes and portraits.—Pilkington.

GEBER (John), an Arabian physician and astronomer, in the 9th century. He wrote a Commentary on the Almagest of Ptolemy, and other works chiefly on alchemy. Dr. Johnson supposes that the word Gibberish is derived from the cant of Geber and his followers.—Moreri.

GED (William), a goldsmith of Edinburgh, who in 1725 endeavoured to introduce a method of printing with blocks and plates, containing letters for a whole page or sheet. He entered into an engagement with the university of Cambridge, to print Bibles and Common-prayer Books in this manner, but the project failed. On his return to Scotland, however, he printed an edition of Sallust, with his plates. The plan has since been successfully carried on by Didot, at Paris, and is lately adopted in London under the name of Stereotype. Ged died in 1749.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GEDALIA, a famous rabbi, who died in 1448. He wrote an account of a chain of traditions from Adam to A.D. 761, and on the Creation of the World.—Moreri.

GEDDES (James), an ingenious Scotch writer, was born in the county of Tweedale in 1710, and educated at Edinburgh, after which he entered on the study of the law, and was admitted an advocate, but died of a decline, when he was between 30 and 40 years of age. In 1748 was published a posthumous piece of his entitled "An Essay on the Composition and Manner of Writings of the Ancients, particularly Plato." 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GEDDES (Michael), an eminent English divine of the 17th century. He was chaplain several years to the factory at Lisbon, where he was apprehended by the inquisition in 1686, and interdicted from officiating in his ministerial capacity, on which he returned to England. He was afterwards created doctor of laws by the university of Oxford, and made chancellor of Salisbury. He died about 1714. He wrote the History of the Church of Malabar; the Church History of Ethiopia; Miscellaneous Tracts against Popery, 3 vols. 8vo. &c.—Burnet's Hist. Reform.

GEDDES (Alexander), a Scotch Roman catholic priest, was born in Ruthven, in the county of Bamff, in 1737. He was educated at an obscure school in the Highlands, and in 1758 removed to the Scottish college at Paris. In 1764 he returned to Scotland and became priest to a catholic congregation in the county of Angus, but the year following he became chaplain in the family of the earl of Traquair. In 1769 he undertook the charge of a congregation at Auchinhalrig in Bamffshire, where also he commenced farmer, but with no success. In 1779 he quitted his pastoral charge, and the year following obtained the degree of doctor of laws from the university of Aberdeen. About this time he removed to London, where he officiated some time in the imperial ambassador's chapel, and afterwards at that in Duke-street, Lincoln's-Inn-fields. In 1782 he relinquished the clerical vocation, and began to devote himself to a design which he had long entertained of translating the entire Bible into English. In 1786 he published his prospectus of that work in 4to. and the year following an Appendix to it in a letter to bishop Lowth. The same year he published an Answer to Dr. Priestley, on the Divinity of Christ. In 1788 he printed further proposals for a New Translation of the Bible; and in 1790 a general Answer to the Queries, Counsels, and Criticisms communicated to him since the publication of his proposals. In this undertaking he was liberally supported by the late lord Petre. The first volume of it appeared in 1792, comprising the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua; but the translator had taken such unwarrantable liberties with the text, and treated many important subjects with so much indecency, that all true friends of religion were disgusted. Those of his own communion immediately declared their disapprobation of it, and some of the Roman catholic bishops suspended the doctor from his ecclesiastical functions. To these he replied in pamphlets written with great coarseness and illiberality. In 1797 appeared the second volume of his version, in which he made greater strides to positive infidelity than in the former. In 1800 he published Critical Remarks, in vindication of his work. About this time appeared his Apology for the Roman catholics of Great Britain. He died in 1802. Dr. Geddes was a man of learning, but petulant, vain, intemperate, and extremely irritable.—Life of Geddes by Goode.

GEDOYN (Nicholas), a French writer, was born at Orleans in 1667, and died in 1744. He was a jesuit, and then renounced the society and became a fashionable man of the world. He was the intimate friend of the celebrated Ninon de l'Enclos, but his mode of life did not hinder his preferment. He became a member of the French academy and of that of belles-lettres, and obtained the abbacy of Notre Dame de Beaueugency. He died in 1744. His Œuvres Diverses were printed in 1745. He translated Quintilian and Pausanias into French.—Moreri.

GEER (Charles de), a celebrated naturalist, was born in Sweden of a noble Dutch family in 1720. He studied at Utrecht and Upsal, at which latter place he had Linnæus for his master. He was possessed of a large share in the iron-works at Dannemora, which mines he vastly improved by the application of new machinery. He also invented an apparatus for drying corn by the heat of the smelting houses. By these means he gained prodigious wealth, which he applied to the noblest purposes in feeding the poor, repairing churches, and establishing schools. In 1761 he was appointed marshal of the court, and knight of the Polar star; after which he was created a baron. He died in 1778. He wrote Memoires pour servir a l'Histoire des Insectes, 7 vols. 4to.; also, an Oration on the Procreation of Insects, and Papers in the Transactions of the academies of Stockholm and Upsal.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GEINOZ (Francis), a learned Swiss abbé, and member of the academy of belles-lettres, died in 1752. He wrote many valuable dissertations on subjects of antiquity.—Ibid.

GEJER (Martin), a German protestant divine, was born at Leipzig in 1614. He became professor of Hebrew and member of the ecclesiastical council to the elector of Saxony. He died in 1681. He wrote Commentaries on several books of the Old Testament; and a Treatise on the Mourning of the Hebrews; the whole in 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

GELASIVS I. pope, was elevated to the chair in 492. He had a sharp contest with the patriarch of Constantinople, and by his arrogance prevented a union between the two churches. He condemned the practice of communicating only in one kind, although that practice became afterwards a standing rule in the Roman church as far as relates to the laity. Several works written by him are extant. He died in 496.—GELASIVS II. a native of Campania, was elected pope in 1118. Cencio, marquis di Frangipani, consul of Rome, who was in the interest of the emperor Henry V. drove him from Rome, and another pope was elected. Gelasius, after some attempts to regain the pontificate, retired to the monastery of Clugny in France, where he died in 1119.—Platina. Moreri. Bower.

GELDENHAUR (Gerard), a divine and historian, was born at Nimeguen in 1482. Being sent to Wittemberg by Maximilian of Burgundy, he there embraced lutheranism, which gave such offence to his friend

Erasmus, that he wrote against him. He afterwards became professor of history and theology at Marburg, where he died in 1542. He wrote Historia Batavica; Historiæ suæ Ætatis; Germanicorum Histor. illustratio; De viris illustribus inferioris Germaniæ; &c.—Moreri. Bayle.

GELDER (Arnold de), a Dutch painter, born at Dort in 1615, and died in 1727. He was a disciple of Rembrandt, whose manner he imitated.—Pilkington.

GELDORP (Gauldorp), a painter, born at Louvain in 1553, and died in 1618. He excelled in portraits, though he sometimes painted historical subjects.—Ibid.

GELLERT (Christian Furchtegott), a German divine and poet, was born at Hayuichen, a village in Misnia, in 1715, and died in 1769. He supported himself for many years as tutor in private families; but was afterwards professor of philosophy at Leipzig. He is best known by his Fables and Tales, which are very pleasing. All his works have been collected in 10 vols. 8vo.—Gen. Biog.

GELLI (John Baptist), an Italian writer, was born in 1498 at Florence, where he died in 1563. His occupation was that of a shoemaker, which he continued to follow till his death, though he was a member of the academy at Florence, and admitted to the friendship of all the men of genius and learning in that city. He translated from the Greek the Hecuba of Euripides, and was the author of two comedies called La Sporta, and L'Errore. His dialogues are in great esteem, and have been translated into several languages.—Moreri. Tiraboschi.

GELLIBRAND (Henry), an English mathematician, was born in London in 1597. He took his degrees in arts in Trinity college, Oxford, and was for some time a curate in Kent, but his passion for the mathematics induced him to quit that situation and return to Oxford. He afterwards became professor of astronomy at Gresham college, London, where he died in 1686. He completed and published his friend Briggs's Trigonometria Britannica. Mr. Gellibrand was also the author of a tract concerning longitude appended to captain James's Voyage for the Discovery of the North-west Passage; a Discourse on the Variation of the Magnetic Needle; an Institution Trigonometrical, explaining the Doctrine of Plane and Spherical Triangles, 8vo.; an Epitome of Navigation, &c.—Ward's Lives of Gresham Professors. Martin's Biog. Phil.

GELON, king or tyrant of Syracuse, usurped the supreme authority in that city in the year 484 B. C. He possessed great and amiable qualities; and died, extremely regretted by the Syracusans, after a reign of seven years.—Univ. Hist.

GEMELLI CARRERI (Francis), an Italian writer, and an advocate of Naples, who is aid to have travelled round the world from 1693 to 1698, but some assert, that the account which he has given of his travels was written by his friend. Let this be as it may, the work is extremely interesting.—Tiraboschi.

GEMIGNANO (Vincenzio di St.), an Italian painter, born in Tuscany in 1490, and died in 1530. He was a disciple and imitator of Raphael. There was another painter of the same name, who died in 1681. He painted several fine pictures for the churches at Rome.—Pilkington.

GEMINIANI (Francis), a celebrated musician, was born at Lucca about 1680. In 1714 he came to England, where he was patronized by George I. to whom he dedicated his solos for the violin, which were followed by his concertos. In 1742 he published his Guida Armonica, or, a Sure Guide to Harmony and Modulation. His other works are The Art of Playing on the Violin; Harpsichord Pieces, &c. He died in Dublin in 1762.—Burney's Hist. of Music. Hawkins.

GEMISTUS (George), surnamed Pletho, a learned Greek, was born at Constantinople in 1390. He was a zealous Platonist, and a warm defender of the Greek church against the Latins. In 1438 he was sent to the council at Florence assembled to effect a union between the two churches, where he displayed considerable eloquence. He afterwards returned to Greece, where he died at the age of 100. He wrote De Gestis Græcorum post pugnam ad Mantineam, printed by Aldus, 1503, folio; De Virtutibus Libellus; De Rebus Peloponnesiacis constituendis Orationes duas; De Platonice et Aristotelice philosophiæ differentia, &c.—Fabr. Bib. Græc. Moreri.

ГЕММА (Reinier), commonly called Frisius, a Dutch physician and mathematician, was born at Dockum, in Friesland, in 1508. He became medical professor at Louvain, where he died in 1555. He wrote Methodus Arithmeticæ; De Usu Annuli Astronomici; De locorum describendorum Ratione, deque distantis eorum in veniendis; Demonstrationes Geometricæ de Usu Radii Astronomici; De Astrolabio Catholico liber, &c. His son Cornelius was a good Latin poet, born at Louvain in 1535, and died in 1579. He wrote De Prodigiosa Specie Naturæ Cometæ, &c.—Moreri.

GENRE (Louis le), a French historian, was born at Rouen in 1639, and died in 1733. His principal works are, a History of France, 3 vols. fol.; the Life of M. de Harlai; an Essay on the Reign of Louis the Great; and the Life of Cardinal d'Amboise.—Ibid.

GENRE (Gilbert Charles le), marquis of St. Aubin, was counsellor of the parliament of Paris, and master of the requests. He died in 1746, at the age of 59. His principal work is, a Treatise on Opinion, 6 vols. 12mo. He also wrote Antiquities de la Maison de France, &c.—Ibid.

GENRE (Nicolas le), an eminent French sculptor, who died at Paris in 1670, at the age of 52.—Ibid.

GENEBARD (Gilbert), a French bishop, was born at Riom, in Auvergne, and entered among the benedictines. In 1563 he became regius professor of Hebrew in the college of Navarre, at Paris. Being disappointed of a bishopric, he joined the party of the league. In 1693 he obtained the archbishopric of Aix through the duke of Mayenne. In the reign of Henry IV. he published a book on the election of bishops, which was publicly burnt by the hangman. He died in 1597. He wrote a Sacred Chronology, and other works.—Moreri.

GENESIUS (Josephus), a Byzantine historian, who flourished about 940. He wrote a History of Constantinople, printed at Venice, 1733, in Greek and Latin.—Ibid.

GENET (Charles Claude), a French poet, was born at Paris in 1636, and died in 1719. He wrote a Poem on the Existence of God and the Immortality of the Soul; Principes de Philosophie; a tragedy called Penelope, &c.—Ibid.

GENET (Francis), bishop of Vaifon, was born at Avignon in 1640, and died in 1702. He wrote Morale de Grenoble, 6 vols. 12mo.—Ibid.

GENGA (Jerome), an Italian painter and architect, was born at Urbino in 1476, and died in 1551. His son Bartholomew was also celebrated for his skill in architecture. He superintended the fortifications of the island of Malta, where he died in 1558.—Pilkington.

GENNADIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Anatolius in 458. He was an eloquent writer; but none of his works are extant, except a circular Epistle against Simony, and a piece against the Anathemas of Cyril. He died in 471. There was another patriarch of the same name, who was at the council of Florence in 1438, and greatly opposed a union between the eastern and western churches. In 1453 he was elected patriarch, which dignity he resigned about five years afterwards, and retired to a monastery, where he died in 1460. He wrote an explanation of the christian faith in Greek, Latin, and Turkish, and other works.—Ibid.

GENNADIUS, the author of a work intitled, De Dogmatibus Ecclesiasticis, which has been improperly attributed to St. Augustin, was a priest of Marseilles, and died about 400. There is also another work of his extant, intitled, De illustribus Ecclesiæ Scripturis.—Ibid.

GENNARI (Benedetto), an historical and portrait painter of Bologna, born in 1633, and died in 1715. He resided some time at London, where he was greatly encouraged by Charles II. and the principal nobility. His son Cesar GENNARI was a fine landscape painter. He died in 1688.—Pilkington.

GENOELS (Abraham), a painter of Antwerp, born in 1640. He excelled in landscape and portrait.—Ibid.

GENOVESI (Anthony), an Italian philosopher, was born at Castiglione in 1712. He read lectures in philosophy at Naples with prodigious reputation for some time; but at length he was attacked by numerous enemies for publishing his Metaphysics, in which he recommended the works of Galileo, Grotius, and Newton. The king of Naples, however, protected him, and made him professor of ethics. But unfortunately offering himself as candidate for the chair of theology, the ecclesiastics brought charges of heresy against him, and he had nearly lost the king's favour, when he prudently relinquished that pursuit. By his means a professorship of political philosophy was established in that university, which he discharged with great credit. He died in 1769. Besides the above work, he wrote in Italian Philosophical Meditations upon Religion and Morality; a System of Logic; Humorous Letters; and Italian Morality, which last is accounted his principal performance.—Gen. Biog.

GENSERIC, king of the Vandals in Spain, was the natural son of Godigiles, whom he succeeded in 428. In the commencement of his reign he gained a great victory over Hermanric, king of the Suevi. He afterwards made himself master of Africa, where he practised the greatest cruelties to establish arianism. Being invited by the empress Eudoxia to revenge the death of her husband Valentinian III. who had been murdered by Maximus, Genseric sailed to Italy, entered Rome in 455, and delivered the city up to pillage. He was, from this time, the terror of the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, which he laid waste every year with his fleets. He died in 477.—Univ. Hist.

GENTILI (Alberico), an Italian lawyer, was born in Ancona in 1550. His father, who was a physician, embraced the reformed religion and went to England, where Alberico became professor of law at Oxford, and died in 1608. He wrote six dialogues on the Interpreters of Law; and a Treatise de Jure Belli, which Grotius has praised; and other works. His brother, Scipio, was also a learned jurist, and became professor of civil law at Altdorf, where he died in 1616. He wrote De Jure publico Populi Romani; De Conjuratibus; Latin poems, &c.—Bayle. Tirab.-scbi.

GENTILIS (de Foligno), or de Gentilibus, a physician, was author of Commentaries on Avicenna, folio; and of the following works: De Legationibus; De Juris interpretibus; and De Advocacione Hispanica. He died at Foligno in 1548.—Moreri.

GENTILIS (John Valentine), a relation of the preceding, was born in Calabria. Having embraced the protestant doctrine, he quitted Italy and went to Geneva, where he learned arianism, but, to save himself from sharing the fate of Servetus, he subscribed the orthodox confession of faith. After going to several places, and suffering imprisonment more than once on account of his opinions, he was beheaded at Berne, about 1567.—Bayle.

GENTILESCHI (Horatio), an Italian painter, was born at Pisa in 1563. He painted the ceilings at Greenwich, and died, in this country, at the age of 84. His daughter was also a good artist. She lived chiefly at Naples, in great splendour; and was famous for her amours.—Walpole. Pilkington.

GENTILET (Valentine), a French protestant writer of the 16th century, born in Dauphiné. He became syndic of the republic at Geneva, and in 1578 published an Apology for the Protestants, which went through several editions. He wrote also Anti-Machiavel, and Anti-Socinus, 1612.—Bayle.

GEOFFREY of Monmouth, a British historian, who flourished about 1150. He was first, archdeacon of Monmouth, and next, bishop of St. Asaph, which see he resigned, and retired to the monastery of Abingdon, of which he was abbot. His principal work is his Chronicon sive Historia Britonum, which, however, is full of legendary tales respecting the early monarchs of Britain.—Pitt's Bale. Moreri.

GEOFFROY (Stephen Francis), an eminent physician and chemist, was born at Paris in 1672. He was professor of chemistry at the king's garden, and of medicine in the royal college. His principal work is a History of the Materia Medica, 3 vols. 8vo. He died in 1731.—Eloge par Fontenelle.

GEORGE (Saint), a martyr in the reign of Diocletian, was greatly celebrated both among the christians and mahometans; but there is little certain known of him.—Moreri.

GEORGE LEWIS I. king of Great Britain, was the son of Ernest Augustus, elector of Hanover, by Sophia, daughter of Frederic, elector Palatine, and the grand-daughter of James I. of England. He was born in 1660, created duke of Cambridge in 1706, and succeeded queen Anne in 1714. The next year a rebellion broke out in Scotland in favour of the pretender, which was soon suppressed. In his reign parliaments were made septennial, and the order of the Bath was revived. In 1720 happened the failure of the famous South-sea scheme, by which thousands of families were ruined. He died suddenly, June 11, 1727, at Osnaburgh. He married his cousin Sophia Dorothea, daughter of the duke of Zell, which marriage, however, proved very unhappy.—Smollet.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS II. was born in 1683. He married, in 1705, princess Caroline, of Brandenburg Anspach, who died in 1757. In 1714 he came to England with his father, whom he succeeded in 1727. In 1789 admiral Vernon was sent with a Squadron to the West Indies, where he demolished Porto Bello, but failed in his attempt on Carthagena. In 1743 George headed his army on the continent, and gained the battle of Dettingen. In 1745 the pretender's eldest son landed in the Highlands, and was joined by several clans. After obtaining various successes, the rebels were defeated by the duke of Cumberland at Culloden in 1746. In 1748 peace was concluded at Aix-la-Chapelle. In 1751 died, universally lamented, Frederic prince of Wales, between whom and his father there never was any cordiality. In 1755 war broke out between England and France, which was at first very unpromising; Braddock was defeated and killed in North America, and Minorca was taken in the Mediterranean, for which admiral Byng, who was sent to relieve it, was shot. About this time Mr. Pitt became prime minister, and public affairs began to wear a new face. In 1758 a treaty was entered into between England and Prussia. The French power was nearly destroyed in the East Indies. In America Louisburg was taken, and the capture of Quebec was followed by the entire conquest of Canada. The island of Guadaloupe and the settlement of Senegal were also taken by the English. Admiral Hawke defeated the French fleet under Conflans, and the British flag waved triumphant in every part of the world. Amid this blaze of glory George II. died suddenly, by the bursting of the right ventricle of the heart, October 25, 1760.—Smolles.

GEORGE, the Cappadocian, bishop of Alexandria in the expulsion of St. Athanasius. He was a native of Epiphania in Cilicia, and was, for some time, a purveyor in the army, but his frauds were so great that he was obliged to fly to avoid justice. He then went to Alexandria, where he displayed great zeal for arianism, and in 356 was elected bishop by the prevailing party. His conduct was so cruel and oppressive that the people put him to death in 362.—Moreri.

GEORGE, or AMIRA, a learned Maronite in the seventeenth century, who published at Rome a Syriac and Chaldean grammar in 1696. He became patriarch of the Maronites, and died about 1641.—Ibid.

GEORGE of Trebizonde, (or Trapezuntia), a learned man of the fifteenth century, was a native of Crete. He went to Italy about 1420, and became professor of Greek at Vicenza; after which he removed to Rome, but giving offence to the pope, he was banished from thence in 1452. He then went to Naples; but in 1459 he was at Venice. He was afterwards recalled to Rome, but again fell under the papal displeasure, and was imprisoned in the castle of St. Angelo. He died about 1480. He translated Eusebius's Evangelical Preparation into Latin; some of the works of Aristotle, Plato de Legibus; Ptolomy's Almagest, &c. He also wrote De Arte Rhetorica; Reflections on some of Cicero's Orations and Letters. Tiraboschi.

GERARD (Thom or Tung), founder and first grand-master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, was a native of Martigues, an island on the coast of Provence; he in 1100 assumed a religious habit, and, with many others, engaged in a vow to relieve all distressed Christians in Palestine. This order was confirmed by Anastasius IV. in 1154. Gerard died in 1120. Moreri.

GERARD (Balthazar), the assassin of William I. prince of Orange, was born at Vilefians in Franche-Comté. He entertained this design six years; and at length shor the prince with a pistol at Delft. He declared he committed the murder "to expiate his sins," the prince being at the head of the protestants. He was executed in 1584.—Ibid.

GERARD (John), a learned lutheran divine, was born at Quedlinburg in 1582. He was theological professor at Jena many years, and died in 1637. He wrote Commentaries on the Scriptures, and a Harmony of the Gospels, folio.—Moreri.

GERARD (John), a learned protestant divine, was born at Jena in 1621. He became professor of divinity and rector of the university of Jena, and died there in 1668. He wrote Harmonica Linguarum Orientalium; Disputationum Theologicarum Fasciculus; De Sepultura Mosis; De Ecclesie Coptice Ortu, &c. His son, John Ernest Gerard, was professor of divinity at Giessen, and died in 1707. He was the author of some learned works.—Moreri.

GERARD (Alexander), a learned Scotch divine, was born at Garioch in the county of Aberdeen in 1728. He was educated at Aberdeen and at Edinburgh, and in 1750 was chosen professor of philosophy in the Marischal college at the former place. In 1759 he was ordained a minister, and the following year was chosen professor of divinity, about which time he was admitted, to his doctor's degree. In 1771 he was appointed theological professor in King's college. He died in 1796. Dr. Gerard's works are an Essay on Taste, 8vo; Dissertations on the Genius and Evidences of Christianity, 8vo; an Essay on Genius, 8vo; 2 vols. of Sermons; and a Discourse on Pastoral Care.—Supp. to Ency. Brit.

GERARD (John), an English botanist, was born at Nantwich in Cheshire, in 1545. He was bred a surgeon, and settled in London, where he had the lord Burleigh for a patron, and was superintendant of his lordship's garden. He had also a large physical garden of his own. He died in 1607. He was the author of Catalogus Arborum, Fruticum, et Plantarum, tam indigenarum quam exoticarum, in horto Joh. Gerardi, 4to. 1591. But his great work is the "Herbal, or General History of Plants," folio, published first in 1597. The best edition of it is that by Johnson, in 1633.—Pulteney's Sketches on Botany.

GERARDI (Christofaro), an Italian painter, born at Florence in 1500, and died in 1556. He painted historical subjects, landscape, and grotesque.—Pilkington.

GERARDS (Mark), a painter of Bruges, born in 1561. About 1580 he came to England, and was appointed painter to queen Elizabeth. He was eminent in history, portrait, and landscapes; and died in 1635.—Ibid.

GERBAIS (John), a French divine, was born about 1629. He became doctor of the Sorbonne, and professor of eloquence in the royal college. He distinguished himself so much by his writings in behalf of the liberties of the Gallican church, as greatly to offend the pope. He died in 1699.—Moreri.

GERBEL (Nicholas), a learned German, who was professor of law at Stralsburg, where he died in 1560. He wrote Ilagoge in Tabulum Græciæ Nicholai Sophiani; Vita Joannis Cuspiniani, &c.—Freberi Theatr.

GERBERON (Gabriel), a zealous jansenist, was born in 1628. He was at first of the oratory, and afterwards a benedictine of St. Maur. He taught theology at that place, till Louis XIV. having ordered him to be arrested, he fled to Holland. He died in the abbey of St. Denis, in 1711. He wrote several works, the principal of which is, the History of Jansenism, 3 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

GERBIER (sir Balthazar), a painter of Antwerp, was born in 1592, and died in 1661. He was knighted by Charles I. and appointed that monarch's agent at the court of Brussels. He painted small figures in distemper.—Walpole. Pilkington.

GERBILLON (John Francis), one of the most celebrated of the jesuit missionaries in China, was born in 1654. He wrote Historical Observations on Great Tartary; and Accounts of some of his Travels, are inserted in Du Halde's History of China. He was in great favour with the emperor, for whom he composed two books on Geometry, which were printed at Pekin in the Chinese and Tartar languages. He died at Pekin in 1707, superior-general of the missions in China.—Moreri.

GERDES (Daniel), professor of divinity at Groningen, was born in 1698, at Bremen. He took his doctor's degree at Utrecht, after which he became professor at Duisburg, from whence in 1735 he removed to Groningen, where he died in 1765. His chief works are Vesperæ Vadenſes, five Diatribæ Theologicæ-Philologicæ de Hyperbolis ex Scriptoris Sacris eliminandis, &c.; Observationes Miscellaneæ ad quædam Loca S. S. in quibus Historia Patriarcharum illustratur; Miscellanea Duisburgensia, ad incrementum Rei Literariæ omnis præcipue vero Eruditionis Theologicæ publicata,

GERHARD (Ephraim), a German lawyer and philosopher of the 18th century, was born in Silesia in 1682. He became professor of law at Altdorf, where he died in 1718. The principal of his works is intitled Deineatio Philosophiæ Rationalis.—Novæ. Diſt. Hiſt.

GERLACH (Stephen), a German protestant divine, was born in Suabia in 1546. He was educated at Tübingen, and became chaplain to the imperial embassy at Constantinople, where he resided five years, and in 1578 returned to Tübingen; soon after which he was appointed professor of divinity, and in 1587 dean of the church there. He died in 1612. His works are, Epitome of Ecclesiastical History; Journal of the Embassy sent to the Porte; Dissertations, &c.—Melch. Adami Vit. Theol. Germ.

GERMAIN (Thomas), a French artist, was born at Paris in 1674. His father was goldsmith to the king, and a man of great ingenuity. The son resided a long time at Rome, where he worked as a goldsmith, and exercised himself in drawing. He there performed many fine sculptures in metal, and on his return to Paris became famous in that line. Plate wrought by him fetched very high prices. He was also skilled in architecture; and died in 1748.—Moreri.

GERMANICUS (Cæsar), the son of Nero Claudius Drusus by Antonia, the niece of Augustus. He was adopted by Tiberius, A. D. 4, and married Agrippina, the daughter of Agrippa, and grand-daughter of Augustus. She was a woman of eminent virtues. Germanicus was greatly beloved by the Roman people for his splendid accomplishments and excellent disposition. He served the office of consul, A. D. 12, and at the close of the reign of Augustus he commanded in Gaul, where he suppressed a dangerous insurrection which had broke out in the army. He fought several battles with the Germans, but his successes rendering Tiberius jealous of him, he was recalled. He was next appointed to command in the east, and after restoring order in Greece, went to Egypt, but died on his return, as it is supposed of poison, at Epidaphne, near Antioch, A. D. 19, aged 34. His death was considered as a public loss, and all the houses in Rome were shut up on the occasion. He wrote some comedies in Greek, and translated the phenomena of Aratus into Latin.—Univ. History. Tacitus. Moreri.

GERMANIQ (Anastasio), an Italian prelate, was born in Piedmont in 1551. He was nearly self-taught; after which he studied at Turin and Padua. At the former place he was chosen professor of canon-law. He was employed by the popes, and at length became a bishop of Tarantasia. Being sent ambassador by the duke of Savoy to Madrid, he died there in 1627. He wrote De Sacrorum Immunitatibus, &c.—Moreri.

GERMANUS, patriarch of Constantinople in the 8th century, was an eunuch. He was made bishop of Cyzicum, from whence in 715 he was elevated to the patriarchate. He was a zealous defender of image worship, for which he was degraded in a council held at Constantinople in 730. He died about ten years after. He wrote De Sex Synodis Occuminis, &c. There was another patriarch of Constantinople, of the same name, in 1222. He was deposed in 1240, and restored in 1254; but died shortly after. He wrote Homilies, Orations, &c.—Cave. Moreri.

GERMANY was anciently divided into several independent states. About 590 B. C. some colonies of Gauls, under Segovesus, settled in it. B. C. 25 the Romans gained some advantages over the Germans. A. D. 177 Aurelius made a further progress, and in 276 Probus extended his conquests, but shortly after the Romans lost all their possessions in Germany. In 432 the Huns, a Tartar nation, conquered a great part of Germany. In 771 Charlemagne conquered several of the German nations; in 772 he defeated the Saxons, and in 788 he made himself master of all Germany. On the death of Lewis the Mild, this country was separated from France, Lotharius being declared emperor of Germany, and Charles the Bald king of France. The Carolingian race expired in Lewis IV. and Conrad duke of Franconia and Hesse was made emperor in 912. In 1273 Rodolph of Hapsburg, of the house of Austria, was elected emperor. In 1519 the empire was united to Spain, in the person of Charles V. but this union ceased on his abdication in 1556.—Univ. Hist.

GERMYN (Simon), a Dutch painter of fruit and landscapes, born at Dort in 1650, and died 1719.—Houbraken.

GERSON (John), an eminent divine, whose real name was Chartier, was born at Gerson in Champagne, in 1363. He was educated in the college of Navarre, and in 1395 became chancellor and canon of the church of Paris. He was deputed to go to the council of Pisa, where he contributed to the election of pope Alexander V. He strenuously condemned the murder of the duke of Orleans by the duke of Burgundy, and distinguished himself greatly at the council of Constance. He died in 1429. Many of his works are highly and deservedly valued. They were published in 1706, in 5 vols. folio.—Moreri.

GERSTEN (Christian Louis), mathematical professor at Gießen, where he was born in 1701. He was appointed to the professorship in 1733, but he was afterwards deprived of it for contumacy, in not submitting to the decision of a court of justice in a lawsuit with his brother-in-law. Failing in his endeavours to recover his situation, he wrote a rude letter to the landgrave, for which he was imprisoned in 1748, and did not regain his liberty till 1760. He died in 1762. His works are, Tentamina Systematis novi ad Mutationes Barometri ex Natura elateris Aerei demonstrandas; Methodus nova ad Eclipses Terræ et Appulses Lunæ ad Stellæ Supputandas; Exercitationes recentiores circa Roris Meteora; Methodus nova Calculi Eclipsium Terræ Specialis, in the English Philosophical Transactions, vol. 43; Mercurius sub Sole visus; Quædam Astronomici muralis Idea nova et peculiaris.—Jesler's Gelehrte Lex.

GERVAIS (Armand Francis), a French ecclesiastic of the order of Carmelites. His abilities recommended him to be appointed superior of several houses belonging to his order. In 1695 he retired to the monastery of La Trappe, of which he was made abbot, but resigned that station soon after. He was at last confined in an abbey in the diocese of Troyes, for attacking the Bernardines in his History of the Cistercian Order. He died there in 1741. He abridged the works of St. Cyprian, and wrote the life of that father. He was also the author of the lives of Abelard and Heloise, and other biographical and theological works.—Moreri.

GERVAISE (Nicholas), a French missionary, who went to Siam, and on his return published the Natural and Political History of that country, 4to. 1688. He afterwards became provost of Suevre in the church of St. Martin at Tours. Besides the above he wrote the Life of St. Martin, bishop of Tours, with a History of the Foundation of his Church; History of Boethius, &c. About 1724 he went to Rome, and was appointed bishop of Horren. He then set out for Guiana, where, with all the other missionaries, he was murdered by the natives in 1729.—Ibid.

GESNER (Conrad), an eminent physician and naturalist, was born at Zurich in Switzerland in 1516. His parents were too poor to give him an education, which he acquired by the liberality of some of his fellow citizens. After studying at Stutgard, he went to Paris, where he supported himself by teaching grammar. He was also Greek professor some time at Lausanne. At Basil he took his doctor's degree in physic, and then returned to Zurich, where he practised as a physician, and gave lectures in philosophy. His fame as a naturalist was circulated all over Europe, and he maintained an extensive correspondence with learned men of all countries. He died in 1565. He wrote on the Collection of Plants, a work of vast merit; Apparatus et Delectus Simplicium Medicamentorum, et de Compositione Medicamentorum; Catalogus Plantarum; Hortorum Germaniæ Descriptio Historia Animalium, which is accounted his greatest performance, and procured him the name of the modern Pliny; De Fossilibus, Gemmis, Lapidibus, Metallis, &c.; Bibliotheca Universalis: the last has gone through several editions.—Moreri. Halleri. Bibl. Med.

GESNER (John James), a native of Zurich, and professor there, was born in 1707, and died in 1787. He wrote Theſaurus Universalis omnium Numismatum veterum Græcorum et Romanorum, 4 vols. folio; Specimen Rei Numariæ Numismata Regum Macedoniæ omnia quæ laboribus celeberrimorum Crophii, Lazii, Goltzii, &c.—Gen. Biog.

GESNER (Solomon), a German protestant divine, was born in Silesia in 1559. He studied at Breslaw and Straßburg, and about 1593 became professor of divinity at Wittemberg. He afterwards attained the honourable distinctions of dean and rector of that university, and principal preacher in the castle-church. He died in 1605. He published the prophecy of Hosea from the version of Jerome; a Disquisition on the Psalter; Dissertation on the Books of Genesis; Sermons, &c.—Melch. Adamsi Vit. Germ. Theol.

GESNER (Solomon), a poet and painter, was born at Zurich in Switzerland, in 1730. His father was a bookseller and printer, and brought him up to the same business. In 1753 he published a short poem, in poetic prose, intitled Night, which was followed by the pastoral of Daphnis. His next work was the Idylls, tender and interesting. But his reputation was greatly increased and extended by the Death of Abel, which has been translated into several languages. In 1765 he published ten Landscapes, engraved by himself from his own designs. These were followed by others. He was also the author of a Letter on Landscape Painting; Poems, &c. He died in 1788.—Preface to his Works.

GESNER (John Matthias), a profound scholar and critic, was born at Roth in Anspach in 1691. On the recommendation of Budaus, he was appointed rector of the school of Weimar, which situation he filled eleven years. From thence he removed to Leipzig; and lastly to Gottingen, where he was made professor of rhetoric, public librarian, and inspector of public schools. He died in 1761. His most esteemed works are; editions of some of the Classics, and an excellent Latin Theſaurus, 4 vols. folio.—Gen. Biog.

GETA (Septimius), son of the emperor Severus, and brother of Caracalla, who, being jealous of his accomplishments, stabbed him in the arms of their mother Julia, at the age of 23, A.D. 212.—Univ. Hist.

GETHIN (Grace), an ingenious English lady, was the daughter of sir George Norton in Somersetshire, and born in 1676. She married early sir Richard Gethin of Ireland, but died soon after in 1697, and her remains were interred in Westminster abbey. After her death appeared a work, intitled Reliquiæ Gethinianæ, or some remains of the most ingenious and excellent Lady Grace Gethin, lately deceased, &c. 1700, 4to. Provision was made for a sermon to be preached annually to commemorate her memory, in Westminster abbey; and Mr. Congreve wrote a poem to her honour on reading her book.—Female H'q'rt'bles.

GEUSS (John Michael), mathematical professor at Copenhagen, was born in Holstein in 1745, and died there in 1786. He published the Theory of the Art of constructing Mines, 1776; a Voyage to Iceland, translated from the German, 2 vols. 4to.; an edition of Logarithmi Buggiani Numerorum ab Unitate ad 10000, &c.—Gen. Biog.

GHELEN (Sigismund), a learned man of the 16th century. He was a native of Prague; and, by the recommendation of Erasmus, he became corrector of the press in the office of Frobenius. He died in 1554. Ghelen published a dictionary in four languages, Greek, Latin, German, and Dalmatian; and some translations of ancient authors.—Bayles. Moreri.

GHEZZI (Pier Leone), a painter, born at Rome in 1674. He was appointed by the pope to adorn the castle of Gandolfo, and other works. Francis I. duke of Parma, conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1755.—Pilkington.

GHILINI (Jerom), a learned Italian, was born in the Milanese in 1589. He became eminent as a canonist, and obtained ecclesiastical preferment at Milan. He died about 1670. His works are Poems; Cafes of Conscience; Annals of Allessandria; and Teatro di huomini Letterati, 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

GHIRLANDAIO (Domenico), a Florentine painter, was born in 1449. He was intended for a goldsmith; but having a strong passion for painting, he cultivated that art with great success. His manner was however gothic and dry, and he deserves most to be celebrated for being the tutor of Michael Angelo. He died at the age of 44, leaving three sons, David, Benedict, and Rhandolph, all painters.—Pilkington.

GHISOLFI (Giovanni), a painter, born at Milan in 1628, and died in 1683. He excelled in painting perspective views and sea ports.—Ibid.

GIAPAR, or Sadek, i.e. the Just, a mahometan doctor, was descended, by his mother's side, from the caliph Abubekir. He died at Medina in 764. A book of musselman prophecies is ascribed to him; another on lots; but his Traditions are most esteemed.—D'Herbelot.

GIAHEDR, or large-eyed, another musselman doctor. He was the head of a sect called Motazales, who blended philosophy with religion. He studied the Greek philosophers, and wrote some treatises on metaphysics. He died in 840.—D'Herbelot.

GIANNONE (Peter), an historian, was born at Naples about 1680. He wrote the history of that kingdom, for some freedoms in which, respecting the papal power, he was obliged to quit his native country. He died in Piedmont, 1748. After his death appeared his posthumous works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GIBBON (Edward), a celebrated English historian, was born at Putney in 1737, of a genteel family. He was first placed at a private school at Kingston, and next at Westminster school; from whence he was removed to Magdalen college, Oxford. While there, he read books of controversial divinity, and particularly those between the papists and protestants; and not having had the advantage of religious instruction in his childhood, he conceived that the truth lay only on the side of the romanists. Accordingly, in 1753, he renounced heresy in the presence of a popish priest in London. His father was greatly concerned at this defection in an only son, and to reclaim him sent him to Lausanne, in Switzerland, under the care of Mr. Pavilliard, a protestant divine, by whose instructions he was convinced of the errors of the Romish church, and he received the sacrament according to the reformed communion, on Christmas day, in 1754. While at Lausanne he pursued his classical studies with ardour, and made himself master of the French language. He here fell in love with the daughter of a minister, but was dissuaded from entering into the marriage state by the force of paternal remonstrance; and he lived single the remainder of his life. The lady afterwards became the wife of the famous Necker. In 1758 he returned to England, where he began to collect a noble library; and in 1761 published, in French, a small volume, intitled, “Essai sur l'Étude de la Littérature,” which possesses considerable merit as a juvenile performance. He was at this time a captain in the Hampshire militia, which line he quitted at the peace of 1763, when he visited Paris, and from thence went to Lausanne. He next travelled into Italy; and, while sitting amid the ruins of the capitol at Rome, formed the idea of writing the decline and fall of that mighty empire. In 1767 he assisted M. Deyverdun in writing the Mémoires Littéraires de la Grande Bretagne. In 1770, Mr. Gibbon published in English a pamphlet, intitled, “Critical Observations on the Sixth Book of the Æneid,” the design of which was to refute bishop Warburton's hypothesis on the descent of Æneas. The same year, by the death of his father, he came into the possession of the family estate; but it was much involved. In 1774 he was returned to parliament for the borough of Liskeard; but though he sat eight years, he never distinguished himself as a speaker, but always gave a silent vote for the minister. In 1776 appeared the first volume of his great work, the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, which was afterwards extended to six volumes, 4to. and on the merits of which no remark need be made. It must not, however, be passed over, that in this truly splendid history the author opened a masked battery against Christianity in several places, but especially in two chapters of the first volume, on the growth and progress of that religion. Several writers attacked the historian, to one of whom only, Mr. Davis, who had charged the author with want of fidelity, did Mr. Gibbon vouchsafe a reply. He was next employed by ministers in writing a memoir in justification of this country's going to war with France, for the part taken by that court in the American contest. This piece was written in French, and was greatly admired all over Europe. For this he obtained a seat at the board of trade, which he lost on the abolition of that board by Mr. Burke's bill. In 1783 he retired to Switzerland, where he employed himself in completing his History; but when the French revolution began to disturb all the neighbouring states, Mr. Gibbon returned to England, where he died of a dropsy, Jan. 16, 1794. After his death appeared his posthumous works, with his memoirs, written by himself, and edited and finished by his friend, Lord Sheffield, 2 vols. 4to.

GIBBONS (Grinling), an eminent sculptor in the seventeenth century, was the son of a Dutchman who settled in England. He was employed by Charles II. who appointed him to a place in the board of works, and employed him in ornamenting several of his palaces. He carved the foliage in the chapel at Windsor, the choir of St. Paul's cathedral, and the admirable font in St. James's church, Westminster; but his principal performance is said to be at Petworth. He died in 1721.—Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting.

GIBBONS (Orlando), an eminent musician, was born at Cambridge in 1583. He became organist of the chapel royal at the age of 21; and, in 1622, was created doctor of music by the university of Oxford. He died at Canterbury of the small-pox, in 1625. He was the best church composer of his time; he also published Madrigals, 1612. His two brothers and son were likewise good musicians.—Burney, Hawkins.

GIBBS (James), an architect, was born at Aberdeen in 1683. He designed St. Martin's and St. Mary le Strand, London; the new church at Derby; the senate-house, and the improvements of King's college, Cambridge; and other works. He died in 1754.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

GIBELYN (M. le comte de), a French writer, born in 1725. He wrote a work, intitled, Le Monde primitif comparé au

Monde moderne, for which the French academy twice awarded him their annual prize. He died in 1734.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GIBERT (Balthazar), a French writer, was born at Aix in 1662. He was made professor of rhetoric in the college of Mazarin, at Paris, in 1688, and in 1734 he was elected syndic of the university: but in 1740 he was exiled to Auxerre for opposing the revocation of an appeal of the university against the bull Unigenitus. He died the year following. His principal works are, De la Veritable Eloquence; Relexions sur la Rhetorique; Jugemens des Savans sur les Auteurs qui ont traité de la Rhetorique; La Rhetorique, ou les Regles de l'Eloquence.—Moreri.

GIBERT (John Peter), a French divine, was born at Aix in 1660. He taught theology at Toulon and at Aix for some years; but in 1709 he removed to Paris, where he led a retired life, and refused several ecclesiastical preferments. He died in 1736. His eminence as a canonist was very great, and his works are highly valued. They are, The Duties of a Christian; Cases of Practice relating to the Sacraments; Doctrina Canonum in corpore Juris inclusorum, &c.; Memoirs relating to the Scriptures; Ecclesiastical Institutions; The Customs of the Gallican Church, with respect to Censures and Irregularity; Tradition, or the History of the Church with reference to the Sacrament of Marriage, &c.—Moreri.

GIBERTI (Giammateo), an Italian prelate, was born at Palermo. He became a great favourite of popes Leo X. and Clement VII. The latter made him governor of Tivoli and bishop of Verona. He was one of the hostages delivered up by that pontiff in 1527 to the Imperialists, from whom he received very ill usage. On his release he retired to his bishopric, but was recalled to Rome by Paul III. He set up a Greek press in his palace, from whence issued several works of the fathers. He died in 1543. His letters and directions to the clergy have been often printed.—Tiraboschi.

GIBIEUF (William), a French ecclesiastic, of the congregation of the Oratory, who died in 1650. His work intitled, On the Liberty of God, and of the Creature, in Latin, is an esteemed performance.—Moreri.

GIBSON (Edmund), a learned and exemplary prelate, was born at Bampton, in Westmoreland, in 1669. After receiving a grammatical education in the school of his native town, he was sent to Queen's college, Oxford, where he applied particularly to the study of the northern languages. In 1691 he took his first degree in arts, and published a new edition of Drummond's Polemio-Middiana, and James V. of Scotland's Cantilena Rustica, 4to. with curious notes. In 1692 he published a latin version of the Chronicon Saxonum, with notes, 4to. These works were followed by another volump, intituled, Librorum Manuscriptorum in duabus insignibus Bibliothecis, altera Dugdaliana Oxonii, Catalogus, dedicated to bishop Tenison, which procured him the patronage of that prelate, who appointed him his chaplain. In 1694 he took the degree of M. A.; and the year following appeared his edition of Camden's Britannia, with considerable additions. In 1703 he obtained the rectory of Stisted, in Essex; and in 1702 his patron, the archbishop, gave him the degree of D. D. The year following he obtained the rectory of Lambeth, and the mastership of the hospital of St. Mary. In 1710 he was made archdeacon of Surrey, and in 1713 he published his Codex Juris Ecclesiastici Anglicani, in folio, which procured the author great applause from the friends of the church, and much censure from its enemies. On the death of Dr. Tenison in 1715, and the advancement of bishop Wake to the primacy, Dr. Gibson was made bishop of Lincoln, and in 1723 he was translated to London, in which elevated station he conducted himself with apostolical zeal, piety, and disinterestedness. He died at Bath in 1748. Besides the above works, he published several excellent pastoral letters, tending to check infidelity, immorality, and enthusiasm.—Biog. Brit.

GIBSON (Richard), known by the name of the dwarf, was an English painter in the time of sir Peter Lely, whose manner he studied. In his youth he was servant to a lady at Mortlake, who, perceiving his taste for painting, put him under de Cleyne, for instruction. He was page to Charles I. and when he married Mrs. Anne Shepherd, who was also a dwarf, the king honoured the wedding with his presence, and gave away the bride. They were of equal stature, each measuring three feet ten inches. They had nine children, five of whom arrived at years of maturity, and were of the usual stature. Gibson died in his 75th year, and his wife in 1709, at the age of 89.—Walpole.

GIBSON (William), a nephew of the above, was instructed by him and sir Peter Lely in the art of painting, whose works he copied. He died at the age of 58.—Ibid.

GIDEON, a judge of Israel, was of the tribe of Manasseh, and divinely called, as he was threshing, to deliver his countrymen from the Midianites; after which he judged the people forty years, and died B. C. 1236.—Book of Judges.

GIFANIUS (Hubertus), a learned critic, was born at Buren in Guelderland, in 1534. He studied at Louvain, and at Paris, but took his degree of doctor of civil law at Orleans. He was made counsellor of state by the emperor Rodolph. and died in 1604. He wrote comments on Homer, Aristotle's politics and ethics, and upon Lucretius: also Comment. de Imperatore Justiniano; and Index Histor. Rerum Romanarum.—Boyle. Moreri.

GIFFORD (Dr. Andrew), a baptist minister, was born in 1700. He was assistant librarian of the British Museum many years, and died in 1784. He bequeathed his library to the baptist academy at Bristol. Dr. Gifford was a learned antiquary and a pious divine.—Gent. Mag.

GIGOZO (Anthony), a learned Italian divine, of the 17th century. He lived at Milan, and translated into Latin the Commentaries of R. R. G. Solomon, Aben Ezra, and Levi Gerson on the Proverbs: but his greatest work is Theaurus Lingue Arabicæ, seu Lexicon Arabico, Latinum, 4 vols. folio. He died about 1632.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

GILBERT (William), a physician, who discovered several of the properties of the loadstone, was born at Colchester in 1540, and educated at Cambridge, but took his degree of M. D. abroad. On his return he was elected a fellow of the college of physicians, and became physician to queen Elizabeth. In 1600 he published a work, intitled, De Magnete, magneticisque Corporibus, et de magno Magnete tellure, Physiologia nova, in which are many important suggestions for the improvement of navigation. He died in 1603.—Biog. Brit.

GILBERT (sir Humphrey), an able navigator, was born at Dartmouth, in Devonshire, in 1559. His mother becoming a widow, married Mr. Raleigh, by whom she had the celebrated Sir Walter. Humphrey was educated at Eton and Oxford, but he forsook an academical life for the military, and served with great reputation in Ireland, as a reward for which he was knighted in 1570. In 1576 he published a Discourse to prove a passage by the north-west to Cathaia and the East Indies. Two years afterwards he obtained a patent for establishing settlements in North America. In 1583 he took possession of Newfoundland, where he thought to find silver mines, and made another voyage for that purpose, but on his return the vessel foundered, and all on board perished.—Biog. Brit. Prince's Works.

GILDAS, a British monk of the 6th century. There is nothing extant of his but an Epistle on the depravity of the Britons, written in 781, the best edition of which is that by Dr. Gale in 1691. Bishop Bale mentions another Gildas, who was a native of Wales, and flourished about 820. He was a monk, and wrote a calendar of saints, yet extant in MS.; and Leland notices a poet of the name, who drew up the prophecies of Merlin in Latin verse.—Cave Hist. Lit. Moreri.

GILDON (Charles), a poet, was born at Gillingham in Dorsetshire, about 1666, and educated at Douay. In 1685 he returned to England, where he wasted his paternal estate; and then turned dramatic writer, but without success. He next wrote a book, intitled, The complete Art of Poetry. He died in 1723.—Biog. Dram.

GILKS, of Viterbo, an Italian cardinal of the 16th century, who was a great favourite with the popes Julius II. and Leo. X. the latter of whom sent him legate to Germany, on which occasion he was made a cardinal. He died in 1532. He wrote Remarks on the Three first Chapters of Genesis; Commentaries on the Psalms; Dialogues; Letters and Poems.—Moreri.

GILES (John), or Johannes Ægidius, was born at St. Alban's. He lived in the 13th century; was physician to Philip of France, and a professor at Paris and Montpellier. He was also doctor of divinity, and the first Englishman who entered among the dominicans.—Bale. Pitt.

GILMER, or GELIMER, the last king of the Vandals in Africa, was the descendant of Genferic. He deposed his cousin Hilderic in 530, but he was defeated shortly after by Belisarius, on which he retreated into Numidia. He was a second time defeated, and conducted in triumph to Constantinople, repeatedly exclaiming as he was led along, Vanity of vanity! all is vanity! Justinian gave him an estate, and would have created him a patrician, on condition that he renounced arianism, which he refused.—Gibbon. Univ. Hist.

GILL (John, D. D.), a baptist minister, was born at Kettering in Northamptonshire, in 1697. He was almost wholly self-taught, and acquired a great knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. About 1716 he became a preacher, and for some time officiated to a congregation at Higham Ferrers, from whence in 1719 he removed to London, where he was chosen pastor of the baptist congregation in Horsleydown. He died in 1721. The university of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity. He published an Exposition of the Bible, 9 vols. folio; The Cause of God and Truth, 3 vols. 8vo; a Body of Divinity, 3 vols. 4to.; a Dissertation on the Antiquity of the Hebrew Language; and several Tracts and Sermons. In his sentiments he was a Calvinist of the most rigid cast.—Life prefixed to his Sermons and Tracts.

GILLES (Peter), a learned traveller, was born at Albi in 1490. About 1534 Francis I. of France sent him to travel in the Levant; but, neglecting to supply him with money, Gilles was obliged to enter into the army of Soliman II. He returned from Constantinople with the French ambassador in 1550, and died at Rome in 1555. He wrote De Vi et Natura Animalium; De Bosphoro Thracio, and de Topographia Constantinopoleos.—Moreri.

GILLOT (Claude), a French painter and engraver, was the disciple of Watteau. He was born at Langres in 1673, and died at Paris in 1722. He succeeded chiefly in grotesque figures.—Pilkington.

GILPIN (Bernard), an excellent English divine, was born at Kentmire in Westmoreland in 1517, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. But he afterwards removed to Christ church, where, by reading the works of Erasmus, he secretly embraced the principles of the reformation. In 1552 he obtained the living of Norton in the diocese of Durham, which, however, he soon resigned, thinking himself not qualified for the pastoral charge. By the advice of his uncle, bishop Tonstal, he went abroad, where he caused a manuscript treatise of that prelate on the eucharist to be printed. He returned to England in 1556, and was presented by his uncle to the archdeaconry of Durham, and the rectory of Easington, where he laboured with truly apostolical zeal; and in his capacity of archdeacon made strict visitations, being a great enemy to non-residence and pluralities. He was next presented to the rectory of Houghton le Spring, where his labours in promoting true religion were so remarkable, that bishop Bonner gave orders for arresting him, and conveying him to London. Gilpin dressed himself for the stake, but before he reached London news came of the queen's death, on which he returned to his parish, to the great joy of his people. Queen Elizabeth offered him the bishopric of Carlisle, which he refused. He died in 1583.—Life of Gilpin by bishop Carleton. Ditto by W. Gilpin.

GILPIN (Richard), a non-conformist divine, was a native of Cumberland. He took the degree of M.D. in Queen's college, Oxford, but afterwards was ordained, and had the living of Greystock in Cumberland. He was silenced for not complying with the act of uniformity, in 1662. He then practised physic with success at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. He died in 1697.—Calamy. Palmer.

GILPIN (William), an ingenious divine, was a native of Westmoreland, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. He kept for many years a respectable seminary at Cheam in Surrey, and afterwards became vicar of Boldre in Hampshire, and prebendary of Salisbury. He died April 5, 1804, aged 80. Mr. Gilpin published, The Life of Bernard Gilpin, his ancestor, above-mentioned; The Lives of Latimer, Wickliffe, Hufe, and archbishop Cranmer; Lectures on the Church Catechism, 12mo.; Exposition of the New Testament, 2 vols. 8vo.; Observations relative to Picturesque Beauty, 8vo.; A Tour to the Lakes, 2 vols. 8vo.; Remarks on Forest Scenery, 2 vols.; Essay on Prints; Essays on Picturesque Beauty, &c.; Observations on the River Wye, &c. 8vo.; Picturesque Remarks on the Western Parts of England, 8vo.; Ser- mons to a Country Congregation, 2 vols. 8vo.; Moral Contrasts, 8vo. &c. &c.—Gent. Mag.

GINNANI (Francis), count, a naturalist, was born at Ravenna in 1716. He became page to duke Anthony Farnese, after which he led a retired life on his estate, improving agriculture, and collecting a museum of natural curiosities. He died in 1766. His principal work is a Historical Treatise of the Diseases of Growing Corn, 4to. 1759. His other writings are, Account of his Museum; A Description of Indigenous Plants; and a Dissertation on the Scirpus of Ravenna—Hal'eri Bibl. Botan.

GIACOMO (Fra Giovanni), an architect, was a native of Verona, where he taught a school, and had Julius Cæsar Scalliger for a pupil. He was versed in theology, mathematics, and antiquities, and distinguished himself by constructing several bridges in France and Italy. He died in 1521. He published an edition of Vitruvius, and another of Cæsar's Commentaries, &c.—Tirab'schi.

GIOJA (Flavio), a mathematician of Naples, to whom is ascribed the invention of the compass. He was born about 1300. He marked the north with a fleur de lis, in honour of the sovereigns of Naples, who were a younger branch of the royal family of France.—Moreri.

GIOLITO (de Ferrari), a celebrated printer of Venice in the 16th century. His reputation was acquired chiefly by the elegance of his type and paper. He was ennobled by Charles V. He died in 1547, leaving two sons, both printers.—Tirab'schi.

GIORDANI (Vital), an Italian mathematician of the 17th century, was a native of the kingdom of Naples. He was of a dissolute turn, and became a soldier in the pope's galleys, and the admiral under whom he served made him his purser. He next obtained the place of keeper of the castle of St. Angelo at Rome, where he applied so assiduously to the study of the mathematics, as to be appointed to a professorship. He died in 1711. His works are Euclide Restituito, folio; De Componentis Gravium Momentis, folio; Fundamentum Doctrinæ Motus Gravium, et ad Hyacinthum Christophorum Epistola.—Moreri.

GIORDANO (Luca), a painter, was born at Naples in 1632. He was high in favour with the king of Spain, who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1705.—Pilkington.

GIORGIANI, a celebrated muselman doctor, whose real name was Alfeid Alscherif Abou Hassan, or Houffain Ali, but so called from his being a native of Georgia. He died at Shiraz in 1413. He wrote an Explanation of Terms used in Philosophy and Theology; a Commentary on Euclid, &c. There was another mathematician, and also a grammarian, of the same name.—D'Herbelot.

GIORGIONE, or GEORGIO BARBARELLI, a painter, was born at Castel Franco, in the state of Venice, in 1478. He studied the works of Leonard da Vinci, whom he soon surpassed. Titian worked under him to obtain his manner of colouring, and Giorgione, perceiving his design, dismissed him. His finest work, in oil, is a painting of Christ carrying his cross, at Venice. He died in 1511.—Pilkington.

GIOTTINO (Tomaso), an Italian painter, born at Florence in 1324. His real name was Stefano, but he was called Giottino on account of the resemblance of his style to that of Giotto. He died in 1356.—Ibid.

GIOTTO, an eminent painter, sculptor, and architect, was born near Florence in 1276. He was chiefly admired for his works in mosaic, the best of which is a ship over the grand entrance of St. Peter's church at Rome. His mosaic of the death of the Virgin, at Florence, was wonderfully admired by Michael Angelo. He died in 1336.—Pilkington.

GIRALDI (Gigio Gregorio), an eminent writer, was born at Ferrara in 1479. He died in 1552. The most esteemed of his works are Syntagma de Diis Gentium, and a history of the Greek and Latin poets.—Moreri.

GIRALDI (John Baptist Cintio), an Italian poet and physician, was born at Ferrara in 1504. He was secretary to the duke of Ferrara, and professor of rhetoric at Pavia. He died at his native place in 1573. He wrote nine tragedies in Italian: but his principal work is intitled Ecatom-mithi, or A hundred Novels, 2 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

GIRALDUS. See BARRY.

GIRARD (John Baptiste), a celebrated jesuit, was a native of Dôle. He was tried before the parliament of Aix, on the accusation of Marie Catherine Cadriere, a girl of 18, for using sorcery, first to abuse her, and afterwards to destroy the fruit of her womb. He was acquitted, but the affair made a great noise.—Moreri.

GIRARD (Gabriel), author of the celebrated work intitled Synonymes François, &c. was almoner to the dukes de Berry, and the king's interpreter for the Russian and Slavonian languages. He also wrote a work, intitled Principes de la Langue Française. The Abbé Girard died in 1748, at the age of 70.—Now. Dict. Hist.

GIRARDON (Francis), a sculptor and architect, was born at Troyes in 1628. After studying under Anguier, he was sent to Rome by Louis XIV. to perfect himself in his art, and he succeeded le Brun as inspector-general of sculpture. His chief works are the Mausoleum of Richelieu, in the church of the Sorbonne; the equestrian statue of Louis XIV.; and the rape of Proserpine, in the gardens of Versailles. He died in 1715.—D'Argenville. Moreri.

GIRON (Don Peter), duke of Ossuna, a

Spaniard of illustrious birth, and successively viceroy of Sicily and Naples, was a man of great valour and fortitude, but of a cruel disposition. While he was viceroy of Naples, he patronized the famous conspiracy at Venice, on which is built Otway's best play. The duke of Ossuna fell at last into disgrace at his court, and died in prison in 1624.—Moreri.

GIROUST (James), a French jesuit and popular preacher, was born at Beaufort in Anjou, in 1624, and died in 1689. His sermons in 5 vols. 12mo. were printed in 1704.—Moreri.

GIRTIN (J.) a young painter of promising talents, was born in 1773, and died in November 1802. So great was his attachment to his profession, that he worked at it till within a few days of his death, though labouring under a painful asthma. He drew landscapes from nature in water colours, and some in oil. The panorama view of London, which was exhibited, and his views of Paris, are admirable representations. Prints of the latter have been published.—Monthly Mag. Feb. 1803.

GISBERT (John), a learned French jesuit, was born at Cahors in 1639. He was professor of divinity at Toulouse many years, and afterwards provincial of his order in Languedoc. He died in 1710. He wrote Anti-Probabilismus, 4to. and other esteemed works. He is not to be confounded with Blaise Gisbert, a jesuit, born also at Cahors, and who died at Montpellier in 1731. He wrote some works on the Education of a prince, and another on Christian Eloquence.—Moreri.

GIULANO (di Majano), a Florentine sculptor and architect, was born in 1377, and died at Naples at the age of 70. He constructed the magnificent palace of Poggio Reale, and other edifices at Naples. He was also employed at Rome by Paul II.—Jb.

Mem. of Medicine.*

GLOUCESTER (Robert of), the oldest of our English poets, lived in the time of Henry II. Camden quotes many of his old English rhymes, and speaks highly of him. He died about the beginning of the reign of king John, at an advanced age.—Bale. Pitt.

GLOVER (Richard), a poet, was born at London in 1712, and educated at Cheam school, where, at sixteen, he wrote some verses to the memory of Sir Isaac Newton, prefixed to Dr. Pemberton's view of that great man's philosophy. On leaving school, he entered on the mercantile line under his father, who was engaged in the Hamburgh trade. In 1737 he married a lady of fortune, and the same year published his Leonidas, an epic poem. His poem of London, or the Progress of Commerce, appeared in 1739. The same year he published his popular ballad, intitled, Hosier's Ghost, intended to rouse the national spirit against the Spaniards. About this time he distinguished himself as a city politician, in taking the lead of the opposition at elections. His credit was so great that he was appointed to manage an application to parliament in behalf of the London merchants, and his speech at the bar of the house of commons was printed. In 1753 was acted at Drury lane his tragedy of Boadicea, which had but indifferent success. His next tragedy, Medea, in 1761, had better luck. The same year he was chosen into parliament for Weymouth. He died in 1785. Another epic of his, intitled, Athenaid, was published in 1788, in 8 vols. 12mo. but it is of indifferent merit.—Eur. Mag.

He was one of the first members of the society afterwards called the royal, fellow of the college of physicians, and physician to Cromwell, by whose means he was appointed warden of Merton college, Oxford. But at the restoration he lost that situation, on which he removed to Gresham college, of which he was medical professor. Bishop Ward says, he was the first Englishman who made a telescope. He died in 1674. He wrote on the Abuses of the Apothecaries, and several papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Ward's Lives of Gresham Professors.

GODEAU (Antony), a French bishop, was born in 1605. He was one of the first members of the academy of belles lettres. Cardinal Richelieu gave him the bishopric of Grasse, which he afterwards exchanged for that of Vence. He died in 1672. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History, 3 vols. folio; and a Translation of the Psalms into French verse.—Moreri GODEFROI (Denys), an eminent jurist, was born at Paris in 1549. He was a counsellor in the parliament; but being a protestant he was obliged to quit France, on which he settled first at Geneva, and afterwards at Strasburg, where he died in 1622. His works are Corpus Juris civilis cum Notis, 4to; Notæ in iv. Libr. Institutionum; Opuscula Varia Juris, &c.—His eldest son Thodore turned catholic, and became counsellor of state in France. He died at Strasburg in 1642. He wrote on the genealogical history of France. James GODEFROI, another son of Denys, adhered to the religion of his father, and became professor of law at Geneva, and a member of the council. He died in 1659. He wrote several learned works, and edited Cicero and other antient authors.—Denys GODEFROI, son of Theodore, wrote Memoires and Instructions pour servir dans les Negotiations les Affaires concernant les Droits du Roi, folio. He died in 1681. John GODEFROI, son of the last mentioned, died in 1732. He edited Philip de Comines's Memoirs, 5 vols. 8vo.; and wrote the Memoirs of Queen Margaret, &c.—Moreri.

GODESCHALC, or GOTTESCHALC, surnamed Fulgentius, a benedictine monk of the 9th century, was a native of Saxony. In 848 he preached the doctrine of absolute predestination, on which account he was attacked by Rabanus Maurus, archbishop of Mentz, and in a council called at that city presented a written defence of his opinions. But the council condemned them, and sent the author prisoner to Hincmar, archbishop of Rheims, who called a council at Quercy in 849, by which Godeschalc was degraded from the priesthood, scourged, and sent to prison. He gained however many followers, and some provincial councils in France approved his doctrines. He died about 869. Only two confessions of his are extant.—Usseri Vit. Godeschalc.

GODEWYCK (Margarita), a Dutch painteress, born at Dort in 1627, and died in 1677. She had a fine taste for painting landscapes, and for working in embroidery.—Pilkington.

GODFREY (sir Edmundbury); a magistrate, who was active in the discovery of the popish plot in 1678; and was made remarkable by the manner of his death. His body was found pierced by his own sword, and with many marks of violence, on which account his death was imputed to the papists; and his funeral was performed with great pomp.—Granger.

GODFREY of Bouillon, chief of the first crusades, was the son of Eustace count of Boulogne. He served with great valour under the emperor Henry IV. after which he went to the holy land, where he took the city of Jerusalem in 1099. The army elected him king of that country; but he rejected the title from motives of piety, assuming that of defender of the holy sepulchre. He formed a code of laws for his subjects; and died in 1103.—Moreri.

GODINOT (John), a French divine, was born at Rheims in 1661. He was a canon in the cathedral of his native city, besides which he exercised the profession of a wine merchant. His riches however he bestowed in charitable uses. He was a zealous jansenist, and died in 1749.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GODIVA, a lady celebrated for an uncommon instance of generosity, was the wife of Leofric, earl of Mercia. Soliciting her husband to exempt the city of Coventry from a heavy toll, he affected to consent on condition that she rode naked through the streets of that city, which she submitted to. This extraordinary adventure was painted in one of the windows of Trinity church in Coventry.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

GODOLPHIN (John), an eminent civilian, was born in Cornwall in 1617. He took the degree of doctor of civil law at Oxford. In 1653 he was appointed one of the three judges of the admiralty; at the restoration he was made king's advocate, and died in 1678. He wrote the Holy Limbec, or an Extraction of the Spirit from the Letter, 12mo.; the Holy Arbour, or a Body of Divinity, fol.; Catalogue of such as have filled the Office of Lord High Admiral; View of the Admiralty Jurisdiction, 8vo.; the Orphan's Legacy, or a Testamentary Abridgment, 4to.; Repertorium Canonum, 4to.—Wood's A. O.

GODWIN, earl, a powerful Saxon lord, was earl of Kent. In 1017 he accompanied Canute in an expedition against Sweden, where he behaved with so much valour as to receive the daughter of that monarch in marriage, and large grants of land. On the death of Canute, the earl sided with Hardicanute against Harold, but he afterwards espoused the cause of the latter. He was charged with murdering Alfred, one of the sons of Ethelred II. from which he vindicated himself by oath. On the death of Hardicanute he joined Edward, who married his daughter, but afterwards he rebelled against Edward, and, being unsuccessful, fled to Flanders. Having gathered fresh forces, he sailed up the Thames, and appeared before London, which threw the country into such confusion, that the king was obliged to negotiate peace with Godwin, who was restored to his estates. He died suddenly while dining with the king at Winchester in 1053.—Biog. Brit.

GODWIN (Thomas), an English bishop, was born at Oakingham in Berkshire, in 1517. He received his academical education at Magdalen college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. In 1549, he was appointed master of Brackley school, Northamptonshire, but resigned it on the accession of Mary, and practised physic. In the next reign he entered into the church, and in 1565 was made dean of Christ Church, Oxford; the year following he was removed to the deanry of Canterbury. In 1584 he was promoted to the see of Bath and Wells, but not long after he was suspended from his office by the queen's orders for marrying a second wife. He died in 1590.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

GODWIN (Francis), son of the preceding, was born at Havington in Northamptonshire, in 1561. He received his education at Christ church college, Oxford; and greatly assisted Mr. Camden in his topographical enquiries. In 1601 he was promoted to the see of Llandaff, from whence he was translated to Hereford in 1617. He died in 1633. Bishop Godwin published in 1601, "A Catalogue of English Bishops," 4to. This work he afterwards greatly enlarged, under the title of De Præsulibus Angliæ Commentarius, &c. He was also the author of Rerum Anglicarum Hen. VIII. Edw. VI. et Maria, regnantibus, Annales, folio; and a curious book, printed after his death, intitled, the Man in the Moon, or a Discourse of a Voyage thither, by Domingo Gonzales, 8vo.—Ibid.

GODWIN (Dr. Thomas), a learned English divine, was born in Somersetshire in 1587, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford. About 1609 he became master of the school at Abingdon in Berkshire, for the use of which he published in 1613 Romanæ Historiæ Anthologia, or an Exposition of Roman Antiquities; in 1616 appeared his Synopsis Antiquitatum Hebraicarum ad Explicationem utriusque Testamenti valde necessaria, &c. At this time he resigned his school, and obtained the rectory of Brightwell in the same county, where he died in 1642. Besides the above works, he wrote Moses and Aaron, Civil and Ecclesiastical Rites used by the antient Hebrews, 4to. a book of standard merit.—Ibid.

GODWIN (Mary Wollstonecraft), an extraordinary writer, was born at Beverly in Yorkshire, in 1768. Her father's extravagancies reducing his family to poverty, she opened a day-school, first at Ilington, and afterwards at Newington-green. She next became governess to the daughters of lord Kingsborough, in whose family, however, she remained but a short time. In 1787 she settled in the metropolis, and had recourse to her pen for a subsistence, and published a little work, intitled, Original Stories for the Use of Children; translated some works from the French and German; and had some concern in the Analytical Review. In 1790 she published an Answer to Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution, and the year following her Vindication of the Rights of Women. In 1792 she went to Paris, and there formed an unfortunate connection with an American gentleman, by whom she had a daughter. For him she undertook a voyage to Norway to regulate some commercial concerns. This tour occasioned her Letters from Scandinavia. On her arrival in England she found herself forsaken by this man, on which she endeavoured to drown herself in the Thames, but was extricated after throwing herself from Putney bridge. In 1796 she married Mr. William Godwin, but died in child-birth in August, 1797. After her death were published her posthumous works, consisting of Letters and Fragments.—Life written by her husband. Necrology.

GOEREE (William), a learned bookseller at Amsterdam, was born at Middleburg in 1635. He was the author of Jewish Antiquities, 2 vols. folio, Utrecht, 1700; a General Introduction to the Art of Painting; and a book on the Principles of Architecture. He died at Amsterdam in 1715. His son was an excellent painter, and died at Amsterdam in 1735.—Moreri.

GOERTZ (John, baron of), a Swedish nobleman of great talents and ambition, was a native of Holstein. He became the favourite and minister of Charles XII. to gratify whose passion for war, he had recourse to the most oppressive measures. On the death of that monarch he was beheaded in 1719.—Moreri.

GOLS (Hugo Vander), a Flemish painter, born at Bruges, and flourished at the beginning of the 16th century. He was a disciple of Van Eyck, and several fine works by him are still remaining at his native place.—Pilkington.

GOETZE (George Henry), a German protestant divine, born at Leipzig in 1668; and died at Lubec in 1702. He was superintendent of the churches in the latter city, and was the author of Dissertations Historiæ, Criticæ, and Theologicæ, in Latin. A selection from his numerous pieces was published in 3 vols 12mo, 1706.—Moreri.

GOZZ (Damian), a learned Portuguese of the 16th century, was descended of an antient family. He spent many years in travelling, and was then recalled home to write the history of his own country, which he never completed, being accidentally burnt to death in his own house. He wrote Legatio magni Indorum Imperatoris ad Emanuelẽ Lusitaniz Regem, 1532; Fides, Religio, Moreque, Aethiopum; Hispaniæ Laudatio; Comment Rerum Gestarum in India a Lusitanis, &c.—Moreri.

GOZZE (John Augustus Ephraim), a celebrated naturalist, was born at Acherleben in 1731. He was educated at Halle, and became a minister at Quedlingburg, where he died in 1786. He distinguished himself by his microscopical discoveries, particularly on intestinal worms, of which he wrote a valuable history in the German language in 1782. His Entomological Col- lections, in four parts, appeared between the years 1771 and 1781.—Schlichtegroll's Necrology.

Goff (Thomas), an English divine and poet, was of Christchurch college, Oxford, and a native of Essex. He obtained the living of East Claidon in Surrey; and died in 1627, aged 33. Five tragedies by him were printed after his death.—Biog. Dram.

Gouvert (Anthony-Yves), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1716, and died in 1758. He wrote Origines des Loix, des Arts, des Sciences, et de leur Progrès chez les anciens Peuples, 3 vols. 4to. This work has been translated into English.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GOLDAST (Melchior Heimensfeld), a learned writer, was born in Switzerland in 1576, and died, extremely poor, in 1635. His works are Monarchia Sancti Imperii Romani, 3 vols. fol.; Alamaniae Scriptores, 3 vols. fol.; Commentarius de Bohemica Regno, 4to.; Informatio de Statu Bohemicae quoad Jus, 4to.; Sybilla Francica, 4to.; Scriptores Rerum Suevicarum, 4to.; Collectio Consuetudinum et Legum Imperialium, fol.; Politica Imperialia, 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

GOLDMAN (Nicholas), a German mathematician, was born at Breslau in Silesia, in 1623, and died at Leyden in 1665. He wrote Elementa Architecturae Militaris; De Usu Proportionarii Circuli; De Stylo-metricis; on Architecture.—Moreri.

GOLDONI (Charles), a dramatic writer, was born at Venice in 1707. He discovered a propensity to the drama at an early age, and his father caused a theatre to be built for him in his house. The Italian stage was reformed by him, and his comedies, which are very numerous, are exceedingly humorous and natural. About 1761 he went to Paris, and became composer to the Italian theatre; besides which he had an appointment and apartments at court. He died in 1792. His works were printed at Leghorn, in 31 vols 8vo.—Monthly Mag. 1798.

GOLDSMITH (Oliver), an eminent writer, was born, according to one account, in 1731; at Pallas in the county of Longford, in Ireland, and to another at Elphin, in 1729. His father was a clergyman, who gave him a good education, and sent him to Trinity college, Dublin, from whence he removed to Edinburgh, to study physic. At the latter place he became security for a fellow-student, on which account he was obliged to escape to England, but was arrested at Sunderland, and released by two college friends, whom he met with there. He then went to Holland, and travelled through Flanders and part of Germany on foot. At Louvain he took the degree of bachelor of physic, the highest degree which he ever attained. After accompanying an English gentleman to Geneva, and the south of France, he arrived in England in 1758. Being reduced to a low state, he became usher in a school at Peckham; where, however, he did not remain long, but settled in London, and subsisted by writing for periodical publications. One of his first performances was an Enquiry into the State of Polite Learning in Europe; but he emerged from obscurity in 1763 by the publication of his poem, entitled, the Traveller, or a Prospect of Society, of which Dr. Johnson said, "that there had not been so fine a poem since Pope's time." The year following appeared his beautiful novel of the Vicar of Wakefield. His circumstances were now respectable, and he took chambers in the Temple; but the liberality of his temper, and a propensity to gaming, involved him in frequent difficulties. In 1768 he brought out his comedy of the Good-Natured Man at Covent Garden, but its reception was not equal to its merits. In 1770 he published The Deserted Village, a poem, which in point of description and pathos is above all praise. As a comic poet he appeared to great advantage in 1772, by the play of She Stoops to Conquer, or the Mistakes of a Night, which is still a high favourite with the public. Besides these performances he produced a number of others:—as a History of England, in a Series of Letters from a Nobleman to his Son, 2 vols. 12mo. This useful and pleasing work was for a long time attributed to Lord Lyttleton. A History of England, 4 vols. 8vo.; A Roman History, 2 vols, 8vo.; A Grecian History, 2 vols.; A History of the Earth and Animated Nature, 8 vols. 8vo.; Chinese Letters, &c. He died by taking an extravagant dose of James's Powder, April 4, 1774, and was buried in the Temple church-yard. A monument was erected to his memory in Westminster abbey, with a beautiful Latin epitaph by Dr. Johnson.—Life prefixed to his Works.

GOLIUS (James), a learned Orientalist, was born at the Hague in 1596. Having finished his education at Leyden, he went to France, and taught the Greek language at Rochelle. In 1622 he accompanied the Dutch ambassador to the emperor of Morocco, who was highly pleased with his conversation. After his return he succeeded to the Arabic professorship. On the death of his friend Erpenius, in 1625, he went to the Levant, and made excursions into Arabia; in 1629, he returned to Leyden, where he was chosen professor of mathematics, both which stations he filled with great honour till his death in 1667. He published an Arabic Lexicon; a Persian Dictionary; the Saracen History of Elmacin; the Life of Tamerlane; the Astronomical Elements of Al-fregan, &c.—Moreri.

GOLIUS (Peter), elder brother of the preceding, was born at Leyden. He was the author of several works, both in Greek and Latin, and founded a monastery of the barefooted carmelites on mount Libanus. He was afterwards employed on a mission to the East Indies, and died at Surat about 1673. He had a considerable share in editing the grand Arabic Bible, printed at Rome in 1671. He also translated some religious manuals into that language.—Moreri.

GOLTZIUS (Henry), a painter and engraver, was born in 1558, in the duchy of Juliers, and died at Harlem in 1617. His prints are highly esteemed.—Ibid.

GOLYDDAN, the bard of Cadwallader, the last nominal king of the Britons, who flourished in the latter part of the seventh, and beginning of the eighth century.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

GOLZIUS (Hubert), a celebrated antiquary, was born at Venloo, in 1526. He travelled through France, Italy, and Germany, in search of medals and other antiquities, and died at Bruges in 1582. His works are:—Falti Romani ex Antiquis Numismatibus et Marmoribus, folio; Icones Anip. Romanorum et Series Austriacorum, fol.; Sicilia et Magna Græcia ex Numismat., fol.; Falti Contulares; Thesaurus Antiquitatum.—Moreri.

GOMAR (Francis), a zealous defender of the calvinistic doctrines, was born at Bruges in 1563. He studied some time at both the English universities, and in 1594 became professor of divinity at Leyden. When Arminius was chosen as his colleague in 1603, a difference arose between them on the subjects of grace and predestination, and Gomar conducted himself in the controversy with great bitterness. In 1611 he resigned his professorship, and went to Middleburgh, from whence in 1614 he removed to Saumur, and afterwards to Groningen. He distinguished himself by his ardour against the Arminians at the synod of Dort, and died at Groningen in 1641. His works are almost wholly polemical.—Bayle.

GOMBAUD (John Ogier de), a French poet, was born at St. Just de Lussac, in Saintong. He was one of the first members of the French academy, and had a pension, but was generally poor. His works are, tragedies, pastorals, romances, sonnets, and epigrams. He died in 1666.—Moreri.

GOMBERVILLE (Marin le Roi) seur de, a French writer, was born in 1599 at Chevreuse. He was one of the first members of the French academy, and died in 1674. His works are: Polexandre; La Cytherea; La Jeune Alcidiene; romances: Discours sur les Vertus et les Vices de l'Histoire, et de la manière de bien écrire; a Relation of the River of the Amazons; La Doctrine des Mœurs, tirée de la Philosophie des Stoïques; Poësies diverses.—Moreri.

GOMERSAL (Robert), an English poet in the reign of Charles the first. His best composition is called The Levite's Revenge, in meditations on Judges 19 and 20. He died in 1646.—Langhuine.

GOMTZ DE CIVIDAD (Alvarez), a modern Latin poet, was born at Guadalajara in Spain in 1488, and died in 1558. His principal performance is a Latin poem on the Order of the Golden Fleece. He also wrote some pieces in Spanish.—Moreri.

GÓMEZ DE CASTRO (Alvarez), a Spanish writer, was born near Toledo, and educated at Alcalá. He wrote the Life of Cardinal Ximenes, and was employed in editing the works of St. Isidore. He died in 1580, aged 65.—Ibid.

GÓMEZ (Mad. Angelica Poisson de), was born at Paris in 1684, and died in 1770. She wrote the following romances: Les Journées Amusantes, 8 vols.; Anecdotes Persanes, 2 vols.; Hist. Secrète de la Conquête de Grenade; Histoire du Comte Oxforde; la Jeune Alcidiene; les Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles, 5 vols.; and some tragedies.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GONDRIEN (Louis-Antoine duc de), a French courtier, is remarkable for his complaisance to Louis XIV. That prince, visiting the duke's country house, disapproved of a grove that stood before his chamber window, and when he rose in the morning the grove was no longer there. Louis, in his walk, next complained that his view was intercepted by an extensive wood; and on making the same remark in a second walk, "Your majesty," said Gondrien, "need only command, and it will instantly disappear." "I do then command," said Louis; and the wood was in a moment levelled to the ground by twelve hundred men who were placed for the purpose. "Ah!" said the duchess of Burgundy, "if the king should wish our heads to disappear, the duke would not disappoint his sovereign."—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GONDEBAUD, or Gundobad, third king of Burgundy, who ascended the throne on the death of his brother Chilperic in 491. He ravaged Italy, and in 499 called a council at Lyons to reconcile the catholics and Arians, but without success. Soon after this he was defeated by Clovis, king of the Franks, and his own brother Godezil, but on becoming tributary to the former, recovered his dominions. Gondebaud then put his brother to death. He afterwards reigned in peace, civilized his country, and introduced a system of laws still extant by the title of La Loi Gombette. He died in 516.—Univ. Hist. Moreri.

GONGORA (Lewís de), a Spanish ecclesiastic and poet, was descended from an illustrious family, and born at Cordova, in 1562. The Spaniards call him the prince of their poets. He died in 1627.—Moreri.

GONET (John Baptist), a French dominican, was born at Beziers in 1616. He became professor of theology at Bourdeaux, and provincial of his order. He died at his native place in 1681. He compiled a System of Divinity, in 18 vols. 12mo.; and wrote Manuale Thomistarum, seu brevis Theologiae Cursus; and Disertatio Theologica de Probabilitate.—Moreri.

GONNELLI (John), surnamed the blind man of Combañi, by the mere touch acquired great perfection as a sculptor. He died at Rome in 1673.—G. N. Biny. Diss.

GONSALVA (Hernandez de Cordova), surname the Great Captain, a Spanish commander, was descended of a noble family, and born in 1443. He distinguished himself in the conquest of Grenada, under Ferdinand and Isabella. Afterwards he was sent to Naples, which he recovered almost entirely from the French. He next conquered Apulia and Calabria, and captured Taramo in 1501. Two years afterwards he entered Naples in triumph and for his great services was made constable of that kingdom and duke of Terranova. Ferdinand however, being jealous of the Great Captain, recalled him, and banished him to his estate in Grenada, where he died in 1515.—Moreri.

GONTHIER (John and Leonard), two Frenchmen and brothers, were admired by the curious for their taste and skill in painting on glass.

GONZAGA (Lucretia), a celebrated Italian lady in the 16th century, was the daughter of the lord of Gazzuolo, and the wife of Manfredi of Ferrara, who was condemned in 1546 for a plot against the duke of Ferrara. He died in confinement in 1552. His wife tried all the means in her power to procure his liberty, and even solicited the interference of the Grand Signior on his behalf, but in vain. The letters attributed to her are of dubious authority; but her poems and other works are genuine. She died at Milan in 1576.—Bayle. Tirabosc. i.

GONZAGA (Scipio), a Roman cardinal, was born in 1542, of a noble family, and received his education at Padua, where he formed the academy of Degli Eterci. He afterwards became distinguished in theology and philosophy. Sixtus V. created him a cardinal, and he died in 1593. Some poems by him are extant, and he left Commentaries on his Life in MS.—Tirabosc. li.

GONZAGA (Vespasian), duke of Sabbioneta, was born in 1531. He was an eminent commander, and founded the city of Sabbioneta, where he erected churches and established a classical seminary. He was also a good Italian poet, and a patron of men of learning. He died in 1591.—Id.

GONZALEZ (Thyrus), a Spanish jesuit, and general of his order, who died at Rome in 1705. He wrote a famous Treatise on the Doctrine of Probability, 1694, folio.—New. Diss. Hist.

GOODALL (Walter), a Scotch antiquary and philologist, was born in 1689. Among his works is a Vindication of Mary Queen of Scots, published in 1751. He died at Edinburgh, at the age of 71.—Gen. Biog. Diss.

GOODWIN (John), an English divine, was born in 1593, and educated at Queen's college, Cambridge. In 1633 he became vicar of St. Stephen, Coleman-street, London, from which he was ejected in 1645 for refusing to administer baptism and the Lord's supper promiscuously. He was a zealous independent, armimian, and republican. On account of his vindicating the king's murder, he was exempted from pardon at the restoration, but was never proceeded against. He died in 1665. His works are Redemption redeemed, fol.; Imputatio Fidei, or a Treatise of Justification, 4to.; Exposition of Romans ix. 4to.; of being filled with the Spirit, 4to. and numerous controversial tracts.—Calamy's Ejected Ministers. Palmer's Nonconf. Mem.

GOODWIN (Thomas), an English divine of the independent persuasion, was born at Rolesby in Norfolk, in 1600. He was bred at Christchurch college, Cambridge, but afterwards became fellow of Catherine hall. In 1628 he was chosen lecturer of Trinity church in that town, of which in 1632 he was made vicar. On account of his puritanical opinions, he withdrew to Holland in 1639, and officiated there to an independent congregation. When the civil war broke out he returned to England, and was chosen one of the assembly of divines at Westminster, where he opposed the presbyterians. On this account he became a great favourite with Cromwell, who made him his chaplain. He attended the usurper in his last illness, and is said to have predicted his recovery, as an answer to his prayers; and that when his death was certain, he thus addressed the Almighty: "Lord, thou hast deceived us, and we were deceived." He was a most rigid predestinarian; and his works, which are greatly admired by people of that turn, make 5 vols. folio. He died in 1679.—Idid.

GOOT (John van), a Dutch painter, who wrote a history of the lives and works of the Flemish painters. He was born at the Hague in 1685.—Houbrak.

GORDIAN L. emperor of Rome, was born A. D. 157, and was a descendant of the Gracchi. He was a man of large possessions and of considerable talents. At the age of 58 he served the office of consul, and enjoyed the same honour under Alexander Severus, who had a great regard for him, and nominated him proconsul of Africa. In 237 a conspiracy was formed against Maximin, and the authors of it insisted on Gordian's assuming the imperial diadem, which he refused, but at length yielded, and his son GORDIAN the younger was associated with him in the empire. The latter was a man of letters, but of dissolute manners, and much addicted to women. The two emperors removed to Carthage, and from thence announced their election to the Roman senate, which ratified the choice. But in the mean time Capelianus governor of Mauritania declared for Maximin, and marched against Carthage, where the younger Gordian was slain in battle, and the father strangled himself with his girdle, A. D. 237. After this event the Roman citizens refused to submit to Maximin, and chose for emperors Maximus, Balbinus, and a youth of the family of the preceding, who assumed the name of GORDIAN. Not long afterwards Maximus and Balbinus being massacred in a mutiny, Gordian was declared sole emperor. He married the daughter of his tutor Misethus, whom he made prefect, a trust which he discharged to the great satisfaction of the emperor and the people. By his advice Gordian undertook an expedition to the east, where he defeated Supor king of Persia, and recovered Mesopotamia. On the death of Misethus, he chose in his room Philip, an Arab, who conspired against him, and put him to death near the Euphrates in 244.—Grevier. Gibbon.

GORDON (Andrew), professor of philosophy in the Scots monastery of Benediclines at Erfurt, was born in 1712, near Aberdeen. In 1719 he entered into the above order, and died in 1751. His works are, Phenomena Electricitatis Expofita, 8vo.; Philosophia utilis et jucunda, 3 vols. 8vo.; Impartial Account of the Origin of the present War in Great Britain, 4to.; Physica experimentalis Elementa, 8vo. He was the first who used a cylinder instead of a globe in the electrical apparatus.—Gen. Biog. Priestley's Hist. of Electricity.

GORDON (George), commonly called lord George Gordon, was the son of Cosmo George duke of Gordon, and born in 1750. He entered into the navy when young, but quitted it on account of some dispute with lord Sandwich. He afterwards sat in parliament for Ludgershall, and distinguished himself by some strange speeches against the ministers. But what chiefly brought him into notice was his opposition to the bill for granting farther toleration to Roman catholics. His intemperance on this occasion proved the cause of the riots in 1780, for which he was tried and acquitted. In 1786 he was excommunicated for not appearing as a witness in a cause. In 1788 he was found guilty of publishing a libel against the queen of France, on which he fled to Holland. A little after this he returned to England, and was taken in the disguise of a Jew, which profession he had adopted, and was committed to Newgate, where he died in 1793.—Genl. Mag. Ann. Reg.

GORDON (Thomas), a political writer, was born at Kirkcudbright in Scotland. He received a liberal education in his own country, and then removed to London, where he taught the classics. He also busied himself in politics, and was employed by Harley earl of Oxford. Mr. Trenchard next took him to live with him, and they wrote in conjunction Cato's Letters and the Independent Whig. On the death of Trenchard, Gordon married his widow, and thus got possession of a fine estate. They were both zealous whigs, and inveterate enemies of religion. Sir Robert Walpole employed him to defend his administration, and made him a commissioner of the wine licences. He translated Tacitus and Sallust into English, with Discourses relative to each; and after his death, which happened in 1750, at the age of 66, appeared some of his tracts, in two works, entitled, A Cordial for Low Spirits, and the Pillars of Priestcraft and Orthodoxy shaken.—Gen. Biog.

GRATIUS (Ortuinus), a learned German, was a native of the bifhopric of Munfter. He was the author of feveral works, and died in 1542.—Moreri.

GRAVELOT (Henry Francis Bourguignon), an eminent engraver, was born at Paris in

GRAVEROL (Francis), a French advocate, was born at Nîmes in 1635. He was the author of several works, among which is the Sorberiana. He died in 1694.—Moreri.

GRAVESANDE (William James le s'), a Dutch mathematician, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1688. He was bred a civilian, and practised some time at the bar with reputation, but about 1715 he became professor of mathematics and natural philosophy at Leyden, where he taught the Newtonian system. He died in 1742. His principal works are, 1. Physices Elementa Mathematica, &c.; 2. Mathesios Universalis Elementa, &c.; 3. Philosophiæ Newtonianæ Institutiones; 4. Introductio ad Philosophiam, Metaphysicam et Logicam continens.—Hutton's Math. Dict.

GRAVINA (Peter), an Italian poet, who was admired for the sweetness and delicacy of his poetry. He died in 1528, at the age of 75.—Moreri.

GRAVINA (John Vincent), an eminent lawyer, was born at Rogiano, in Italy, in 1664. He was professor of canon law in the college of Sapienza at Rome, and died there in 1718. He was the author of many learned works; the principal of which is entitled, De Ortu & Progressu Juris Civilis, in three books.—Moreri. Tiraboschi.

GRAUNT (Edward), master of Westminster school, who published a work entitled, Græcæ linguæ Specilegium & Institutio Græcæ Grammaticæ. He died in 1601.—Gen. B. D.

GRAUNT (John), author of a celebrated work entitled, Observations on the Bills of Mortality, was born in London, in 1620. He was for many years a haberdasher in the city, but dedicated a large portion of his time to study; and in 1661 published the work mentioned above. He was a fellow of the royal society and one of the managers of the New River company. He died in 1674.—Brog. Brit.

GRAY (Thomas), an English poet, was the son of a money scrivener in London, where he was born in 1716. He was educated at Eton, from whence he removed to Peter-house, Cambridge. In 1733 he entered of the Inner Temple, but never engaged much in the study of the law. The year following he accompanied Mr. Horace Walpole in the tour of Europe; but a difference occurring between them, they parted in Italy in 1741, and Mr. Gray returned to England, where his father died soon after. He now took up his residence chiefly at Cambridge, where, in 1768, he became professor of modern history. He died of the gout in his stomach in 1771, and was buried with his family at Stoke Poges, in Buckinghamshire. The odes of Gray possess uncommon merit, and his Elegy in a Country Church-yard has obtained almost an unexampled run. His letters are very instructive and entertaining.—Mason's Life of Gray.

GRAZZINI (Antony Francis), surnamed Il Laica, one of the founders of the academy Della Crusca, was a native of Florence. He wrote six comedies, and a variety of tales. He died in 1583.—Moreri.

GREATRAKES (Valentine), a native of Ireland, deserves to be mentioned for the extraordinary stories that are told of his curing diseases by touching the parts affected. Mr. Boyle, and other distinguished persons, attested several of his cures, and gave a high character of Mr. Greatrakes for virtue and piety. He died about 1680.—Granger.

GRAVES (John), a celebrated mathematician and antiquary, was born at Colmore in Hampshire, in 1602, and after receiving a grammatical education in his native country, he was removed to Balliol College, Oxford. In 1621 he was chosen fellow of Merton College, and in 1628 took the degree of M.A. In 1630 he became professor of geometry in Gresham College, and was soon afterwards sent by archbishop Laud to the east, where he made a large collection of oriental MSS, coins, and medals. He also took a careful survey and measurement of the Egyptian pyramids, and made many astronomical observations. After his return in 1640 he was chosen Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, but he was obliged to resign the professorship by the persecution of the parliamentary visitors. He died in 1652. He wrote Pyramidographia, or a Description of the Pyramids in Egypt; a discourse on the Roman foot and denarius; and several other valuable works.—Biog. Brit.

GRECOURT (John Baptist Joseph Villert, de), a French poet, was born at Tours in 1683. He was bred to the church, but quitted the ecclesiastical state, and led rather a dissipated life; but his company was much courted by people of rank, on account of his wit. He died in 1743. His works are Tales, Epigrams, Songs, Fables, and other light pieces.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

GREEN (Robert), an English poet, was a man of wit and talents, but a gross libertine, and is said to have been the first Englishman who wrote for bread. He died in 1592 of a surfeit.—Gen. B. D.

GREEN (John), an English bishop, was born in 1706 at Hull in Yorkshire. After obtaining several church preferments he was raised to the see of Lincoln. He died at Bath in 1779. He wrote some sermons and religious tracts.—Gen. B. D.

GREEN (Matthew), an English poet, was born in London in 1696. He was bred a dissenter, which sect, however, he quitted, and ridiculed in his admirable poem of the Spleen. He obtained a place in the custom-house, and died in 1737. His poems, which possess great merit, were published in Doddsley's collection, and together in 1 vol. in 1793.—Europ. Mag.

GREENE (Dr. Maurice), professor of music at Cambridge, was a native of London. He began the work of correcting and reforming the church music, greatly corrupted by transcribers; which undertaking was completed by his friend Dr. Boyce. He died in 1755.—Gen. B. D.

GREENE (Edward Burnaby), a writer of some merit, who published translations of Anacreon and Pindar, and various poems and essays. He died in 1788.—Europ. Mag.

GREENVILLE (sir Richard) a gallant officer, was the son of sir Roger Greenville, and born in Devonshire or Cornwall about 1540. He served when young, in the imperial army in Hungary against the Turks, and on his return engaged in the reduction of Ireland. In 1571 he represented Cornwall in parliament; about which time he received the honour of knighthood. In 1585 he undertook an expedition to America, and made some discoveries. In 1591 he was appointed vice admiral of a squadron sent out to intercept a rich Spanish fleet. They proceeded as far as the Western Islands, and while there a powerful squadron was sent from Spain to escort the Plate fleet. On their approach the English admiral, Thomas Howard, weighed anchor and proceeded to sea; but Greenville, in the Revenge, staying to take on board some of his sick crew, was surrounded by the whole Spanish fleet. He defended his ship with the utmost bravery, and after receiving several wounds, was about to sink her, but was carried on board the Spanish admiral's ship, where he died three days after.—Campbell's Lives of the Admirals.

GREENVILLE (sir Bevil), grandson of the above, was born at Stow, the family seat in Cornwall, in 1596. He was educated at Exeter college, under Dr. afterwards bishop Prideaux. In the rebellion he distinguished himself by zealously defending the royal cause, and after several gallant actions was killed in the battle of Lansdown near Bath, July 5, 1643.—Clarendon.

GREGORY (the great), pope of Rome, born about 544. He was appointed prefect of the city, and held other civil dignities; but, being inclined to a religious life, he retired to the monastery of St. Andrew, of which he became abbot. On the death of Pelagius, in 590, he was elected pope. He died in 604. It was this pope who sent Austin the monk to convert the English to christianity.

GREGORY II. (St.) succeeded Constantine in the pontificate in 715, and died in 731.

GREGORY III. a native of Syria, succeeded to the pontificate in 731, and died in 741. This pope sent legates to Charles Martel to demand succour against the Lombards; which embassy is considered as the origin of the apostolic nuncios in France.

GREGORY V. a native of Rome, succeeded to the pontificate in 827, and died in 844. He was greatly esteemed for his learning and piety.

GREGORY V. a native of Germany, and a relation of the emperor Otho, was elevated to the pontificate in 996. An anti-pope, named John XVII. was set up by Crescentius, consul of Rome; but was expelled by the emperor. Gregory died in 999.

GREGORY VI. a native of Rome, was elected pope in 1014. Finding the lands and revenues of his church greatly diminished by usurpations, the roads infested by robbers, and other disorders, Gregory acted with such vigour, that a powerful party was raised against him by those who had been accustomed to live by plunder. At a council, which the emperor Henry III. caused to be held at Sutri in 1046, Gregory abdicated the pontificate.

GREGORY VII. was the son of a carpenter of Soano in Tuscany, and succeeded to the pontificate in 1073. This pope formed vast projects for the reform of the church, and in attempting to execute them assumed unexampled powers. But he was soon embroiled with the emperor Henry IV. and after a violent struggle, retired to Salerno, where he died in 1085.

GREGORY VIII. was a native of Benevento. He succeeded Urban III. in 1187; and died the same year, after having exhorted the christian princes to undertake a new crusade. He is not to be confounded with the anti-pope Bourdin, who assumed the same name.

GREGORY IX. was nephew of Innocent III. of the family of the counts of Segni. He was elected pope in 1227, and died in 1241. He caused a new crusade to be undertaken, in which the emperor Frederic II. engaged, notwithstanding which he twice excommunicated that prince.

GREGORY X. descended from the illustrious family of Visconti, was elected pope in 1271, at which time he was in the Holy Land. He died in 1276. He assembled a general council at Lyons, to promote an union between the eastern and western churches, and other objects.

GREGORY XI. (Peter Roger), a native of Limousin in France, was a nephew of Clement VI. and son of the count of Beaufort. He was elevated to the pontificate in 1370, and died in 1377. This pope was a patron of learning, and endeavoured to reconcile the princes of christendom, and to reform the religious societies. He transferred the papal see from Avignon to Rome, where he died.

GREGORY XII. (Angelo Corario), a native of Venice, was raised to the pontificate in 1406, during the existence of the schism in the east; Benedict XIII. being the other pope. Both were deposed by a council held at Pisa, and Alexander V. elected in their stead. Gregory submitted, and laid aside the pontifical dignity. He died in 1417, at the age of 92.

GREGORY XIII. a native of Bologna, succeeded Pius V. in 1572. He embellished Rome with many fine buildings; but that which more particularly marks his government is, the reform of the calendar, which goes by his name. He contributed greatly to correct and amend Gratian's Decretals; which he also enriched with learned notes. He died in 1585, at the age of 83.

GREGORY XIV. (Nicholas Sfondrate), succeeded Urban VII. in 1590. He was the son of a senator of Milan. He involved himself in an unsuccessful war against Henry IV. of France, and died in 1591, at the age of 57.

GREGORY XV. (Alexander Ludovisi), a Bolognese, descended of an ancient family, was elected pope in 1621, and died in 1623. He wrote several works, among which is one entitled, Epistola ad Regem Persarum, Schah Abbas, cum Notis Hegalsoni, 8vo. 1627.—Boxer. Platina. Moreri.

GREGORY (George Florence), commonly called Gregory of Tours, a Romish saint, was born in 541, in Auvergne. He was chosen bishop of Tours in 573, and in 578 he distinguished himself in a council held at Paris. He is said to have converted Chilperic from pelagianism. He died in 595. Gregory was the author of a History of the Franks, in ten books; and other works.—Cass. Moreri.

GREGORY (John), a learned divine, was born at Agmondesham in Buckinghamshire, 1607. He was entered a servitor of Christchurch college, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. and became one of the college chaplains. Dr. Duppa, when bishop of Chichester, gave him a prebend, as he also did in that of Salisbury, on his translation thither. But he lost all in the rebellion, and died very poor near Oxford in 1646. He was the author of curious notes and observations on some passages of Scripture, which, with his posthumous tracts, were printed in quarto. He is not to be confounded with Edmund Gregory, a divine, who wrote the Historical Anatomy of Christian Melancholy, and died about 1650.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

GREGORY (James), a celebrated mathematician, was born at Aberdeen in 1638. He early discovered a strong genius for the mathematics, which he cultivated with eagerness in the Marischal college of Aberdeen. In 1663 he published his Optica Promota seu ab Idea Radium Reflexorum & Refractorum Mysteria, Geometrice enucleata, &c. 4to. In this great work he announced the invention of the reflecting telescope, which spread his name all over Europe. Soon after this he made a tour to Italy, and resided some years at Padua, where he published his Vera Circuli & Hy- perbolæ Quadratura, &c. in which appeared an account of his discovery of an infinitely converging series for the areas of the circle and hyperbola, and the mode of computing them. Soon after his return to England he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society: and about the same time engaged in a controversy with Huygens on the subject of his treatise on the quadrature of the circle. In 1668 he was appointed professor of mathematics in the university of St. Andrews. He had afterwards an amicable controversy with Newton concerning the reflecting telescope; in the course of which he threw out the idea of a burning concave mirror, which came into universal repute. In 1674 he became professor of mathematics at Edinburgh, where he died the year following, after being struck with a sudden blindness as he was lecturing. His Optics were translated into English by Dr. Desaguliers, and several of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions.—Biog. Brit. Martin's Biog. Philos. Hutton's Math. Dict.

GREGORY (David), nephew of the above, was born at Aberdeen in 1661. He completed his education at Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.A. and in 1684 his merit recommended him to the professorship of mathematics in that university. In 1691, by the recommendation of Newton, he was chosen a member of the Royal Society, and elected savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford. In 1695 he published his Catoptrica & Dioptrica Spherica Elementa, 8vo. His demonstration of the curve, called the catenaria, appeared in 1697 in the Philosophical Transactions; but his greatest work was published in 1702, and entitled, Astronomiæ Physicæ & Geometricæ Elementa, folio. It was afterwards translated into English, in 2 vols. 8vo. In 1703 he published a splendid edition of Euclid's works in folio. Dr. Gregory died while engaged in superintending an edition of Apollonius's Conics in 1706. After his death appeared a short treatise on Logarithms, and a treatise of Practical Geometry. His brother James became professor of mathematics at Edinburgh, which he held thirty-three years, and was succeeded by the famous Maclaurin. His other brother, Charles, was professor of mathematics at St. Andrew a thirty-two years, and was succeeded by his son David, who published a system of arithmetic and algebra in Latin. He died in 1761.—Ibid.

GREGORY (John), a physician, was born in 1724, at Aberdeen, where his father, Dr. James Gregory, was professor of medicine in King's college. After studying at his native place he removed to Edinburgh, and from thence to Leyden. In 1745 he obtained the degree of doctor of physic, and became professor of philosophy at Aberdeen, which he exchanged in 1749 for that of physic. About 1751 he settled in London, and was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1761 he removed to Edinburgh, where, in 1766, he was elected professor of physic. He died there in 1773. His works are, on the Duties and Offices of a Physician, 8vo.; Elements of the Practice of Physic, 8vo.; a Father's Legacy to his Daughters, 12mo. All his pieces have been collected into four volumes, 8vo.—Life prefixed to his works.

GREGORY (Nazianzen), bishop of Constantinople, was born in 324, near Nazianzum, in Cappadocia, of which place his father was bishop. When Julian prohibited the Christians from reading the books of the Gentiles, Nazianzen wrote poems to furnish the Christian youth with subjects for study. In 378 he was appointed, by the council of Antioch, to repair to Constantinople to suppress arianism, and was there chosen bishop. He afterwards resigned that see and retired to his native country, where he died in his 66th year. He was one of the ablest champions of the doctrine of the trinity, and possessed an acute and sublime genius. The best edition of his works is that of Morel at Paris, 1609, 2 vols. folio—Cave. Moreri.

GREGORY (Nyssen), the younger brother of St. Basil, was bishop of Nyssa, in Cappadocia; but was deposed by the arian faction. He drew up the Nicene creed, by order of the council of Constantinople. He died about 400. His works were published at Paris in 1615, in 2 vols. fol.—Cave. Moreri.

GREGORY (Theodorus), surnamed Thaumaturgus, bishop of Neo-Cæsarea, the metropolis of Cappadocia, was a native of that city. He was converted by Origen to christianity. He governed the church of Neo-Cæsarea with such success, that the power of working miracles was attributed to him, whence he acquired his surname. He died in 265. An edition of his works was published by G. Vossius in 1604, 4to.—Cave. Fabric. Bibl. Grec.

GREGORY of Rimini, a schoolman of the 14th century, who died at Vienna in 1357. He was general of the order of Augustines, and zealously defended the doctrine of Austin on freewill. He wrote Commentaries on the Sentences, and on the Epistles, &c.—Cave. Dupin.

GREGORY of St. Vincent, a Flemish mathematician, born at Bruges in 1584. He was a Jesuit, and died at Ghent in 1667. His greatest work is entitled, Opus Geometricum Quadraturæ Circuli & Sectionum Coni, decem Libris Comprehensum, 1647. 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

GRENADA (Lewiss de), a Spanish monk of the Dominican order, was born at the city of his own name in 1504. He refused the archbishopric of Braganza, and devoted himself wholly to a monastic life, of great austerity. He died in 1588. His works evince considerable piety, tinged, however, with much enthusiasm.—Moreri.

GRENAN (Benignus), a poet, and professor of rhetoric at Harcourt, was born at Noyers in Burgundy in 1631, and died at Paris in 1723. He translated into latin verse the Lamentations of Jeremiah.—Moreri.

GRESHAM (sir Thomas), a celebrated merchant, was descended from an ancient family in Norfolk, and born in 1519 at London. He was bred to trade, but was some time at Caius college, Cambridge. He amassed a large fortune, being successively agent to Edward VI. and to the queens Mary and Elizabeth, at Antwerp. He built the royal exchange at his own expense; founded a college in London for lectures in divinity, law, physic, astronomy, geometry, music, and rhetoric; besides endowing many public charities. He died suddenly in 1579. The Gresham lectures are now read in a room over the royal exchange.—Biog. Brit.

GRESSET (John Baptist Louis), a French poet, was born at Amiens in 1709, and died in 1777. His poems are very elegant, particularly the charming tale of Ver-ver. His comedy entitled Mechant had a prodigious run. He was director of the French academy, and obtained letters of nobility, and the order of St. Michael.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GRETZER (James), a Jesuit, born at Marcdorf, in Germany, about 1561. He was professor of divinity at Ingoldstadt, where he died in 1635. His principal performance is entitled De Cruce, 3 vols. 4to. All his works amount to 17 vols. folio.—Moreri.

GREVENBROECK, a Flemish painter of the 17th century. He was celebrated for his sea pieces.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GREVILLE (Fulke), lord Brooke, a patron of letters and an ingenious writer, was born of an ancient family at Beauchamp-court, in Warwickshire, in 1554. He was in great favour with Elizabeth, and was created lord Brooke by James I. who also made him a grant of Warwick castle. He founded a history lecture at Cambridge. This accomplished nobleman was stabbed by a servant whom he had severely reprimanded for an insolent expression; after which the man put an end to himself with the same weapon. This was in 1628. After his lordship's death appeared several of his poetical works, also a life of sir Philip Sidney, written by him.—Biog. Brit.

GREVIN (James), a French poet and physician, was born in 1538. He was in the service of Margaret of France, duchess of Savoy, and died at Turin at the age of 92. He was concerned in writing the ingenious poem entitled, The Temple, aimed at Ronfard, who had abused the calvinists.—Moreri.

GREW (Obadiah), an English non-conformist divine. He was a native of Warwickshire, and held the living of St. Michael's at Coventry till the restoration, when he was ejected, and afterwards imprisoned. He died in 1682. He wrote sermons on the parable of the Prodigal Son, and a Sinner's Justification by Christ, 8vo.—Calamy. Palm.

GREW (Nehemiah), a learned physician, was the son of the preceding, and born at Coventry. He studied physic in a foreign university, and in 1672 settled in London, where he became a fellow of the Royal Society, which learned body, in 1677, appointed him their secretary. He died in 1711. His principal works are, The Anatomy of Plants, a Catalogue of Rarities belonging to the Royal Society, and Coinologia Sacra, or a Discourse of the Universe, folio.—Biog. Brit.

GREY (Jane), a celebrated and unfortunate lady, was the daughter of Henry Grey, marquis of Dorset, by Frances Brandon, daughter of the duke of Suffolk and Mary queen dowager of France, and sister to Henry VIII. She was born about 1537, and from her childhood evinced a quick and amiable mind. Her education was very liberal, and at the age of fourteen she learned Ascham, on a visit to the family, found her reading Plato's Phædon in Greek. She was also well acquainted with several modern languages. Her religious principles were those of the reformation, and her virtue and modesty were equal to her other accomplishments. When the health of Edward VI. began to decline, Dudley, duke of Northumberland, who had a complete ascendancy over him, persuaded the young king, from a pretended concern for the interests of religion, to bequeath his crown to lady Jane, thus setting aside his sisters Mary and Elizabeth. About the same time the duke effected a marriage between his own son, lord Guildford Dudley, and lady Jane Grey. On the death of the king, her father and the duke of Northumberland paid homage to her as queen, much against her wish and entreaty. She was also proclaimed in London with the usual formalities. But this pageantry lasted only a few days: and Mary proving successful, the duke of Northumberland was beheaded, and lady Jane and her husband were sent to the Tower. After being confined there some time, the council resolved to put these innocent victims of their father's ambition to death. Lord Guildford suffered first, and as he passed her window, his lady gave him her last adieu. Immediately afterwards she was executed on the same scaffold; suffering with calm resignation, and an inflexible attachment to the protestant religion, Feb. 12, 1554.—Biog. Brit.

GREY (Dr. Zachary), an English divine, well known for his edition of Hudibras, enriched with a prodigious number of curious and entertaining notes, 2 vols. He also published notes on Shakespeare, 2 vols.; and an answer to Neale's History of the Puritans, in 3 vols. 8vo. He was of a Yorkshire family, and died in 1766, aged 79.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GRAY (Richard), a learned English divine, was born in 1693. He was educated at Lincoln college, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1718. He obtained successively the livings of Kilcote, Leicester, and Hinton, in Northamptonshire; also a prebend in the cathedral of St. Paul. He died in 1771. His principal works are, 1. Memoria Technica, or a new Method of Artificial Memory, 12mo. 2. a System of English Ecclesiastical Law, 8vo. For this work the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.D. 3. A new and easy Method of learning Hebrew, without Points, 8vo. 4. Liber Jobi in Versiculos Metrica divisus, &c. 5. The Last Words of David, divided according to the metre.—Nichol's Anecd. of Brary.

GRIMALDI (Matthew), a learned civilian of Padua in the 16th century, was professor of civil law at Tübingen, and died in 1564.—Bayle.

GRIBNER (Michael Henry), a professor of law at Wittemberg, died in 1784. He published works on Jurisprudence in Latin.

GRIERSON (Constantia), a woman of extraordinary attainments, was descended of very poor parents in the county of Kilkenny, in Ireland. She was well acquainted with Greek and Roman literature, and published editions of Tacitus and Terence. She addressed a Greek epigram to the son of lord Carteret, which nobleman procured her husband a patent to be the king's printer in Ireland; and, as a mark of distinction, caused her life to be inserted in it. She died in 1793, at the age of 27.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GRIFFET (Henry), a French jesuit, was born at Moulins in 1698. He published an enlarged edition of Father Daniel's History of France, 7 vols. 4to. a Treatise on the different Kinds of Proof employed in establishing historical Facts; Sermons, and other Works. He died at Brussels in 1775.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

GRIFFIER (John), known by the appellation of old Griffier, an eminent painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1658, and died at London in 1718. He succeeded chiefly in landscapes, and painted several views on the Thames. He also etched prints of birds and beasts. His son Robert, called the young Griffier, was born in England. He was a good landscape painter, and was living in 1713.—Gen. Biog. Diet. Pitt.

GRIFFIN, prince of Wales, was the last sovereign of that country previous to its being subjugated by England. He was put to death by order of Edward the Confessor, at London, in 1060.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GRIMANI (Domenico), cardinal, was the son of the doge of Venice, where he was born in 1460. He was a great patron of learning, and the correspondent of Erasmus. He also translated some of the Homilies of Chrysostom into latin, and died in 1523.—Moreri.

GRIMANI (Hubert), a painter of Delft, born in 1599, and died in 1629. He excelled in painting portraits.—Pilkington.

GRIMAREST (Léonor le Gallois fleur de), a French writer, who died in 1720. He wrote the life of Moliere.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GRIMMER (Jacques), a landscape painter, born at Antwerp in 1510, and died in 1546. His pieces are valuable.—Pilkington.

GRIMOU, a French painter, who died about the year 1740. His portraits are sought after as cabinet pieces.—Ibid.

GRINSTON (Sir Harbottle), master of the Rolls in the reign of Charles I. He was a profound lawyer, and died in 1683, aged 99.

GRINDAL (Edmund), archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Hensingham in Cumberland in 1519. He was educated at Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in Pembroke-hall. Being attached to the principles of the reformation, bishop Ridley made him his chaplain, and precentor of St. Paul's. He was also appointed chaplain to the king, and prebendary of Westminster; but on the accession of Mary he retired to Germany, and settled at Strasburg. When Elizabeth ascended the throne, Mr. Grindal returned home, and was employed with others in revising the Liturgy. In 1559 he was chosen master of Pembroke-hall, and the same year preferred to the see of London, from whence in 1570 he was translated to York, and in 1575 to Canterbury. Two years afterwards he was suspended from his archiepiscopal functions, for refusing to obey the queen's order to suppress prophesyings, that is, the associations of the clergy to expound the Scriptures. His sequestration was at last taken off, though he never completely recovered the royal favour. He died at Croydon in 1583. He contributed much to Fox's Arts and Monuments.—Life by Strype.

GRINGONNEUR (Jacquemin), a French painter, is said by some to have been the inventor of cards, but it seems more probable that he only invented, or improved, the painting of them. He died in 1392.—Moreri.

GRINGORE (Peter), herald at arms to the duke of Lorraine, died in 1544. He was the author of several moral productions in verse.—Ibid.

GRISSAUNT (William), an English physician, astronomer, and mathematician, in the 4th century. He was suspected of magic and retired to France, where he dedicated himself wholly to the study of medicine. His son became pope Urban V.—Moreri.

GRAY (John de la), an eminent French geographer, was born at Sedan in 1689, and died in 1757. He published the Topography of Paris, a Manual of Spherical Trigonometry, and other esteemed Works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GROCYN (William), a learned English divine, was born at Bristol in 1442, and died at Maidstone, at the age of 80. He was the friend of Erasmus, and godfather to Lilly the grammarian. A Latin epistle of Grocyen to Aldus Manutius is prefixed to Linacyn's translation of Proclus de Sphæra.—Wood.

GRODITIVS (Stanislaus), a jesuit of Poland, who published eight volumes of Latin sermons, and died at Cracow in 1613.

GRONOVIVS (John Frederic), a learned critic, was born at Hamburg in 1611. After travelling through Germany, Italy, and France, he was made professor of Greek and Belles Lettres at Deventer, and afterwards at Leyden, where he died in 1672. He published a Dissertation on the Sylve of Statius, a work on the Ecclesiastical Writers, a Treatise on the Sederce, and various editions of Antient Authors.—Moreri.

GRONOVIVS (James), son of the preceding, was born in 1645, at Deventer. He became professor of Greek and of History at Leyden, where he died in 1716. He published editions of several of the Classics, which are very valuable; but his great work is his Thesaurus Antiquitatum Græcorum, 13 vols. folio.—Ibid.

GROSSETESTE, or Grosthead (Robert), an English prelate, was born at Stradbrook in Suffolk, about 1175. He received his education at Oxford and Paris. After enjoying several church preferments with great reputation, he was chosen bishop of Lincoln by the dean and chapter in 1234. He successfully resisted the encroachments of the papal power, and was a great encourager of learning. He died in 1253. His Opuscula Varia were published at Venice in 1514, and his Compendium Sphæræ Mundi in 1508. Some of his discourses and letters are also extant.—Life by Dr. Pegge.

GROSTESTE (Claude), a French protestant clergyman, who came to London on the revocation of the edict of Nantz; and died in 1713. He was minister of the Savoy. He wrote sermons, and a treatise on the Inspiration of the sacred Books.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

GROSVENOR (Benjamin), a dissenting minister, was born in London in 1675, and became minister of the congregation in Crosby-square 1704. In 1716 he was selected one of the preachers at the merchants lecture at Salters'-hall. He died in 1758. Dr. Grosvenor published several sermons, and two tracts that have been very useful; viz. 1. an Essay on Health; 2. the Mourner; both of which have gone through many editions.—Fun. Sermon by Barker.

GROTIUS (Hugo), an illustrious writer, was the son of John de Groot, (the family name), a burgomaster of Delft, where the son was born in 1583. At the age of eight years he composed Latin verses of great merit. In his twelfth year he was sent to Leyden, under the care of Francis Junius. In 1598 he accompanied the ambassador Barneveldt to the court of Henry IV. of France, which monarch was so pleased with Grotius, that he gave him his picture and a gold chain; while in France he took the degree of doctor of laws. The year following he commenced his practice as an advocate, and pleaded his first cause at Delft. Soon afterwards he published an edition of Martianus Capella, which was well received by the learned. This was followed by a translation of a work of Stevinus, on finding a ship's place at sea. His edition of the Phænomena of Aratus appeared in 1600, and about the same time he composed Latin Tragedies on sacred subjects. He was now appointed historiographer of the united provinces, and advocate-general of the treasury for Holland and Zealand. In 1609 he published his famous book on the liberty of the sea, which drew a reply from the learned Selden. About this time appeared his Treatise de Antiquitate Reipublicæ Batavæ, to prove the independence of Batavia from the Romans. In 1613 he accepted the post of pensioner of Rotterdam, by which means he obtained a seat in the States of Holland. About this time he was sent to England, to settle a dispute between the two nations on the subject of the Greenland fishery. During the contests which arose in Holland on account of religion, Grotius sided with the Arminians, for which he was apprehended, and condemned to perpetual imprisonment in the Castle of Louvestein, from whence he was delivered by his wife.

This excellent woman having obtained leave to convey away a large chest of books, for fear her husband should injure his health by over-study, Grotius was placed in the chest, and taken out of the castle. As the soldiers were carrying the chest, one of them said it was so heavy that there must be an Arminian in it; to which Madam Grotius answered, that there were indeed many Arminian books. When the chest was brought out of the castle, it was conveyed to Gorcum, from whence Grotius removed to Antwerp, and afterwards to France, where he obtained a pension. In 1622 he published his Apology, which so stung the States, that they ordered it to be burnt, and the author to be seized wherever he could be found. In 1623 he finished his famous book De Jure Belli & Pacis, which greatly extended his reputation. In 1613 he accepted an invitation from count Oxenstiern, on which he went to Stockholm, where he was appointed counsellor of state and ambassador to the court of France. He filled this important station, amidst circumstances of extreme difficulty, with the greatest honour to himself, and satisfaction to the court which he represented. In 1645 he quitted France, and went to Holland, where he was received with marks of honour. From Amsterdam he sailed to Sweden, and was welcomed in a cordial manner by queen Christina. He died on his journey to Holland, at Rostock, August 28, the same year. His remains were interred at Delft. The works of this great man are too many to be enumerated here; but we must mention his book on the Truth of the Christian Religion, which has become a standard book in all universities, for students in divinity; his Annales & Historiæ de Rebus Belgicis; and his Commentaries on the Scriptures; these last are an immortal monument of learning. In his religious sentiments he coincided with the church of England, and advised his wife to join in communion with it. His sons Cornelius and Diederick entered into the army. Peter was bred to the law, and became pensionary of Amsterdam. His brother William was a learned man, and wrote some books on loyal subjects.—Life of Grotius by Burigny.

GROVE (Henry), a nonconformist divine, was born at Taunton in Somersetshire in 1683. After receiving a liberal education at London he entered upon the ministerial office, and in 1706 became a tutor in the academy at Taunton, which flourished greatly under his management. He died at Taunton in 1738. Besides some excellent Sermons, he wrote Nos. 588, 601, 626, and 635, of the Spectator, an Essay on the Immateriality of the Soul, Essay on the terms of Christian Communion, the Evidence of our Saviour's Resurrection considered, Thoughts concerning the Proof of a Future State, a Discourse on the Nature and

At the battle of Marignan, when he was but twenty-two years of age, he received more than twenty wounds.—Moreri.

GUISE (Francis de Lorraine, duke of), eldest son of the above, was born in 1519. He was a man of great talents and valour, and during the greater part of his life enjoyed almost unbounded power in France. With him began the famous factions of Condé and Guise. The duke of Guise was at the head of the Catholic party, and a great zealot. He was killed by a pistol shot, in 1563, by a Protestant gentleman, named Poltrot de Méré.—Moreri.

GUISE (Henry, duke of), eldest son of the preceding, was born in 1550. He was a good soldier; but of a turbulent temper. He formed the association called the League, on the pretence of defending the Catholic religion, and the liberty of the state. With its aid, the duke of Guise long controlled Henry III. and was even in open rebellion against him. On the celebrated day of the Barricades, the king, having escaped from the duke to Blois, convened the states there; where Guise was assassinated, Sept. 23, 1588.—Ibid.

GUISE (Charles, duke of), eldest son of the above, was born in 1571. He was arrested on his father's death, and shut up in the castle of Tours, from which he escaped in 1592. Proceeding to Paris, he was received with the greatest demonstrations of joy, by the partisans of the League. He finally made his peace with the king; but cardinal Richelieu, long after, dreading his power, compelled him to quit France. He died at Cuna, in Italy, in 1640.—Ibid.

GUISE (Lewis de Lorraine, cardinal of), was the son of Henry, duke of Guise, who was assassinated at Blois. Though a priest, he was of a warlike disposition, and followed Louis XIII. in his expedition into Poitou, where he signalized himself among the bravest of the officers. He died at Saintes, in 1621.—Ibid.

GUISE (Henry of Lorraine, duke of), grandson of the last mentioned Henry, was born in 1614. He was of an intriguing and restless disposition, and having joined in the conspiracy of the count of Soissons and the duke of Bouillon, he was obliged to quit France, and retire to Rome. While there, the disaffected Neapolitans, who had revolted from Spain, chose him their leader; and he fully expected to have obtained the sovereignty, but was taken prisoner, at Abruzzo, and carried to Spain, where he remained four years, and was then set at liberty. He died in 1664. His Memoirs of the Neapolitan Enterprize were published in 1 vol. 4to.—Novo. Diß. Hif.

GUISE (William), a learned English divine, was born in Gloucestershire in 1653. He was fellow of All Souls college, Oxford, and died of the small-pox in 1688. He translated into English, Misne Pars Ordinis primi Zeraim Tituli septem, and illustrated the work with a commentary.—Wood A.O.

GUITON (John); a citizen of Rochelle, who was chosen mayor of that town when it was besieged by cardinal Richelieu in 1637. He refused the post, unless he were permitted to have a poignard to stab the first who should offer to surrender. Being told that famine had carried off many of the inhabitants, he answered, "It matters not, provided there is one left to shut the gates."—Moreri.

GUITONE (d'Arezzo), one of the earliest of the Italian poets, flourished about the year 1250. Some of his productions are found in a Collection of Ancient Italian Poets, Florence, 1527, 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

GULDENSTAEDT (John Antony), a celebrated traveller, was a native of Riga. For his knowledge of natural history and languages he was invited to Petersburg, where he was made professor of natural history. He spent seven years travelling through Tartary, Georgia, and over the Caucasus, and died at Petersburg in 1781.—Coxe's Travels through Russia, &c.

GUNDLING (Nicholas Jerom), a German writer on jurisprudence, history, and politics, was born at Nuremberg, in 1671. He was successively professor of philosophy, eloquence, and civil law, at Hall, and died rector of that university in 1729.—Moreri.

GUNNERUS (John Ernest), a Norwegian divine, was born in 1718 at Christiansa. On account of his merit he was made bishop of Drontheim in 1758, where he founded the Royal Norwegian Society, principally for the encouragement of the study of natural history. Linnaeus gave the name of Gunnera to a plant in his vegetable system. He died at Christiansund, in 1773. He published Flora Norwegica, &c.—Gen. Biog.

GUNNING (Peter), an English prelate, was born at How, in Kent, in 1613. Having received the earlier part of his education at King's school, Canterbury, he was removed to Cambridge, where he distinguished himself as a tutor and preacher. Being a firm royalist, he was driven from Cambridge, and entered of New college, Oxford, where he met with patronage and advancement. At the restoration, he distinguished himself in the Savoy conference, and in 1669 was made bishop of Chichester, from whence he was translated, in 1674, to Ely. He died in 1684.—Wood A. O.

GUNTHER (Edmund), an English mathematician, was born in Herefordshire in 1581. He was educated at Westminster school; and afterwards went to Christchurch, Oxford, where he took orders; but his genius led him chiefly to the study of mathematics, and he was promoted to the professorship of astronomy at Gresham college, where he died in 1626. He invented a portable quadrant, which goes by his name; and a scale used by navigators. He also discovered the variation of the magnetic needle. He published Canon Triangulorum, five Tabule Sinuum Artificialium, &c. His works were collected into one volume, 4to. 1673.—Biog. Brit. Martin's Biog. Phil.

GUNTHER, a German poet, who lived in the beginning of the last century, and died at the age of 28, in a very extraordinary manner. A rival poet mixed some intoxicating drug with his drink, when he was about to be presented to Augustus II. king of Poland, and while Gunther was speaking to the monarch, he staggered and fell down, on which he died of mortification. His works have proofs of genius and taste; among others is an Ode on Prince Eugene's victory over the Turks.—Gen. B. D.

GURTLE (Nicholas), a learned divine, was born at Basil in 1654, and died in 1707. He wrote Historia Templariorum; Origines Mundi; Institutiones Theologicæ; and Lexicon Lingue Latinæ, Germanæ, Græcæ, et Gallicæ.—Novo. Diß. Hif.

GUSMAN (Lewis), a Spanish jesuit, who died at Madrid in 1605. He was the author of a work in the Spanish language, intitled, The History of the Jesuits in the Indies, and the Success of their Missions in Japan.—Moreri.

GUSSANVILLAN (Peter), a native of Chartres in France, published the best edition of the works of Gregory the Great that appeared before the edition of the Benedictines.—Ibid.

GUSTAVUS I. king of Sweden, known by the name of GUSTAVUS VASA, was born in 1490. He was the son of Eric Vasa, duke of Gripsholm, and descended from the ancient kings of Sweden. Christian II. king of Denmark, having got Gustavus into his hands, in the war in which he reduced Sweden, kept him several years prisoner at Copenhagen. He at length made his escape, and having prevailed on the Dalecarlians to throw off the Danish yoke, he put himself at their head; and, after various fortunes, recovered the whole of Sweden from the tyranny of Christian. and was raised to the throne by the election of the states, whom he prevailed with to make the crown hereditary in his family. Lutheranism was established as the national religion of Sweden in his reign. He died at Stockholm, in 1560.—Mod. Univ. Hif.

GUSTAVUS (Adolphus), king of Sweden, was born at Stockholm in 1594, and ascended the throne in 1611. Notwithstanding his youth, he displayed his discernment in the choice of able ministers, and distinguished himself in the field, in a war with Denmark, Muscovy, and Poland; and finally, he rendered his name immortal, by his illustrious achievements in the war he carried on at the head of the German protestants against the house of Austria. He penetrated from the Vistula to the Danube, and twice defeated the celebrated Tilly. He was a patron of the sciences, enriching the university of Upsal; founding a royal academy at Åbo, and a university at Dorpat, in Livonia. This great prince fell in the battle fought on the plains of Lutzen in 1632; and is supposed to have been treacherously slain, either from the intrigues of cardinal Richelieu, or by the hand of Lawenbourg, one of his generals.—Life, by Harte.

GUSTAVUS III. king of Sweden, was the son of Adolphus Frederick, and Louisa Ulrica, sister of Frederick II. king of Prussia. He was born in 1746, and educated under count Tessin, whose letters to his royal pupil are well known. He succeeded his father in 1771, at which time a corrupt senate, composed of the four orders, possessed the government, leaving the king a mere cypher. Gustavus the year following brought about a revolution, without bloodshed, and established a new constitution. He abolished the horrid practice of torture, and introduced other good regulations in the administration of justice. He also formed a college of commerce, and reformed his army and navy. He caused a new translation to be made of the bible, and greatly encouraged agriculture, arts, and literature. In 1777 he paid a visit to the empress of Russia, and was entertained by her in a magnificent manner. In 1783 he made a tour for his health to France and Italy; and returned after an absence of ten months. In 1788 he was involved in a war with Russia, which power was assisted by Denmark. Gustavus headed his army himself, and stormed the defences of Fredericksham, where he took and destroyed a great number of vessels. Encouraged by this success, he made an attack on the Russian squadron and arsenal of Revel, but was obliged to retreat with loss. Gustavus was equally unfortunate in an attempt on Wyburg, about seventy miles from Petersburg; but July 9, 1790, the Swedish fleet commanded by the king, gained a complete victory over the Russians, who lost forty-five vessels, and a great number of men. This produced a peace the same year. On the breaking out of the French revolution, a coalition was formed between the northern powers and Spain, by which it was determined that Gustavus should march against France at the head of a considerable army; but while preparations were making, the king was shot at a masquerade by Ankarstroem, a disbanded officer of the army, March 15, 1792, but he did not die till the 29th. Gustavus wrote some plays, and political pieces of great merit.—Annual Reg.

GUTHRIERES (James), a French advocate and writer, died in 1638. The lovers of antiquities are indebted to him for many valuable writings.—Moreri.

GUTHRIE (William), a native of Scotland, was born in 1701, and educated at Aberdeen. His most esteemed work is his Geographical Grammar. He died in 1769.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

GUTTENBERG (John), one of those to whom the invention of the art of printing is attributed, was a German, descended of a noble family, and born at Mentz about 1400. If he did not invent printing, it is probable he was the first who conceived the idea of printing a book; which he executed, first with blocks of wood engraved, and afterwards with separate letters cut in wood. He took for a partner John Faust, and died at Mentz in 1468.—Gen. Biog.

GUY (Thomas), founder of Guy's hospital, was the son of Thomas Guy, lighterman and coal-dealer in Horsleydown, Southwark. He was bred a bookseller, and began trade with no larger a stock than 200l.: but the bulk of his fortune was made by purchasing seamen's tickets, during queen Anne's wars, and by speculations in South-Sea stock, in the memorable year, 1720. Besides Guy's hospital, he erected an almshouse at Tamworth. He died in 1724, aged 81, worth 300,000l.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

GUY, a monk of Arezzo, famous for inventing the gamut in music. He lived about the year 1026.—Burney.

GUYARD (de Berville), a French writer, was born in Bains in 1697, and after a life of extreme distress, died in the prison of the Bicetre, at the age of 73. He wrote the Lives of Bertrand du Guesclin, and of the chevalier Bayard. He is not to be confounded with Anthony Guyard, a benedictine monk, who died at Dijon in 1770. He wrote Political Observations on the Administration of Benefices, &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

GUYET (Francis), a French critic, was born at Angers in 1575. He was tutor to the abbot of Grandfelve, afterwards cardinal de la Valette, and died in 1655. He attempted to prove the Latin language is derived from the Greek, and that all the primitive words of the latter consisted only of one syllable.—Moreri.

GUYON (Johanna Mary Bouvieres de la Mothe), a famous enthusiast, was born at Montargis in France in 1648. At sixteen she married, and became a widow at the age of 28, after which she devoted herself to religious meditation, and imbibed all the mystical conceits of quietism, till she worked herself up into the belief that she was the pregnant woman in the Apocalypse, and the foundress of a new church. Having gained many followers, she was confined in a convent, but was soon released, at the Instance of madame Maintenon. After this she profelyted the illustrious Fenelon, but was treated with great severity by Bossuet of Meaux, by whose means she was sent to the Bastille, from whence she was liberated in 1702. She died at Blois, in 1717. Her works are numerous, and still admired by those who are fond of mysticism.—Moreri.

GUYON (Claude), a French historian, was a native of Franche-Comté, and died at Paris in 1771. One of his best works is an ecclesiastical history.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

GUYSS (John), a dissenting divine, was born at Hertford about 1680. After receiving a suitable education, he became a minister at his native place; but in 1727 he removed to London, as pastor to the independent congregation in New Broad-street. The university of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of D.D. in 1732. Some years before his death he became blind, but still continued his ministerial duties. He died in 1761. His works are: a Paraphrase on the New Testament, 3 vols. 4to.; Jesus Christ God man, or the Constitution of Christ's Person, &c. considered, in several sermons, 8vo.; The Standard Use of the Scripture to all the Purposes of a Divine Revelation, 8vo.; The Holy Spirit a Divine Person, several sermons, 8vo.; Youth's Monitor, or six Sermons preached to young People, 12mo.—Fun. Serm. by Conder.

GWYNN (Eleanor), famous for the circumstance of her rising from the lowest situation to be mistress of Charles II. In the early part of her life she entertained companies at taverns, by her singing; and previous to her winning the affection of the monarch, she was successively mistress to Hart, Lacy, and Buckhurst. She died in 1687.—Granger.

GWYNNE (Mathew), a physician, was descended from an ancient Welsh family, but born in London. He was educated at Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree. He attended sir Henry Hunton, ambassador from queen Elizabeth to the French court. The time of his death is uncertain.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

GYLIFFUS, a Lacedemonian commander, who was employed by the Syracusans against the Athenians, B.C. 414. He gained many great advantages, but having appropriated to himself the greatest part of the spoils, he was banished.—Plutarch in Lysander.

GYZEN (Peter), an eminent landscape painter, born at Antwerp about 1636. He was a disciple of John Breughel, and painted views on the Rhine in an excellent style.—Pilkington.

H.

HAANSBERGEN of Utrecht, a painter, was the disciple of Poelemburg, and many of his pictures have been mistaken for the productions of that master.—Moreri.

HAAS (William), an eminent type-founder and printer, was born at Basil in 1741, and died at the monastery of St. Urban, in the canton of Lucern, in June 1800. He was the first in Germany and Switzerland who successfully engraved a French type in the style of Baskerville. He invented a new printing-press, also the art of printing geographical charts with moveable characters. In his youth he devoted several years to the military service of his country, and he instituted a corps of artillery on a new system, a school of which he superintended himself. Some of his papers are in the Memoirs of the Economical Society at Basil.—Monthly Mag.

HAKEWILL (George), an English divine, was born at Exeter in 1579, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Exeter college. Afterwards he was made archdeacon of Surrey, and rector of Heanton, in his native county, where he died in 1649. He wrote an Apology for the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World, folio, 1635. His brother, a barrister, sided with the puritans, and wrote some tracts against the church.—Prince's Worthies.

HAKLUYT (Richard), an English divine, born in Herefordshire about 1553, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was removed to Christ-church college, Oxford. He distinguished himself by his skill in cosmography, and published a curious collection of voyages, in 3 vols. folio. In 1605 he was made a prebendary of Westminster, besides which he had the benefice of Wetheringset in Suffolk. He died in 1614. His countrymen, out of respect to his labours, named a promontory, lying on the coast of Greenland, Hakluyt's headland.—Biog. Brit.

HALE (sir Matthew), an English judge, was born at Aldersley in Gloucestershire, in 1600, and educated at Magdalen hall, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's-inn, where he followed the study of the law with great application. He was one of archbishop Laud's counsel, and acted in the same capacity to several other illustrious sufferers in the great rebellion, and also for the king. However, he took the covenant and engagement, and accepted of a judge's place in the common-bench from Cromwell. On the death of Oliver, he refused to act under his son Richard. In the parliament which recalled the king, he sat for his native county; and soon after the restoration he was made chief baron of the exchequer, from whence he was advanced to the chief-justiceship of the king's bench. He resigned his office in 1675, and died the same year. His remains were interred in the church-yard of Aldersley. He was twice married, and had by his first wife ten children. He was a learned man, an upright judge, and an exemplary christian. His writings are numerous on theological, philosophical, and legal subjects. The principal are: 1. The Primitive Origination of Mankind considered and explained according to the Light of Nature, &c. folio; 2. The History of the Pleas of the Crown, folio; 3. The original Institution, Power, and Jurisdiction, of Parliaments; 4. Contemplations, Moral and Divine, 3 vols. 8vo. —Life by Burnet.

HALLS (John), commonly called "the ever-memorable," was born at Bath in 1584, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Merton on being elected to a fellowship. In 1613 he was admitted a fellow of Eton college, and in 1618 he attended sir Dudley Carleton, ambassador to Holland, as his chaplain. While there he was present at the synod of Dordt, an account of which he wrote to his patron, printed in his Remains. In 1638 archbishop Laud procured for him a canonry of Windsor. He suffered great hardships in the rebellion, and died in 1656. He was a man of great learning and skill in argument, as appears from his works, 8vo. and 3 vols. 12mo.

HALES (Stephen), a divine and philosopher, was born in Kent in 1677, and brought up at Bene't college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow in 1703. He took great pains in the study of botany and experimental philosophy, and invented a machine for demonstrating the motions of the planets, nearly similar to that called the orrery. In 1741 he published his invention of ventilators. He contented himself with the rectory of Teddington near Hampton-court, refusing higher dignities. He was greatly esteemed by Frederic prince of Wales, and was almoner to the princess. He died in 1761. His communications to the Philosophical Transactions were numerous, besides which he published two volumes of Statical Essays, &c.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HALKET (lady Anna), an English lady, born at London in 1622. She was the daughter of Mr. Robert Murray, preceptor to prince Charles, afterwards king Charles I. In 1656 she married sir James Halket, by whom she had four children. She died in 1669. A volume of Meditations taken from her MSS. was printed at Edinburgh in 1701.—Female Worthies.

HALL (Richard), an English divine of the Roman church, who, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, went to Flanders, and became professor of divinity at Douay, and canon of St. Omer. He published, among other works, a History of the Troubles of his Time, very severe on the protestants. He died in 1604.—Bayle.

HALL (Joseph), an English prelate, was born in 1574, at Ashby-de-la-Zouch in Leicestershire, and brought up at Emanuel college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1597 he published his Virgidemiarum, or Satires, in six books, which were reprinted at Oxford in 1753. About 1603 he was presented to the rectory of Hawsted in Suffolk, which he resigned on obtaining Waltham-holy-croft in Essex. Henry prince of Wales appointed him his chaplain, and had a great regard for him.

In 1616 he obtained the deanry of Worcester, and two years afterwards he was appointed one of the English divines at the synod of Dordt. In 1627 he was promoted to the bishopric of Exeter, from whence in 1641 he was translated to Norwich. This pious and moderate prelate was sadly used by the puritanical party in the civil war. He died in 1656. His works have been collected into three volumes, folio. They abound in fine thoughts, expressed in excellent language, and he has been generally called the English Seneca.—Biog. Brit.

HALL (John), an English lawyer and poet, was born at Durham in 1627, and educated at Cambridge, from whence he was removed to Gray's-inn, and in due course called to the bar. He died in 1657. HALL (Henry), an English divine, born in 1716. He was fellow of King's college, Cambridge, and afterwards became chaplain to archbishop Herring, who gave him the rectories of Harbledown and Orpington in Kent, and East Peckham. He was also treasurer of Wells, and died in 1763.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HALL (John), an English surgeon in the reign of queen Elizabeth. He published a Compendium of Anatomy, and some other works; also a collection of Hymns, with musical notes, in 1565.—Ibid.

HALLE (Peter), a French poet and lawyer, born at Bayeux in Normandy in 1611. He became king's poet and professor of canon law. His Latin poems have merit, but he is better known by his works on jurisprudence. He died in 1689.—Moseri.

HALLE (Antony), professor of eloquence at Caen, who published a Latin grammar, and Latin poems. He died in 1675, aged 83.—Ibid.

HALLE (Claude Guy), a painter, and director of the academy of painting at Paris. Several of his works adorned the churches in Paris, particularly that of Notre Dame. He died in 1736, aged 85. His son, Noel HALLE, was also a good painter. He was a member of the academy of painting, and for his services in reforming that at Rome, obtained the order of St. Michael. He died in 1781, aged 70.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HALLER (Albert), a celebrated physician, was born at Berne, and evinced great parts at a very early age, particularly in poetry. His reputation procured him a medical professorship at Gottingen, where he was afterwards chosen president of the academy. He was also a member of most of the learned societies in Europe, but refused the title of a baron of the empire. He died at Berne in 1777, at an advanced age. His son, who trod in his steps, died in 1786, after having published an esteemed work, entitled Biographie Litteraire de la Suisse. The poems of the elder Haller are descriptive and elegant. Besides these he published : 1. Stirpes Helvetiæ, folio; 2. Disputationes Anatomicæ, 8 vols. 4to.; 3. Disputationes Chirurgicæ, 5 vols. 4to.; 4. Disputationes de Morbis, 7 vols. 4to.; 5. Bibliotheca Medicinæ theoreticæ et practicæ; 6. Elementa Physiologiæ, 8 vols. 4to.; 7. Hippocratis Genuina, 4 vols. 4to. &c.—Novæ. Diss. Hist.

HALLEY (Edmund), a celebrated astronomer, was born in London in 1656, and educated at St. Paul's school, from whence he was sent to Queen's college, Oxford, where he chiefly applied to the mathematics, particularly astronomy. He made a number of observations, and having formed the design of completing the scheme of the heavens by the addition of the stars near the south pole, he went to St. Helena in 1676, where he completed his catalogue. On his return he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and in 1679 he went to Dantzic to confer with Hevelius about the dispute between him and Dr. Hooke, respecting the preference of plain or glass sights in astronomical instruments. In 1680 happened the great comet, which Mr. Halley first observed in his passage from Dover to Calais. He afterwards completed his observations upon it at the royal observatory at Paris. From thence he went to Italy with Mr. Robert Nelson, and in 1681 he returned to England. In 1686 Mr., afterwards sir Isaac, Newton committed to his care the publication of his Principia, to which Mr. Halley prefixed some Latin verses. In 1698 he was appointed commander of a ship sent out for the purpose of trying his theory of the variation of the compass. The year following he made another voyage with the same design, and from his observations he constructed his General Chart, exhibiting the variation of the compass in most parts of the ocean. He was sent out again on a third voyage to ascertain the course of the tides in the British channel, of which also he published a chart. Soon after he went, at the request of the emperor of Germany, to survey the Adriatic, and to examine two ports which the emperor intended to erect there. On his return, in 1703, the degree of doctor of laws was conferred on him by the university of Oxford. He was also appointed professor of geometry, and had a captain's half pay settled on him. In 1713 he was chosen secretary to the royal society, and in 1719 made astronomer-royal. He died in 1742. Dr. Halley published several papers in the Philosophical Transactions, a set of Astronomical Tables, and an edition of Apollonius's Works, folio, 1710.—Biog. Brit.

HALLIFAX (George Savile, marquis of), an eminent statesman, was born in 1630, and created marquis in 1682. Charles II. made him a privy counsellor, and lord privy seal; he was also offered the post of secretary of state, and that of lord-lieutenant of Ireland, but declined them. On the accession of James he was appointed president of the council, from which he was dismissed for refusing his consent to a repeal of the tests. In the convention parliament he was chosen speaker of the house of lords, and at the accession of William and Mary was again made lord privy seal. In 1689 he resigned that office, and became an opponent of the government. He died in 1695. His lordship wrote an excellent piece, entitled, Advice to a Daughter.—Granger.

HALLIFAX (Samuel), a learned English bishop, was born at Mansfield in Derbyshire, and admitted at an early age of Jesus college, Cambridge, where he proceeded A. B. in 1744, and A. M. in 1747. He then removed to Trinity hall, and took his doctor's degree in civil law in 1764. He was many years Arabic professor at Cambridge, but resigned in 1770, and was then made regius professor of civil law. In 1775 he was created D. D. by mandate. He became chaplain to the king, master of the faculties in doctors' commons, and rector of Worsop in Nottinghamshire. He was afterwards master of his college, which station he resigned in 1781 on being promoted to the bishopric of Gloucester, from whence he was translated to St. Asaph in 1787. He died in 1790. His lordship wrote an Analysis of Civil Law, and published a volume of Lectures preached at bishop Warburton's lecture in Lincoln's-inn chapel.—Edwards's Survey of the Cathedral of St. Asaph.

HALS (Francis), an eminent portrait painter, was born at Mechlin in 1584, and died in 1666. He was equalled only by Vandyck. His brother Dirk excelled in painting festive meetings among boars, &c. He died in 1656.—Pilkington.

HAMBERGER (George Albert), an eminent mathematician, born in Franconia in 1662, and died at Jena in 1726. He wrote De Iride Diluvii; de opticis Oculorum Vitæ; de Hydraulicæ de frigore; de Basi Computi ecclesiastici, 4to.—Moreri.

HAMBERGER (George Christopher), a voluminous German writer, who is best known as the editor of the works of Orpheus. He was a member of the university of Göttingen, and died in 1773, aged 47.—Gen. Biog. Diss.

HAMEL (John Baptist), a French mathematician and priest of the oratory, was born in Lower Normandy in 1624. He studied at Caen and Paris, and at the age of 19 published an admirable treatise on Trigonometry. He was the first secretary to the royal academy, and attended Mr. Colbert in his travels. In 1678 appeared his Philosophia Vetus et Nova. In 1698 he published Regiæ Scientiarum Academiæ Historiæ. He died at Paris in 1706. Besides his philosophical works, he published some on theological subjects.—Novæ. Diss.

HAMEL DU MONCEAU (Henry Louis du), born at Paris in 1709. He applied with great assiduity to the study of agriculture, commerce, and mechanics, and was appointed inspector of the marine. He died in 1782. He wrote Elements of Agriculture, treatises on Trees, and some on Naval Architecture.—Ibid.

HAMILCAR (Barcas), father of Hannibal. He distinguished himself as an able general, and founded Barcelona in Spain. He was slain in battle, B. C. 237.—Corn. Nepos. Plutarch.

HAMILTON (Patrick), a gentleman of learning and piety, who suffered for his religion in Scotland at the beginning of the reformation. He was related to James V. and early in life was made abbot of Ferme, which would have been followed by other preferments if he had not imbibed the doctrine of Luther, which he propagated with so much zeal as to irritate the catholic clergy, particularly cardinal Breton, archbishop of St. Andrews, by whose means he was brought to trial and condemned to the flames. He suffered with great fortitude in 1527, aged only 23. A confession of faith, by him, was published by John Frith.—Fox's AAs and M. n.

HAMILTON (Anthony, count), an ingenious writer, descended from a Scotch family, but born in Ireland. He attached himself to the fortunes of the house of Stuart, and wrote Fairy Tales, and some poems; but his best work is the Memoirs of the Count de Grammont, a romance. He died in France in 1720, aged 74.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HAMILTON (George), earl of Orkney, and fifth son of the earl of Selkirk, distinguished himself as an able general in the reigns of William and Anne. He died in 1737.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HAMILTON (James, first duke of), was the son of James marquis of Hamilton, born in 1606, and educated at Oxford. In 1625 he succeeded his father, and gained the favour of Charles I. In 1631 he went with an army to the assistance of Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, and returned to England the year following. He afterwards accompanied the king to Scotland, and assisted at the coronation. On the breaking out of the disturbances in that country, respecting episcopacy, he was appointed the king's commissioner, and when the war began he mustered forces in defence of the royal cause, for which he was created duke of Hamilton and earl of Cambridge. After distinguishing himself greatly in behalf of the king, he was defeated by Cromwell at Preston, and though he surrendered on a promise that his life should be spared, he was brought to trial and beheaded in 1649.—Lives of the Dukes of Hamilton, by Burnet, fol.

HAMILTON (William, duke of), brother of the above, was born in 1616, and succeeded to the title in 1649. He was secretary of state for Scotland, bravely exerted himself in the royal cause, and died of the wounds which he received at the Worcester fight in 1652.—Ibid.

HAMILTON (William), a native of Bangor, and an ingenious poet, whose works were printed at Edinburgh in 12mo, 1760. He was born in 1704, and died in 1754.

HAMILTON (sir William), was born in Scotland, of the noble family of that name, in 1730. His education was liberal, but his fortune very narrow, which he mended in 1755 by marrying a heiress. In 1764 he was appointed ambassador to the court of Naples, where he distinguished himself by his ardour in promoting the fine arts, in collecting antiquities, and advancing the interests of science, till his recall in 1800. He explored the volcanic mountains of Vesuvius and Etna, his valuable observations on which have been published. His Campi Phlegræi, 2 vols. folio, must also be pronounced a splendid and highly interesting performance. He greatly promoted the publication of the magnificent and elegant work, Antiquités Etrusques, Grecques, et Romaines, tirées du Cabinet de Mr. Hamilton; the editor of which was D'Hancarville. During his residence at Naples, our ambassador received from his majesty the ribband of the order of the bath. The Philosophical Transactions have been enriched by many of his communications, as also has the British Museum by his liberal presents of antiquities and other curiosities. Sir William, after remaining a widower some years, married, in 1791, an English lady, who survives him. He died at London, in May 1803.—Literary Journal.

HAMLET, the name of a celebrated Danish prince, whose story is told by Saxo Grammaticus, and rendered familiar by the admirable play written on the subject by Shakspeare.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HAMMOND (Henry), a learned divine, born at Chertsey in Surrey, in 1605, and educated at Eton, from whence he was removed to Magdalen college, Oxford, of which he was chosen fellow in 1625. In 1632 he obtained the rectory of Penshurst in Kent, from whence he was ejected in the rebellion. In 1643 he was made archdeacon of Chichester. He attended the king at the treaty of Uxbridge, to confer with the parliamentary commissioners on church government, on which subject he disputed with Vines, a presbyterian minister. In 1645 he was appointed canon of Christchurch, Oxford, and chaplain in ordinary to the king, whom he attended in the Isle of Wight. In 1653 he published his Annotations on the New Testament, a work of uncommon merit. He died just as he was about to be made bishop of Worcester, in 1660. Besides the above he wrote a Commentary on the Psalms, a Practical Catechism, Sermons, and controversial pieces, all collected into 4 vols. folio.—Life by Fell. Biog. Br.

HAMMOND (Anthony), an English poet, was born in Huntingdonshire, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge. He was a member of parliament, and commissioner of the navy. He published a volume of poems, and wrote the Life of Mr. Moyle, and died about 1730.—Gen. B. D.

HAMMOND (James), the son of the above, was born in 1710, and educated at Westminster school. He was equerry to the prince of Wales, and member of parliament for Truro. Lord Chesterfield published his Love's Legacies, which are very tender. He died in 1742.—Ibid.

HAMON (John), a French physician, born at Cherbourg. He wrote several books on religious subjects in a good style, and died in 1687, aged 69.—Moretti.

HAMPDEN (John), an English patriot, was descended of an ancient family in Buckinghamshire and born at London in 1594. In 1636 he distinguished himself by his opposition to the payment of ship-money, by which he acquired great popularity. He now became a leading man in the house of commons, and at the commencement of the civil war he took up arms against the king, but was shot by a pistol in a skirmish in Oxfordshire in 1643. Lord Clarendon observes of him, that "he had a head to contrive, a tongue to persuade, and a heart to execute, any mischief."—Clarendon's Hist. of the Rebellion.

HAMSA, a mohammedan doctor, who wrote a book against the Koran, remarkable for its purity and elegance, which has been translated from Arabic into French, by La Croix.—D'Herbulet.

HANDEL (George Frederic), an illustrious musician, was born at Hall in Saxony in 1684. His father, who intended him for the law, perceiving his propensity to music, prohibited all instruments from his house. The son, however, contrived to have a small clavi-chord concealed in the garret, where he used to amuse himself when the family were asleep. At the age of seven he went with his father to the court of the duke of Saxe-Weissenfels, to whom Handel's brother-in-law was valet. While there he got into the church one morning, and began to play on the organ. The duke, who was in the church, surprized at the playing, asked who it was, and on being informed, he expostulated with the old gentleman for restraining his son's inclination; in consequence of which a master was provided for him. Handel made so great a progress, that at the age of nine he composed the church service. In 1698 he went to Berlin, where he was greatly noticed by the king of Prussia. From thence he went to Hamburg, and while there had a dispute with another musician, who made a push at him with his sword as they were coming out of the orchestra, but a music book in his bo-some prevented the weapon from piercing his heart. Here he composed, at the age of 14, his opera of Almeria. Soon after he visited Italy, and at Florence produced the opera of Rodrigo. In 1710 he visited England, but being under an engagement to the elector of Hanover, his stay was short. However, in 1712 he returned, and obtained a pension of 200*l.* a year, which was afterwards doubled. Some of the nobility projected a plan for erecting an academy in the Haymarket, to secure a supply of operas, composed by Handel, and under his direction. This plan was carried into effect, and succeeded for about ten years, and then fell to the ground; when the rage for Italian music prevailed, and Handel could not stop the progress of the delusion. But in 1742 his popularity returned, and he retained his glory to the last. He died April 14th, 1759, and was buried in Westminster abbey, where there is an elegant monument to his memory. But his greatest monument is in his works, a complete edition of which was published by Dr. Arnold.—Life of Handel, 8vo.

HANISAH, chief of one of the most ancient sects among the Mussulmans: the other sects are those of Schiafi, Malik, and Hambel. The Turks account Hanisah a saint. He died at Babylon.—Rycaut's Hist. of the Turks. Chardin's Travels.

HANKINS (Martin), professor of history at Breslaw, was the author of some learned works; the best of which is entitled, De Romanorum Rerum Scriptioribus. He died in 1709, aged 76.—Moretti.

HANMER (Meredith), a divine of the church of England, was a native of Flintshire, and treasurer of Trinity church, Dublin. He died of the plague, in 1604. Dr. Hanmer translated the ecclesiastical histories of Eusebius, Socrates, and Evagrius, into English.—Collier's Hist. D. & C.

HANMER (Jonathan), a nonconformist divine, born at Barnstaple in Devonshire about 1605, and educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge. He obtained the living of Bishop's Tawton, and the lectureship of Barnstaple, from which he was ejected in 1662. He died in 1687. He wrote a Discourse on Confirmation, and a View of Ecclesiastical Antiquity.—Calamy. Palmer.

HANMER (Sir Thomas), an English writer, was born in 1676, and educated at Westminster school, and Christchurch, Oxford. He was chosen speaker of the house of commons in 1713, and died in 1746. Sir Thomas published an edition of Shakespeare with notes, in 6 vols. 4to. Gen. Biog. Dict.

HANNEKEN (Mennon), a lutheran divine, born in Oldenburg in 1595. He was professor of the Oriental languages at Marpurg, and wrote a Hebrew Grammar, and other works. He died in 1671. His son, Philip Louis, became professor of Hebrew at Gießen, and, died in 1706.—Moreri.

HANNEMAN (Adrian), a portrait and historical painter, born at the Hague in 1611. He copied the works of Vandyck with great exactness. He died in 1680.—Heubruken. De Pile.

HANNIBAL, a famous Carthaginian general, son of Hamilcar, who made him swear eternal enmity to the Romans, at the age of eight years. On the death of Asdrubal, he obtained the command of the Carthaginian armies, and in three years subdued all Spain. Having taken Saguntum, which was in alliance with the Romans, it occasioned the second Punic war, in which he shewed the most consummate generalship. He is said to have crossed the Alps by softening the rocks with fire and vinegar. On his arrival in Italy he defeated Cornelius Scipio, and obtained several victories over the most experienced Roman generals, particularly at Cannæ, where the Romans lost about 40,000 men, and had Hannibal pushed on for Rome it must have fallen. But by stopping at Capua, where his soldiers gave themselves up to luxury; the Romans recovered from their surprize; and when he appeared before the city, it excited so little concern that the ground on which he was encamped was put up for sale, and sold at a high price. He soon retired, and experienced a defeat near Zama. A peace was then concluded; but Hannibal, fearing the Romans, fled to Prusias king of Bithynia, and on hearing that the senate had sent to demand him, he poisoned himself, 182 B. C.—Corn. Nepos. Plutarch.

HANNIBALIANUS (Flavius Claudius); nephew of the emperor Constantine, from whom he received the provinces of Pontus, Cappadocia, and the Lesser Armenia, with the title of king. He was murdered by Constantius, in 358.—Univ. Hist.

HANNO, a Carthaginian general, who made great geographical discoveries in the interior of Africa, an account of which is still extant. There was another of the same name, who tamed a young lion, which used to attend him like a dog. The Carthaginians, fearing his power, banished him.—Moreri.

HANNSACHS, a German poet, who published no less than five folio volumes of poems, in which are a few grains only that are passable. He was a native of Nuremburgh, and died in 1576.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

HANWAY (Jonas), an eminent philanthropist, was born at Portsmouth in 1712, and being bred a merchant, formed a connexion with a commercial house at Peterburgh, in consequence of which he travelled into Persia, of which country he published an account in 2 vols. 4to. On settling in London, he devoted a considerable portion of his time to benevolent purposes, and was the principal institutor of the marine society, and the Magdalen Hospital. For these exertions he was made a commissioner of the navy; and when he resigned his seat at the board, his salary was continued. He died in 1786. He wrote several religious books of considerable merit; the best of which is entitled Domestic Happiness promoted, 12mo.—Life by Pugh

HARCOURT (Harriet Eusebia), an ingenious English lady, was the daughter of a gentleman of large estate at Richmond in Yorkshire, where she was born in 1705. She received a learned education from her father, whom she accompanied in his travels over Europe, and at his death inherited his estates. In 1733 she returned to England, having lost her father at Constantinople. Having brought with her several ladies from abroad, she formed with them a kind of monastery on her estate in Yorkshire, and another in one of the western isles of Scotland, but without any vows or austerity. She died in 1745, aged 39. Her romantic institutions ceased after her death.—Female Worthies.

HARDER (John James), a physician, was born at Basil in 1656. After studying medicine at his native place he went to France, and on his return was made professor of rhetoric, but shortly after obtained the medical and anatomical chair, to which was added that of botany. He was also three times rector of the university. In 1694 the emperor Leopold created him a count; and he obtained several distinguished honours from other princes. He died in 1711. His works are: Apiarium; Prodromus Physiologicus, Naturam explicans Humorum Nutritioni & Generationi dicatorum; Examen Anatomicum Cochleæ terrestriæ, &c. His brother Jerome was a learned divine, and chosen professor of oriental languages at Leyden; but before his entry on the office he resolved on making a tour to the East, and died at Constantinople.—Moreri.

HARDERY (Geoffrey), an English monk of the order of St. Augustine and confessor to Henry III. He was a doctor and professor at Oxford, and wrote some pieces on evangelical poverty, a History of his Order, Lectures on the Old and New Testament, &c. He died at London, in 1360.—Pitts. Bale.

HARDIME (Peter), a flower-painter of Antwerp, was born in 1678, and died in 1748. In the monastery of the Bernardines at Antwerp he painted four large designs, representing the four seasons. His brother Simon was also a good flower-painter, and died at London in 1737.—Pilkington.

HARDING (John), the author of an English Chronicle, who died in 1461.

HARDING (Thomas), an English divine of the Roman church, was born at Comb Martin in Devonshire, in 1512. He was fellow of New college, Oxford, and Hebrew professor; but at the accession of Elizabeth he went to Louvain, where he employed his pen against the protestants, particularly bishop Jewell, with whom he had a long controversy. He died about 1570.—Wood, A. O.

HARDINGE (Nicholas), an English poet, was fellow of King's college, Cambridge, member of parliament for Eye in Suffolk, and secretary of the treasury. He died in 1758. Some of his Latin poems are in the Musæ Anglicanæ, and the English in other collections.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HARDION (James), a French writer, was a native of Tours, and a member of the academy of inscriptions. He wrote a Treatise on Poetry and Rhetoric; and a Universal History, in 18 vols. He died in 1766, aged 80.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

HARDOUIN (John), a French jesuit, was born at Kimper in Bretagne, in 1647. He published some of the Latin classics, with learned notes, for the use of the dauphin; but he is rendered famous by the strange notion which he broached, that the greater part of the authors, considered as ancients, are in fact moderns, and were forgeries of the monks. He died in 1729.—Moreri.

HARDWICKE (Philip Yorke, earl of), a great English lawyer, was born at Dover in Kent, in 1690. In 1718 he was elected into parliament for Lewes in Suffex. After serving the offices of solicitor and attorney general, he was in 1733 appointed chief justice of the king's bench, and created a peer. In 1736 he was made lord chancellor, which situation he held twenty years. In 1754 he was created earl of Hardwicke. He died in 1764. In all his offices, particularly the last, he distinguished himself so as to acquire the esteem of all parties, and the veneration of posterity.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HARDY (Alexander), a French dramatic writer, who wrote six hundred pieces, of which only forty-one were published. He died in 1630.—Moreri.

HARDY (sir Charles), an English admiral, and the grand-son of an eminent naval commander of the same name, in the reign of queen Anne. He had the command of the channel fleet in 1779, but died the same year at Spithead.—Gent. Mag.

HARE (Francis), an English prelate, was educated at Eton school, and King's college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow. From being dean of Worcester he was raised to the bishopric of Chichester, which he held, with the deanry of St. Paul's to his death, in 1740. He wrote some tracts against bishop Hoadley, and published an edition of Terence. He also reduced the book of Psalms to a metrical order, which system was completely refuted by Dr. Lowth.—Biog. Br.

HARIOT (Thomas), an English mathematician, born at Oxford in 1560, and educated at St. Mary hall. He accompanied sir Walter Raleigh to America, and published an account of the discovery of Virginia. On his return he was patronized by the earl of Northumberland, who allowed him a pension. He lived for some time at Sion college, and died in 1621. His Artis Analyticæ Praxis was printed after his death, and there is no doubt but that Descartes drew from it all his pretended discoveries in algebra.—Ibid.

HARIRI, an Arabian author who died about 1122. He was a native of Barfa in the kingdom of Babylon, and wrote Almakamah, or Fifty Assemblies, i. e. Conferences, in which are some excellent remarks. They were published by Golius in Arabic and Latin at Leyden in 1656, and six of them were translated into English by Mr. Chappelow, Arabic professor at Cambridge, in 1767.—Moreri.

HARLEY (Robert), earl of Oxford; was eldest son of sir Edward Harley, and born in London in 1661. He received a private education, and at the revolution raised a troop of horse for king William. He was soon elected into parliament, and in 1701 was chosen speaker, which office he held in two succeeding parliaments. In 1704 he was appointed one of the secretaries of state, and in 1710 made a commissioner of the treasury, and chancellor of the exchequer. The same year he was wounded at the privy-council table with a penknife by the marquis of Guiscard, under examination for treasonable practices. In 1711 he was raised to the peerage, and appointed lord high treasurer, which office he resigned a few days before the death of queen Anne. In 1715 he was impeached of high treason by the commons, and committed to the Tower, where he remained two years, and was then brought to his trial, and acquitted. He died in 1724. His lordship was a liberal patron of learning, and a great collector of books. His library was sold after the death of his son, and his MSS are in the British museum.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HARMER (Thomas), a dissenting minister, was born at Norwich in 1715, and after receiving a suitable education, settled as pastor of a congregation at Wheatfield in Suffolk. He published Observations on Passages of Scripture, 4 vols. 8vo. a work of great value; also Outlines of a Commentary on Solomon's Song; and some other pieces. He died in 1788.—Europ. Mag. May 1792.

HARMODIUS. See ARISTOGITON.

HAROLD I. king of England, was the son of Canute I. but his legitimacy being questioned, Alnot, archbishop of Canterbury, refused to consecrate any but the sons of Emma. Harold, however, seized upon the throne, and having got his half-brother, Alfred, into his possession, put out his eyes, and confined him in a monastery. He died without issue, in the 5th year of his reign, in 1039.—Rapin. Hume.

HAROLD II. son of earl Godwin, seized the throne on the death of Edward the Confessor, in 1066. That year William, duke of Normandy, invaded the kingdom, and a battle ensued near Hastings, in which Harold was slain.—Ibid.

HARPALUS, a Grecian astronomer about 480 B. C. who corrected the cycle of eight years, which was invented by Cleostratus, and adopted one of nine, which was afterwards improved by Meton.—Petavius, Ration. Temporum.

HARPALUS, a man to whom Alexander committed the charge of the treasures at Babylon, while he went to the East. Harpalus squandered away a good part of the riches, and fled with the remainder. He was assassinated at Crete, B. C. 325.—Quintus Curtius. Arrian.

HARPE (John Francis de la), a celebrated writer, was born at Paris in 1739 of Swiss parents, and educated at the college of Harcourt. After publishing some lesser pieces, he brought forth in 1764 his tragedy of the Earl of Warwick, which was received with applause. This was followed by a number of dramatic pieces of great merit, also poems which gained prizes from different academies. His Elogies of Fenelon, Racine, Catinat, and Charles V. were also greatly admired; but his principal work is a Complete Course of Literature, 12 vols. 8vo. He died in 1803.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HARPOCRATION (Valerius), a rhetorician of Alexandria, who wrote a lexicon upon the ten orators of Greece, in which he describes the magistracy and judicial proceedings in Africa. He flourished about A. D. 180. Aldus published his work in 1603 at Venice, and Gronovius at Leyden in 1696.—Moreri.

HARPSFELD (Nicholas), an English divine, and archdeacon of Canterbury, who distinguished himself by his zeal for the Roman catholic religion, for which he was imprisoned many years in the reign of Elizabeth. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History of England; one of the heresy of Wickliff, &c. He died in 1572.—Pitt.

HARRINGTON (sir John), an English poet, was born in Somersetshire, and educated at Eton and Cambridge. He published a translation of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, and received the honour of knighthood, in the field, from the earl of Essex, and in the reign of James I. was made a knight of the bath. A collection of his works has been printed under the title of Nugæ Antiquæ, in 3 vols. 12mo. He died in 1612, aged 51.—Parke's Ed. of the Nugæ Antiquæ.

HARRINGTON (John, lord), was the eldest son of lord and lady Harrington, to whose care James I. committed his daughter Elizabeth, afterwards the wife of Frederic, elector palatine and king of Bohemia. The young lord early evinced superior talents, and spoke Latin with great fluency. He acquired a considerable variety of knowledge, which was accompanied with a deep sense of religion. It is said, that when at Rome the jesuits, having endeavoured in vain to pervert him and his tutor, Mr. Tovey, administered poison to them, of which the latter died soon after his return to England, but the former struggled against its effects a longer time. He died, however, at the age of 22, in 1613. His lordship was the intimate companion and correspondent of Henry prince of Wales, and the letters which passed between them in Latin are extant.—Nugæ Antiquæ.

HARRINGTON (James), a political writer, was born in 1611, in Northamptonshire, and educated at Trinity college, Oxford. In the civil wars he at first sided with the parliament, but afterwards became an attendant on his majesty. On the king's death he devoted his time to study, and composed his Oceana, a sort of political romance, in which he defended republicanism. This work occasioned a great controversy, and the author formed a society upon its principles. In 1661 he was, on a charge of treason, sent to the Tower, from whence he was removed to St. Nicholas's island near Plymouth, but was afterwards released on bail. He died decanted in his intellects, in 1677. His works were published in folio in 1700, and since in 1 vol. 4to.—Life by Toland.

HARRIS (Walter), an English physician in the reign of William III., who wrote a good book on the diseases of children.—Gen. Biog. Diff.

HARRIS (Robert), an English divine, was born in 1578 at Broad Camden in Gloucestershire, and educated at Oxford. In the rebellion he joined the presbyterians, and was made rector of Petersfield, and president of Trinity college Oxford, where he died in 1658. His works are: Sermons; Tractat. de Fœdere Novi Testamenti; Remedium contra Avaritiam; Epistolæ Apologeticæ, &c.—Wood A. O.

HARRIS (John), an English divine and mathematician, who was secretary to the Royal Society, and died about 1730. He published a translation of Pardie's Elements of Geometry, but is best known by having first projected a Cyclopædia, or Dictionary of Sciences. This work appeared in 1710, in 2 vols. folio, entitled Lexicon Technicum; a supplementary volume was added to it in 1736, but the Dictionary of Chambers superseded it.

HARRIS (James), a philological writer, was born at Salisbury, in 1709, and educated at the grammar school of that city, from whence he was removed to Wadham college, Oxford. He sat in parliament for Christ Church, Hampshire, and in 1763 was appointed commissioner of the admiralty, but afterwards was removed to the treasury board. In 1774 he was made secretary and comptroller to the queen, and died in 1780. He wrote, 1. Three Treatises, concerning Art, Music, Painting, and Poetry, and Happiness, 8vo. 2. Hermes, or a Philosophical Enquiry concerning Universal Grammar, 8vo. 3. Philosophical Arrangements. 4. Philosophical Enquiries, 2 vols. 8vo.—Life written by his son lord Malmesbury, prefixed to an edition of his father's works.

HARRIS (William), a dissenting divine of the independent persuasion, was upwards of 40 years pastor of a congregation in Crutched-friars. He was the author of a volume of Sermons on the principal Representations of the Messiah in the Old Testament; another called Funeral Discourses; besides other religious pieces. He died in 1740, aged 65.—Toulmin's edit. of Neale's Puritan.

HARRIS (William), a baptist minister at Honiton in Devonshire. He wrote the Lives of James I., Charles I. and II., Oliver Cromwell, and Hugh Peters, in the manner of Bayle, but not with much fidelity, being violently set against the house of Stuart, and partial to republicanism. He died at Honiton, in 1770.—Nichols's Anecd. of Dervier.

HARRISON (William), an English writer, was fellow of New college, Oxford, and secretary to the earl of Stafford, at the Hague. He was the correspondent of Swift, and wrote some poems, to be found in Nichols's Collection. He died in 1712.—Gen. B. D.

HARRISON (John), an ingenious mechanic, was born at Wragley in Yorkshire, in 1693, and bred a carpenter. Having a turn for wheel work, he constructed some wooden clocks, the accuracy of which was so much admired that he went to London in 1725 with a time keeper, which he shewed to Dr. Halley, who recommended him to Mr. Graham, from whom he received great encouragement. In 1735 he visited London again, with a complete machine, and was sent by the board of longitude to Lisbon, to make a trial of it. From that time he went on improving his invention, and received the reward of 20,000*l.* granted by parliament. He died in 1776.—Europ. Mag.

HARRISON (John), one of the regicides who sat at the trial of Charles I. He was the son of a butcher, and rose by his impudence and fanaticism to the rank of colonel in the parliament army. He was executed at the restoration.—Trials of the Regicides.

Besides the above, he wrote Le Bopheur, a poem; Of Mau, a philosophical work, of the same cast as his first performance; The Child of Nature improved by Chance, an indecent romance.

HELVICIUS (Christopher), professor of the Greek and Oriental languages, and also of divinity, at Gießen, was born in 1581, near Frankfort, and educated at Marburg. He died in 1617. He published several Latin poems, grammars of different languages, lexicons, and chronological tables.—Bayle.

HALFOT (Peter), a Franciscan monk, was of English extraction, and the author of a work, entitled, A History of monastic Orders, in 8 vols. 4to. He died in 1716, aged 56.—Moreri.

HEMELAR (John), a divine of the Roman church, was born at the Hague, and canon in the cathedral of Antwerp. He published Commentaries on the imperial Medals from Julius Cæsar to Justinian. He died in 1640.—Moreri.

HEMMINGFORD (Walter de), an English chronicler of the 14th century, whose work extends from 1066 to 1308. He was an ecclesiastic in Gilsborough abbey, Yorkshire, and died in 1347.—Pitt.

HEMSKIRK (Egbert), called Hemskirk the Old, was an excellent painter of droll subjects and conversations.—Pilk.

HEMSKIRK (Egbert), called the Young, was probably the son of the above. He had a whimsical imagination, many of his pieces being representations of the nocturnal meetings of witches and devils. He died in 1704, aged 59.—Ibid.

HEMMERLIN, or MALLEOLUS (Felix), a canon of Zurich in 1428. He lost his benefices for satirizing the secular and regular clergy, and was sent to prison. His Opuscula are very rare.—Moreri.

HEMSTERHUIS (Tiberius), a learned critic, was born at Groningen in 1685, and at the age of 19 was appointed professor of mathematics and philosophy at Amsterdam. In 1717 he became professor of Greek at Franeker, to which was added the professorship of history. He afterwards filled the same offices at Leyden, where he died in 1766. He published, 1. the three last books of Julius Pollux's Onomasticon, in 1706; 2. The works of Lucian; 3. The Plutus of Aristophanes; and other esteemed works.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

HENAULT (John), a French poet, was born at Paris. The superintendant Fouquet gave him the place of receiver of the taxes at Fores. He wrote a satirical poem on Colbert, and several pieces of merit. His conduct was irregular, and his principles libertine, but he died penitent in 1682.—Bayle.

HENAULT (Charles John Francis), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1685. In 1715 he produced a tragedy on the stage, which had a bad success; but Mr. Walpole, in 1768, begged it of the author, and printed it at Strawberry-hill. In 1706 he was admitted a counsellor of parliament, and in 1710 president of the chamber of inquests. In 1744 he published his chronological abridgment of the History of France, which is highly esteemed. He also wrote some comedies, and died in 1770.—Nov. Dict. Hist.

HENDERSON (Alexander), a Scotch presbyterian divine, who was at the head of his party on account of his learning and eloquence. He was sent to England as a plenipotentiary, and when Charles I. was at Newcastle in 1646, he engaged in a dispute with him about episcopacy, in which Henderson was completely overcome. This disgrace, it is said, hastened his end; and before his death he expressed his concern at the part he had taken against the king.—Granger.

HENDERSON (John), an English actor, was born in London in 1747. Having a taste for drawing, he was placed under Mr. Fournier, an artist of ability, but of an eccentric character, with whom he did not continue long. He next lived with a silversmith, on whose death he devoted himself to theatrical studies. His first appearance was at Bath, under the name of Courtney, in 1772, in the character of Hamlet, which he performed with great applause. His fame increased, but it was not till 1777 that he made his appearance on the London stage, when he was engaged by Mr. Colman at the Haymarket theatre, where the first character he performed was Shylock. After this he distinguished himself as a first-rate performer in Falstaff, Richard III. and other arduous parts, which he personated with unbounded applause at Drury-lane, and at different provincial theatres. He died of a spasm in the brain, Nov. 25, 1785.—Life by Ireland.

HENDERSON (John), an extraordinary genius, was born at Ballegarane in Ireland, in 1757. His father was a preacher in Mr. Wesley's connection, and afterwards a schoolmaster near Bristol. Young Henderson received his education among the methodists, and made so quick a progress as to be employed in teaching Latin in Kingwood school at eight years of age, and Greek in lady Huntington's college in Wales when he was no more than twelve. Dr. Tucker, dean of Gloucester, sent him to Pembroke college, Oxford, where he took his degree of B. A. but never entered into orders. His habits and his studies were alike singular. He wore no neckcloth. His buckles did not exceed the size of an ordinary knee-buckle. He generally went to rest about daybreak, and rose in the afternoon. He used to strip himself naked to the waist, and going to the pump, would completely sluice himself, after which he would pump over his shirt, and in that condition go to bed. His learning was multifarious; but he delighted chiefly in alchemy, physiognomy, and the occult arts. He died at Oxford in 1788.—Fen. Sermon by Agutter. Europ. Mag.

HENGIST, the first Saxon king of Kent, towards the end of the 5th century, was a descendant of Woden, whom the Saxons deified. Hengist being called in by Vortigern, king of the Britons, to assist him in expelling the Picts, took with him his daughter Rowena, with whom Vortigern became enamoured, and married her. Hengist then obtained the kingdom of Kent. He died in 489.—Bede. William of Malmesbury.

HENLEY (Anthony), an English writer and senator, was born in Hampshire, and educated at Oxford. In 1698 he was chosen member of parliament for Andover. He wrote some papers in the Tatler and Medley, and died in 1711. His son Robert became earl of Northampton, and lord chancellor.—Gen. Bi g. Dict.

HENLEY (John), commonly called the Orator, was born at Melton Mowbray in Leicestershire, in 1692, and brought up at Cambridge, after which he entered into orders, and became a preacher in London, but disgraced himself by setting up a lecture on Sunday evenings, near Lincoln's-inn-fields. He had also another on Wednesdays, chiefly on political subjects. He published a translation of Pliny's Epistles, and other works. He died in 1756.—Ibid.

HENNUNER (John), a French bishop, who saved the protestants in his diocese of Lisieux, at the time of the Bartholomew massacre, against the orders of Charles IX. He died in 1577.—Moreri.

HENRY I. surnamed the Fowler, emperor of Germany, was the son of Otho duke of Saxony, and elected to the imperial dignity in 919 or 920. He reunited the German princes, and subdued the Hungarians, formed good laws, and built several cities. He moreover vanquished the Bohemians, the Slavonians, and Danes, and conquered the kingdom of Lorraine. He died in 936, and was succeeded by his son Otho.—Univ. Hist.

HENRY II. called the Lame, grandson of the preceding, was elected emperor in 1002. He re-established Benedict VIII. in the papal chair, and was crowned by that pontiff in 1014 at Rome. He tranquillised Italy, and expelled from thence the Saracens and Greeks. He died in 1024.—Ibid.

HENRY III. or the Black, son of Conrad II. was born in 1017, and succeeded his father in 1039. He was crowned at Rome by Clement II. and died in 1056.—Ibid.

HENRY IV. the Great, son and successor of the preceding, was born in 1050. Agnes, his mother, governed with ability during his minority. The Saxons rebelled against him, and accused him of simony and other crimes to pope Gregory VII. who took from him the right of presenting to benefices. Henry then called a diet at Worms, in 1076, for the purpose of deposing the pope, who anathematized the emperor. The German princes deposed Henry, who went to Italy, and made his submission to the pontiff, but Gregory was not to be appeased, and Henry resolved on vengeance. The electors had chosen Rodolphus duke of Suabia, and Gregory confirmed his title; but Henry, after defeating his competitor, put him to death. He then called a council, which deposed the pope, and elected in his room the archbishop of Ravenna. In 1106 his son Henry assumed the title, and being supported by the princes of the empire, the emperor was obliged to renounce his crown; after which he became a wanderer, and supplicated the archbishop of Spire to give him a prebend in his church, which he refused. He died at Liege in 1106.—Ibid.

HENRY V. or the Young, born in 1081, deposed his father in 1106. In 1110 he forced pope Paschal II. to restore to him the right of nominating to ecclesiastical benefices, which Gregory VII. had wrested from his father. Paschal afterwards called two councils, and excommunicated Henry, who returned to Italy, where he opposed the election of Gelafius II. But in 1122 he submitted to the pope. He died in 1125.—Ibid.

HENRY VI. the Severe, son of Frederic Barbarossa, succeeded his father in 1190, at the age of 25. This prince behaved treacherously to Richard I. king of England, who, in his journey from the crusade through Germany, was arrested by Leopold duke of Austria, and sent to the emperor, who exacted from him an enormous ransom. His wife Constance poisoned him in 1198.—Ibid.

HENRY VII. son of Henry count of Luxemburg, was elected emperor in 1308, aged 45, and soon after went into Italy, at that time distracted with the contentions between the Guelphs and the Gibelins. He was crowned at Rome in 1312, and died the year following.—Ibid.

HENRY RABSON, landgrave of Thuringia, was elected emperor by the ecclesiastical princes in 1246, when pope Innocent IV. deposed Frederic II. but the new emperor died the year following of a wound received in fighting against his competitor.—Moreri.

HENRY I. king of England, called, on account of his learning, Beauclerc, was the youngest son of William the Conqueror, and succeeded his brother Rufus in 1100, at which time his elder brother Robert was in Normandy. Robert soon after invaded the kingdom, but agreed with Henry for a yearly tribute to renounce his right; afterwards the two brothers differed, and Henry invaded Normandy, deposed Robert, and brought him prisoner to England, where he died in Cardiff castle. He restored the university of Cambridge, forgave all debts owing to the crown prior to his accession, reformed the court, and conquered Wales. He died in Normandy, in 1135, and his remains were brought to England, and interred in the abbey of Reading. He abolished the curfew-bell, established a standard for weights and measures, and signed the charter which proved the origin of the English liberties.—Rapin. Hume.

HENRY II. son of Geoffrey Plantagenet and Maud empress of Germany, succeeded Stephen in 1154. He added the provinces of Anjou, Touraine, Maine, Poitou, Saintonge, Guienne, and Gascony, to the English crown. His reign was greatly troubled by disputes between him and Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, who being murdered in 1171, the pope obliged the king to undergo penance for it at Becket's tomb at Canterbury. In 1170 he caused his eldest son Henry to be crowned king of England. In 1172 he conquered Ireland; and the year following his sons rebelled against him, being instigated by their mother, on account of Henry's attachment to the fair Rosamond. The kings of France and Scotland gave them assistance, but peace was concluded between all parties the following year. In 1182 his son Henry died, in his 20th year. Richard, his third son, revolted against his father, and was supported by the king of France. Henry, being defeated in Normandy, was obliged to submit to disgraceful terms. He died in 1189; in the 56th year of his age.—Hist. by Lord Lytton.

HENRY III. was born at Winchester, and succeeded his father, John, in 1216. He was obliged to relinquish Normandy, Anjou, Poitou, Touraine, and Maine, to the king of France, after which a civil war broke out in England, and the king was taken prisoner by the barons. The tide of affairs turning in his favour, he deprived several of these lords of their estates, and gave them to his friends. He cancelled the Great Charter, and suffered the pope to appoint an archbishop of Canterbury, and to collect tithes in this kingdom. He died in 1272, aged 65 years.—Rapin. Hume.

HENRY IV. deposed his cousin Richard II. and seized the throne in 1399. He was the son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, the third son of Edward III. This usurpation gave rise to the civil war between the houses of York and Lancaster. Henry died in 1413, and was succeeded by his son, HENRY V., who was born at Monmouth. In his youth he was very wild, but on coming to the crown he discarded his licentious companions, and conducted himself with a dignity becoming his station. Having formed the project of conquering France, he left his kingdom in the hands of a regency, and invaded that country, where he displayed uncommon courage. With 15,000 men he gained the battle of Agincourt, though the French amounted to 52,000. He then returned to England, but three years afterwards he went again to France, where he married Catherine, the daughter of the French king. He died at Vincennes, in 1422. He was a brave, humane, and virtuous prince, with a strong sense of religion, and signally temperate in his deportment.—Ibid.

HENRY VI., the son of the above, was but ten months old at the death of his father. His grandfather Charles, king of France, died soon after, and the duke of Orleans, encouraged by the minority of Henry, assumed the title of king by the name of Charles VII. This renewed the war, and the English for a while were successful. Henry was crowned at Paris, and the great duke of Bedford, his guardian, obtained several important victories. But the raising of the siege of Orleans by Joan of Arc gave a new turn to affairs, and the English interest declined. The death of the duke of Bedford was a fatal blow to the cause of Henry; and to add to his misfortunes, the York party in England grew strong, and soon involved the country in a civil war. They adopted the white rose as their badge of distinction, and the Lancastrians the red. After various contests the king was defeated and taken prisoner. However, his wife, Margaret of Anjou, carried on the war with spirit, and for some time with considerable success. Richard duke of York was slain at Wakefield, and Henry recovered his liberty. But Edward earl of March, son of Richard, laid claim to the crown, and routed the queen's forces at Ludlow, but he was afterwards defeated at St. Alban's. At length the York party prevailed, and Henry was sent to the Tower, where he was slain by Richard duke of Gloucester in 1471. He was a mild and religious prince, but of weak parts.—Ibid.

HENRY VII., the son of Edmund earl of Richmond, and of Margaret of the house of Lancaster. By the assistance of the duke of Brittany he landed in Wales with some troops, and laid claim to the crown in 1485. The people, disgusted at the cruelties of Richard III., joined him in such numbers, that he was enabled to give the usurper battle at Bosworth, where Richard was slain, and Henry crowned on the spot. He united the two houses by marrying Elizabeth, daughter of Edward IV. His reign met with little disturbance, except from two impostors set up by lady Margaret, sister to Edward IV.; one was a baker's son, called Lambert Simnel, who personated Richard duke of York, who had been murdered by the duke of Gloucester in the Tower. On being taken prisoner, Henry made him a turn-spit in his kitchen. The other was Perkin Warbeck, who pretended to be Edward V., but he was soon taken and hanged at Tyburn. Henry reigned 24 years, and greatly increased trade and commerce, but his avarice was excessive. He died in 1509, aged 52, and was buried in Henry the Seventh's chapel, built by him in Westminster abbey.—Rapin. Hume. Lord Bacon.

HENRY VIII. succeeded his father, the preceding monarch, at the age of 18. The first years of his reign were very popular, owing to his great generosity, but at length his conduct grew capricious and arbitrary. The emperor Maximilian and pope Julius II. having leagued against France, persuaded Henry to join them, and he in consequence invaded that kingdom, where he made some conquests. About the same time James IV. king of Scotland, invaded England, but was defeated and slain at Flodden-field.

Cardinal Wolsey succeeded in bringing Henry over from the imperial interest to that of the French king. When Luther commenced the reformation in Germany, Henry wrote a book against him, for which he was complimented by the pope with the title of defender of the faith. This attachment to the Roman see, however, did not last long; for having conceived an affection for Anne Boleyn, he determined to divorce his wife Catherine of Arragon, to whom he had been married 18 years. His plea for the divorce was, that Catherine was his brother Arthur's widow. The divorce being refused by the pope, Henry assumed the title of supreme head of the English church, put down the monasteries, and alienated their possessions to secular purposes. His marriage with Anne Boleyn followed; but afterwards he brought her to the scaffold, and married lady Jane Seymour, who died in child-bed. He next married Anne of Cleves; but she not proving agreeable to his expectations he put her away, and caused Cromwell, earl of Essex, the projector of the match, to be beheaded. His next wife was Catherine Howard, who was beheaded for adultery; after which he espoused Catherine Parr, who survived him, Henry died in 1546. He was a man of strong passions, and considerable learning; but it is well said of him, "that he never spared man in his anger, nor woman in his lust."—Ibid.

HENRY I. king of France, succeeded his father Robert in 1031. His mother, Constance of Provence, excited a revolt against him in favour of her second son Robert, but without success. Henry died with the reputation of a valiant commander and a good king, in 1060, aged 55 years.—Moreri. Henault. Mezeray.

HENRY II., the son of Francis I., succeeded his father in 1547, at which time France was at war with England. In 1550 peace was restored, and Boulogne yielded to the French for a large sum. The year following a league was entered into between him and the protestant princes of Germany against Charles V., which produced a ruinous war to France. In 1556 a truce was settled for five years, but the emperor having resigned his crown to his son Philip, the war was renewed. In 1557 the French army was defeated at St. Quintin. In 1559 Henry concluded a dishonourable peace. The same year he was wounded at a tournament by a lance, of which he died.—Ibid.

HENRY III., third son of the above, succeeded his brother Charles IX. in 1573. While he was duke of Anjou the Poles elected him to their throne on the death of Sigismund Augustus; but he renounced it on taking possession of that of France. The same year he gained the battle of Dormans, and concluded a peace with the Huguenots, in which toleration was granted to them.

But this was revoked in 1585, and the protestant princes, of whom Henry king of Navarre was the chief, again had recourse to arms. The king of Navarre defeated the catholic army in 1587. The duke of Guise, on the other hand, obtained a signal advantage over the Huguenots and their allies, but on his marching to Paris the gates were shut against him. The people, however, were attached to Guise, and the king was glad to retire from his capital, which was commanded by the head of the catholic league. Thus France was divided into three parties; the royalists, the Guises, and the Huguenots. At length the two first were reconciled in appearance, but Henry caused the duke to be assassinated soon after with his brother the cardinal. The flames of civil war broke out with additional fury. The pope excommunicated Henry, and the parliament instituted a criminal process against him. In this exigency he had recourse to the king of Navarre, who in consequence set out on his march to Paris; but the face of affairs was suddenly changed by the death of the king of France, who was assassinated by James Clement in 1589. He instituted the military order of the Holy Ghost.—Ibid.

HENRY IV., called the Great, king of France and Navarre, was born at Pau, the capital of Bearn, in 1553. His father was Antony of Bourbon, king of Navarre, and his mother Joan d'Albret. Being lineally descended from Louis IX. of France, he became the heir to that kingdom, but as he was educated a protestant his claim was resisted. He early distinguished himself by feats of arms. After the peace of St. Germain in 1570, he was taken to the French court, and two years afterwards married Margaret, sister of Charles IX. At these joinings on this occasion happened the infamous massacre of St. Bartholomew. In 1576 he left Paris, and put himself at the head of the Huguenots. In 1587 he gained the battle of Courtras. In 1572 he succeeded to the throne of Navarre, and in 1589 to that of France; but his religion proving an obstacle against his coronation, he consented to abjure it in 1593. In 1595 he issued the edict of Nantes, granting toleration to the protestants. The same year he entered into a war with Spain, which lasted till 1598, after which his country enjoyed uninterrupted peace till his death. His abjuration was very disagreeable to the protestants, and did not prove quite satisfactory to the opposite party, who doubted his sincerity. His greatest enemies were the jesuits, one of whose pupils wounded him in the mouth in an attempt upon his life, which was finally taken away by Francis Ravillac, May 14, 1610. This monarch truly merited the name of great, for he loved his people, and his constant aim was to make them happy.—Ibid. Sully's Memoirs.

HENRY, prince of Wales, and the eldest son of James I., was born at Stirling in 1594. He was a most amiable and accomplished prince, and a great patron of learning and science. He died in 1612, to the great grief of the nation, which had formed of him the highest expectations.—Life of Prince Henry by Birch.

HENRY of Huntingdon, an English historian, was canon of Lincoln and archdeacon of Huntingdon in the 12th century. He wrote a History of England to the year 1154, published in 1576, by Savile. He was also author of a Latin piece on the Contempt of the World, &c.—Nicholson's Historical Library. Pitts.

HENRY (Philip), a pious English divine, was born at London in 1631, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was removed to Christ-church, Oxford, after which he received presbyterian ordination, and settled at Worthenbury in Flintshire, but at the restoration he was silenced for nonconformity. He died in 1685.—Life by his Son.

HENRY (Matthew), a nonconformist divine, was the son of the above, and born at Broad Oak in Flintshire in 1662. He received the principal part of his education under his father, and having made a considerable progress in learning, entered at Gray's-inn; but he soon renounced the study of the law, and became a dissenting minister at Chester, where he resided many years, and then removed to Hackney. He died at Nantwich in 1714, and his remains were interred at Chester. His chief work is an Exposition of the Bible, in 5 vols. folio; besides which he wrote a Method of Prayer; a Discourse on the Lord's Supper; and other esteemed books of practical divinity.—Life by Tong.

HENRY (Robert), a Scotch divine, was born at St. Ninian's in 1718, and educated at Edinburgh. In 1748 he was ordained as a presbyterian minister at Carlisle. He afterwards removed to Berwick, and in 1768 to Edinburgh, where he became minister of the New Gray-friars Church. In 1776 he was chosen colleague minister at the Old church, and died in 1790. Dr. Henry is known as the author of a valuable history of Great Britain, to the reign of Henry VII. which has gone through several editions.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HENRY (David), a printer, who was a manager of and writer in the Gentleman's Magazine above 50 years. He married a sister of its original proprietor, Cave, and died in 1792, aged 82. He published several compilations; as a System of Husbandry, a Collection of Voyages, &c.—Ibid.

HERACLITUS, a celebrated philosopher of Ephesus, who flourished about 500 B. C. He was fond of solitude, and obtained the appellation of "the mourner," from his custom of weeping at the follies of men. He supported the doctrine of fatalism, and maintained that the world was created of fire, which element he therefore deified. He died in the 60th year of his age.—Stanley's Lives of Philosophers.

HERACLIUS, emperor of Rome, was the son of Heraclius, governor of Africa. He dethroned Phocas in 610. Chosroes, king of Persia, having ravaged Palestine, and committed dreadful cruelties on the Christians, Heraclius marched against him, and forced him to sue for peace, and to deliver up the holy cross, which the emperor carried into Jerusalem on his shoulders. The end of his reign was disturbed by ecclesiastical disputes, and the inroads of the Saracens. He died in 641.—Univ. Hist.

HERACLIUS-CONSTANTINE, son and successor of the above, was associated in the throne with his brother Heraclionas, agreeable to the will of Heraclius. He reigned only a few months, being poisoned; it is said, by his mother-in-law, Martina.—Ibid.

HERACLIUS, patriarch of Jerusalem in the 12th century. He was a debauched and scandalous prelate, and shewed great enmity to Henry II. king of England, for not going to Jerusalem in person, agreeable to the terms of his penance, on account of the murder of Becket.—Moreri.

HERALDUS (Desiderius), or Herault, a counsellor of Paris, who wrote some learned books, the chief of which is, the Adversaria, printed in 1589. He also wrote notes on Tertullian's Apology, Minutius Felix, and Arnobius. He died in 1649.—His son was minister of the Walloon church in London, and canon of Canterbury. Some of his sermons are in print.—Moreri.

HERBELLOT (Bartholomew d'), a learned orientalist, was born at Paris in 1625. He obtained a pension from the king, and the place of regius professor of the Syriac language. Ferdinand II. grand duke of Tuscany made him a present of a large library of oriental manuscripts. He died at Paris in 1695. His great work, entitled, Bibliothéque Orientale, containing whatever relates to the knowledge of the eastern world, is universally known. The best edition is that of Paris, in 6 vols. 8vo. 1782. He also compiled a Turkish Dictionary.—Moreri.

HERBERT (Mary), countess of Pembroke, was the sister of sir Philip Sidney. She translated from the French a tragedy called Annus, 1595, 12mo. and rendered into English some of David's psalms. She died in 1633. Ben Jonson wrote the following elegant epitaph for her:

Underneath this sable herse
Lies the subject of all verse:
Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother;
Death! ere thou hast kill'd another,
Fair and good and learn'd as she,
Time shall throw a dart at thee.—B. B.

HERBERT (Edward), lord Herbert of Cherbury in Shropshire, was born in Montgomery castle in 1581. He was educated at Oxford, after which he went on his travels. On his return he was made one of the king's counsellors for military affairs, and soon after was sent ambassador to France to intercede in behalf of the protestants. In 1625 he was made a peer of Ireland, and in 1631 advanced to the English peerage. At the breaking out of the rebellion he sided with the parliament. He died in 1648. Lord Herbert wrote some singular books: the most remarkable is entitled, De Veritate, in which he espouses deism. He also wrote the History of Henry VIII. a treatise in Latin on the Religion of the Gentiles, and his own Memoirs.—Biog. Brit.

HERBERT (George), an English poet and divine, was brother of the above, and born in 1593. He received his education at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow. He was also appointed orator to the university. On taking orders, he obtained the rectory of Bemerton in Wilts, and a prebend of Lincoln. He was an exemplary divine, and died about 1633. His poems, entitled, The Temple, were printed in 1633, 12mo. and his Priest to the Temple in 1652.—Life by Walton.

HERBERT (William), earl of Pembroke, was born at Wilton in Wiltshire in 1580, and educated at New college, Oxford. In 1601 he succeeded to the family honours and estate. In 1626 he was chosen chancellor of Oxford, and about the same time made steward of the king's household. He died suddenly in 1633. His poems were printed in 1633, 8vo.—Walpole's Noble Authors.

HERBERT (Thomas), an ingenious writer of the Pembroke family, was born at York. He went from Jesus college, Oxford, to Trinity college, Cambridge, after which he travelled four years. In 1634 he published, in folio, his Travels in Africa and Asia, a work of considerable merit. On the breaking out of the rebellion he joined the parliament party, but he afterwards served about the king when he was a prisoner, with great fidelity, and at the restoration was created a baronet. He died in 1682. Besides the above he wrote an Historical Account of the two last Years of the Life of King Charles I. 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

HERBINUS (John), a native of Bitche in Silesia, who wrote on Cataracts and Waterfalls; also De Statu Ecclesiarum Augustanæ Confessionis in Polonia, 4to, 1670. He died in 1676, aged 44.—Moreri.

HERISSANT (Louis-Antony Prosper), a physician and poet, was the son of a printer, and born in 1745 at Paris, where he died in 1769. He wrote L'Eloge de Gouthier d'Andernach, which was crowned by the faculty of medicine; L'Eloge de du Gange; Poem upon Printing; Catalogue raisonné des Plantes; Bibliothèque Physique de la France.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HERITIERS (Nicholas l') a French dramatist poet. He was treasurer to the French guards, and historiographer of France, and died in 1680. He wrote two tragedies, called, Hercule Furieux, and Clavis, of indifferent merit.—Moreri.

HERITIER (Marie Jeanne l') de Villandou, a French poetess, was daughter of the above, born in 1764, and died in 1784. She was a member of the academy of the Jeux Floraux, and of that of the Recoarati at Padua. Her works are: A Translation of Ovid's Epistles; La Tour Tenebreuse, an English tale; Les Caprices du Destin, a novel; L'Avare puni, a tale in verse.—Ibid.

HERITIER DE BRUTELLE (Charles Louis l'), a French botanist, was born at Paris in 1745. Though he enjoyed places under government, he devoted himself wholly to botanical researches. In 1786, Dombey having brought from Peru and Chili an inestimable collection of plants, L'Heritier undertook to publish a description of them, which was executed at London, under the title of the Flora of Peru. After his return to Paris he published a work with the singular title of Flora de la Place Vendôme. This ingenious man was assassinated Aug. 10, 1801, but his murderers were not discovered.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HERVICIUS (David), a German astrologer, was born in 1557, and got a great deal of money and reputation by an almanac, and books of pretended prophecies.—Ibid.

HERMAN (Paul), a botanist of Halle in Saxony, who was physician to the Dutch settlements at Ceylon, and afterwards botanical professor at Leyden. He died in 1695. His works are: Catalogue of the Plants in the Public Garden at Leyden; Cynosura Materia Medica, 2 vols. 4to; Lagdnobatavia Flores; Paradisus Patavus; Museum Zeylanicum.—Ibid.

HERMANN (James), a mathematician of Basle, where he was professor of law. He had been mathematical professor at Padua, and was employed by the czar Peter I. in forming an academy at Petersburg. He died at Basle in 1793, aged 55. He wrote Responsio ad Considerationes circa Principia Calculi differentialis; De Phœnomenia; De nova Accelerationis Lege, &c. Disquisitiones de Vibratilibus chordarum Censuram, Solutio Problematis de Trajectis Curva veniendis.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HERMANT (Godefroi), a doctor of the Sorbonne, born at Beauvais in 1617. He became rector of the university of Paris, and died in 1690. He wrote the lives of several of the Fathers, and some pieces against the jesuits and quietists.—Ibid.

HERMAS (Pastor), or the Shepherd, a father of the church, who is said to be the same mentioned by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans. He is supposed to have died at Rome, about the year 81. A piece of his entitled The Shepherd, is still extant, and was translated into English by archbishop Wake.—Duglin.

HERMES Trismegistus, an Egyptian priest and philosopher, who instructed his countrymen in the cultivation of the olive, the measurement of lands, and the knowledge of hieroglyphics. He wrote several books. There is a forgery goes under his name, entitled, Poemander. He is supposed to have flourished A. M. 2076.—Moreri.

HERMIAS, a heretic of Galatia, in the 2d century, who maintained the eternity of the world and the materiality of God. He also asserted that the soul is composed of fire and spirit.—Dupin. Lardner.

HERMILLY (Vaquette d'), a French historian, born at Amiens in 1707, and died at Paris in 1778. He wrote the history of Majorca and Minorca; and translated Ferrer's History of Spain; and the Critical Theatre of Father Feijoo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HERMOGENES of Tarsus, a rhetorician of the second century. His works were published by Aldus in 1509, but the best edition is that of Laurentius at Geneva in 1614, 8vo.—Moreri.

HERMOGENES, a heretic of the second century, was a native of Africa, and a philosopher of the stoic sect. He held matter to be the primary principle, and idea the mother of all the elements.—Lardner. Dupin.

HEROD the Great, was born at Ascalon in Judea, B. C. 70. He was the son of Antipater the Idumean, who appointed him governor of Galilee. Antony made him tetrarch, and Augustus confirmed to him the kingdom of Judea. He governed with savage cruelty, and sacrificed his wife, Mariamne, her grandfather Hyrcanus, and brother Aristobulus. At the birth of our Saviour he caused all the infants of Bethlehem to be massacred, in hopes that he would fall in the number. He also put to death his sons Alexander and Aristobulus, so that Augustus said, "It was better to be Herod's hog than his son." He rebuilt the temple of Jerusalem, and in a time of famine sold his curiosities to relieve the sufferers. He died miserably about two or three years after the birth of Christ, aged 70.—Josephus.

HEROD ANTIPAS, the son of the above, succeeded his father as tetrarch of Galilee. He divorced his wife, the daughter of Aretas king of Arabia, and espoused Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip, on which Aretas declared war against him, and Herod sacrificed John the Baptist to the cruelty of Herodias; and his conduct occasioned the Jews to revolt. Being called to Rome to justify his conduct, he died on the road. This is the Herod to whom our Saviour was sent by Pilate.—Ibid.

HERODIAN, a Greek historian, who flourished A. D. 247. He was a native of Alexandria, but lived the greatest part of his life at Rome. He wrote a Roman history in Greek in eight books, the best editions of which are that of Politian, who also translated it into Latin, 4to. 1525; and that of Oxford, 8vo. 1704.—Vossius. Moreri.

HERODOTUS, a Greek historian, was born at Halicarnassus, 484 B. C. He went into voluntary exile when his country was oppressed by Lygdamis, but afterwards returned and expelled the tyrant. This, however, so far from pleasing his countrymen, irritated them against him, and he quitted Greece again. He recited his history with great applause at the Olympic games. His work, which is elegantly written, is a history of the wars of the Persians against the Greeks, from Cyrus to the reign of Xerxes. The best editions are that of Wesseling, fol. Amst. 1763; and that of Glasgow, 9 vols. 12mo. 1761. Mr. Beloe has given an excellent English translation of Herodotus.—Vossius. Fabricius.

HEROPHILUS of Chalcedon, an ancient physician, who flourished 570 B. C. He was an accurate anatomist, and is said to have discovered the lacteal vessels. He was also a good botanist.—Moreri.

HERRERA TORDESILLAS (Antonio de), a Spanish historian, was historiographer of India, and secretary of state. He wrote a General History of India in 4 vols. folio, which is a curious work. He also wrote a General History of Spain, in 3 vols. folio, and died in 1625, aged 60.—Ibid.

HERRERA (Ferdinand de), a Spanish poet, born at Seville. He published lyric and heroic poems in 1582, and some prose works, as, the Life of Sir Thomas More; a Relation of the War of Cyprus, and the Battle of Lepanto; &c.—Ibid.

HERRING (Thomas), archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of a clergyman in Norfolk, and born in 1693. He received his education at Wisbeach, from whence he removed to Jesus college, Cambridge. Afterward he was elected fellow of Corpus Christi college. On entering into orders he became minister of Great Shelford. In 1722 he was appointed chaplain to Dr. Fleetwood, bishop of Ely. In 1726 he was chosen preacher to the society of Lincoln's-inn, and about the same time appointed chaplain to the king. In 1731 he was made dean of Rochester, and in 1737 raised to the bishopric of Bangor, from whence in 1743 he was translated to York. In the rebellion of 1745 he exerted himself with great zeal in defence of the government, for which he was in 1747 advanced to the see of Canterbury. He died in 1757, and was buried at Croydon. A volume of his sermons on public occasions has been printed, and Mr. Duncombe published a volume of his letters.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HERSENT or HERSAN (Charles), a French divine, who brought himself into trouble by a book entitled, Optatus Gallus de cavendo Schismate, in which he charged cardinal Richelieu with views inimical to the Gallican church. He quitted France and retired to Rome, where he was excommunicated for advancing some peculiar notions on grace. He then returned to France, and died in 1660. He wrote a paraphrase of Solomon's Song, and other works.—Moreri.

HERTZBERG (Ewald Frederic von), an eminent statesman, was born in Pomerania in 1725. His merit recommended him to a situation in the department of foreign affairs at Berlin, and he afterwards became secretary to the Prussian embassy at Vienna. The king made him counsellor of legation, in which capacity he distinguished himself as a profound politician. In 1752 his Essay on the Population of the Marche of Brandenburg obtained the prize from the academy of sciences at Berlin. From this time he was employed to draw up almost every state paper and memorial of consequence, and he was gradually advanced to the first offices in the kingdom, and to the rank of nobility. He died in 1795.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

HEAVEY (James), a pious divine, was the son of a clergyman at Hardingstone in Northamptonshire, where he was born in 1714. He received his education at the grammar school of Northampton, and was removed from thence to Lincoln college, Oxford. In 1736 he became curate to his father, and soon afterwards went to Bideford in Devonshire, where he was greatly beloved by the parishioners; but in 1743 he was removed from that curacy, on which he returned home, and not long afterwards succeeded his father in his livings of Weston Favel, and Collingtree. In 1746 he published his Meditations among the Tombs, and Reflections in a Flower Garden, which being well received, he added another volume. In 1755 appeared his Theron and Aspasio, or Dialogues and Letters on important Subjects, in 3 vols. 8vo. written in behalf of Calvinism. The profits of his works, which were considerable, he gave away in charitable purposes. This eminently pious man died of a consumption in 1758. All his works were printed in 7 vols. 8vo 1796.—Life prefixed to his Works.

HEAVEY (Augustus John), third earl of Bristol, was born in 1724. He entered early into the navy, and was a lieutenant in 1744. That year he married miss Chudleigh, afterwards the celebrated duchess of Kingston. In 1747 he was made post-captain, and served with reputation in the Mediterranean. In 1763 he was appointed groom of the bed chamber to the king. In 1771 he was made one of the lords of the admiralty; and in 1774 he succeeded his brother as earl of Bristol. He died in 1779, and his titles descended to his brother the bishop of Derry. His lady in 1768 obtained a decision in the commons which annulled their marriage, but the sentence was set aside by the house of lords in 1775, and she was found guilty of bigamy.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HEAWART, or HERVART (John George), chancellor of Bavaria, who wrote some singular works, entitled, 1. Chronologia nova et vera, 1626; 2. Admiranda Ethica Theologica Mysteri propalata, de antiquissima veterum Nationum superstitione, qua Lapis Magnes pro Deo habitus colebatur, 4to. 1644.—Bayle.

HEHNUSIUS (Tilemannus), a German lutheran divine, born at Wesel in 1526. He was of a very violent spirit, and died in 1588. His works are: 1. Commentaries on the Psalms; 2. On Isaiah; 3. On St. Paul's Epistles; 4. On Justification and the Lord's Supper, &c.—Ibid.

HELIOD, an ancient Greek poet, born at Aschera in Boetia, but in what age is not certain; some placing him before and others subsequent to Homer. He was the first who wrote on agriculture; and his performance is entitled, the Works and the Days. His Theogony is valuable as affording the best account of the ancient mythology. His Shield of Hercules is only a fragment of a larger work. The best edition of Helioid is that of Le Clerc, Amsterdam, 1701. His poems have been translated into English by Thomas Cooke.—Moreri. Voyius.

HESSER (William, prince of) immortalized his name as an encourager of learning, and by his studies and observations for many years of the heavenly bodies. For this purpose he built an observatory at Cassel, and called to his assistance two scientific men, Christopher Rghman and Juste Byrge. His Observations were printed at Leyden, in 1618. He died in 1597.—Martin's Biog. Philof.

HESSLES (John), professor of theology at Louvain, was born in 1522. He distinguished himself by his talents in the council of Trent, and was profoundly read in the ancient fathers, particularly Austin and Jerome. He died in 1566. His works are chiefly polemical against the protestants.—Moreri.

HESTENIUS, a grammarian of Alexandria, who has left us a valuable lexicon of Greek words, first published by Aldus Manutius in 1513. The best edition is that of Ruhaken in 1766, 2 vols. folio.—Ibid.

HETZER (Lewis), a German socinian, who translated the Bible into his native language; but the version being suppressed, it is now become very scarce. It was printed at Worms, 1529, folio. He died about 1540.—Melch. Adam.

HEVELIUS (John), an astronomer, was born at Dantzic in 1611, of a distinguished family. He studied mathematics with great ardour, but devoted himself chiefly to astronomy, and built an observatory for the purpose of making accurate observations; the result of which he published in 1647, under the title of Selenographia, or a Description of the Moon, to which he added the phases of the other planets as observed by the telescope. This work was followed by many others, the most distinguished of which was his Cometographia, published in 1668. Having sent a copy of this book to Dr. Hooke, it occasioned a controversy between them on this point: "Whether distances and altitudes could be taken with plain sights nearer than to a minute," which Hooke denied, and Hevelius maintained. Hevelius died at Dantzic in 1688. Besides the above works, he was the author of Uranographia 1690, fol.; De Natura Saturni; &c.—Martin's Biog. Phil. Hutton.

HEVIN (Prudent), an eminent surgeon, born at Paris in 1715, and died in 1789. He wrote Pathologie Chirurgica, 2 vols. 8vo. Memoir on Strange Substances in the Oesophagus, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HEURNIUS (John), an eminent physician, born at Utrecht in 1543. He became professor of medicine at Leyden, of which university he was also rector. He died in 1601. He wrote numerous commentaries on the works of Hippocrates, and some learned pieces, particularly one on the comet of 1577. His son, who succeeded him in the professorship, was also a learned writer.—Moreri.

HEUSCH (William de), a landscape painter, born at Utrecht in 1638. He was the disciple of John Both, and adhered to the manner of his master. He died at the close of the 17th century. His nephew Jacob was also eminent in the same line, and died in 1701, aged 44. There was likewise one Abraham de Heusch, a painter of the same place, who acquired reputation as a painter of plants and insects.—Pilkington.

HEUSINGER (John Michael), a famous divine, born at Sunderhausen in Thuringia in 1690. In 1730 he was made professor at Gotha, but in 1738 he removed to Eisenach, where he died in 1751. He published editions of several Greek and Latin classics, and some learned treatises of his own. His nephew James became master of the school at Wolfenbuttel, and died in 1778. He published several learned pieces on ancient authors.—Gen. B. D.

HEWSON (William), an ingenious anatomist, assistant first to Dr. William Hunter, and afterwards his partner; but a difference arising between them, Mr. Hewson read anatomical lectures in his own house. He published inquiries into the Properties of the Blood, and the Lymphatic System, 2 vols. 8vo. He had also a dispute with Dr. Abraham Monro, on the discovery of the lymphatic system of vessels in oviparous animals. He died in 1774, aged 35.—Morimer's Student's Dictionary.

HEXHAM (John of), an English benedictine monk in the 12th century, who composed some historical works of merit.

HEYDEN (John van der), an eminent landscape painter, born at Gorcum in 1637, and died in 1712.—Pilkington.

HEYLYN (Peter), a learned divine, was born at Burford in Oxfordshire in 1600, and educated at Hart-hall, Oxford, but afterwards he obtained a fellowship of Magdalen college, where he read cosmographical lectures. In 1621 he published his Description of the World, which he afterwards enlarged under the title of Cosmography. In 1628 he was appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king, and in 1631 obtained a prebend of Westminster, which was followed by the living of Houghton in the diocese of Durham. In 1633 he took his degree of D. D. He obtained some other preferments, of which he was deprived by the parliament, and voted a delinquent, by which his goods were confiscated, and his person endangered. At the restoration he was restored to his prebend, and died in 1682. He was a man of great abilities, and uncommon industry. His principal works besides the above are, the History of the Reformation in England; History of the Presbyterians, fol.; Life of Abp. Laud, fol.—Life prefixed to his Miscellaneous Tracts.

HEYWOOD (John), an English poet, was born at London, and bred at Oxford. He was one of the first who wrote plays in our language, and is said to have been well skilled in music. He was a great favourite with Henry VIII. and queen Mary, but on the accession of Elizabeth he went to Mechlin, where he died in 1565. One of his principal performances is entitled, The Spider and Fly, a Parable, in 4to. 1596. His son, Ellis Heywood, became a jesuit, and died at Louvain in 1572. He wrote a book in Italian, called, Il Moro.—Wood, A. O.

HEYWOOD (Jasper), the brother of the above John Heywood, was born in 1535, and educated at Merton college, Oxford; after which he was chosen fellow of All Souls; but in 1561 he went to Rome, where he entered among the jesuits. He died at Naples in 1597. He wrote some pieces in a book called, The Paradise of Dainty Devices, 1573, 4to.—Ibid.

HEYWOOD (Thomas), an actor and dramatic writer, who died at the beginning of the reign of Charles I. It is said that he wrote 220 plays, of which only 24 are now extant, and those of no merit.—Biog. Dram.

HEYWOOD (Oliver), a nonconformist divine, was born at Bolton in Lancashire in 1629, and educated at Trinity college, Cambridge, after which he settled as minister at Coley in Yorkshire, from whence he was ejected in 1662. He suffered much for preaching privately, and was excommunicated. He died in 1702. His works are: Heart's Treasure, 1667, 12mo; Closet Prayer, 12mo; Life of Mr. Angier, 8vo; Meekness for Heaven; and other pious tracts. There was also a Mr. Nathanael Heywood, who was deprived for nonconformity. He was likewise a native of Bolton, and died in 1677. Some of his Sermons are in print.—Calamy, Palmer.

HIETAS, an ancient philosopher of Syracuse, who lived about 340 B. C. He maintained that the sun and the stars were fixed, and that the earth had a circular motion.—Diogenes Laertius.

HICKES (George), a learned divine, was born in 1642 at Newsham in Yorkshire, and educated at North Allerton, from whence he removed to St. John's college, Oxford; but afterwards he became fellow of Lincoln. In 1676 he became chaplain to the duke of Lauderdale, whom he attended to Scotland, and at St. Andrew's he received the degree of D. D. which was confirmed to him by the university of Oxford. In 1683 he was made dean of Worcester, of which he was deprived at the revolution for refusing the oaths. The deprived bishops having consulted about preserving the episcopal succession among the non-jurors, recommended Dr. Hickes to king James, and he accordingly went over to France to wait on the exiled monarch, who confirmed their proceedings, and the doctor was consecrated suffragan bishop of Thetford. He was a man of strong mind, great resolution, and vast abilities. He died in 1715. He wrote several theological treatises, mostly polemical; but his chief works are, Linguarum veterum Septentrionalium Thesaurus, fol.; Grammatica Anglo-Saxonica, 4to. His sermons are close and argumentative, and full of excellent learning well applied.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

HICKES (John), brother of the above, but of different principles. He became a presbyterian, and was deprived of the living of Stoke in Devonshire in 1662 for nonconformity. In 1685 he joined the duke of Monmouth's army, for which he was executed.—Calamy. Palmer.

HICKMAN (Henry), a learned divine, was fellow of Magdalen college, Oxford, and ejected in 1662 for nonconformity. He afterwards became minister of the English congregation at Leyden, where he died about 1688. He wrote against Heylyn's quinquarticular history, and other works.—Calamy.

HERO I. king of Syracuse, succeeded his brother Gelon B. C. 478. He declared war against Theron the tyrant of Agriguntum, and took Himera. He gained three crowns at the Olympic games, for which he is celebrated by Pindar. The conversation of that bard and other eminent men softened his disposition, which was naturally impetuous, and rendered him humane and liberal. He died B. C. 467.—Univ. Hist.

HERO II. king of Syracuse, was a prince of great virtues. He was a descendant of Gelon, and elected king B. C. 268. He carried on a war against the Romans for some time, assisted by the Carthaginians, but he was obliged to make peace. He was the relation and friend of Archimedes, and greatly encouraged arts and commerce. He died regretted by all his subjects, B. C. 225. He was succeeded by his grandson Hieronymus, who reigned with such rigour that the Syracusans assassinated him and expelled the family.—Ibid.

HEROCLES, a persecutor of the christians in the fourth century. He was president of Bithynia, and afterwards governor of Alexandria, where he committed shocking cruelties. He also wrote some books against the christians, mentioned by Lactantius and Eusebius. The remains of his writings were collected and published by bishop Pearson in 1654, with a curious discourse upon them.—Cave Hist. Lit. Bayle.

HEROCLES, a platonic philosopher of the fifth century, who flourished at Alexandria with great reputation. He wrote seven books on Providence and Destiny, and a Commentary on the Golden Verses of Pythagoras; the latter of which is extant, and some fragments of the former.—Bayle.

HIFFERNAN (Paul), a modern author of great eccentricity, was born in Ireland in 1718. He took the degree of doctor of physic, and practised some time in Dublin, but meeting with no success, he went to London and commenced author. Some of the most eminent wits of the day were kind to him, and he contrived to live tolerably. He died in 1775. He wrote a periodical work at Dublin, called The Tickler; another called The Tuner; and two or three dramatic trifles.—Blog. Dram.

HIGDEN (Ralph), an English historian, who wrote a work entitled, Polychronicon, first printed by Caxton, and again in 1642. Higden died in 1363.—Nicholson's Hist. Lib.

HIGGINS (John), an English divine and schoolmaster, who lived at Wingham near Ilminster in Somersetshire, and died about 1603. He published some school-books, a treatise on Christ's Descent into Hell, and part of the Mirroure for Magistrates.—Gen. B. D.

HIGGONS (sir Thomas), an English writer and statesman, was born in Shropshire, and educated at Alban-hall, Oxford. For his great services to the crown, he obtained, at the restoration, a pension and knighthood. He was also sent envoy-extraordinary to Vienna. He died in 1691. His works are, A Panegyric to the King; A Funeral Oration for his first lady; The History of Isuf Bassa.—Ibid.

HIGGONS (Bevil), younger son of the above, was educated at St. John's college, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple. He wrote some poems; and a tragedy called, The Generous Conqueror, or the Timely Discovery. He was also the author of remarks on bishop Burnet's History of his own Times; and a Short View of the English History. He accompanied James II to France, where he died in 1735.—Ibid.

HIGHMORE (Nathanael), an English anatomist, born at Fordingbridge in Hampshire. He wrote, Corporis humani Disquisitio Anatomica, folio; The History of Generation; De Passione Hyfterica. He died in 1684, aged 71.—Ibid.

HIGHMORE (Joseph), an English painter, was born at London in 1692, and bred an attorney, but he abandoned that profession for painting, and by close application became an accomplished artist. He painted the portraits of several eminent personages, also a set of pictures, the subjects of which were taken from Richardson's Pamela. At the institution of the royal academy, he was chosen one of the professors. His greatest performances are, Hagar and Ishmael, at the Foundling-hospital; the finding of Moses; and the good Samaritan. He was also eminent for his literary abilities, and published A critical Examination of the two Paintings by Rubens, on the Ceiling of the Banqueting House at Whitehall, &c. 4to; The Practice of Perspective on the Principles of Dr. Brooke Taylor, 4to; Observations on a Pamphlet entitled, Christianity not founded on Argument; two volumes of Essays, 12mo. He died in 1780.—Gen. Biogr. Dict.

HILARION, the founder of the monastic life in Palestine, was born at Gaza in 291. He visited St. Anthony the anchorite in Egypt, and on his return to his own country followed his example, and obtained a number of followers. He died in the island of Cyprus in 371.—Moreri. Dupin.

HILIARUSE (Joseph), an eminent antiquary and medallist, was born at Enzesfeld in Austria in 1737. In 1751 he entered into the society of jesuits, and afterwards became eminent as a teacher of grammar and rhetoric at Vienna, of which college he was appointed præfectus rei nummarie. In 1770 he renounced his order, and not long after was appointed director of the imperial cabinet of ancient coins. He was likewise dean of philosophy. He died in 1798.—Monthly Mag.

HILARY (St.), a father of the church, in the fourth century. He was born at Poitiers in France, and did not embrace christianity till he was advanced in life. On being instructed in the principles of that religion, he was baptized, together with his wife and daughter. In 355 he was raised to the bishopric of Poitiers, and the year following was sent by Constantius to defend Athanasius at the synod of Biersers against Saturninus, which he did with such zeal that Saturninus prevailed on the emperor to banish him to Phrygia, where he wrote his books on the Trinity. He was also the author of a treatise on Synods. He died in 367. The best edition of his works is that of Paris in 1693.—Dupin. Moreri.

HILARY, a saint of the Roman calendar, was born at Arles in 401. He succeeded Honoratus in the bishopric of Arles, and presided in a council at Rome in 441. He died at the age of 48. His works are; 1. Homilies, under the name of Eusebius of Emesa; 2. The Life of St. Honoratus; 3. Opuscula.—Ibid.

HILDEBERT, archbishop of Tours, was born in France in the 12th century. He is said to have lived licentiously before he entered the ecclesiastical state; however, he was a man of great learning, and became eminently pious. He wrote a sharp letter against the court of Rome, in which he describes its vices in lively and elegant terms. He died in 1132. His works were printed at Paris in 1708, 1 vol. folio.—Ibid.

HILDESLEY (Mark), an English bishop, was born at Marston in Kent in 1698, and educated at the Charter-house, from whence he was sent to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1723. In 1731 he obtained the living of Hitchin in Hertfordshire, and four years afterwards that of Holwell in Bedfordshire, where he distinguished himself as a pious and diligent parish-priest. On the death of Dr. Wilton, bishop of Sodor and Man, the duke of Athol appointed Dr. Hildesley to succeed him, in which office he closely trod in the steps of his excellent predecessor, whose design of printing a translation of the Bible in the Manks language he brought to a conclusion. This worthy prelate died in 1772.—Life by Butler, &c.

HILL (Joseph), an English divine, who published an enlarged edition of Schrevelius's Greek Lexicon. He was born at Bromley, in Yorkshire, in 1625, and received his education at St. John's college, Cambridge, after which he became fellow of Magdalen college, from whence he was ejected in 1662 for nonconformity. He died pastor of a congregation at Rotterdam, in 1707. Besides his Lexicon he wrote Dissertations on the Antiquity of Temples and Churches.—Calamy.

HILL (William), an English critic, was fellow of Merton college, Oxford, and afterwards master of a school in Dublin, where he died in 1667. He prepared an edition of Dionysius Periegetes, with notes, published in 1658.—Wool.

HILL (Aaron), an English poet, was born at London in 1685. At the age of fifteen he went to Constantinople to visit his relation lord Paget, then ambassador there, whom he accompanied to England in 1703. He next went with sir William Wentworth on the tour of Europe. In 1709 he became manager of Drury-lane theatre, for which he wrote his Elfrid, or the Fair Inconstant. The following year he became master of the Opera-house, and wrote the opera of Rinaldo, the first that Handel composed in England. About 1718 he published a poem called the Northern Star, or a Panegyric on Peter the Great, for which the empress Catherine sent him a gold medal. He was a great schemer as well as a poet; but as in the former character he never acquired riches, so in the latter he never rose above mediocrity. His works were published in four volumes, 8vo. after his death, which happened in 1750.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

HILL (sir John), a voluminous English writer, was born in 1716, and bred to the business of an apothecary, which he carried on some years in St. Martin's-lane. His first publication was a translation of Theophrastus's Tract on Gems, which procured him reputation, and induced him to undertake a General Natural History, in 3 vols. folio. He became now a general writer, on almost all subjects. He published a supplement to Chambers's Cyclopædia, and conducted a Magazine, and a daily paper under the title of the Inspector. At this time he obtained his degree of M. D. from Scotland, and set up as an empyric, by inventing some popular remedies. Under the patronage of the earl of Bute he commenced a voluminous work, called, the System of Botany; which he sent to the king of Sweden, who invested him with one of his orders of knighthood. He died in 1775. Besides the above works he wrote many others: as, Mrs. Glasse's Cookery; a Review of the Works of the Royal Society; some novels, and a few farces. These last brought him into a controversy with Garrick, who wrote the following epigram on him:

For physic and farces, his equal there scarce is,

HILL (Robert), a self-taught genius of extraordinary merit, was born in Hertfordshire in 1699, and bred a taylor and staymaker. By indefatigable application he acquired a sufficient knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, to be able to teach them. He died at Buckingham in 1777. He wrote, Remarks on the Essay on Spirit; The Character of a Jew; Criticisms on Job.—Life by Spence.

HILL (Thomas Ford), a learned English antiquary and philologist, who died in 1795.—Gen. Mag.

HILLEL, the elder, a Jewish doctor who lived about 40 years B. C. He was president of the Sanhedrim, which office continued in his family six generations. He was one of the compilers of the Talmud.—Prideaux's Connection.

HILLEL, the prince, grandson of Judas Hakkadosh, and a principal writer of the Gemara, or Commentary on the Mishna. He lived in the fourth century.—Moreri.

HILLIARD (Nicholas), goldsmith and portrait-painter to queen Elizabeth, was born at Exeter in 1547. He painted portraits in miniature, and his works were highly prized. He painted the portrait of Mary queen of Scots, and that of queen Elizabeth, several times. He died in 1619. Wolpole's Anecd. of Painting.

HIMERIUS, a Greek sophist and grammarian in the reigns of Constantius and Julian. He was born at Prusias in Bithynia, and kept a school of rhetoric at Athens. He made several insidious attacks upon the christian faith.—Moreri.

HINCKLEY (John), an English divine and D. D. was born in Warwickshire in 1617, and educated at Oxford. He became rector of Northfield in Worcestershire, and died there in 1691. He published several sermons and other pieces, the chief of which is entitled, Fasciculus Literarum, or Letters on several Occasions, 8vo. 1680.—Wood.

HINCMAR or HINCMARUS, archbishop of Rheims in 845. He was a warm defender of the liberties of the Gallican church, but his conduct to the monk Godeschalc was very unjust. He was obliged to fly from Rheims when the Normans invaded that province. He died at Epreny in 882. His works were printed in 2 vols. folio, 1645.—Moreri. Bayle.

HIPPARCHIA, a lady of Maronea in Thrace, who lived in the time of Alexander the Great. From a love of philosophy she married Crates the stoic, who was both poor and ugly. She wrote some pieces which are lost.—Diog. Laertius.

HIPPARCHUS, son of Pisistratus, king of Athens, after whose death, B. C. 528, he reigned with his brother Hippias. They had both a great love of letters, and protected learned men: but Hipparchus disgraced these qualities by an unnatural passion which he conceived for a youth named Harmodius, who with his friend Aristogiton, slew him, B. C. 513. Hippias reigned tyrannically about three years after his brother's death, and was then expelled.—Thucydides.

HIPPARCHUS, an antient astronomer, was born at Nice in Bithynia. He is supposed to have been the first who reduced astronomy into a regular science, and his Catalogue of Stars is still preserved in Ptolemy's Almagest. Pliny says he foretold the course of the sun and moon for 600 years, calculated according to the different manner of reckoning the months, days, and hours, in use among several nations, and for the different situations of places. He also formed the lunar period which bore his name. His Commentary on Aratus's Phenomena is extant; a correct edition of which was published by Petavius. He died 125 B. C.—Pliny. Vossius de Math.

HIPPOCRATES, the father of medical science, was born in the isle of Cos, B. C.

460. Much fable seems to be blended with the narrative given of his life by different authors; but it is certain that he practised physic in Greece, and became so eminent as to be sent for to the court of Perdiccas king of Macedon, whom he pronounced incurable. He was also applied to by the Abderites to cure their countryman Democritus, whom they considered as mad, but Hippocrates declared that the philosopher was the only man in the city who was perfectly in his senses. On being applied to by the kings of Illyria and Præonia to visit their countries, then ravaged by the plague, he refused to go, but predicted that the disease would come to Athens. The people of that city conferred great honours on him, and voted a public maintenance for him and his family. He died B. C. 361. His memory is still venerated in his native island, and the inhabitants shew with pride a house in which they say he resided. The best editions of his works are those of Geneva, folio, 1657; Amsterdam, 2 vols. 8vo. 1665; and Vienna, 2 vols. folio, 1740.—Moreri. Bayle.

HIPPONAX, a Greek satiric poet, born at Ephesus 540 B. C. He was so deformed that two sculptors made ridiculous representations of him, for which he retaliated upon them with such severity in his satires that they hanged themselves.—Moreri.

HIRAM, king of Tyre, the friend of David and Solomon, the latter of whom he greatly assisted in the building of the temple, by furnishing him with timber, gold and silver, also with able workmen. The letters that passed between these two monarchs on this occasion are extant. He died B. C. 1000, after reigning 60 years.—Jos. phus.

HIRAM, an excellent architect, who was sent by the Tyrian king of the same name to Jerusalem to superintend the building of Solomon's temple, which he performed in an admirable manner.—Ibid. Bible.

HIRÉ (Laurence de la), an eminent French painter, was born at Paris in 1606, and died in 1656. His landscapes were the most pleasing of his works, and were finished with great care; but he was deficient in perspective.—D'Argenville Vies des Peintres.

HIRÉ (Philip de la), a celebrated mathematician, was son of the above, and born at Paris in 1640. He studied painting some time under his father, but having a turn for mathematics, he quitted that profession and went to Italy, where he applied with diligence to his favourite science. On his return to France he was made a member of the academy of sciences, and employed by Colbert in constructing the great map of the kingdom, with Picard and Cassini. He died in 1718. His principal works are: 1. Traité de Méchanique; 2. Nouvelle Méthode en Geometrie pour les Sections des Surfaces Coniques & Cyliindriques; 3. De la Cycloide; 4. Sections Coniques in novem Libros distributz; 5. Veterum Mathematicorum Opera Græce & Latine pleaque nunc primum edita, folio, &c.—Moreri.

HIRÉ (Philip de la), son of the preceding, was bred a physician, and was a member of the academy of sciences, but he is principally distinguished by his excellence in painting landscapes. He died in 1719, aged 42.—Pilkington.

HISCAM or HISJAM, the 15th caliph of the Omniadian race, and the fourth son of Abdalmelech, succeeded his brother Jezid II. in 723. He conquered Khacam king of Turquestan, and made war against Leo the Isaurian. He died in 743.—D'Herbelot.

HOADLEY (Benjamin), a learned prelate, was born at Westerham in Kent, in 1676, and educated at Catherine hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1706 he commenced his polemical career by remarks on Dr. Atterbury's funeral sermon for Mr. Bennet; and in 1708 he answered another sermon of the same author on the Power of Charity to cover Sin. The year following he had a farther controversy with Atterbury on the doctrine of non-resistance, which recommended Hoadley to the notice of the house of commons, who addressed the queen to bestow on him preferment. On the accession of George I. he was made bishop of Bangor, which see he never visited, but continued in London, preaching and publishing party sermons. One of these on the spiritual kingdom of Christ, produced a violent debate, called the Bangorian controversy. He was afterwards engaged in a dispute with Dr. Hare on the nature of prayer. From Bangor he was removed to Hereford, thence to Salisbury, and lastly to Winchester. In 1735 he made an attack on the orthodox faith of the church, in his Plain Account of the Lord's Supper, which he treated as a matter of mere indifference. This excited another considerable controversy. The bishop died in 1761. All his works have been published in 4 vols. folio. His lordship's brother, Dr. John Hoadley, died archbishop of Armagh, in 1746.—Biog. Brit.

HOADLEY (Benjamin), an ingenious physician, was the eldest son of the preceding, and born at London in 1705. He received his education at Cambridge, under Mr. afterwards archbishop, Herring. Here he took his first degree in physic, and in 1729 was created doctor in that faculty by mandamus. In 1742 he was appointed physician to the king's household, and to that of the prince of Wales in 1745. He died in 1757. His works are: Lectures on the Organ of Respiration, before the College of Physicians; The Suspicious Husband, a comedy; Observations on a Series of Electrical Experiments, &c.—Biog. Dram.

HOADLEY (John), the younger son of the bishop, was born in 1711, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, from whence he removed to the Temple, and afterwards entered into orders, and became chaplain to the prince of Wales. He died in 1776. He wrote some plays and poems, and a posthumous drama of his has been performed since his death.—Biog. Brit.

HOARD (Samuel), an English divine, born in London, and educated at All Souls college, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of bachelor in divinity. Robert earl of Warwick, to whom he was chaplain, gave him the rectory of Moreton in Essex, where he died in 1637. He was at first a Calvinist, but diligent study made him see his errors, and he published an able confutation of the doctrine of absolute election, entitled, God's Love to Mankind manifested by disproving his absolute Decree for their Damnation, 4to. This was replied to by Dr. Twisse and bishop Davenant. Hoard also published some sermons.—Wood.

HOBBS (Thomas), an English philosopher, was born at Malmesbury, in 1588, and educated at Magdalen hall, Oxford. In 1608 he became tutor to a son of the earl of Devonshire, with whom he made the tour of Europe. On the death of his patron and pupil he became travelling tutor to a young gentleman, but the countess dowager of Devonshire recalled him into her family to take upon him the education of the young earl. In 1634 he reprinted his translation of Thucydides, the first edition of which appeared in 1628. The same year he attended the earl on his travels, and at Pisa contracted an intimacy with Galileo. In 1642 he printed his book, De Cive, which brought him many enemies, on account of its dangerous principles. Soon after this he was appointed mathematical tutor to the prince of Wales. In 1650 appeared, in English, his book on Human Nature; and one, De Corpore Politico, or the Elements of Law. The next year he published his famous book, entitled, Leviathan, which is full of sophistry and bad maxims in philosophy and morals. At the restoration he received a pension; but in 1666 the parliament passed a censure on his writings, which greatly alarmed him. He died at Chatworth, the seat of the earl of Devonshire, in 1679. Hobbes maintained the propriety of making use of bad means to procure a good end, which he thus illustrated: "If I were cast into a deep pit, and the devil should put down his cloven foot, I would readily lay hold of it to get out." Besides the above works he published, De Mirabilibus Peccis, or the Wonders of the Peak, a poem; a translation of Homer; Elements of Philosophy; Letter on Liberty and Necessity; Six Lessons to the Professors of the Mathematics; Marks of absurd Geometry, &c.—Wood, A. O. Biog. Brit.

HOBBSMA (Minderhout), an eminent landscape painter, was born at Antwerp about 1611. He studied after nature, but his works are now very scarce.—Pilkington.

HOCHE (Lazarus), a general of the French republic, was the son of an hostler, and born at Versailles in 1768. Being deprived of his father while he was a child, the rector of St. Germain-en-laye took a fancy to him and made him a chorister, after which he became a helper in the royal stables. At the age of 16 he entered into the army, and became a corporal in the grenadiers. Soon after the breaking out of the revolution he obtained a commission, and distinguished himself in several engagements. During the tyranny of Robespierre he was confined in the Conciergerie several months, but the Thermidorean revolution set him at liberty. He drove the Austrians out of Alsace, and being sent against the royalists at Quiberon he acted with great cruelty, and put to death the brave Charette. Soon afterwards he commanded the forces sent to Ireland, but returned in disgrace. He next had the command of the army of the Sambre and Meuse, with which he acted successfully against the Austrians on the Rhine. He died at Wetzlar, in 1797.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

HOCHSTETTER (Andrew Adam), a protestant divine, born at Tubingen in 1668. He became professor of divinity and rector of that university. He died in 1717. His principal works are: 1. Collegium Puffendorfianum; 2. De Feste Expiationis, et Hirtio Azazel; 3. De Conradino, ultimo ex Suevis Duce; 4. De Rebus Elbigenfibus.—Stid.

HODGES (Nathaniel), an English physician, was first educated at Westminster school, and next at Christ church, Oxford, on leaving which he settled in London, and continued there during the plague. He died in 1684. He wrote An Apology for the Profession and Professors of Physic, 8vo.; an historical Account of the Plague of London in 1665.—Wood's Alb. Oxon.

HODR (Humphry), a learned divine, was born at Odcombe in Somersetshire, in 1659, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. When very young he published his Dissertation against Aristæus's History of the 72 Interpreters, which was received by the learned with great applause. It was, however, attacked by Isaac Vossius, and defended by the author in an unanswerable manner. In 1690 he was appointed chaplain to bishop Stillingfleet, and about the same time engaged in a controversy with Mr. Dodwell respecting the deprived bishops, for which archbishop Tillotson made him his domestic chaplain. In 1698 he was appointed Greek professor at Oxford, and in 1701 he published his History of English Councils and Convocations. He died in 1706.—Biog. Brit.

HOZ (Matthias), a German Lutheran divine, was born at Vienna in 1580. He was ecclesiastical counsellor and first preacher at the court of Saxony. He wrote some sharp pieces against the Calvinists and papists, and died in 1645.—Morri.

HOECK (John van), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Antwerp in 1600. He studied under Rubens, and afterwards at Rome. At the solicitation of Ferdinand II. he went to Vienna, where he died in 1650. He is not to be confounded with Robert van Hoeck, a painter of Antwerp, who excelled in battle pieces.—Pilkington.

HOELTZLINUS (Jeremiah), an eminent philologist, was born at Nuremberg, and settled at Leyden, where he died in 1641, in which year appeared his edition of Apollonius Rhodius.—Moreri.

HORSCHLIUS (David), a learned German, was born at Augsburg in 1556. He became principal of St. Anne's college in that city, and librarian. He published editions of some of the Greek fathers, and composed a catalogue of the Greek MSS. in the Augsburg library. He died in 1617.—Melch. Adam.

HOEL (Gerard), an historical and landscape painter, born at Bommel, in 1648. He settled at Utrecht, where he became director of an academy of drawing and painting. He died in 1733.—Pilkington.

HOFFMAN (Maurice), an eminent physician, was born at Furtemberg, in 1621. He took his doctor's degree at Padua, and in 1648 he was made professor of anatomy and surgery at Altdorf, and the year following professor of physic. In 1653 he obtained the professorship of botany, to which was added the direction of the physic-garden. He died in 1698. His works are: 1. Altdorfi Deliciz Hortenses; 2. Appendix ad Catalogum Plantarum hortensium; 3. Deliciz silvestres; 4. Florilegium Altdorfinum.—Halleri Bibl. Anst.

HOFFMAN (John Maurice), the son of the above, was born at Altdorf, in 1653. He studied under his father, and in 1674 took his doctor's degree. In 1681 he was chosen professor of physic. He was also appointed physician to the margrave of Anspach, and on the death of his father he succeeded him. He died in 1727. He continued his father's work, entitled, Deliciz Hortenses Altdorfinæ, and wrote Acta Laboratorii Chimici Altdorfini, and De Differentiis Alimentorum, 4to.—Ibid.

HOFFMAN (Frederic), a celebrated physician, born at Hall, near Magdeburg, in 1660. He was chosen professor of physic at Hall in 1693, which situation he retained to his death in 1743. His works have been published at Geneva in 6 vols. folio.—Ibid.

HOFFMAN (Daniel), a Lutheran divine and professor at Helmstadt in the 16th century, who wrote against Beza on the subject of the Eucharist. He died in 1611, aged 72.—Moreri.

HOFFMAN (John James), professor of Greek at Basle, where he was born in 1635 and died in 1706. He is known by a work of great labour and value, a Universal Historical Dictionary in Latin, published first in 2 vols. folio, and afterwards enlarged to 4 vols. He also wrote a History of the Popes, in Latin.—Moreri.

HOGARTH (William), a celebrated painter, was born at London, in 1698, and bound apprentice to an engraver of arms on silver plate. About 1720 he set up business for himself, and his first employment was to engrave coats of arms and shop bills. He next undertook to execute plates for booksellers, the chief of which are the prints to Hudibras. His first performance as a painter was a representation of Wanstead assembly, the portraits being taken from life. In 1730 he married a daughter of sir James Thornhill, and shortly after embellished the gardens of Vauxhall with some excellent paintings, for which the proprietor complimented him with a perpetual ticket of admission. In 1733 appeared his Harlot's Progress, a set of prints which at once stamped his reputation, and was followed by other moral histories, admirably executed. Soon after the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle he went over to France, and while at Calais began to sketch a drawing of the gate of the town, for which he was taken up, but was soon released. This circumstance he ridiculed in an excellent caricature. In 1753 he published his Analysis of Beauty, in 4to. Hogarth was very vain, and thought himself the first painter of the age. He was also remarkably absent, of which the following is an instance: On setting up his carriage he paid a visit to the lord mayor, and having protracted his stay till a heavy shower came on, he was let out by a different door from that by which he entered, and, unmindful of his carriage, he set off on foot, and got home dripping wet. When Mrs. Hogarth asked him where he had left the carriage, he said that he had forgot it. He died in 1764, and was interred in the church-yard of Chiswick.—Life by Ireland.

HOHENLOHE (prince de), general of artillery in the service of the emperor. He distinguished himself in Transylvania against the Turks in 1789; and in the campaign against France in 1792 he gained great reputation, particularly in the battles of Famars and Mormal. He died in 1796 while commanding the army on the Rhine.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HOLBACH (Paul Thierry, baron de), born in the Palatinate, and died at Paris, in 1789, aged 66 years. He was a member of the academies of Petersburg, Berlin, and Mannheim, and was distinguished as an able mineralogist. He published L'Art de la Verrerie de Neri; Mineralogie de Wallerius, 2 vols.; Introduction à la Mineralogie; Elements de la Morale Universelle, ou Catechisme de la Nature, &c.—Ibid.

HOLBEIN (John or Hans), a famous painter, was born at Basle in Switzerland, in 1498, and was instructed in his art by his father. In the town-house of Basle he painted a fine picture of our Saviour's passion: and in the fish-market there a dance of peasants, and Death's Dance, the last of which has been engraved in a series of plates. He visited England in the reign of Henry VIII., who liberally patronized him on the recommendation of Sir Thomas More. He painted a number of portraits and historical pieces. Holbein died of the plague at London, in 1554.—Virtue. Pill.

HOLBERG (Louis de), a Danish writer, was born at Bergen in Norway, in 1685. He was assessor of the consistory court at Copenhagen, and distinguished himself by several ingenious works, as a History of Denmark, some comedies and miscellaneous pieces, for which he was created a baron. He died in 1754.—Nova. Did. Hif.

HOLDEN (Henry), an English divine of the Roman church, who died at Paris in 1662. His works are: 1. Analysis Fidei, reprinted by Barbou in 1766; 2. Notes on the New Testament, 2 vols. 12mo.; 3. A Letter to White on his Treatise De Medio Animarum statu, 4to.—Moreri.

HOLDER (William), a learned divine, was born in Nottinghamshire, and educated at Pembroke hall, Cambridge. In 1642 he became rector of Bletchington, Oxfordshire. At the restoration he took his doctor's degree, became fellow of the royal society, and subalmoner to the king. He had great skill in teaching the deaf and dumb to speak, on which art he wrote a treatise. He also published a Treatise on Harmony, 1694, 8vo. His other works are: a Discourse concerning Time, 8vo.; and some papers against Dr. Wallis. He died in 1697.—Gen. Biog. Did.

HOLDSWORTH (Edward), a learned writer, was born about 1688, and educated at Winchester school, from whence he was elected demy of Magdalen college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. He afterwards became travelling tutor to young noblemen and gentlemen, and died at Colehill in Warwickshire, in 1747. He wrote, 1. Muscipula, or the Mouse-trap, a Latin poem; 2. Pharsalia & Philippi, or the two Philippi in Virgil's Georgics attempted to be explained and reconciled to History, 4to; 3. Remarks and Dissertations on Virgil, published by Mr. Spence, 1768, 4to.—Gen. Biog. Did.

HOLE (Richard), an English divine, was born and educated at Exeter, from whence he removed to the college of that name at Oxford, where he took his degree of bachelor of laws in 1771. In 1792 he was presented by the bishop of Exeter to the rectory of Farringdon in Devonshire, to which was afterwards added the vicarage of Inwardleigh. He died at Exmouth, in 1803. Mr. Hole published a poetical translation of Fungal, by Ossian, to which he subjoined an Ode to Imagination. In 1781 he produced a translation of the supposed Hymn of Homper to Ceres. Not long after appeared the epic romance of Arthur, with curious notes. He also published Remarks on the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, in which the origin of Sinbad's Voyages, and other oriental fictions, is particularly considered, 12mo. 1797. In the Collection of Poems by Gentlemen of Devon and Cornwall, 2 vols., are some of his odes; and in the Essays by a Society at Exeter, 1796, are several ingenious pieces from his pen.—Gent. Mag. June 1803.

HOLINGSHEAD (Raphael), an English chronicler, who died in 1581, was a native of Cheshire. Nothing certain is known of his profession. His Chronicles were first published in 1577, in 2 vols. folio; and again in 1587 in three. In the last edition several sheets were castrated as containing passages offensive to the government, but they have since been printed separately.—Wood A. O.

HOLLAND. This country anciently belonged to the Belgæ, who submitted to Julius Cæsar about 47 B. C. The Franks held it in possession from 412 to 868, when Thierry became sovereign of it, under the title of count. His posterity enjoyed it till 1206, when it passed to the earls of Hainault, in which family it continued till 1417, when it became, by the surrender of Jacqueline, count of Hainault and Holland, the property of Philip duke of Burgundy. In 1534 the people, to avoid coming under the dominion of the bishop of Utrecht, surrendered their country to Charles V. who gave it to his son Philip of Spain. But the Spanish government being very oppressive, the seven provinces revolted in 1572, and established themselves an independent republic; but they are now nothing better than dependant on France.—Univ. Hist. Groitii Annales Belg.

HOLLAND (Philemon), an English physician, was born at Chelmsford about 1551, and educated at Cambridge under Dr. Whitgift. He settled at Coventry, and became master of the free school there; besides which he practised as a physician, having taken his doctor's degree at Cambridge. He died in 1636. Holland published a number of translations, particularly of Livy, Pliny's Natural History, Xenophon's Cyropædia, and Camden's Britannia.—Fuller.

HOLLAR (Wenceslaus), a celebrated engraver, was born at Prague in Bohemia, in 1607. The earl of Arundel, being on an embassy to the imperial court, took him into his suite, and brought him to England. His first performance here was a view of Greenwich. After this he etched a number of views and portraits. In 1640 appeared his fine set of figures in 28 plates, called, Ornatus Muliebris Anglicanus, containing the dresses of English women of all degrees. In 1645 he went to the continent and settled at Antwerp, where the earl of Arundel resided with his family. While there he etched many portraits and landscapes after Breughel, Elsheimer, and Teniers. In 1652 he returned to England, and continued laboriously employed till his death in 1677.—Life by Vertue.

HOLLES (Thomas Pelham), duke of Newcastle, was born in 1693. He succeeded his father in the barony of Pelham, and in 1711, his uncle John Holles as duke of Newcastle. He was a strenuous supporter of the Hanoverian succession, for which he obtained various honours and places. Soon after the accession of his present majesty he went out of office, and was succeeded by lord Bute. He died in 1768.—English Peerage.

HOLLES (Denzil, lord), one of the five members of the long parliament who were demanded by king Charles I. when he went to the house of commons. He was a man of austere severity, and the head of the presbyterian party in opposition to Cromwell and the independents. At the restoration he was advanced to the peerage, and died in 1680, aged 83.—Clarendon. Burnet's Own Times.

HOLLIS (Thomas), an English gentleman, was born at London in 1720, and educated amongst the dissenters, and afterwards at Amsterdam. In 1740 he became a student at Lincoln's-inn, but never followed the law. He afterwards endeavoured to get into parliament, but being disappointed, he retired to his seat at Corcombe in Dorsetshire, where he died suddenly in 1774. Mr. Hollis was a man of extensive liberality, and gave several benefactions to foreign libraries. He published editions of Toland's Life of Milton, and Sydney's Discourses on Government. His own Memoirs were splendidly published in 1780, in 2 vols. 4to.

HOLMES (George), keeper of the records and barrack-master of the Tower, was a native of Yorkshire, and died in 1749, aged 87. He republished the first 17 volumes of Rymer's Fœdera, and formed a curious collection of books, prints, and coins, which was sold by auction after his death.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HOLMES (Dr. Nathaniel), a nonconformist divine, ejected in 1662 from the living of St. Mary Staining, London. He was skilled in the Hebrew language, and among other works wrote a book in defence of the Millennium, entitled, The Resurrection Revealed, folio, 1654. He died in 1678.—Calamy.

HOLSTEIN (Cornelius), the son and disciple of Peter Holstein, a painter on glass at Haarlem. He attained great excellence in historical painting, of which the ceiling of the Treasury at Amsterdam is a proof. He died at the end of the 17th century.—Pilkington.

HOLSTENIUS or HOLSTEIN (Lucas), a learned German, born at Hamburg in 1596. After receiving a liberal education he went to Rome, where he obtained a canonry of St. Peter's and the librarianship of the Vatican. Pope Alexander VII. sent him as ambassador to Christina of Sweden, whom he reconciled to the church of Rome. He died in 1661. He wrote a Dissertation upon the Life and Writings of Porphyry, and notes upon various authors.—Moreri. Nicéron.

HOLT (sir John), an eminent judge, was born at Thame in Oxfordshire, in 1642, and educated at Abingdon school, and afterwards at Oriel college, Oxford, from whence he went to Gray's-inn. In the reign of James II. he was made recorder of London, and in 1686 serjeant at law. He sat in the convention-parliament, and shortly after was made chief-justice of the king's bench, and a privy-counsellor. On all occasions he displayed an intrepid mind, as well as a profound knowledge of the common law; and a greater proof of his regard to the rights of the people cannot be given than in the following instance: There happened in his time a riot, occasioned by the practice of decoying young persons to the plantations, who were confined in a house in Holborn till they could be shipped off. Notice of this being sent to Whitehall, a party of the military were ordered out, but before they marched an officer was sent to the chief-justice to desire him to send some of his people with the soldiers. Holt asked the officer what he intended to do if the mob refused to disperse; "My lord (replied he), we have orders to fire upon them."—"Have you so?" said Holt, "then observe what I say; if one man is killed, I will take care that you and every soldier of your party shall be hanged.—Sir, acquaint those who sent you, that no officer of mine shall attend soldiers; and let them know likewise, that the laws of this land are not to be executed by the sword: these things belong to the civil power, and you have nothing to do with them." So saying he dismissed the officer, and proceeded to the spot with his tipstaves, where he prevailed upon the populace to disperse, on a promise that justice should be done, and the abuse remedied. He died in 1710.—Biog. Brit.

HOLWELL (John Zephaniah), an ingenious English gentleman, who was governor of Bengal, and one of the persons confined in the black hole at Calcutta in 1756, of which he published a narrative. He wrote several pieces on India affairs, and died in 1798.—Europ. Mag.

HOLYDAY (Barten), a learned divine, was born at Oxford in 1593, and educated at Christ church, of which he became student. In 1618 he attended the English ambassador to Spain as chaplain, and on his return became archdeacon of Oxford. In the civil war he complied with the parliament, and retained his living of Chilton in Berkshire. He died in 1661. He wrote several sermons, and translated the Satires of Juvenal into English.—Wood.

HOLYOAKE (Francis), a learned lexicographer, was born in Warwickshire about 1567, and educated at Oxford. He became rector of Southam in his native county, and suffered greatly for his loyalty in the civil wars. He died in 1653. His Etymological Dictionary of Latin words was first printed in 1606, 4to., and the fourth edition, enlarged, appeared in 1633. His son Thomas was doctor in divinity, and died in 1675. He enlarged his father's Dictionary, which was published in 1677, folio.—Wood.

HOLYWOOD (John), or Halifax, or Sacrobosco, an English mathematician and divine, was born at Halifax in Yorkshire. After receiving his education at Oxford he went to Paris, where he died in 1256. He wrote, De Sphæra Mundi; De Anni Ratione; De Algorismo.—Ibid.

HOMBERG (William) a celebrated chemist, was born in 1652 at Batavia, where his father was governor of the arsenal. He at first entered into the army, but quitted that profession for the law, which he also abandoned, and betook himself to the sciences, particularly botany, medicine, and chemistry; to improve himself in which he travelled through various countries. In 1683 he fixed his residence in France, and abjured the protestant religion, but being disappointed in his expectations he went to Rome, and practised physic. He afterwards returned to Paris, where he became a member of the academy of sciences, and chemist and physician to the duke of Orleans. He died in 1715. He discovered the properties of the Bologna stone, and its phosphoric appearance after calcination. Some of his papers are in the memoirs of the academy.—Niceron. Moreri.

HOMÉ (David), a Scotch divine, who was employed by James I. to bring the protestants of Europe into one common confession. He wrote: 1. Apologia Basilica, seu Machiavelli ingenium examinatum, 4to. 1626; 2. L'Assassinat du Roi, ou Maximes du Viol de la Montagne pratiquées en la Personne de défunt Henri le Grand, 8vo. 1617.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HOMÉ (Henry), lord Kaimes, a Scotch judge and elegant writer, was born in 1696, and became by his merit the senior lord of session in Scotland. He wrote: Essays upon several subjects concerning British Antiquities, 1764; Essays on the Principles of Morality and Natural Religion, 8vo.; Historical Law, 8vo.; The Principles of Equity, folio; Elements of Criticism, 3 vols. 8vo.; The Gentleman Farmer, 8vo.; Loose Hints upon Education, 8vo.; The History of Man, 4 vols. 8vo. He died in 1782.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HOMER, the father of Greek poetry, was born on the banks of the river Meles, whence his mother called him Melesigenes. He was a natural child, but his mother afterwards married one Phemius, a citizen of Smyrna, who adopted the child as his son. His birth, however, is involved in so much obscurity that all this may be fable, for the ancients are not agreed as to the period in which he flourished, and seven cities disputed the honour of having given him birth. He is said to have kept a school at Smyrna, and that he afterwards accompanied Mentes, a master of a ship, in several voyages, and by him was left at Ithaca, where he gathered many particulars respecting Ulysses, which laid the foundation of the Odyssey. At length Mentes returned and took him on board again, but at Colophon he had the misfortune of losing his sight. He then became a strolling bard and obtained the name of Homer, which signifies a blind man. It is further added, that being at Phœcea, a school-master, named Thestorides, offered to maintain him, provided he would suffer him to transcribe his verses, which he agreed to from necessity. The school-master then went to Chios, where he acquired great wealth by Homer's poems, while the poet himself could scarcely get bread by reciting them. Homer on this proceeded to Chios, and Thestorides, hearing of his arrival, fled before him. Here the poet opened a school of poetry, married, and had two daughters. He died about 907 years B. C. The only genuine works of his extant, are the Iliad and Odyssey. The Batrachomyomachia, or Battle of the Frogs and Mice, has been disputed, but many good critics deem it to be his. The Hymns which go under his name are questionable. The best editions of Homer are, that of Barnes, Cambridge, 2 vols. 4to. 1711; Clarke's, 4 vols.; that of Glasgow, 2 vols. folio, 1758; that of Oxford, 5 vols. 8vo. 1780; and what is called the Grenville edition, recently published from the same press. It is needless to enter into his character as a poet, as he was beyond a doubt the most exalted and universal genius the world has seen.—Herodotus. Plutarch. Moreri.

HOMMEL (Charles Frederic), a German writer, born in 1722, and died in 1781. His principal works are: De Legum civilium et naturalium Natura; Oblectamenta Juris Feudalis, five Grammaticæ Observationes juris rei clientelaris, et antiquates Germanicas varie illustrantes; Corpus Juris Civilis cum notis variorum.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HONDEKOTTER (Gilles), an eminent painter, born at Utrecht in 1583. He painted landscapes in an admirable style, and also flowers with singular truth and exactness. His son Gysbrecht was remarkable for painting birds. He also had a son called Melchior, who excelled in the same walk. He died in 1695.—Pilkington.

HONDIUS (Abraham), a Dutch painter of landscapes, animals, and huntings, was born at Rotterdam in 1638. He died in 1691.—Id.

HONDIVS (Josse), a geographer, was born in Flanders in 1563, and died in 1611. He constructed at London two globes of extraordinary size and elegance. He afterwards settled at Amsterdam, and acquired a great reputation by his maps. His works are: Theatrum Artis Scribendi; Orbis Terrarum descriptio Geographicæ; Ger- hardi Mercatoris Atlas; Italiz hodiernæ Descriptio.—Moreri.

HONÉ (George Paul), a German lawyer, born at Nuremberg in 1662. He was counsellor to the duke of Meinungen, and bailiff of Cobourg, where he died in 1747. His principal works are: Lexicon Topographicum Franconiz; and a History of the Duchy of Saxe-Cobourg.—Nouv. Dict.

HONESTIS (Peter de), or Peter Damiani, an Italian prelate and cardinal. He was employed by pope Nicholas II. to reduce the church of Milan to celibacy, which he effected with difficulty. In 1061 he renounced his bishopric and retired to a cell; but in 1069 he was called from his retirement by the pope, and sent on a mission to France. He died in 1072. His works are numerous, but in no esteem.—Moreri.

HONORIUS, emperor of the west, was the second son of Theodosius the Great, and associated in the empire with Arcadius his brother in 395. His guardian, Stilico, endeavouring to dethrone him, was slain. In 409 Alaric the Goth besieged Rome, and ravaged all the country, while Honorius remained indolent at Ravenna. He died of a dropy in that city in 423, aged 39.—Univ. Hist. Moreri.

HONORIUS I. pope, succeeded Boniface V. in 626; and died in 638. He governed with zeal and prudence. Some of his letters are extant.

HONORIUS II. of Bologna, succeeded Calixtus II. in 1124, and at the same time Thibauld was chosen by another party, under the name of Celestin, but he resigned the chair to his rival, who died in 1130.

HONORIUS III. was made pope after Innocent III. in 1216. He confirmed the order of Dominicans, and died in 1227. He left several works.

HONORIUS IV. a Roman, ascended the chair in 1285, and died in 1287. He displayed great zeal for his church, and promoted the crusades.—Platina. Bower.

HONTAN (baron de), a native of Gascony in the 17th century, who published his Travels in North America, written in a barbarous style. He was an officer in the French service, from which he was dismissed for bad conduct, and at length settled in Denmark.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HONTHIM (John Nicholas de), suffragan to the archbishop of Treves, was born in that city in 1700. He died in 1790. He wrote: Historia Trevicensis diplomatica & pragmatica, 5 vols. folio; De præsentis statu Ecclesiæ, 5 vols. 4to. This work occasioned considerable noise among the catholics.—Id.

HONTHORST (Gerard), a painter, born at Utrecht in 1592. He was a disciple of Bloemart. He excelled in night-pieces, Sandrart mentions an unrivalled picture by him, the subject of which is, Christ brought before Pilate, in which the light proceeding from the torches produced an uncommon lustre. He died in 1660. His brother William was an excellent historical and portrait painter. He died in 1683.

HOOST (Peter Cornelius van), a Dutch writer, was born at Amsterdam in 1581. Louis XIII. of France gave him the order of St. Michael, as a reward for his History of Henry IV. He died in 1647. His other works are: Poems and Comedies; the History of the Low Countries from the Abdication of Charles V. to 1598; a translation of Tacitus into Dutch.—Moreri.

HOOGVEEN (Henry), a learned philologist, was born at Leyden, of poor parents, in 1719. He received a good education, and at the age of 15 became a teacher himself for the purpose of supporting his parents. In 1732 he was made under master of the academy at Gorcum, and shortly after appointed to the care of the academy at Woerden, from whence he removed to Culembourg. In 1745 he settled at Breda, which he left in 1761 for Dordt, but after a residence of three years there he went to Delft, where he died in 1794. His works are: an edition of Vigerus de Idiotismis Linguz Græcæ; Doctrina particularum Linguz Græcæ, 2 vols. 4to.; some Latin poems and discourses; and Dictionarium Analogicum Græcum.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

HOOGSTRAETEN (Theodore van), a landscape painter of Antwerp, who studied after nature. He died in 1640, aged 44. His son Samuel became very excellent, not only as a landscape but as a portrait painter. He died in 1678, aged 51.—Pitt. Heubraet.

HOOGSTRATEN (James), a Roman catholic divine of the Dominican order, who wrote with great bitterness against Luther, Erasmus, and Reuchlin. He was inquisitor-general, and by the violence of his temper was well suited to the office. He died at Cologne in 1527.—Moreri.

HOOGSTRATEN (David van), professor of belles lettres at Amsterdam, was born in 1658, and died in 1794. He wrote Latin and Flemish poems, notes upon some of the Latin classics, and a Dictionary, Flemish and Latin.—Ibid.

HOOGUE (Romain de), a Dutch engraver, who had a lively imagination, though not much taste. His principal works are: Plates for Bassege's History of the Old and New Testament; Plates for the Egyptian Hieroglyphics, published at Amsterdam, 1735, folio; Plates to Fontaine's Fables. His performances are much sought for.—Strutt.

HOOKER (Robert), a celebrated mathematician, was born at Freshwater in the Isle of Wight in 1635, and having a taste for drawing, was placed under sir Peter Lely, but the oil-colours disordering his head he quitted painting, and was taken by Dr. Busby into his house, after which he went to Christ church, Oxford. He assisted Dr. Willis in his chemical operations, and became assistant to Mr. Boyle. He was one of the first fellows of the royal society, the repository of which was entrusted to his care. In 1664 he was made professor of mechanics to that learned body, and at the same time elected Gresham professor of geometry. After the fire of London he produced a plan for rebuilding the city, which procured him the appointment of one of the city surveyors, but his plan was not adopted. In 1668 he had a dispute with Hevelius respecting telescopic lights, which he conducted with great asperity. In 1671 he attacked sir Isaac Newton's Theory of Light and Colours; and he afterwards pretended that the discovery made by that great man concerning the force and action of gravity was originally made by himself. In 1691 archbishop Tillotson created him M. D. He died at his lodgings in Gresham college in 1702. He wrote Micrographia, or Philosophical Descriptions of minute Bodies made by magnifying Glasses, with Observations and Enquiries thereupon, folio, 1665. Several of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions; and after his death appeared his Posthumous Works, in folio, 1705. He was a man of great mechanical genius, and the sciences are indebted to him for several valuable instruments and improvements.—Ward's Lives of the Gresham Professors.

HOOKER (Nathaniel), an English historian, who died in 1764. He was a Roman catholic, and when Mr. Pope lay on his death-bed Hooke introduced a priest to him, which gave great offence to Bolingbroke. He drew up the duchess of Marlborough's account of her conduct, for which he received 5000*l.*, but his best work is a Roman history, in 4 vols. 4to.—Gen. B. D.

HOOKER (John), a learned antiquary, was born at Exeter in 1524, and educated at Oxford, after which he travelled into Germany. On his return he settled at his native place, which he represented in parliament in 1571. He wrote a Description of Exeter, and some part of Holingshead's Chronicle, besides other pieces. He died in 1601.—Wood. Prince.

HOOKER (Richard), an English divine, commonly called the judicious, was nephew of the above, and born at Heavitree near Exeter in 1553. He received his education at the grammar-school of that city, from whence he was sent by his relation bishop Jewell to Corpus Christi college, Oxford, of which he was made bible-clerk, and in 1577 chosen fellow. In 1581 he took orders. In 1584 he was presented to the rectory of Drayton-Beauchamp in Buckinghamshire, where he led an uncomfortable life with his wife Joan for about a year. Being found in this situation by his pupil, Mr. Edwin Sandys, son to the archbishop of York, he represented his case so pathetically to his father, that he procured for him the mastership of the Temple. But this place did not suit Hooker, who was fitted for a country retirement, he therefore applied to archbishop Whitgift for a removal to "some quiet parsonage," and he was accordingly presented to a living in Wiltshire, where he wrote part of his Ecclesiastical Polity. In 1595 the queen presented him to the rectory of Bishop's Bourne, where he finished that great work, and his life in 1600. Pope Clement VIII. said of his book, "that there were in it such seeds of eternity as will continue till the last fire shall devour all learning." His works have been frequently printed in folio, and at Oxford in octavo.—Life by Walton.

HOOLE (Charles), an English divine, was born at Wakefield in Yorkshire, and educated at Lincoln college, Oxford, after which he became master of the free school at Rotham; but at the beginning of the civil wars he removed to London, where he gained great reputation as a school-master. Bishop Sanderson gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Lincoln, and he had also the rectory of Stock in Essex; where he died in 1666. He published many useful school books, an excellent edition of the Greek Testament, and a translation of Terence's Plays.—Wood, A. O.

HOOLE (John), an ingenious writer, was born in London in 1727. His father was a watch-maker, and a very able mechanician, and conducted for many years the machinery at Covent-garden theatre. The son was educated under Mr. Bennet, the editor of Ascham's works: and at the age of seventeen became a clerk in the India House. He devoted his leisure hours to literary pursuits, particularly the study of the Italian language, of which he acquired a great knowledge, as appears by his excellent translations of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, and Tasso's Jerusalem, into English. He also published two volumes of the Dramas of Metastasio: and was the author of three tragedies, viz. Cyrus, acted at Covent-garden in 1768, Timanthes performed the year following, and Cleonice in 1775. Mr. Hoole likewise wrote some pleasing poems, and the Life of Mr. Scott of Amwell. He died in 1803.—Europ. Mag. 1792. Gent. Mag. Oct. 1803.

HOOPER (John), a pious English bishop and martyr, was born in Somersetshire in 1495, and educated at Merton college, Oxford. He was for some time a member of the order of cistercians, but having imbibed the principles of the reformers he quitted the monastic life, and went to Switzerland where he married. At the accession of Edward VI. he returned to England, and was made bishop of Gloucester, to which was added that of Worcester in commendam. Here he laboured with great zeal till the restoration of popery under Mary, when he was arrested and condemned to the flames, which he endured with great resolution at Gloucester in 1555. His sermons and letters are extant.—Fox's Acts and Mon.

HOOVER (George), an eminent English prelate, was born at Grimley in Worcestershire about 1640, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford, in 1656. He was successively chaplain to Dr. Morley, bishop of Winchester, and to archbishop Sheldon, who gave him the rectory of Lambeth. In 1677 he became almoner to the princess of Orange, whom he attended to Holland. In 1691 he was appointed dean of Canterbury; and on the accession of queen Anne bishop of St. Asaph, from whence he was translated shortly after to Bath and Wells. He died in 1727. He published several books against popery, some sermons and tracts, which evince great learning, particularly one entitled, An Inquiry into the State of the ancient Measures, the Attic, Roman, and especially the Jewish. With an Appendix concerning our old English Money and Measures of Content, 1721, 8vo. All his works were printed at Oxford in one vol. folio, 1757.—Biog. Brit.

HOORNBECK (John), a Dutch divine, was born at Haerlem in 1617. He was divinity professor first at Utrecht, and afterwards at Leyden where he died in 1666. He wrote Apparatus ad controversiam Socinianam, 3 vols. 4to; Treatises against the Jews, and other esteemed works.—Bayle.

HOPKINS (Ezekiel), an exemplary prelate, was born at Sandford in Devonshire, and in 1649 became chorister of Magdalen college, Oxford, of which he was afterwards chaplain. In 1669 he went to Ireland as chaplain to lord Robartes (afterwards earl of Truro), who gave him his daughter in marriage, and the deanry of Raphoe. Lord Berkely made him bishop of Raphoe, from whence in 1681 he was translated to Londonderry. In 1688 he was obliged to quit Ireland, then the seat of war, and the year following he was chosen minister of Aldermanbury, where he died shortly after. His works have been published in one volume folio. The chief of them is an Exposition of the Lord's Prayer.—Prince's Worthies.

HOPKINS (Charles), son of the above, was born at Exeter, and educated at Dublin, and at Cambridge. In 1694 he published some epistolary poems and translations, and the year following produced a tragedy, called, Pyrrhus, King of Egypt. He translated Ovid's History and Art of Love; and was greatly esteemed by Dryden and other poets, but died of intemperance in the 36th year of his age, in 1699. His brother John had also a poetical turn, and published a collection, entitled, Amasia, or the Works of the Muses, in 3 vols. 1700.—Biog. Dram.

HORTON (Arthur), an English mathematician, was the son of sir Authur Hopton, and born in Somersetshire. He became a gentleman commoner of Lincoln college, Oxford, and after taking his degree of B.A. removed to the Temple, London, where he lived in great friendship with the learned Selden. He died in 1614, aged about 26. He wrote a Treatise on the Geodetical Staff, an old instrument for surveying, 4to; The Topographical Glass, containing the uses of that instrument, the Theodolite, plain table and circumferenter, 4to; A Concordance of Years, containing a new, and a most exact computation of Time, according to the English accompt, 8vo; Prognostications for the year 1607, to 1614.—Wood, A. O.

HORTON (Ralph lord), a brave and loyal English nobleman who served with great reputation in the Low Countries; and in the civil war attached himself zealously to the royal cause. He was so great a master of discipline that his army moved as one man, and was in every respect different from the licentious rabbles, of which there were numerous instances in those troublesome times. He gained a great victory over sir William Waller, at Stratton, in 1643; but was at last obliged to retreat before Fairfax. He died at Bruges in 1652.—Clarendon. Granger.

HORTON (Susanna), an ingenious lady, was born in 1627 of an ancient family in Staffordshire. In her youth she was drawn over to the church of Rome by father Turberville, a priest, but a subsequent enquiry and study restored her to the protestant communion. She became the wife of Richard Hopton, esq. a Welsh judge, whom she survived several years. She died at Hereford in 1709. Mrs Hopton reformed the Devotions in the Ancient Way of Offices, which book was published by her learned friend Dr. Hickeys; she also wrote Daily Devotions; an Hexameron, or Meditations on the Six Days of the Creation, &c.—Female Worthies.

HORAPOLLO or HORUS APOLLO an Egyptian grammarian, who taught first at Alexandria and afterwards at Constantinople in the time of Theodosius. There remain of his two books on the Egyptian hieroglyphics, printed by Aldus in Greek in 1505, folio, but the best edition is that of Pauw at Utrecht in 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

HORATII, the name of three brothers, who fought against the three Curiatii of Alba, B. C. 667. Two of them were slain, but the third, by adding artifice to his courage, slew all his antagonists. On his return to Rome he met his sister, who had been betrothed to one of the Curiatii, and the reproaching him for what he had done, he slew her also. His eminent services, however, were considered in extenuation of his crime, and he was pardoned.—Livy.

HORATIUS, or HORACE (Quintus Flaccus), an elegant Roman poet, was born at Vennunium, in Apulia, or Lucania, B. C. 65. His father was a freedman, but though poor he gave his son a good education, placing him first under the best masters at Rome, and then sending him to Athens, that he might study philosophy. Here he was taken notice of by Brutus, who took him into his army, and made him a tribune; but Horace had more wit than courage, and at the battle of Philippi he threw away his shield and fled. Being reduced to want, Virgil became his patron, and recommended him to Mæcenas, by which means he was introduced to Augustus, who offered him considerable preferments, which he declined, preferring a private life to the honours of the court. He was highly esteemed by the first people at Rome, particularly Mæcenas and Pollio. In the latter part of his life he retired to the country, where he indulged himself in a philosophical ease, which he has admirably described in his odes. He died eight years B. C. and was buried near his friend and patron Mæcenas, whose death it is said hastened his own. The best editions of Horace are those of Lips. 1752; and of Glasgow, 12mo. 1744. He has been well translated into English by Mr. Francis—Moreri.

HORATIUS (Cocles), a Roman knight, who saved the city by gallantly defending, with only two others, a wooden bridge which was attacked by Porcienna, B. C. 507. These three opposed the enemy successfully till their fellow-citizens had cut away the bridge, on which Horatius jumped into the Tiber, and though wounded swam across the river with his armour on.—Livy.

HORMAN (William), an English divine and botanist, was born at Salisbury and educated at Winchester school, after which he became fellow of New college, Oxford. In 1485 he was chosen schoolmaster and fellow of Eton, and at length vice-provost of that college. Among other books he wrote one, entitled, Herbarum Synonyma. He also compiled indices to the ancient authors De Re Rustica. He died in 1535. Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

HORMISDAS, a pope and saint of the Roman calendar, was elected to the pontifical chair in 514. He called a council at Rome against the eutychians, and died in 523. Many of his letters are extant.—Moreri.

HORMISDAS III. king of Persia, ascended the throne after the death of his father Chosroes the Great in 578. He lost soon after most of his army in an engagement with the Romans; and his general, Varanes, having experienced a similar disaster, Hormisdas sent him a female dress, which provoked him that he excited his subjects to revolt, and having seized Hormisdas, deprived him of his eyes. He died in 590.—Urio. Hist.

HORNE (George), bishop of Norwich, was born in 1730, at Otham in Kent, of which place his father was rector. He received his education at Maidstone school, and from thence was elected to a scholarship of University college, Oxford, where he took his degree of B. A. He was afterwards chosen fellow of Magdalen college, and applied with great diligence to sacred literature, particularly the study of the Hebrew language. In 1753 he entered into orders, and was soon distinguished as a most excellent preacher. He appeared also as an acute writer, particularly in controversy, defending the principles of Hutchinson with singular dexterity. In 1768 he was chosen president of his college. He now took his degree of D. D. and was appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king. The year following appeared his Considerations on the Life of John the Baptist, being the Substance of Sermons which he had preached annually at Magdalen college. In 1775 he served the office of vice-chancellor, and the same year produced his valuable Commentary on the Psalms. In 1781 he was advanced to the deanery of Canterbury, and in 1791 promoted to the bishopric of Norwich, but died at Eath the year following. His remains rest at Eltham, and a monument has been erected for him in Norwich cathedral, but his best monument and praise are his works, which are, besides the above, A fair, candid, and impartial State of the Case between Sir Isaac Newton and Mr. Hutchinson; The Theology and Philosophy in Cicero's Somnium Scipionis explained, &c. 8vo; Spicilegium Shuckfordianum, or a Nodogay for the Critics, in 8vo.; An Apology for certain Gentlemen in the University of Oxford, 8vo.; A View of Mr. Kennicott's Method of correcting the Hebrew Text, 8vo.; Considerations on the projected Reformation of the Church of England, 4to.; A Letter to Adam Smith, LL.D. on the Life, Death, and Philosophy, of David Hume, 12mo.; Letters on Infidelity, 12mo.; A Letter to Dr. Priestley, 8vo.; Observations on the Case of the Protestant Dissenters, 8vo.; Five Volumes of Sermons; A Charge intended to have been delivered to the Clergy of Norwich at the primary Visitation, 4to. 1791.—Life by Jones.

HORNECK (Anthony), a learned divine, was born in the Lower Palatinate in 1641, and educated at Heidelberg under Spanheim. At the age of 19 he came to England and entered of Queen's college, Oxford, of which he was chosen chaplain, and afterwards obtained the vicarage of Allhallows, Oxford. The duke of Albemarle gave him the rectory of Doulton in Devon, to which was afterwards added a prebend in the cathedral of Exeter. In 1671 he became preacher at the Savoy, and in 1693 prebendary of Westminster. He died in 1696. Dr. Horneck was a man of great learning and piety. His works are judicious and well known.—Life by Bp. Kilder.

HORNIUS (George), professor of history at Leyden, was born in the Palatinate, and died in 1670. His principal works are, Historia Ecclesiastica ad ann. 1666; De Originibus Americis, 8vo.; Geographia vetus & nova; Historia Philosophica.—Moreri.

HORREBOW (Peter), a Danish astronomer, who first discovered the aberration of the light of the fixed stars. He died in 1764, aged 85. He professed with great reputation many years philosophy, mathematics and astronomy, and wrote a book entitled, Copernicus triumphant.—Newsp. Dial. Hist.

HORROX (Jeremiah), an English astronomer, was born at Toxteth in Lancashire, about 1619. He received his academical education at Emanuel college, Cambridge, after which he retired to Hool near Liverpool, where he devoted himself to astronomical observations; but was cut off by a sudden death in 1640. He was the first who observed the transit of Venus over the sun's disk, his account of which was published by Hevelius at Dantzic in 1661, under the title, Venus in Sole visa, anno 1639, Nov. 24. Dr. Wallis published his posthumous works in 1678.—Martin's Biog. Phil. Hutton.

HORSLEY (John), a learned antiquary, was born in Northumberland, and educated first at Newcastle, and next in Scotland, where he took his degree of M.A. He afterwards became pastor of a dissenting congregation in his native county, and died in 1731. His work, entitled, Britannia Romana, folio, gives a copious and exact account of the remains and vestiges of the Romans in Britain.—Gen. Biog. Dial.

HORSTIUS (James), a German physician, was born at Torgau in 1537. In 1584 he became professor of physic at Helmstadt, where he died in 1600. He wrote Compendium Medicarum Institutionum; Herbarium, 8vo.; a Commentary on Hippocrates's Book of the Heart; De Noctambulationibus; De Dente aureo pueri Silestii; Disputationes Catholicæ de rebus secundum et præternaturam; Epist. Philosophicæ et Medicinales. He was also distinguished by his piety, and always prayed to God to bless his prescriptions.—Bayle.

HORSTIUS (Gregory), nephew of the above, was born at Torgau in 1578. He was professor of physic at several universities, and lastly at Ulm, where he died in 1636. He published several medical works. His son Daniel became professor of medicine at Marpurg, and died in 1685. He published Zacchiæ Quæstiones Medico-legales, and the medical works of Riverius.—Moreri.

HORTE (John), a learned prelate, was bred a dissenting minister under Mr. Thomas Rowe, and had for a fellow pupil Dr. Isaac Watts, with whom he corresponded to the Dr.'s death. After officiating to a congregation of dissenters at Marshfield in Gloucestershire, he conformed to the established church, and in 1708 preached a visitation sermon at Aylesbury. On going to Ireland as chaplain to the lord lieutenant he was made bishop of Leighlin and Ferns, from whence he was translated to Kilmore, and in 1742 to the archbishopric of Tuam. He died in 1751. His works are, a volume of excellent sermons, printed at Dublin in 1738, 8vo. and at London in 1757. A Charge to the Clergy of the diocese of Tuam in 1742.—Monthly Mag. vol. xv.

HORTENSIVS (Quintus), a Roman orator, who pleaded his first cause with great applause at the age of 19, B.C. 94. He became successively military tribune, prætor, and consul. He died immensely rich, B.C. 49. His daughter Hortensia inherited his eloquence, and when the Roman women were required to render on oath an account of their property, she pleaded the cause of her sex with such force that the decree was annulled.—Ibid.

HORTENSIVS (Lambert), a philosopher, poet, and historian, who assumed that name because his father was a gardener, was born in the territory of Utrecht in 1501, and studied at Louvain. He was for many years rector of the school at Naarden, where he died in 1577. He wrote, De Bello Germanico, under Charles V. and several other works.—Moreri.

HORTENSIVS (Martin), an astronomer, was born at Delft in 1605, and died in the flower of his age in 1639. He wrote a dissertation, De Mercurio sub Sole viso & Venera invisâ; also two discourses, De utilitate & dignitate Mathematicæ & de Oculo ejusque Præstantiâ.—Ibid.

HOSEA, the most ancient of the minor prophets, flourished in the reign of Jeroboam the second, king of Israel, and in that of Uzziah, from A.M. 3194 to 3219.—Gray's Key to O. T.

HOSIUS, or Osius (Stanislaus), a cardinal, was born at Cracow in Poland in 1503, of poor parents, but the superiority of his abilities brought him into notice, and he became bishop of Warmia. Pius IV. made him a cardinal, and employed him as his legate to preside at the council of Trent. He was a learned and zealous champion for the Roman church. His works make 2 vols. folio. He died in 1579.—Moreri.

HOSKINS (John), an English portrait painter, who died in 1664. He had the honour to paint the portraits of Charles II. and his queen, and most of the royal family. Alexander and Samuel Cooper were his disciples.—Vertue's Pilkington.

HOSPENIAN (Rodolphus), a learned Swiss divine, born at Altdorf, near Zurich, in 1547. In 1571 he was made provisor of the abbey school at Zurich, and afterwards minister of the abbey church. He died in 1626. His principal works are, De Templis, i. e. de origine usu et abusu Templorum, De Monachis; De festis Judæorum &

Ethnicorum; Festa Christianorum; Historia Sacramentaria; Historia Jesuitica; the whole making 7 vols. folio.—Moreri.

HOSPITAL (Michael de l'), chancellor of France, was the son of a physician, and born in Auvergne in 1505. His merits recommended him to the government, and he became successively auditor of the Rota at Rome, counsellor in the parliament of Paris, ambassador at the council of Trent, superintendent of the finances of France, and at length chancellor, at a time of peculiar trouble, when faction and fury divided the kingdom. He was a strenuous advocate for toleration, on which account the rigid romanists accused him of being a protestant, and at the time of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, he narrowly escaped being murdered. He died in 1573. There are in print of his, 1. Latin Poems, published at Amsterdam, in 8vo. 1732; 2. Memoirs, containing Treaties of Peace, &c.—Moreri.

HOSPITAL (William Francis Antony, marquis de l'), a French mathematician, was born of a noble family in 1661. He discovered very early a genius for mathematical study, and at the age of 15 solved a difficult problem of Pascal's. He was for some time in the army, but left it on account of a defect in his sight. In 1699 he was admitted an honorary member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and published a work on Sir Isaac Newton's fluxions, entitled, Analyse des infinimens petits, being the first Frenchman who wrote on that subject. He afterwards engaged in another mathematical work, in which he included Les Sections Coniques, les Lieux Geometriques, la Construction des Equations, et une Theorie des Courbes Mecaniques, which was published after his death.—Moreri. Martin Biog. Phil.

HOSSEN (Sidronius), a Flemish jesuit, born in 1596. He was famous for his Latin poetry, collected and published at Antwerp in 1656. The author died in 1633.—Moreri.

HOSTE (Paul l'), a French jesuit, born in 1632. He distinguished himself by his skill in the mathematics, and became professor of those sciences at Toulon, where he died in 1700. He wrote, 1. Traite des Evolutions Navales, folio, 1727; 2. Traite de Mathematiques les plus necessaires à un Officier, 3 vols. 12mo. This last was translated into English by William Webster. There was another French mathematician of this name, who wrote on the Artificial Sphere; Practical Geometry; Description and Use of Geometrical Instruments, &c. He died in 1634.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

HOSIUS (Matthew), a German antiquary, born in 1509, and died in 1587. He wrote De numeratione emendata, veteribus Latinis et Græcis usitata; De re numeraria veterum Græcorum, Romanorum et Hebræorum; De monomachia Davidis et Goliath; De multiplici assis usu; De sex Hy- driarum capacitate; Inquisitio in fabricum arcae Noë.—Ibid.

HOTMAN (Francis), a French civilian, was born at Paris in 1524. He studied at Orleans, where he took his degree of doctor in the civil law. He afterwards read lectures at Paris; but having embraced protestantism he went to Switzerland, from whence he removed to Strasburg, where he obtained a professorship of civil law. Some years afterwards he returned to France and became professor at Bourges, but at the time of the massacre of St. Bartholomew he retired to Basil, where he died in 1590. His works were published at Geneva in 1599, in 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

HOTTINGER (John Henry), a learned writer of Zurich in Switzerland, was born in 1620. His love of learning was so remarkable that it was resolved to send him into foreign countries at the public expence. He accordingly visited several parts of Europe, and at his return was made professor of ecclesiastical history, to which was afterwards added that of the oriental languages. He was engaged by the elector palatine to restore the university of Heidelberg; and he was going on a public mission to Holland when he was drowned in the river that passes through Zurich in 1667. His principal works are, Exercitationes Anti-Morinianæ de Pentateucho Samaritano, 4to.; Thesaurus Philologicus, seu clavis Scripturæ, &c. 4to.; Historia Orientalis, &c. 4to.; Promptuarium, sive Bibliotheca Orientalis, 4to.; Etymologicon Orientale, sive Lexicon Harmonicum Heptaglotton, 4to. His son, John James Hottinger, was professor of theology at Zurich, and died in 1735, aged 83. He wrote several practical pieces.—Moreri.

HOVARD de la Mothe (Antony), a French law-antiquary, was born at Dieppe in 1725, and died at Abbeville in 1803. He was a member of the academy of Inscriptions, and an associate of the National Institute. His works are, 1. Anciennes Lois des François, conservées dans les coutumes Angloises, 2 vols. 4to. 2. Traite sur les coutumes Anglo-Normandes, &c. 4 vols. 4to.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

HOUBIGANT (Charles Francis), a learned French divine, was born at Paris in 1686. He was a priest of the oratory, and distinguished himself by his profound knowledge of the Hebrew scriptures, the whole of which he translated into Latin, with notes, published at Paris in 4 vols. folio, 1753. He died in 1783. Besides the above work he published a Dictionary French and Hebrew, 8vo.; Examination of the Psalter of the Capuchins; a translation of bishop Sherlock's Sermons; another of Leslie against the Deists and Jews, &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

HOUBAERT (Arnold), a Dutch painter and poet, was born at Dordt in 1660. He wrote the Lives of the Flemish Painters, printed in 1754, in 3 vols. 8vo. His son Jacob was an able engraver, and illustrated his father's work.—Novo. Dict.

HOYEDEN (Roger de), an English historian in the reign of Henry II. He was a native of York, and an ecclesiastic and a lawyer, two professions then commonly united. His Annals of English History from 731 to 1199, were printed at London in 1595, and at Frankfurt in 1691.—Nicholson's Hist. Lib.

HOUGH (John), an English prelate, was born in Middlesex in 1650. After going through his school education he was removed to Magdalen college, Oxford, of which in 1675 he was elected fellow. In 1681 he accompanied the duke of Ormond to Ireland, from whence he returned to England the year following, and in 1685 was made prebendary of Worcester. James II. having a design to introduce popery into the universities, commanded the fellows of Magdalen college, on a vacancy in the presidency, to elect one Farmer, a convert to that religion. The fellows, however, resisted the mandate, and chose Mr. Hough, who was displaced by ecclesiastical commissioners in 1687. At the revolution, however, he recovered his situation, and in 1690 was made bishop of Oxford, from whence in 1699 he was translated to Litchfield, and in 1717 to Worcester. He died in 1743. He was a very munificent prelate, and expended on his episcopal palaces 7000*l.*—Biog. Brit.

HOULIERES (Antoinette du Ligier de Lagarde, widow of William de Lafon sieur des), a French poetess, was born at Paris in 1638. She was the pupil of Henault, whom she imitated not only in poetry, but also in scepticism. She was a member of the academy of Ricovrati at Padua and of that of Arles. She died in 1694. Her daughter, who died in 1718, was also an ingenious writer, and the works of both were published together in 1747, in 2 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Dict.

HOUSEMAN (Cornelius), a painter, born at Antwerp in 1648. He settled at Mechlin, where he acquired great reputation as an artist. He excelled in painting landscapes enriched with the figures of animals and plants, executed in a beautiful manner. He died in 1737.—Pilkington.

HOUSEMAN (James), another painter, born at Antwerp in 1656. He came to England, where he painted history and portrait. His greatest work is the altar-piece in the chapel at St. James's. He died in 1696.—Ibid.

HOUSSEY, see AMELOT.

HOUSTON (William), an English physician and botanist. He went to the West Indies as surgeon, and on his return took his degrees at Leyden under Boerhaave; while there he instituted a set of experiments on brutes, in concert with Van Swieten. These were published in the Philosophical Transactions, vol. 39. He was elected fellow of the Royal Society soon after his return from Holland, and went immediately to the West Indies, where he died in 1733. He left a MS. catalogue of plants, which has been published by sir Joseph Banks. He has also a description of the Dorstenia Contrayerva in the Philosophical Transactions, vol. 37.—Pulteney's Sketches of Bot.

HOUTEVILLE (Claude Francis), a French ecclesiastic, was born at Paris in 1688. He became a member and secretary of the French academy, and also secretary to Cardinal Dubois, who had a great esteem for him. He died in 1742, aged 54. His principal work is a book entitled, The Truth of the Christian Religion proved by facts, 3 vols. 4to. and 4 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

How (William), a physician and botanist, was born in London in 1619, and educated first at Merchant Taylors' school, and afterwards at St. John's college Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In the civil war he entered into the royal army, and became a captain in a troop of horse; but on the decline of the royal cause he practised physic in London, where he died in 1656. He wrote Phytologia Britannica natales exhibens indigenarum Stirpium sponte emergentium, 12mo. and he also edited Lobel's illustrations of plants.—Wod. Pulteney.

HOWARD (Thomas), earl of Surrey, and duke of Norfolk, a gallant English nobleman. He served in conjunction with his brother, Sir Edward, against Sir Andrew Barton, a Scotch pirate, who infested the English coast in 1511, and after killing the commander took both ships. He next accompanied the marquis of Dorset in his expedition to Guienne, which ended in the conquest of Navarre by Ferdinand. On the death of his brother, Sir Edward, he was made high admiral, and effectually cleared the channel of the French cruizers. The victory of Flodden field, in which the king of Scotland was slain, was chiefly owing to his bravery and prudence. For this his father was restored to the title of duke of Norfolk, and the son created earl of Surrey. On the breaking out of the disturbances in Ireland, he was appointed lieutenant of that kingdom, where he suppressed the rebellion. After serving there two years, he returned, and took on him the command of the fleet against France. Notwithstanding his great services, Henry, at the close of life, caused the duke to be sent to the Tower, on a charge of treason, and his son to be beheaded in his presence. The death of the tyrant only saved the duke's life. He died in 1554, aged 66.—Campbell's Admirals.

HOWARD (Edward), younger brother of the above, distinguished himself as an able naval commander. He entered early on the maritime service, and about 1494 was knighted. In 1512 he was sent as lord high admiral of England with a large fleet against France, the coasts of which he ravaged. He also defeated the enemy's fleet off Brest, but the year following he was slain in boarding Pregent, the French admiral's ship, and his body thrown into the sea.—Campbell's Admirals.

HOWARD (Henry), earl of Surrey, an accomplished nobleman, was the son of Thomas duke of Norfolk abovementioned, and born about 1520. He had a passion for a lady whom he celebrated in some elegant sonnets under the name of Geraldine; and the late earl of Orford says that she was the daughter of Fitzgerald earl of Kildare, and afterwards the wife of Clinton earl of Lincoln. Howard carried his affection to so romantic a height that in his travels he made a public challenge to maintain her beauty at the point of the lance. After serving his country with great valour, he fell a victim to the gloomy jealousy of Henry VIII. who pretended to suspect him of a design to marry his daughter Mary. He and his father were sent to the Tower, and the son beheaded on Tower-hill in 1547. His sonnets are in Anderfon's Collection of British Poets.—Biog. Brit. Walpole's Noble Authors.

HOWARD (Charles), earl of Nottingham, and lord high admiral of England, was the son of lord William Howard, and born in 1536. He served when young under his father, and in 1568 was appointed general of the horse. The same year he displayed great valour and conduct in the north against the rebels commanded by the earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland. The year following he had the command of a squadron, with which he escorted from Zealand to Spain, Anne of Austria, daughter of the emperor Maximilian, who was betrothed to Philip of Spain. In 1572 he succeeded his father as lord Effingham, and not long after was made knight of the garter. Lord Effingham had the important command of the English fleet when the Spanish armada entered the channel, and by his great skill and prudence contributed principally to its destruction. For these services he was created earl of Nottingham, and enjoyed the queen's confidence to her death. In the succeeding reign he was sent ambassador to Spain, but after his return he lost the king's favour, and resigned his post to George Villiers duke of Buckingham. He died in 1624.—Campbell.

HOWARD (sir Robert), an English writer, was the son of Thomas earl of Berkshire, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford. He suffered considerable losses during the civil war, but at the restoration he was knighted, and made auditor of the exchequer. He was a zealous friend of the revolution, and died about 1700. He wrote several plays; The History of the Reigns of Edward and Richard II.; The History of Religion, 1694, 8vo. &c.—Wood.

HOWARD (John), a philanthropic English gentleman, was born at Hackney in 1726. His father was a tradesman in London, but died while his son was an infant, who was left in the hands of guardians, by whom at a proper age he was apprenticed to a grocer. His constitution, however, being delicate, and having an aversion to trade, he purchased his indentures from his master, and went abroad. On his return he lodged with a widow lady at Stoke Newington, who attended him with such care during his illness that he conceived an affection for her, though she was much older than himself, and they were married. Mrs. Howard lived only about three years, and he was a sincere mourner for her loss. In 1756 he embarked for Lisbon, but on the passage the ship was taken and carried into France. On his release he went to Italy, and at his return settled in Hampshire. In 1758 he married a second wife, but she died in childbed in 1765, leaving him one son. He was at this time fixed at Cardington near Bedford, where he purchased an estate. In 1773 he served the office of sheriff, which, as he declared, "brought the distress of the prisoners more immediately under his notice," and led him to form the design of visiting the gaols through England, in order to devise means for alleviating the miseries of the sufferers. In 1774 he was examined before the house of commons on the subject of the prisons, and received the thanks of the house. He then extended his benevolent views to foreign countries, making various excursions through all parts of Europe. In 1777 he published The State of Prisons in England and Wales, with preliminary Observations, and an Account of some foreign Prisons, 4to. In 1780 he published an appendix to it, with an account of his travels in Italy; and in 1784 a new edition appeared, with considerable additions. About this time some warm admirers of Mr. Howard opened a subscription for erecting a statue to his honour, but at his earnest request the design was dropped. In 1789 he published an account of the principal Lazarettos in Europe, in 4to. In this work he signified his intention of revisiting Russia, Turkey, and of extending his route into the east. "I am not insensible," he says, "of the dangers that must attend such a journey. Trusting, however, in the protection of that kind Providence which has hitherto preserved me, I calmly and cheerfully commit myself to the disposal of unerring Wisdom. Should it please God to cut off my life in the prosecution of this design, let not my conduct be uncandidly imputed to rashness or enthusiasm, but to a serious, deliberate conviction, that I am pursuing the path of duty; and to a sincere desire of being made an instrument of more extensive usefulness to my fellow-creatures than could be expected in the narrower circle of a retired life." He fell a sacrifice to his humanity; for visiting a sick patient at Chertson, who had a malignant fever, he caught the infection, and died Jan. 20, 1790. A fine statue of Mr. Howard has been placed in St. Paul's cathedral, with an inscription.—Life by Aikin.

Howe (John), a non-conformist divine, was born at Loughborough in Lincolnshire in 1630, and educated at Cambridge, from whence he removed to Oxford, and became fellow of Magdalen college. He was ordained among the presbyterians, and appointed minister of Torrington in Devonshire, and chaplain to Cromwell. In 1662 he lost his living for non-conformity, but in 1671 he went to Ireland as chaplain to lord Massarene, and the bishop of the diocese gave him a licence to preach. In 1675 he settled in London. He died in 1705. His principal performance is entitled, The Living Temple, in 2 vols. 8vo. All his works have been published in 2 vols. folio.—Life by Calamy.

Howe (John), an English writer, was born in Nottinghamshire, and sat in six parliaments. He was at first a friend of the revolution, but afterwards conceived a great aversion to William. On the accession of queen Anne he was appointed a member of the privy-council, and paymaster-general of the guards and garrisons, in which he continued till 1714, when he was succeeded by Mr. Walpole. He died in 1721. He wrote several songs and poems.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

Howe (Richard, earl), a gallant admiral, was born in 1725, and entered the naval service at so early an age that at 20 he was appointed to the command of a sloop of war, in which he beat off two large French frigates after a gallant action, for which he was made a post-captain. After a variety of active service he obtained the command of the Dunkirk of 60 guns, with which he captured a French 64 off Newfoundland. In 1757 he served under admiral Hawke, and the year following was appointed commodore of a squadron, with which he destroyed a number of ships and magazines at St. Malo. In 1759 prince Edward, afterwards duke of York, was put under his care, and the commodore on the 6th of August took Cherbourg and destroyed the bastion. This was followed by the unfortunate affair of St. Eas, where he displayed his courage and humanity in saving the retreating soldiers at the hazard of his own life. The same year, by the death of his brother, he became lord Howe, and soon afterwards had a great share in the victory over Conflans. When admiral Hawke presented him, on this occasion, to the king, his majesty said, "Your life, my lord, has been one continued series of services to your country." In 1768 he was appointed to the admiralty board, where he remained till 1765, when he was made treasurer of the navy. In 1770 he was appointed commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean. In the American war he commanded the fleet on that coast. In 1782 he was sent to the relief of Gibraltar, which service he performed in sight of the French and Spanish fleets, but who shunned an action, though far superior in numbers. The year following he was made first lord of the admiralty, which office he soon afterwards resigned, but at the end of the year he was re-appointed, and continued in that station till 1788, when he was created an English earl. In 1793 he took the command of the channel fleet, and June 1, 1794, he obtained a decisive victory over the French fleet. The same month he was visited on board his ship by their majesties at Spithead, when the king presented him with a magnificent sword, a gold chain and medal. He also received the thanks of both houses, the freedom of London, and the universal applause of the nation. In 1795 he became general of the marines, and in 1797 was honoured with the garter. His lordship died in August 1799, and was succeeded by his brother.—Monthly Mag. Gent. Mag.

HOWELL (James), a various writer, was born in Caermarthenshire about 1596, and educated at Jesus college, Oxford, of which his brother Thomas (who died bishop of Bristol) was fellow. In 1618 he quitted college, and was employed as steward of sir Robert Mansel's glasshouse in London, the proprietors of which sent him abroad to procure materials and workmen. He returned in 1621, and left this employment soon afterwards. The year following he went to Spain, and during his absence was chosen fellow of Jesus college. In 1624 he became secretary to lord Scrope, president of the north, and in 1627 was chosen member for Richmond in Yorkshire. He was afterwards employed in state affairs, and in 1640 became clerk of the council; but in 1643 his papers were seized by order of parliament, and he was committed to the Fleet, where he supported himself by his pen. His writings were very numerous, but mostly of a temporary kind. That by which he is best known is, a Collection of Letters, one vol. 8vo. which contains much of the history of the times, written in a lively manner. At the restoration he was made historiographer-royal. He died in 1666.—Wood.

HOZIER (Peter d'), a French genealogist, was born at Marseilles in 1592. He was judge of arms, certifier of titles, and a member of the council of state. He died in 1660. He published a history of Brittany, and several genealogical tables.—Moreri.

HUARTE (John), a native of French Navarre, who distinguished himself in the 17th century by a Spanish work of great merit, entitled, A Treatise of Wits, or a Treatise on the different Kinds of Genius among Men; with Rules and Directions to shew to what Kind of Study any Person is best adapted. This book has been translated into English.—Moreri.

HUBER (Samuel), professor of theology at Wittenberg about 1592, was a native of Berne. He zealously opposed the doctrine of predestination, and wrote an explanation of the 9th, 10th, and 11th chapters of the Epistle to the Romans.—Moreri.

HUBER (Ulric), professor of law at Franeker, was born in 1635, and died in 1694. His chief works are: Dissertationes de genuina aetate Assyriorum, et regno Medorum; Institutiones Historiæ civilis; De Jure Civitatis. His son Zacharias succeeded him in his professorship, and died in 1782. He wrote some learned tracts.—Novæ Diss.

HUBER (John Rudolph), an eminent painter, was born at Basle in Switzerland in 1668. He studied in Italy after the works of the best masters, and painted a prodigious number of portraits, and historical pictures. He died in 1748.—Pilking-ton.

HUBER (Mary), a female writer, was born at Geneva in 1710. She wrote a work, entitled, Letters on the Religion essential to Man, which were attacked by the Romish divines. She was also the author of a work on the systems of the ancients and moderns respecting the state of the soul after death, and an abridgment of the Spectator from the English. She died in 1753.—Novæ Diss.

HUBERT (Matthew), a priest of the Oratory in France, who was greatly distinguished as a preacher. He died in 1772, aged 77. His sermons were published at Paris, in 6 vols. 12mo. 1725.—Ibid.

HUBNER (John), a German historian and geographer, was born in 1668. He became rector of the school at Hamburgh, where he died in 1792. He wrote several geographical and historical compendiums, which have been translated into various languages; but his principal works are, 1. Bibliotheca Historica Hamburgenfis; 2. Museum Geographicum.—Moreri.

HUPPE (John), a burgomaster of Amsterdam, who was a considerable statesman and mathematician. He died in 1704. His mathematical works are highly esteemed.—Novæ Diss.

HUDSON (Henry), an English navigator, who made several voyages to find a passage by the north to India, in the last of which he discovered a bay, called by his name, where he wintered, but on his passage home some of his crew mutinied, and forced him; his son, and some others into a boat which was never after heard of. The others arrived at Plymouth in 1611. There is a trading company called Hudson's Bay company on account of their connexion with that part of America discovered by him.—Hackley.

HUDSON (John), a learned divine, was born at Wythop in Cumberland, in 1662, and bred at Queen's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts; and then removed to University college, on obtaining a fellowship there. In 1701 he was elected keeper of the Bodleian library, and the same year he took his degree of D. D. In 1712 he was appointed principal of St. Mary hall, through the interest of Dr. Radcliffe; and it was owing to Dr. Hudson that Radcliffe bestowed his liberal benefactions on the university. He married the daughter of sir Robert Harrison, by whom he left a daughter. He died in 1719. Dr. Hudson published elegant editions of Velleius Paterculus, Thucydides, Geographiæ Veteris Scriptoris Græci Minores, Dionysius Halicarnassensis, Longinus, Æsop, &c.; after his death appeared his beautiful edition of Josephus, 2 vols. folio.—Hutchinson's Hist. Cumberland.

HUDSON (Thomas), an English portrait painter. He was the scholar and son-in-law of Richardson, and though but an indifferent artist, he had the honour of being the preceptor of sir Joshua Reynolds. He died in 1779, aged, 78.—Pilking-ton.

HUET (Peter Daniel), a learned French bishop, was born at Caen in Normandy, in 1630. He studied mathematics under father Mamburn, a Jesuit, and Greek and Hebrew under Bochart, whom he accompanied in 1652 to the court of Christina, queen of Sweden, who would have engaged him in her service, but he declined the honour, and returned to France. In 1661 he published an excellent work on the art of translation, entitled, De Interpretatione. In 1679 appeared his Demonstratio Evangelica, which met with unbounded approbation. His reputation was now so great that the place of sub-preceptor to the dauphin was conferred on him, and he had for his colleague the illustrious Bossuet. In 1668 appeared his valuable edition of the works of Origen. The plan of publishing editions of the classics "in usum Delphini" was his, and he superintended its execution. In 1678 he was presented to the abbey of Aunay in Normandy, and in 1685 he was nominated to the see of Soissons, which he afterwards exchanged for that of Avranches. In 1689 he printed his Censures on the Cartesian Philosophy, a system to which he had been most zealously attached, but the fallacy of which he now sufficiently exposed. In 1699 he resigned his bishopric, and was presented to the abbey of Fontenoy, near Caen. He died at Paris in 1721. Huët, considering the number and excellence of his works, may be considered as one of the most learned men that any age has produced. The following books of his have been translated into English; on the Origin of Romances; on the Situation of the Terrestrial Paradise; History of the Commerce and Navigation of the Ancients; and on the Weakness of Human Understanding.—Moreri.

HUFNAGEL (George), a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1545. He became painter to some of the German princes, and his reputation recommended him to the emperor Rodolphus, for whom he executed four admirable books representing quadrupeds, insects, birds, and fishes. He was also a tolerable poet in Latin and German. He died in 1600.—Moreri.

HUGO-CAPT, the chief of the third race of French monarchs, was count of Paris and Orleans. On account of his courage and other qualities he was proclaimed king of France at Noyon in 987. He died in 996, aged 57.—Henault. Moreri.

HUGHES (John), an English poet, was born at Marlborough in Wiltshire, in 1677. He received his education in London, and though he had a great love for literature, he applied himself to business, and obtained a place in the ordinance office. His first publication was an Ode on the Peace of Ryfwick, 1697, which was well received, and introduced him to the acquaintance of several men of letters. In 1717 he was appointed secretary to the commissioners of the peace, by lord chancellor Cowper. His last literary piece was the tragedy of the Siege of Damascus; but he expired on the first night of its performance, February 17, 1730. In 1735 his plays and poems were published in 2 vols. 12mo. He also wrote several pieces in prose, particularly some papers in the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian; and he superintended an edition of Spenser's works, in 6 vols. 12mo. His younger brother James HUGHES published a translation from Claudian, of the Rape of Proserpine, and the story of Sextus and Erictho, from Lucan; also Suetonius's Lives of the Cæsars, and some of Cervantes's novels. He died in 1731, aged 46. Another James Hughes, who was fellow of Jesus college, Cambridge, published in 1712 an excellent edition of Chrysostom on the Priesthood.—Gay. Biog. Diæ.

HUGO of Cluni, a saint of the Roman calendar, was born in Burgundy, in 1023. At the age of fifteen he entered into the abbey of Cluni, of which he was chosen abbot in 1048. He greatly reformed that monastery, and died in 1106. Some of his epistles are in Dacherius's Spicilegium.—Dupin.

HUGO (Herman), a learned jesuit and Latin poet, was born at Brussels, in 1598, and died of the plague at Rhinberg, in 1639. He wrote, De Prima Scribendi Origine, et universæ rei Literariæ Antiquitate, 8vo. 1617; Obsidio Bredana, sub Ambrosio Spinola, Antwerp, 1629, folio; Militia Equestis, Antiquæ et Novæ, folio, 1630; Pia Desideria, 8vo.—Moreri.

HUGO (Charles Louis), a French writer, was abbe of Eftival, and bishop of Poitiers, and died in 1735. His works are; 1. Annales Premonstratensium, which, as the history of a monastic order, is curious; 2. Vie de St. Norbert Fondateur des Premontrés; 3. Sacræ Antiquitatis Monumenta historica, dogmatica, diplomatica, 2 vols. folio; 4. Traité Historique et Critique de la Maison de Lorraine, 1711. This work was condemned by the parliament; on which he wrote, 5. Reflexions sur les deux Ouvrages concernant la Maison de Lorraine. He also had a controversy with M. Faydit on the doctrine of the trinity.—Moreri.

HUGTENBURGH (John van), a Dutch painter, who excelled in painting battles, and hunting. He had the honour of painting the victories of the duke of Marlborough, and prince Eugene. He died in 1733, aged 77. His brother James, who died in 1696, excelled in painting landscapes and animals.—Pilkington.

HULDAIC (John James), a Swiss divine, was born at Zurich in 1683, and died there in 1731. He was professor of law in his native city, and universally esteemed for his public services. He published an edition of the work, entitled, Sephor Toledot Jeschu, 1705; Miscellanea Tigurina, 3 vols; and wrote a Commentary on Pufendorf's Duty of Man.—Moreri.

HULSMANN (John), a lutheran divine, was born at Esens, in Friesland, in 1602. He became professor of divinity at Leipzig, where he died in 1681. He wrote many works on theological subjects.—Moreri.

HULSIUS (Anthony), a German divine, was born at Hilda in 1615. After studying at Wesel and Deventer, he visited foreign universities and acquired a considerable knowledge of the oriental languages. He was minister at Breda twenty-five years, and in 1676 removed to Leyden, where he became professor of divinity. He died in 1685. He wrote Theologia Judaica; Opus Catecheticum didacticum-polemicum; and a treatise, entitled, Non ens Præadamiticum. He is not to be confounded with Henry HULSIUS who died professor of theology at Duisbourg in 1723. He wrote Summa Theologiæ; de Principio creandi; de Vallibus Prophetarum Sacris, &c.—Moreri.

HULST (Peter van der), a Dutch painter, born at Dort, in 1652. He painted flowers, among which he introduced lizards, frogs, serpents, and insects. He died in 1708.—Pilkington.

HUMR (David), a celebrated historical and philosophical writer, was born at Edinburgh, in 1711. He was designed for the law by his friends, but having no inclination to that profession, he applied to mercantile pursuits, and became in 1734 clerk in an eminent house at Bristol. But he did not continue long in that line; for having a strong propensity to literature, he went to France, where he wrote his treatise of Human Nature, which he published at London in 1738. This metaphysical work, however, met with an indifferent reception; nor were his Moral Essays, which appeared in 1742, more successful. About this time he resided with the marquis of Annandale as a companion, but soon after he became secretary to general Sinclair, whom he attended to Vienna and Turin; and while he was abroad his Enquiry concerning the Human Understanding was published at London. In 1752 appeared his Political Discourses, and his Enquiry concerning the Principles of Morals, the latter of which he always accounted as the best of his writings. In 1754 he published the first volume of the History of England, from the Accession of James I. to the Revolution. This work had little success; but the second, which came out in 1756, met with a better fate, and "helped (as the author said) to buoy up its unfortunate brother." About the same period he published his Natural History of Religion, which was smartly answered by Dr. Warburton in a pamphlet, which Mr. Hume attributed to Dr. afterwards bishop Hurd. In 1759 appeared his History of the House of Tudor, and in 1761 the more ancient part of the English History. The work had now acquired a considerable celebrity, and the writer gained largely by its popularity, for besides the profits it brought him he obtained a pension through the minister lord Bute. In 1763 he accompanied the earl of Hertford on his embassy to Paris, where in 1765 he remained as charge d'affaires. The year following he returned home, and soon after became under-Secretary of state to Mr. Conway. In 1769 he retired to his native country on an independent income. He died in 1776. After his death appeared a work by him, entitled, Dialogues concerning Natural Religion. Mr. Hume was master of a good style of composition, and had the art of stating common objections in a new manner. His positions on religious points, however, are extremely fallacious and frivolous. As a metaphysician he is sophistical and obscure, as a moralist, lax and deceitful, and as an historian specious and partial.—Life by Adam Smith. Bp. Horne's Letters. Gen. Biog.

HUMPHREY (Laurence), a learned divine, was born at Newport Pagnel in Buckinghamshire about 1527, and educated at Cambridge, from whence he removed to Magdalen college, Oxford, of which he became fellow and Greek lecturer. During the reign of Mary he resided abroad, but at the accession of Elizabeth he returned, and was restored to his fellowship. In 1560 he was made professor of divinity at Oxford, and the year following elected president of his college. He was successively dean of Gloucester and Winchester, and might have been a bishop but for his puritanical principles. He died in 1590. His writings are, 1. Epistola de Græciæ Literis et Homeri Lectione et Imitatione; 2. De Religionis Conservatione et Reformatione, deque Primatu Regum; 3. De Ratione interpretandi Auctores; 4. Optimates; five de Nobilitate, ejusque Antiqua Origine; 5. the Life of Bishop Jewel; 6. Sermons, &c.—Wood.

HUNGARY. This country, the ancient Pannonia, was reduced by Tiberius, B. C. 11. A. D. 376 the Huns conquered it, and about 460 were expelled by the Gepidæ, who submitted to the Lombards in 526. They quitted it in 568, and the Huns remained masters of it till they were conquered by Charlemagne in 794. Afterwards the Hungarians became an independent nation, for in 920 they were governed by Toxis, the father of Geisla, their first christian king. This race continued till 1302, when Charles Martel succeeded to the crown. In 1383 Sigismund, emperor of Germany, and king of Bohemia, became king of Hungary in right of his wife; but in 1438 it became again independent of the empire under Uladislau. In 1540 sultan Soliman seized the best part of the country, and Ferdinand, the emperor, took the rest; from which time it was the seat of frequent wars between the Germans and Turks till 1739, when the latter yielded all, except Belgrade; since which it has generally been annexed to the German empire.—Univ. Hist.

HUNIADES (John Corvinus), vaitode of Transylvania, and commander of the Hungarian armies, who forced Amurath the sultan of the Turks to retire from Belgrade, and defeated his generals in several battles. He became the terror of the Turks, but was defeated by them in 1448; and in 1456 he compelled Mahomet II. to raise the siege of Belgrade, and died the same year.—Moreri.

HUNNERIC, king of the Vandals in Africa, succeeded his father Genserik in 477. He was a violent arian, and though he at first gave the orthodox christians toleration, he afterwards commenced a terrible persecution against them, which, for its cruelty, exceeded the heathens. He died in 484.—Ibid.

HUNNIUS (Giles), a lutheran divine, born at Winende, in the duchy of Wirtemberg, in 1550, and educated at Tübingen. In 1576 he became professor of divinity at Marburg, from whence he removed to Wirtemberg. He wrote with bitterness against Calvin and Huber, and manifested a most intolerant spirit. He died in 1603. His son Nicholas was a learned writer, and became professor of divinity at Wittenberg and Lubeck. He died in 1643.—Melch. Adam. Moreri.

HUNT (Walter), an English carmelite, who distinguished himself in a council held at Florence against the Greeks, at the time when a union was agitated between the two churches. He also wrote a book on the subject, and died in 1470.—Pitt.

HUNT (Jeremiah), a learned dissenting divine, was born in London in 1678. He was educated under Mr. Thomas Rowe, a dissenting minister in the city, after which he studied at the universities of Edinburgh and Leyden, and at the latter place he studied the Hebrew language, and Jewish antiquities under an eminent rabbi. He began to preach while in Holland to an English congregation at Amsterdam, and on his return home officiated some time at Tunstall in Norfolk, from whence he removed to London about 1710, as pastor of the congregation at Pinner's Hall. In 1729 the university of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D. D. He died in 1744. Dr. Hunt wrote, An Essay towards explaining the History and Revelations of Scripture in their several Periods; to which is annexed a Dissertation on the Fall of Man, 8vo. 1738, and several miscellaneous Sermons.—Fam. Serm. by Lardner.

HUNTER (Robert), an English gentleman, who wrote the famous letter on Enthusiasm, which has been ascribed to Swift, and to Shaftsbury. He was governor of New York and the Jerseys several years, and afterwards of Jamaica, where he died in 1734.—Gen. B. D.

HUNTER (William), a celebrated anatomist and physician, was born at Kilbride, in Lanerkshire, in 1718. His father was a farmer, and designed him for the church, but an acquaintance with Dr. Cullen inclining him to the study of physic, he went and resided with the doctor three years. In 1740 he removed to Edinburgh, where he followed his studies with intense application, and the year following visited London, soon after which he was taken by Dr. James Douglas into his house as a dissector and a tutor to his son. In 1746 he succeeded Mr. Samuel Sharpe as lecturer to a society of surgeons in Covent-garden, and the year following he was admitted a member of the corporation of surgeons. In 1750 he obtained his doctor's degree from Glasgow, and entered into an extensive line of practice as a physician, particularly in midwifery. In 1762 he was appointed physician-extraordinary to the queen, and the same year he published his Medical Commentaries. In 1767 he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and furnished the Transactions of that body with many interesting and valuable papers. In 1768 he was appointed professor of anatomy to the royal academy, which office he discharged with great reputation, adapting his anatomical knowledge to the arts of painting and sculpture. In 1781 he succeeded Dr. Fothergill as president of the society of physicians in London, and his name being now universally spread through Europe he was chosen member of several foreign societies. Dr. Hunter formed a splendid anatomical museum in his house in Windmill-street, at an immense expence; after which he extended his collection to natural history, learning and science. He became possessed of a magnificent treasure of Greek and Latin books, a cabinet of ancient medals, and a large stock of shells, corals, and other curious productions. This museum he bequeathed at his death, which happened in 1783, to his nephew Dr. Baillie, and Mr. Cruikshank, for 30 years, after which it is to go to the university of Glasgow. His greatest performance is the Anatomy of the Gravid Uterus, contained in 34 capital plates, and dedicated to the king. After his death appeared Anatomical Description of the Human Gravid Uterus and its Contents, 4to.—Life by Dr. Simmons.

HUNTER (John), younger brother of the preceding, was born in 1728, and brought up to a mechanical employment, of which being disgusted, he solicited his brother to take him as an assistant, which was granted, and in 1748 he removed to London. The year following, by the favour of Mr. Chelfelden, he became a student at Chelsea hospital, where he assiduously studied the rudiments of surgery. He afterwards attended St. Bartholomew's, and in 1756 was appointed house surgeon of St. George's Hospital. About the same time his brother took him as a partner in giving anatomical lectures. He laboured for ten years on human anatomy, and not only made himself master of the science as it then stood, but added to it several important discoveries. He proceeded further in the examination of other animals, which laid the foundation of his collection of comparative anatomy. In 1760 he was appointed an army surgeon, and went in that capacity to Belleisle and Portugal. On his return to England he fixed his residence in London, where he taught anatomy and surgery with the highest reputation. In 1767 he was admitted fellow of the royal society; and the year following his brother resigned to him his house in Jermyn-street. In 1768 he was chosen one of the surgeons of St. George's hospital. In 1771 he married Mi's Home, by whom he had two sons and two daughters. In 1776 he was appointed surgeon-extraordinary to his majesty. His collection having become extremely large, he took a large house in Leicester-square, and erected a building adjoining to it for a museum. He succeeded Mr. Adair in 1790 as inspector-general of hospitals, and surgeon-general of the army. Mr. Hunter dropped and suddenly in St. George's hospital, October 16, 1793. His contributions to the Philosophical Transactions of the royal society were numerous and interesting. His other works are, A treatise on the Natural History of the Human Teeth, 4to.; A treatise on the Venereal Disease, 4to.; Observations on the Animal Economy, 4to.; A treatise on the Blood, Inflammation, and Gun-shot Wounds, 4to.—Hutchinson's Med. Beg.

HUNTER (Henry), an ingenious divine of the church of Scotland, was born at Culrois in Perthshire in 1741. After receiving a school-education he was sent to the university of Edinburgh, where he studied with great reputation, and in 1764 was licensed to preach by the presbytery of Dumfries. In 1766 he was ordained at South Leith, where he continued to officiate till 1771, when he was invited to take upon him the charge of the Scotch church at London-wall. Dr. Hunter was a very general scholar, a sound divine, very liberal in his principles, and an eloquent preacher. He died at Bristol-wells, whither he had gone for his health, in November 1802. His works are, Sacred Biography, or Sermons on the principal Characters recorded in Scripture, 6 vols. 8vo.; 2 vols. of Miscellaneous Sermons; Translations of Lavater's Physiognomy, St. Pierre's Studies of Nature, Saurin's Sermons, &c.—Monthly Mag.

HUNTINGDON (Solina, countess of), was the second daughter of Washington Shirley, earl of Ferrers, and born in 1707. She married Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, in 1791, by whom she had four sons and three daughters. A dangerous illness bringing her into a serious way of thinking, she turned methodist, and during the remainder of her life supported a great number of itinerant preachers, and built several chapels in various parts of the kingdom. Her sentiments were rigidly Calvinistic, and she was the liberal patroness of all of that persuasion. She died in 1791.—Hawick's Church History.

HUNTINGDON (Robert), an English divine, was born at Deerhurst in Gloucestershire, in 1636, and educated at Bristol, from whence he was sent to Marton college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. In 1670 he was appointed chaplain to the factory at Aleppo, where he improved himself in the Oriental languages, and collected many curious manuscripts. In 1684 he returned to England, and the year following took his degree of A.B. At the recommendation of bishop Fell he was chosen master of Trinity college, Dublin, but he quitted Ireland in 1691. In 1701 he was nominated bishop of Raphoe, but lived only twelve days after his consecration. Some of his observations are to be found in Ray's Collection of Voyages and Travels.—Life by Dr. Smith.

HUAR (Charles), a French divine of the Jansenist persuasion, was born in 1689. He studied theology with avidity, and applied to the eastern languages with success. He became principal of the college at Benecourt, and died in 1717. His works are; A Dictionary of the Bible, 2 vols. folio. A Translation of the New Testament into French, with notes. A Sacred Grammar—Nova. Diss. Hist.

HUSS (John), a martyr, was born in Bohemia in 1376, and educated at Prague, where he entered into orders, and became rector of the university, and confessor to the queen. On meeting with some of the writings of Wickliffe he perceived the errors of popery, and by his means a reformation was commenced in the university of Prague, to check which the archbishop issued two decrees, whereby the new doctrines spread the more. The pope then granted a bull for suppressing these errors, and Huss being cited to appear personally at Rome, was excommunicated for disobedience. Notwithstanding this he went on in propagating his principles, and was supported therein by Wenceslaus king of Bohemia, till 1411, when the council of Constance having assembled, Huss was summoned to appear before it. The emperor Sigismund sent him a safe conduct, promising to preserve him in going to and returning from the council; but the members of that assembly, in violation of this pledge, decreed, "that no faith is to be kept with heretics" and as Huss refused to retract his opinions he was degraded, and burnt alive, in July 1415. The various treatises which he wrote were printed together at Nuremberg in 1558.—Roli's Lives of the Reformers. Mssheim.

HUTCHESON (Francis), an ingenious writer, was born in Ireland in 1694. He received his education at Glasgow, after which he became pastor of a dissenting congregation in Dublin, where he also kept an academy with great credit till 1729, when he removed to Glasgow on becoming professor of philosophy. He died in 1747. His works are; An Inquiry into the Ideas of Beauty and Virtue. A treatise on the Passions. A System of Moral Philosophy, 2 vols. 4to.—Gen. Biog. Diss.

HUTCHINS (John), an English divine and topographer, was born in Dorsetshire in 1698, and educated at Balliol college, Oxford. In 1747 he obtained the rectory of Wareham, in his native county, where he died in 1773. He was the author of the History and Antiquities of the County of Dorset, 2 vols. folio, 1774; and since reprinted.—Nichols's Anecdotes of Bowyer.

HORCHINSON (John), an English philosopher, was born at Spennythorn, in Yorkshire, in 1674. He received a liberal education, after which he became steward first to a country gentleman, and next to the duke of Somerset. Having great turn for natural history he made large collection.

of fossils, which he put into the hands of Dr. Woodward, with observations for him to digest and publish. The doctor deceived Hutchinson with fair promises, but never began the work, which induced him to rely on his own pen. He therefore quitted the duke's service, who being at that time master of the horse to the king, made him his riding purveyor. He also gave him the presentation to the living of Sutton in Suffex, which Hutchinson bestowed on his friend Mr. Julius Bate, a zealous defender of his doctrine. In 1754 he published the first part of his Moses's Principia, in which he ridiculed Woodward's Natural History of the Earth. He also attempted in this book to refute Sir Isaac Newton's doctrine of gravitation. In the second part he maintained, in opposition to the Newtonian system, that a plenum and the air are the principles of scripture philosophy. In this work he intimated, that the idea of the Trinity might be taken from the grand agents in the natural system, fire, light, and spirit; which is said to have made an impression on the mind of Dr. Clarke. Mr. Hutchinson was a great admirer of the Hebrew language, and maintained that all its radicals were to be explained by their etymologies, and therefore he totally renounced the masoretical points. By the aid of these etymologies he fancied that he had discovered the true system of natural philosophy in the writings of Moses. For a time his hypotheses occasioned some warm controversy, being supported by several ingenious and pious writers, as Mr. Jones, bishop Horne, Mr. Spearman, and others, but were zealously opposed in the universities. Mr. Hutchinson died in 1787. His works, which are abundantly curious, though obscurely written, have been printed in 12 vols. 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Anecd. of Berogen.

HUTCHINSON (John Hely), an Irish statesman and lawyer, was born in 1716. By great firmness and activity, he gained the places of prime serjeant at law, principal secretary of state, and provost of Trinity college, Dublin. He also accumulated a number of other lucrative employments, and so great was his ambition, that Lord North said, "If England and Ireland were given to this man, he would solicit the Isle of Man for a potatoe garden." He possessed great talents and eloquence, and died in 1794.—Europ. Mag.

HUTTEN (Ulric de), a German writer, was born at Steckelberg, in Franconia, in 1488. He studied at Cologne and Frankfurt on the Oder, where he took the degree of M.A. at the age of eighteen. He then went to Italy, but receiving no supplies from his parents, he enlisted into the army, and served at the siege of Parma. In 1509 he returned to Germany, and was reduced to such poverty as to be obliged to beg his bread. In 1512 he published a Latin poem in praise of the emperor Maximilian, which gained him reputation and friends. The same year he went to Pavia to study the law, but falling again into indigence he entered the army once more. However he soon obtained his discharge, and returned to his native country, where he espoused the doctrines of Luther, and wrote some elegant pieces in Latin. For his epigrams the emperor knighted him, and made him poet laureat. In 1518 he discovered a manuscript of Livy, which he published, as he afterwards did Pliny, Quintilian, and Marcellianus. His writings against the church and court of Rome were so severe, that the pope sent orders to the inquisitor to seize him; but Hutten being apprized of it fled into Switzerland with Erasmus. He died near Zurich in 1522. His letters and poems are very classical.—Bayle.

HUTTEN (Jacob), the founder of a religious sect, called after his name Hutthas, in the 16th century. He was a native of Silesia, and procured a number of followers in the Tyrol, Bavaria, and parts adjacent. They affected peculiar sanctity, pretended to extraordinary visions, and had all things in common. After the death of their founder the sect dispersed.—Moreri. Meisner.

HUTTER (Eliaz), a learned protestant divine, was born at Ulric in 1583, and died at Nuremberg in 1602. He published a Bible in four languages, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and German, 1597; afterwards he added to it the Italian, French, Slavonic, and Saxon. His New Testament in twelve languages, was printed in 1600, but in the edition of 1608 he reduced it to four. This polyglot is very scarce.—Bayle.

HUTTER (Leonard), a learned protestant divine, was born at Ulme in 1563. He became professor of theology at Wittenburg, and afterwards rector of that university, where he died in 1616. His principal work is entitled, Concordia concors, five de origine & progressu formulæ Concordiæ Ecclesiarum Augustanæ Confessionis, &c. Besides this he wrote a number of books against the romanists with great vigour.—Bayle.

HUTTON (Matthew), an English prelate, was born of poor parents in Lancashire in 1529, and sent to Cambridge in 1546. He became fellow of Trinity college, and was appointed Lady Margaret's professor of divinity in that university, and after obtaining a prebend in the cathedral of St. Paul, became master of Pembroke-hall. In 1567 he was preferred to the deanry of York, from which he was removed in 1589 to the bishopric of Durham; and in 1594 translated to the archbishopric of York. He died in 1605.—La New's Lives of the Bishops.

HUTGENS (Constantine), lord of Zutlichem, was born at the Hague in 1596, and died in 1687. He was secretary to the prince of Orange, and president of the council, and is known by 14 books of Latin poems, under the title of Momenta defultoria, consisting of epigrams and miscellaneous pieces.—Bailet, Jugemens des Savans sur les Poetes.

HUYGENS (Christian), an eminent mathematician, was son of the above, and born at the Hague in 1629. He discovered when young a great turn for mathematical science, and as early as 1651 gave a specimen of his abilities in a book entitled Theorematum de quadratura Hyperbolicis, Ellipsis, et Circuli, ex datis portionum gravitatis centro. Not long after he published a treatise on Horology, in which he discovered the model of a new invented pendulum for clocks. In 1659 appeared his System of Saturn, giving an account of the discovery which he had made of a satelike attending that planet. In 1661 he visited England, and was chosen fellow of the royal society. He afterwards resided at Paris, on the invitation of Colbert, who gave him a pension, and he was also admitted a member of the academy of sciences. He retired to his native place, in 1681, and died there in 1695. His Cosmotheoros, or a treatise on the plurality of worlds, was printed the same year, and in 1709 appeared his Opuscula Posthuma, in 1 vol. 4to. All his works have been collected in 6 vols. 4to.—Morri. Hutton.

HUYSUM (Justus van), called the old, an eminent painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1659. He studied under Berchem, and became an excellent painter of flowers, landscapes and battles. He died in 1716.—Pit. Angl.

HUYSUM (John van), son of the preceding, but a better artist, was born at Amsterdam in 1682. His reputation was so great that he fixed immoderate prices to his works. He would never suffer any person so see him while he was painting, so that his method of mixing his colours was an impenetrable secret. His flower pieces are exquisitely beautiful, as also are his landscapes and animals. He died in 1749. He had two brothers who were good painters, Justus and Jacob; the first died at the age of 22, and the latter in 1740, aged 60.—Ibid.

HYDE (Edward), earl of Clarendon, and lord chancellor of England, was born at Dinton in Wiltshire, of an ancient family, in 1608. In 1622 he was admitted of Magdalen hall, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple. In 1640 he was chosen member of parliament for Wotton-Basset, and distinguished himself by his moderation and firm regard to the constitution. He sat in the long parliament for Saltsb, and was appointed to carry up a charge to the lords against the judge Davenport, Weston, and Trevor, on which occasion he made an admirable speech. He was also employed to draw up the articles of impeachment against the earl of Strafford, but disapproving the measures pursued he left the party, opposed the bill of attainder, and when the commons passed an ordinance for raising the militia against the king, he considered it as an act of rebellion, and went to his majesty at York. In 1642 he received the honour of knighthood and the chancellorship of the exchequer. In 1644 he was appointed one of the king's commissioners at the treaty of Uxbridge. When the royal cause was ruined he went to Jersey, and from thence to Paris. In 1649 the exiled king sent him with lord Cottington to the court of Madrid. In 1657 he was made chancellor, which post was continued to him at the restoration, when he was likewise chosen chancellor of the university of Oxford. He was also created a peer, and in 1661 earl of Clarendon. He conducted himself in his high station with great wisdom, moderation, and virtue; but his inflexible integrity procured him many powerful enemies in that dissolute court. The marriage of the duke of York with his daughter was made use of by them to alienate the king's regard from him, but ineffectually. In 1663 the earl of Bristol exhibited charges against him in the house of lords, but they were proved frivolous. The building, however, of Clarendon-house, which was considered as too superb for a subject, and the intrigues of a corrupt cabal, succeeded, and in 1667 he was deprived of his place. He was also impeached of treason and other misdemeanors, on which he withdrew secretly to France; and as soon as his flight was known an act of banishment was passed against him. In 1668, while he was at Evreux, confined to his bed, a party of English seamen broke into his chamber, and dragged him into the yard, where they were about to dispatch him, when their lieutenant arrived and disarmed them. He died at Rouen in 1673, and his remains being brought to England were interred in Westminster abbey. Anne, his eldest daughter, was married to the duke of York, by whom she had two daughters, Mary and Anne, who were successively queens of England. Lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, which is the noblest history in our language, was printed at Oxford in 1704, in folio and 8vo. He also wrote: Animadversions upon Mr. Cressy's book, entitled, Fanaticism fanatically imputed to the Catholic Church, by Dr. Stillingfleet, &c., 8vo. 1672; A Survey of Mr. Hobbes's Leviathan, 4to.; Miscellaneous Tracts, collected and printed in one volume folio; An Account of his own Life, printed in 1759.—Biog. Brit. Lives of the Chancellors.

HYDE (Henry), earl of Clarendon, the son of the above, was born in 1638. He assisted in bringing about the restoration, after which he was made chamberlain to the queen's household. The persecution experienced by his father led him to join in opposition to the court, but in 1680 he was made a privy-counsellor. James II. appointed him lord lieutenant of Ireland, but he was recalled soon afterwards to make room for lord Tyrconnel. For refusing the oaths to king William he was confined some time in the Tower, and on his release retired to the country, where he died in 1709. His State Letters and Diary were printed at Oxford, in 2 vols. 4to., 1763.—Biog. Brit.

HYDE (Lawrence), second son of the chancellor, was early employed in public affairs, and in 1661 made master of the robes to the king. In 1676 he was sent ambassador to Poland, from whence he went to Nimeguen as plenipotentiary at the settling of the peace. In 1679 he was appointed first commissioner of the treasury. He opposed the bill for excluding the duke of York from the succession, and in 1681 was created viscount Hyde, and shortly after earl of Rochester. In 1684 he was made president of the council, lord treasurer, and the year after knight of the garter. He was much pressed by James II. to change his religion, but refused, on which he was displaced. He became a member of the ecclesiastical commission, but concurred in the revolution, and in 1700 was made lord lieutenant of Ireland. In the reign of queen Anne he was appointed again president of the council. He died in 1711. His lordship wrote the dedication of his father's History of the Rebellion.—Memoirs of Illustrious Persons who died in 1711.

HYDE (Thomas), a learned divine, was born at Billingsley in Shropshire, in 1636, and educated at first under his father, who was a minister, and then removed to King's college, Cambridge, where he applied to the study of the oriental languages. Dr. Walton employed him in his great work, the Polyglot Bible, and in the preface gratefully acknowledged his assistance. In 1658 he was admitted of Queen's college, Oxford, where he was honoured with the degree of M. A. and made under keeper of the Bodleian library. In 1665 he translated from the Persian into Latin, Ulugh Beg's Observations on the Longitude and Latitude of the fixed Stars, with notes; and soon after he obtained a prebend in the church of Salisbury. In 1678 the archdeaconry of Gloucester was conferred on him; in 1682 he took his degree of D. D. In 1691 he was chosen Arabic professor. In 1700 appeared his great work, universally known and admired, entitled, Historia Religionis Veterum Perfarum, eorumque Magorum, &c., 4to. Besides the above preferments he was made regius professor of Hebrew, and canon of Christ Church. Dr. Hyde died at Oxford in 1703.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

HYDER-ALLY-KHAN, a celebrated Indian chieftain, was born in 1728 at Divanelli in the Myfore country. His father was a general, under whom he served, and on his death in 1751 he joined his brother, who had allied with the French. He succeeded his brother as generalissimo of the king of Myfore's armies, and distinguished himself in a number of daring exploits, for which he was raised to the princely rank of suba of Servia. He carried on a successful war against the Mahrattas many years, and even threatened the annihilation of the English settlements in India. A treaty was concluded in 1769, which was broken in 1780, and the war renewed with vigour; but the skill of sir Eyre Coote proved superior to Hyder, who left the military operations to his son Tippeo Saib. He died in 1782.—Europ. Mag.

HYGINUS (Cains Julius), an old Latin writer, who was a native of Spain, and a freedman of Augustus. He wrote many books, but the only one extant is his Poeticon Astronomicum, published at Amsterdam in 1681, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Vossius de Hist. Lat.

HYGINUS, a pope and saint of the Roman calendar, succeeded Telephorus in 168, and was martyred in 156. He had been a philosopher at Athens. There are two decretals under his name, but they are not genuine.—Moreri.

HYLL (Albayn), a physician of the 16th century, was according to some a Welshman, and to others a native of Scotland. He studied, however, at the university of Oxford, after which he went abroad and took his doctor's degree. He died in London in 1559. He wrote several pieces upon the works of Galen.—Wood.

HYPATIA, an illustrious female, was the daughter of Theon, an eminent philosopher at Alexandria, whom she succeeded in the government of that school, and had a number of disciples. Synesius in particular, who afterwards became a christian bishop, has celebrated her praises in the most lively terms of gratitude. Orestes, the governor of Alexandria, had a high respect for Hypatia, being himself a man of great talents, and he frequently consulted her on matters of importance. Between the governor and Cyril the patriarch there was a bitter enmity, which at last broke out into open war, and the monks siding with their chief, assembled in a riotous manner against Orestes, who was obliged to fly from the city. They then seized Hypatia, and hanged torn her in pieces, they burnt her mangled limbs to ashes. This happened A. D. 415. She wrote a Commentary on Diophantus, and other works, which are now lost.—Synesius Epist. Socrates Hist. Eccl.

HYPERIDES, an Athenian orator, who was a disciple of Plato and Isocrates about 335 B. C. Though he was the intimate friend of Demosthenes, he accused him of bribery, for which that great man was banished. Hyperides was put to death by Antipater about 322.—Plutarch.

HYPERIUS (Andrew Gerard), a learned divine of Ypres in Flanders. He received his education in France, but having embraced the principles of the reformation he was obliged to quit that country; on which he came to England, and afterwards settled as divinity professor at Marburg, where he died in 1564. His works on philosophy, mathematics, and theology, make 7 vols. in folio.—Boyle. Melch. Adam.

HYPERCLES of Alexandria, an ancient mathematician, who flourished under M. Aurelius and L. Verus. There is ascribed to him a work, entitled, Anaphoricus, or a Book of Ascensions, printed in Greek and Latin at Paris, in 1680.—Vossius.

HYRCANUS (John), high priest and prince of the Jews, succeeded his father Simon Maccabæus, who was murdered by his son-in-law Ptolemy. This traitor then invited Antiochus into Judæa, and that monarch accordingly laid siege to Jerusalem, which held out against all his attempts. At length a peace was concluded on condition of the Jews becoming tributary to Antiochus, after whose death Hyrcanus restored his country to independence. He died 106

B. C. He was succeeded by his son, Hyrcanus II, who died B. C. 30.—Josephus.

HYWEL ab Owain Gwynedd, a prince of North Wales, some of whose poems are in the Welsh Archaeology. On the death of his father, in 1169, he endeavoured to ascend the throne in preference to his brothers, but was defeated and wounded, on which he went to Ireland, where he died in 1171.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

HYWEL ab Morgan Mawr, prince of Glamorgan in 1030. He died in 1043, at the extraordinary age of 130 years. He is represented as having been one of the wisest and best of British princes. In this line we have the following instances of longevity: Morgan Mawr, aged 129; Hywel ab Rhys, 124; and Arthvael ab Rhys, 120.—Ibid.

HYWEL Dda, or Howel the Good, a celebrated prince and legislator of Wales, who died in 948. He went to Rome on purpose to revise the code of laws for the government of his country.—Ibid.

I.

IMBELIENUS, king of Arabia, who was deprived of his estates by Augustus after the battle of Actium, for supporting the cause of Mark Antony; but his son was restored to the throne by the same emperor B. C. 82.—Moreri.

IMBELICHUS, a Greek author and a musician by profession, who lived in the second century under Marcus Aurelius. He was the author of some works in Greek, and, among others, one entitled Babylonicus, in the library of the Escorial in Spain, and of which Leo Allatius has published a fragment.—Photius in Biblioth. Vossius de Hist. Grec.

IMBELIONUS, a Platonic philosopher, was a native of Chalcis in Syria, and studied under Porphyry. He gained many disciples by his eloquence and probity. He died in the reign of Constantine.—Eunapius in Vit. Sophist.

IMBELICHUS, a Greek author, was a native of Apamea in Syria, and flourished in the reign of Julian, by whom he was greatly esteemed. He was poisoned under Valens A. D. 363. He was the author of the Life of Pythagoras; an Exhortation to Philosophy; and of a piece against Porphyry's Letter on the Egyptian Mysteries.—Ibid. Moreri.

IDARRA (Joachim), printer to the king of Spain, was a native of Saragossa, and died in 1785, aged 60. He carried the typographic art to a degree of perfection which had been unknown in that country. His presses produced fine editions of the Bible, the Mozarabic Missal, Mariana's History of Spain, Don Quixote, and Gabriel's Spanish translation of Sallust. He invented a superior kind of printing ink.—Mon. Diet. Hist.

IBAS, bishop of Edessa in the fifth century. He was at first a nestorian, but afterwards quitted that persuasion and became orthodox. In the council of Ephesus in 449 he was deposed and banished, but that of Chalcedon in 451 restored him to his dignity.—Dupin. Moreri.

ISSOT (Benjamin), an English divine, was born at Beachamwell in Norfolk, in 1680, and educated at Clare hall, Cambridge, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi college, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1708 archbishop Tenison appointed him treasurer of the cathedral of Wells, and George I. made him one of his chaplains in ordinary; and when that monarch visited Cambridge, he was created D. D. by mandamus. In 1713 and 1714 he preached the Boyle's lecture sermons. In 1724 he was installed prebendary of Westminster, but died the year following. His posthumous works were published by Dr. Clarke, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

IBEK (Cotheddin Ibek), the slave of Schahabeddin, sultan of India, on whose death he usurped the throne, and added to his dominions many provinces of Hindostan. An account of his conquests was written in a volume, entitled, Tage al Masher.—D'Herbelot.

IBEK (Azzeddin Ibek, or Ibeg), first sultan of the Mameluke Turks in Egypt. He was an officer in the court of Malek Al Saleh, sultan of Egypt, on whose death he married his widow, and became partner with her in the throne; but she caused him to be assassinated six years afterwards, A. D. 1257.—Ibid.

IBEK, an Arabian author, who wrote a book on the duties and qualifications of a secretary. He died in 1348.—Ibid.

ISRAHAM, the son of Valid, the third caliph of the race of Omniades, succeeded his brother Jezid A. D. 748; but Marwan, governor of Mesopotamia, revolted against him, took Damascus, and reduced him to a private life two years afterwards. One author says, that he was slain three months after his being deposed.—D'Herbelot.

ISRAHIM IMAM, the chief priest of the Mohammedan religion, was a descendant of the illustrious house of the Abbassides. His reputation and authority were so great that Marwan or Hemar, the last caliph of the Omniades, caused him to be put to death by thrusting his head into a bag of lime A. D. 748.—Ibid.

ISRAHIM, the son of Massoud, eighth caliph of the dynasty of Gansavides, succeeded his brother Ferokkzad. He acquired a great reputation as a just and pious prince, notwithstanding the frequent wars which he made on the borders of Hindostan, in which he gained such great advantages as to acquire the name of the Conqueror. He reigned 42 years, and died in 1098. Ibrahim erected a number of cities, mosques, and hospitals, and he was a liberal encourager of arts and letters.—Ibid.

ISRAHIM, the son of the caliph Mahadi, brother of Haroun Raschid, and uncle of Amin and Mamun. He was an excellent poet and musician, and passed also for the first orator of his time. He was proclaimed caliph at Bagdad, on the death of his nephew Amin, in 617; but Mamun marching from Khorassan to Bagdad with a powerful army, Ibrahim thought it prudent to abdicate the throne. He died at Samara in 839.—Ibid.

ISRAHIM of Schiraz, a mussulman doctor of law, who wrote several works in Arabic on jurisprudence. There was another of the same name, whose surname was Merouzi, some of whose works are extant.—Ibid.

ISRAHIM, emperor of the Turks, was the son of Achmet, and succeeded his brother Achmet IV. in 1640. He besieged and took the capital of Candia in 1644, but his cruelties and debaucheries were so great that the soldiers mutinied and strangled him in 1649.—Moreri.

ISRAHIM EFFENDI, a native of Poland, who was raised by his courage and talents to the first dignities in the Ottoman empire. He established the first printing-press in Turkey in 1728. The count de Bonneval furnished him with the characters. The first work which he produced was on the military art; he afterwards published the Account of an Expedition against the Afghans, a Turkish Grammar, and a History of Turkey.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

IBYCUS, a Greek lyric poet, who flourished about 540 B. C. He was murdered by some robbers, and in the moment of dying he observed some cranes flying over his head, whom he implored to be his avengers. Some time after, these murderers walking in Rhægium, seeing some cranes in the air, one of them said to his companions, "these are the witnesses of the death of Ibycus." These words being overheard excited some suspicion; the wretches were apprehended, and being tortured, confessed their crime, for which they were put to death.—Pliny.

IDACUS, a Spanish bishop of the fifth century, who wrote a chronicle commencing with the first year of the reign of Theodosius, and ending with the 11th of that of Leo. The Consular Fests are also attributed to him. His works were published by Sirmond, in 1619, 8vo., at Paris.—Moreri.

IDRIS GAWA, a Welsh astronomer, who is ranked with Gwion ab Don and Gwyn ab Nudd, as the three great astronomers of Britain. A high mountain in Wales is still called Cader Idris, or the Seat of Idris. When he flourished is unknown.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

IGNATIUS (St.), an eminent father of the church and martyr, was a native of Syria, and a disciple of St. John the Evangelist, by whom he was made bishop of Antioch A. D. 68. After discharging the episcopal duties with great zeal 40 years, the emperor Trajan coming to Antioch in his Parthian expedition, hearing of his virtues, sent for him, and endeavoured to prevail on him to renounce his religion. Ignatius continued inflexible, on which the emperor sent him with a guard of soldiers to Rome, where he was exposed to the wild beasts in the amphitheatre, for the amusement of the Roman people. The holy martyr heard his sentence with joy, and endured his sufferings with fortitude. Two pious deacons of his church gathered up his bones which remained, and conveyed them to Antioch, where they were carefully preserved. Seven of his genuine epistles remain, and were published by Usher at Oxford in 1645. The best edition is that of 1708. There are some others which go under his name, but they are generally accounted spurious, though Whiston endeavoured to prove that they were the true, and that the others were either forgeries or abridgments.—Cave. Du Pin. Pearson Vind. Ignat.

IGNATIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, was the son of the emperor Michael Carolpalata, and of Procopia, daughter of the emperor Nicephorus. When his father was deposed by Leo the Armenian, he and his brother were thrown into a monastery and made eunuchs. Ignatius, whose former name was Nicetas, took the religious habit, and in 847 was raised to the patriarchate; but having rebuked Bardas, one of the principal lords of the court, for incest, he procured his banishment to the isle of Terebinthus, and Photius to be appointed in his place. A council was called at Constantinople to compel Ignatius to resign, which he refused for some time, but close confinement and rigorous usage induced him at last to yield. On the advancement of Basil to the empire he was restored, and immediately excommunicated Photius, and pro-presided the 8th general council to be called at Constantinople. He died in 878.—Dapin.

IGNATIUS. See LOYOLA.

IOON, sovereign of Russia, succeeded his father Rurick; and after making war a long time on his neighbours he succeeded to ravage the East, deluging with blood Pontus, Paphlagonia, and Bithynia. He died in 945, leaving the throne to his wife Alga, who in her old age embraced christianity.—Univ. Hist.

ILDEPONSE (St.), a Spanish bishop in the seventh century, was the disciple of St. Isidore of Seville, after whose death he went to Toledo, where he became abbot of a monastery, and on the death of Eugenius the bishop he was elected to succeed him. He governed the church nine years, and died in 667, aged 62. He wrote an account of ecclesiastical writers, and other works.—Dapin.

ILVE (Jacob), an English printer and letter-founder, who published some strange pieces, as a pretended translation of the book of Jasher, an oration proving that this world is hell, that men are fallen spirits, and that the fire to destroy them at the day of judgment will be immaterial, &c. He died in 1769.—Anecd. of Brwyer.

ILLESCAS (Gonsalvo), a Spanish ecclesiastic and historian, who died in 1580. He wrote the History of the Catholic Pontifical, containing the lives of the popes, in Spanish, 2 vols. folio, 1570. This work was continued by Louis de Babia to 1606, and Mark de Guadaluza, a carmelite, added another volume.—Nicolas Antonio. Biblioth. Hisp.

ILLTYD VARCHBO, or Iltutus the Knight, a saint who accompanied Garmon to Britain, and was placed at the head of the congregation of Theodosius, so called from being established by that emperor. He introduced an improved method of ploughing land among the Welsh, and died about A.D. 460.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

ILLYRIUS (Matthias Flaccus), a lutheran divine, was born at Albona in Istria, in 1590; and educated at Venice, where he acquired a great knowledge of Greek and Hebrew. Having embraced the doctrines of the reformation he went to Wittemberg, and prosecuted his studies under Luther and Melancthon. He had a share in the Centurie Magdeburgenses, and wrote besides several learned works. He died in 1575.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Germ. Theol.

IMBERT (Bartholomew), a French poet, was born at Nîmes in 1747. He became a member of the academy in his native city, and cultivated literature, particularly poetry, with success. His poem on the judgment of Paris has been much admired. He also published a volume of fables, which, though excellent, cannot be compared to Fontaine's. He was likewise the author of an agreeable novel, entitled, les Egaremens de l'amour, and some other pieces. He died of a malignant fever in 1790.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

IMBERT (John), an advocate, born at Rochelle, and died at the close of the 16th century. He published Enchiridion juris scripti Gallie, 4to., 1559; Institutiones Penales, 8vo., 1541.—Nouv. Dict.

IMBERT (Joseph Gabriel), a French painter, was born at Marseilles, and instructed by Vander Meulen and le Brun. At the age of 34 he entered into the order of St. Bruno, but still continued painting. He died in 1740, aged 83.—Ibid.

IMMORF (James William), a celebrated genealogist, was born of a noble family at Nuenburgh, in 1651, and died in 1723. He published, 1. De Notitia Procerum Germanie, 2 vol. fol.; 2. Historia Genealogica Italiae et Hispaniae; 3. Familiarum Italiae, Hispaniae, Galliae et Portugalliae, all in folio; 4. Magna Britanniae cum appendice, 2 vols. fol.; 5. Recherches sur les Grandes d'Espagne, 8vo.—Moreri. Nouv. Dict.

IMPERIALI (John Baptist), an Italian physician, was born at Vicenza in 1568 of a noble family. He studied at Verona and Bologna, and became professor of philosophy and physic at Padua. He died at Vicenza in 1623. He published a volume, entitled, Exoticarum Exercitationum, Venet. 1603.—Ibid.

IMPERIALI (John), the son of the above, was also a famous physician. He was born in 1602, and died in 1653. His works are, 1. Museum Historicum; 2. Museum Physicum, five de humano ingenio, Venet. 1640.—Ibid.

IMPERIALI (Joseph Renatus), a Roman cardinal, who was a great encourager of learning, and collected one of the first libraries in Europe. In 1730 he was a candidate for the pontificate, and lost the election by one vote. He died in 1737, aged 86. A description of his library was printed at Rome in 1711 in folio.—Ibid.

INA, king of the West Saxons, acquired fame by his expeditions against the neighbouring princes. In 736 he went on a pilgrimage to Rome, where he erected an English college, which he endowed by a yearly tax on his kingdom, called Romefest, and afterwards Peterpence.—Brak. Rusp.

INACHUS, founder of the kingdom of Argos, B.C. 1858. Josephus and other ancient historians make him contemporary with Moses, but Eusebius places his reign 346 years before the Exodus of the Israelites.—Petavius. Moreri.

INCHOFER (Melchior), a German jesuit, was born at Vienna in 1584. He at first studied the law, but quitted that profession and entered among the jesuits at Rome in 1607. He wrote a book, entitled, The Virgin Mary's Letter to the People of Messina proved to be genuine, folio, 1650. He died at Milan in 1648. Having received some injuries from his brethren, he wrote a satire against them, which was printed after his death under the title of Monarchia fopliorum. He also wrote the Ecclesiastical History of Hungary, &c.—Pedovius. Moreri.

INDULPHUS, the seventy-seventh king of Scotland, began his reign A.D. 959. The first seven years of his reign were peaceable, but afterwards his kingdom was invaded several times by the Danes, who were enraged against him for making an alliance with the English. Having landed in the north in great force, Indulphus marched against them, and compelled them to fly to their ships, but pushing too eagerly he was slain by an arrow from one of the vessels.—Buchanan.

INGEN (William van), an historical painter, was born at Utrecht in 1651. After being the disciple of Anthony Grebber, he went and studied in Italy; and on his return to his native country, settled at Amsterdam. His works are held in great esteem.—Heubraeken.

INGENHOUSZ (John), an eminent physician and chemist, was born at Breda in 1730. He came early to England, and having learnt the Suttonian method of inoculation, went to Vienna on the recommendation of sir John Pringle, to the emperor Joseph II. whose daughter he inoculated, for which he was made imperial physician and obtained a pension. He was a fellow of the royal society, and died in 1799. Dr. Ingenhousz published, 1. Experiments upon Vegetables, 8vo.; 2. A translation into Latin of Hume's Treatise on the Stone, Scurvy, and Gout; 3. Several Chemical Treatises on Impregnating Water, &c. with Fixed Air; 4. Papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Gent. Mag.

INGOULT (Nicholas-Louis), a French jesuit, was born at Gisors, and died in 1759, aged 64. He was an eloquent preacher, and published the 8th volume of the Memoirs of the Missions of the Society of Jesus in the Levant. Some of his sermons are also in print.—Nouv. Dict.

INGRAM (Robert), an English divine, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Beverley school, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow, and took there his degrees in arts. His first preferment was the perpetual curacy of Bridhurst in Kent, after which he obtained successively, the small vicarage of Orston in Nottinghamshire, and the vicarages of Wormington and Boxted in Essex. He died in 1804. Mr. Ingram wrote, 1. A View of the Great Events of the Seventh Plague, or Period when the Mystery of God shall be finished, Rev. x. 7; which concludes and adds confirmation to an Explanation of the Seven Last Plagues, Rev. xv. xvi. lately offered to the public, 1785; 2. Accounts of the Ten Tribes of Israel being in America, originally published by Menasseh Ben Israel; with observations thereon, &c. 1792;

3. A Complete and Uniform Explanation of the Prophecy of the Seven Vials of Wrath, or the Seven Last Plagues, &c. 1804.—Monthly Mag.

INGRAMMA (John Philip), a physician of Palermo, who delivered his country in 1755 from the fury of the plague. He wrote Veterinaria Medicina, Venice 1568, and other works. He died in 1581, aged 70.—Nouv. Dict.

INGUIMBERT (Dominic Joseph Maria d'), bishop of Charpentras, was born in that city in 1683. He became first a member of the order of Dominicans, which he quitted for that of the Cistercians. Pope Clement XII. gave him his bishopric in 1733, and in that situation he conducted himself in a most exemplary manner, employing all his wealth to serve the public, or to relieve the poor. He built a large hospital, and erected a magnificent library for public benefit. This worthy prelate died in 1757. He published some pieces on a monastic life, and other treatises on religious subjects.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

INGULFUS, abbot of Croyland in the 15th century, was in great favour with William the Conqueror, to whom he was secretary. He rebuilt his monastery, and obtained for it many privileges. He died in 1109. There is extant by him a History of Croyland Abbey, from 664 to 1091, published by Saville in 1596, and at Oxford in 1684.—Pitts. Bale.

INNOCENT I. pope, was a native of Albany, and elected to the pontifical chair in 402. He condemned the Novatians and Pelagians, and died at Ravenna in 417. Some of his epistles are extant.

INNOCENT II. ascended the throne in 1130. He was elected by a part of the conclave, the rest choosing Peter de Leon, the son of a Jew, who took the name of Anacletus II. and was acknowledged by the kings of Scotland and Sicily, but Innocent was received by the other princes of Europe. Being driven from Italy he fled to France, where he held several councils. On the death of his rival and the abdication of his successor Victor IV. he returned to Rome, and held the second Lateran council in 1139. He died in 1144.

INNOCENT III. was called Lothario Conti, and born of a noble family at Anagni in 1161. On account of his learning he was made a cardinal, and in 1198 elected pope. He encouraged the crusades to the holy land, prosecuted one against the Albigenses, laid the kingdom of France under interdict, and excommunicated John king of England. He greatly extended his temporal dominions, and carried the papal authority to a high pitch. He died in 1226. His works were printed at Cologne in 1515.

INNOCENT IV. was a Genoese, and became chancellor of the Roman church. Gregory IX. honoured him with the purple in 1227. He succeeded Celestine IV. in 1243, at which time the court of Rome was engaged in a contest with the emperor Frederic II. Innocent was obliged to retire to France, where he held the council of Lyons, in which Frederic was excommunicated. The pope died at Naples in 1254. He is said to have been the first who gave red hats to the cardinals.

INNOCENT V. a dominican, became archbishop of Lyons, cardinal, and lastly pope in 1276, but died a few months after his election. Some religious pieces of his have been printed.

INNOCENT VI. cardinal bishop of Ostia, was born in France, and advanced to the papacy in 1352. He was a man of great learning and liberality, and died in 1362. Some of his letters are extant.

INNOCENT VII. born at Abruzzo, was elected pope in 1404, but not without great opposition. He died in 1406.

INNOCENT VIII. a noble Genoese of Greek extraction, obtained the tiara in 1484. He endeavoured to procure another crusade, but without success. He died of an apoplexy in 1492, aged 60.

INNOCENT IX. was born at Bologna in 1519, and ascended the papal throne in 1591, but died two months afterwards. He distinguished himself at the council of Trent, and was made cardinal by Gregory XIII.

INNOCENT X. (John Baptist Pamphilus), a Roman, succeeded Urban VIII. in 1644 at the age of 72. He condemned the doctrines of Jansenius, and prosecuted the Barberini family with great violence. He died in 1655.

INNOCENT XI. was born at Como in the duchy of Milan in 1611. Innocent X. gave him a cardinal's hat, and a bishopric. He was elected pope in 1676, and reformed many abuses in the ecclesiastical state. He had a long contest with Louis XIV. of France about the right of disposing of benefices and church lands, which was claimed by that monarch, and confirmed to him by an assembly of his clergy, which had nearly terminated in a separation of the Gallican church from the Roman communion. This pope effected a coalition between Germany, Poland, and Venice, against the Turks, and died in 1689.

INNOCENT XII. (Antony Pignatelli), a Neapolitan of a noble family, who succeeded Alexander VIII. in 1691. He abolished the extraordinary distinctions paid to the nephews of popes, and condemned the Maxims of the Saints, written by Fenelon, archbishop of Cambray. He died in 1700, aged 85.

INNOCENT XIII. (Michael Angelo Conti), a Roman, and the eighth pope of his family, was elected to the papal chair in 1721, and died in 1724, aged 69. He gave a pension to the grandson of James II. and is said to have died of chagrin for having been persuaded to bestow a cardinal's hat on Dubois.—Platina. Bower. Mereri.

INQUISITOR (Henry), a German Dominican, and inquisitor-general of Mayence, Treves, and Cologne. He and his colleague James Springer composed a work, entitled, Maleficus Maleficium, printed at Lyons in 1484, and several times afterwards. He also wrote a book on monarchy, and another against errors on the sacrament.—Mereri.

INTAPHERNES, one of the seven lords of Persia, who conspired to dethrone Smerdis, the usurper, in 521 B. C. He afterwards endeavoured to seize the crown, for which Darius condemned him to death with all his family. The wife of Intaphernes presented herself before Darius in a suppliant posture, and not only obtained a pardon for herself, but for any one of her relations that she should fix upon. She chose her brother, saying she might have another husband and other children, but that, as her father and mother were dead, she could not have another brother. On this Darius pardoned her brother and son, but Intaphernes was executed.—Herodotus.

INTERIAM DE AYALA (John), a Spanish monk of the order of mercy, who died at Madrid in 1770, aged 74. He is known by a remarkable work on the errors of painters in representing religious subjects: it is entitled Pictor Christianus eruditus, folio, 1720. He also wrote some poems.—Nova. Diss. Hist.

INVEGES (Augustina), a Sicilian jesuit and historian, was born in 1593, and died at Palermo in 1677. He wrote the History of Palermo, 3 vols. folio, 1640; 2. Historia Paradisi terrestris, 4to, 1641; 3. La Cartagine Siciliana, 1651, 4to.

IULO GOCH, a Welsh bard, who flourished from A.D. 1370 to 1420. He lived with Owen Glendower, who employed him to compose warlike songs to rouse his countrymen against the English.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

IRAIL (Augustin-Simon), a French ecclesiastic, born at Puy in Valay in 1719, and died in 1794. He wrote a tragedy called the Triumph of Heroism; Memoirs for a History of the Revolutions of the Republic of Letters, 4 vols. 12mo; and a History of the Re-union of Brittany to France, 2 vols. 12mo.—Nova. Diss.

IRELAND. The original inhabitants of this island were probably Britons. In 795 the Danes seized a part of it, and were never completely subdued till the English took possession; till which period it was generally divided into a number of petty sovereignties. The first settlements of the English were made in 1169, by private adventurers, but under the sanction of Henry II. who in 1172 conquered the whole country. In 1514 the Scots excited a rebellion in Ireland, and in 1515 Edward Bruce, king of Scotland, expelled the English from almost all the places they held there, and was proclaimed king of Ireland, but the Scots were driven out in 1518. There were still, however, frequent rebellions of the natives, so that the English did not thoroughly establish their power till 1614. The Irish Catholics revolted again in 1641, and committed a dreadful massacre of the Protestants; but they were reduced by Cromwell in 1653. In 1798 another rebellion broke out there, which was not suppressed without much bloodshed. In 1800 an act of parliament was passed, by which that kingdom was united to Great Britain.—Ireland's Hist. Ireland.

IRENEUS (St.), bishop of Lyons, was a native of Greece, and the disciple of Polycarp, by whom it is supposed he was sent into Gaul in 157. He was at first a priest in the church of Lyons, and on the martyrdom of Pothemius succeeded him in the bishopric in 177. He had a disputation with Valentinus at Rome, and held a council at Lyons in which the Gnostic heresy was condemned. Yet Irenæus was a great lover of peace, and laboured much to allay the controversy which raged with great violence respecting the time of celebrating Easter. He was beheaded at Lyons in the persecution under Severus, in 202. His books on heresies were edited by Grabe at Oxford, in 1702, folio, and all his works by Maffuet, at Paris, 1710, folio.—Dupin. Gova.

IRENE, empress of Constantinople, the wife of Leo IV. after whose death she was acknowledged sovereign in conjunction with her son Constantine V. She displayed great talents, but committed some atrocious murders on the relations of her husband, and at last put her own son to death. The people, irritated by her conduct, placed Nicephorus on the throne, who banished her to Lesbos, where she died in 803.—Moreri.

IRETON (Henry), a republican general, who distinguished himself in the great rebellion by his valour and conduct on the side of parliament. He was appointed to command in Ireland, where he died at the siege of Limerick in 1671. His body was conveyed to England and interred in Westminster abbey, but at the restoration it was taken up and hung at Tyburn, with those of Cromwell and Bradshaw. He had by his wife Bridget, eldest daughter of Oliver Cromwell, a daughter named also Bridget, who married Thomas Bendish, esq.—Granger. Clarendon.

IREVISA (John), a native of Cornwall, who was vicar of Berkeley in Gloucestershire in the 14th century. He translated the Polychronicon, by the direction of Thomas lord Berkeley, in 1387.—Gen. B. D.

IRENEUS or WRITREUS, a German Christian of the 19th century. He became a professor at Ravenna, and afterwards at Bologna, where he died about 1150. He is said to have introduced the degree of doctor into universities. He is also called the father of glossators.—Boyle.

IRONSIDE (Gilbert), an English prelate, was born at Hawkbury in Oxfordshire, in 1588, and educated at Trinity college, Oxford, and on entering into orders, obtained the rectory of Winterbourn in Dorsetshire. At the restoration he was made bishop of Bristol, where he died in 1671. He wrote Seven Questions of the Sabbath, 4to, and a Sermon, 1608.—Wood.

ISAAC, the son of Abraham and Sarah, was born 1896 B. C. His father being commanded to offer him up as a sacrifice, was about to obey the divine command on Mount Moriah, when an angel stopped him. Isaac had two sons, Esau and Jacob; the eldest of whom became the father of the Edomites, and the other of the Israelites. He died 1716 B. C.—S. S.

ISAAC (Comnenus), a Greek emperor, was proclaimed in 1057 in the room of Michael Stratioticus, who was deposed. His reign was marked by valour and prudence till he meddled with the property and persons of the ecclesiastics, who excited a general discontent against him. He then retired to a monastery, after ceding the crown to Constantine Ducas in 1059. He died two years after.—Moreri.

ISAAC (Angelus), a Greek emperor, obtained the crown after putting to death Andronicus Comnenus in 1185. He was a voluptuous prince, and his brother Alexius having gained over his officers, seized the throne, and threw him into prison, where he was deprived of his eyes in 1185. After the death of Alexius he was released from confinement, and placed again on the throne. He died in 1204.—Ibid.

ISAAC KARO, a Spanish rabbi, who was forced to quit Spain in consequence of the edict of Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492, which compelled the Jews to leave that country within four months, or turn Christians. He first went to Portugal, and from thence to Jerusalem, where he led a retired life. He wrote a Commentary on the Pentateuch, printed at Amsterdam in 1708.—Bushage's Hist. of the Jews.

ISAACSON (Henry), a learned chronologer, was born in London in 1581. He became secretary to the learned bishop Andrews, and died in 1654. He compiled a large work on Chronology, in folio.—Wood.

ISABELLA of Arragon, was the daughter of Alphonso, duke of Calabria, the son of Ferdinand, king of Naples. In 1489 she was espoused to John Galeazzo Sforza, then a minor under the guardianship of his uncle Lewis Stofza, who on first seeing Isabella fell in love with her. The lovers having been married only by proxy, Lewis contrived various means to keep them asunder, and declared his passion to Isabella, who repulsed him with scorn, and exhorted her husband to shake off his uncle's yoke. The love of Lewis turned into hatred, and he married Alphonssia, daughter to the duke of Ferrara, a woman of an ambitious and intriguing spirit, and by their contrivance John Galeazzo was poisoned. Lewis then assumed the sovereignty, and Isabella sought refuge at Naples, which not long after was taken by the French, and she had to lament the loss of all her family. She then retired to a small town in the kingdom of Naples, which had been assigned her for a dower, and died in 1594. Her daughter was married to Sigismund, king of Poland.—Bayle.

ISABELLA of Castile, queen of Spain, was the daughter of John II. and married Ferdinand V. king of Arragon. The conquest of Grenada, and the discovery of America by Columbus, distinguished their reign. She was a woman of great abilities, and died in 1504.—Moreri.

ISABELLA, daughter of Philip the fair, king of France, was married in 1308 to Edward, prince of Wales, afterwards Edward II. She was a woman of licentious manners, and after various adventures was imprisoned by her son Edward III. in the castle of Rising, where she died after a confinement of 28 years.—Rapin.

ISABELLA, queen of Hungary, was the sister of Sigismund Augustus, king of Poland, and in 1589 married John Zapolita, warlord of Transylvania, who was elected king of Hungary in 1596. In 1540 she was delivered of a son while her husband was besieging the castle of Fogarzas, and he was so transported at the news that he gave a splendid feast to his troops, and died of intemperance on the occasion. Isabella, unable to cope with the forces of Ferdinand of Austria, with whom her husband had engaged in war, called to her aid Solymán, sultan of the Turks, who treacherously seized the capital of her dominions, and obliged her to retire to Transylvania, which country she was afterwards forced to yield to Ferdinand. She was then obliged to retreat to Cassovia, and on the road wrote the following Latin words on a tree, se fata voluit, "so fate decrees." In 1556 she recovered Transylvania, but when her son came to years of maturity she refused to admit him to a share in the government. She died in 1558.—Bayle.

ISAEUS, a Greek orator, was born at Otaletis in the isle of Euboea. He was the disciple of Lyfias, and preceptor of Demosthenes, at Athens, where he kept a famous school of eloquence. We have only ten of his orations remaining, which were translated into English by Sir William Jones in 1730. There was another Greek orator of this name, who went to Rome about A. D. 97. The younger Pliny speaks highly of his powers.—Plutarch.

ISAIAH, the principal of the four great prophets, was the son of Amos, of the royal family of David. He prophesied in the reigns of Ozias, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, from 735 to 681 B. C. in which last year Manasseh is said to have caused him to be cut in two with a wooden saw. He is called the evangelical prophet, from the clear and constant view he has taken of the Messiah throughout his predictions, which are composed in a style truly sublime.—Gray's Key to O. T.

ISOKERDES, king of Persia, succeeded his uncle Sapor, whose virtues he did not imitate. He was debauched, cruel, and avaricious. He made war on the eastern emperors who refused to pay him tribute, and obliged Theodosius the younger to make peace. He persecuted the christians with great severity, and died, as is said, by the kick of a horse in 420.—Univ. Hist.

ISZLIN (James Christopher), a learned writer, was born at Basil in 1681. He became professor of history and antiquities in that university, and died there in 1737. He wrote, 1. De Gallis Rheum transcaucibus Carmen heroicum; 2. De Historicis Latinis melioris ævi dissertatio; 3. Dissertationes on various subjects.—Nouv. Dict.

ISHMAEL, the son of Abraham and Hagar, was born 1919 B. C. Abraham at the desire of Sarah discarded him and his mother, and Ishmael having settled in Paran, married an Egyptian. He was the father of the Arabs, who glory in being descended through him from Abraham.—Bible.

ISHMAEL I. sophy of Persia, was a descendant of Ali, son-in-law of Mohammed. He began his reign in 1505, and died in 1523, after gaining many victories and having established the Persian throne upon a solid basis.—Univ. Hist.

ISHMAEL II. sophy of Persia, succeeded Thomas in 1575. He was a bloody prince, and murdered eight of his brothers. He was poisoned in 1579 by his sister, out of zeal for the Turkish religion, Ishmael being of a sect held heretical by the other mohammedans.—Ibid.

ISIDORE (St.), (surnamed de Pelusium, from his retiring to a cell near that place. He was the disciple of St. Chrysostom, and when young embraced the monastic life. ISIDORE of Charax, a Greek author in the time of Ptolemy Lagus, about 300 B. C. He composed several historical works and a description of Parthia, which has been published by Hefchelius, and also at Oxford among the collection of the lesser geographers, 1703.—Moreri.

Isidore of Alexandria (St.), born in Egypt about A. D. 318. He passed many years in solitude, but was ordained by Athanasius and placed over a monastery, whence he was called Isidore the Hospitalier. He defended that father with great zeal against the Arians, for which he was banished by the patriarch Theophilus. He then went to Constantinople, where he died in 403.—Duple.

Isidore of Cordova (St.), bishop of that city under the reigns of Honorius and Theodosius the younger. He wrote Commentaries on the books of Kings, which he dedicated to Paul Orosius, the disciple of Augustine.—Ibid.

Isidore of Seville (St.), was bishop of that city 40 years, during which he approved himself the father of the poor and the oracle of Spain. He died universally regretted in 636. In the council of Toledo, held in 653, he was called the doctor of his age, and the ornament of the church. He wrote Commentaries on the Scriptures; a Treatise of Ecclesiastical Writers; a Chronicle from Adam to 626; and other works.—Ibid.

Isingrinus (Michael), a celebrated printer of Basil in the 16th century, who printed in Greek all the works of Aristotle, with paper and types superior to those of Aldus Manutius. He published also, with the same elegance and correctness, the History of Plants by Fuchs.—Novo. Dict.

Ismenias, a Theban general, who was sent on an embassy to the king of Persia. No person being admitted to the royal presence without prostration, Ismenias was resolved not to commit an action so degrading to his country. But on being introduced he dropped his ring on the ground, and the act of taking it up was mistaken for submissive homage, in consequence of which he was favourably received. There was a Theban musician of the same name, who being taken prisoner by the Scythians, and playing before their king, he observed that he liked the music of Ismenias better than the braying of an ass.—Plutarch. Moreri.

Isocrates, a celebrated Greek orator, was born at Athens 436 B. C. He had no skill to speak in public, and therefore applied himself to the instruction of others. We have 21 orations by him, a good edition of which was published by Beattie, at Cambridge, in 1742, in 2 vols. 8vo.—Plutarch. Orat.

He died in 1640, aged 90. He wrote The Institution of a Prince in verse; stanzas, sonnets, and other pieces of poetry, in the Delices de la Poésie française, 1620, 8vo.—Novo. Dict.

Iwan V. or John Alexanovich, czar of Russia, was the second son of Michael Feodorovich, born in 1681, and succeeded to the throne on the death of his brother Peter Alexanovich in 1682. But being of weak intellect he was placed in a monastery, and the sceptre given to his brother Peter, the prince Sophia, hoping to reign in the room of Iwan, excited a sedition, which finished by appointing Iwan and Peter joint sovereigns, and Sophia co-regent. This government lasted six years, when Sophia having excited the death of Peter, that she might reign alone, the conspiracy was discovered, and the prince on his way to a convent. From that time Peter reigned sole monarch. Iwan died in 1696, leaving five daughters.—Univ. Hist. Novo. Dict.

Iwan VI. of Brunswick Bevern, was declared czar after the death of his great-aunt Anna Iwanova, in 1740. He was left him to the guardianship of the duke de Biren, who being deposed shortly after the regency was transferred to the emperor's mother. In 1741 he was deposed and confined in a fortress, from whence he escaped by the contrivance of a monk, but was retaken and placed in a monastery, where he was put to death by order of Catherine in 1764.—Ibid.

He was the first bishop of Jerusalem, and was put to death at the instigation of Annias the high-priest, A. D. 62. There is an epistle of his addressed to the dispersed converted Hebrews, among the canonical epistles of the New Testament.—Ibid.

JAMES I. king of Scotland, the son of Robert III. was taken by the English on his passage to France, and kept in confinement 18 years. In 1424 he obtained his liberty on condition of his marrying the daughter of the earl of Somerset. He severely punished those who had governed his country in his absence, for which he was murdered in his bed, in 1437.—Buchanan.

JAMES II. king of Scotland, succeeded the preceding king, his father, at the age of seven years. He assisted Charles VII. of France against the English; and punished rigorously those lords who had revolted against him. He was slain at the siege of Roxburgh, in 1460.—Ibid.

JAMES III. was the son and successor of the above. He put to death his brother John, and committed so many cruelties, that his subjects revolted, and he was slain in battle in 1488.—Ibid.

JAMES IV. succeeded his father, the last mentioned, at the age of 16 years. He defeated the rebellious lords, and assisted Lewis XII. king of France against the English, but was slain at the battle of Flodden Field, in 1513.—Ibid.

JAMES V. the son of the above, was only a year old at the time of his father's death. At the age of 17 he assumed the reins of government, and assisted Francis I. of France against Charles V. for which that prince gave him his daughter Margaret in marriage. On her decease he married Mary of Lorraine, daughter of Claude, duke of Guise. James died in 1543, leaving his crown to Mary Stuart his daughter. He was a prince of great virtue.—Robertson's Hist. of Scotland.

JAMES VI. of Scotland, and the first of England, was the son of Henry Stuart, lord Darnley, by Mary daughter of the preceding king, and was born in 1566. The year following he was proclaimed king on the forced resignation of his mother, and in 1603 he succeeded queen Elizabeth on the English throne. A plot was soon after discovered to seize on him and prince Henry, for which lords Cobham and Grey, and sir Walter Raleigh, were apprehended and indicted. But the year following a more dreadful one was providentially found out, which was devised by some desperate papists to blow up the king, the prince, and parliament, and for which several persons were executed. In 1606 he established episcopacy in Scotland, and made peace with Spain. In 1612 his son, the prince Henry by Anne of Denmark, died, and the same year his daughter was married to Frederic the elector palatine. James stretched the prerogative as far as he well could, and left the consequences to be felt by his son Charles, whom he imprudently suffered to visit Spain, to marry the infant, which did not succeed. One of the greatest blots of his reign was the execution of sir Walter Raleigh, fifteen years after sentence. James was a man of learning, and affected to be a universal scholar, particularly in theology, being not indifferently acquainted with polemics, of which he was so fond as to found Chelsea college for the maintenance of learned men who should employ themselves in managing controversies, especially with the church of Rome. Charles II. applied it to a better purpose. James died at Theobalds in 1626, and was interred at Westminster. He wrote many books; as, a Commentary on the Revelations, in which he calls the pope Antichrist; Basilicon Doron, or advice to his son; Demonology, or a Discourse on Witchcraft; a Counterblast against Tobacco, &c. all of which were printed in 1 vol. folio.—Hume Wilson. Repin.

JAMES II. king of England, was the second son of Charles I. and born at London in 1633, in which year he was created duke of York. He resided during the rebellion in France, where he imbibed the principles of popery. At the restoration he returned to England, and married secretly Anne Hyde, daughter of the earl of Clarendon, by whom he had two daughters, who afterwards became queens of England, viz. Mary and Anne. In the Dutch war he signified himself as commander of the English fleet, and shewed great skill and bravery. On the death of his first wife he married the princess of Modena. He succeeded his brother in 1684, but his zeal for his religious leading him into measures subversive of the constitution, the prince of Orange, who married his daughter Mary, was invited by several of the English nobility, and the king finding himself abandoned by his friends, withdrew to France, where he died at St. Germain in 1701. His son James, commonly called the pretender, died at Rome in 1766. His son Charles Edward, who invaded Scotland in 1745, died in 1788; and Henry Benedict Stuart, cardinal York, the last surviving branch of this unfortunate race, died but lately.

JAMES I. king of Arragon, called the Warrior, succeeded his father Peter the Catholic in 1213. He conquered the kingdoms of Majorca and Minorca, Valencia, and other countries, from the Moors. He died at Valencia in 1276. Before he expired he resigned the crown to his successor, and took the habit of the cistercians, according to the superstition of the age.—Muriel.

JAMES II. king of Arragon, succeeded his brother Alphonso III. in 1291. He carried on a long war against Navarre, and the Moors; and united Catalonia to his crown. He died at Barcelona in 1327.—Ibid.

James of Voragine, a dominican and bishop, was born at Genoa about 1230. He became provincial of his order, and afterwards archbishop of Genoa. He compiled a Golden Legend, which is full of pious fables; and has gone through numerous editions. The first and most esteemed was printed in 1470. The author died in 1298.—Muriel.

JAMES (Thomas), a learned divine, was born at Newport in the isle of Wight; and educated, first at Winchester school, and next at New college, Oxford, where he was chosen fellow, and proceeded to the degree of D.D. He was appointed the first keeper of sir Thomas Bodley's library, and was made sub-dean of Wells. He distinguished himself by collating MSS. of the ancient fathers, with a view of publishing them, but failed in his design for want of encouragement. He wrote several learned books, the chief of which is, A Treatise of the Corruption of the Scriptures, Councils, and Fathers, &c. 1611, 4to. reprinted in 8vo. 1638. He died at Oxford in 1632.—Wood.

JAMES (Richard), nephew of the above, was educated at Exeter college, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi, of which he became fellow. He travelled into Russia, on which country he wrote some observations in 1619. He was of great service to Selden and sir Robert Cotton, being a man of extensive learning, and profoundly acquainted with ancient MSS. He published several books in Latin, and died in 1688.—Ibid.

JAMES (Robert), an English physician, was born at Kinverston in Staffordshire in 1703, and educated at St. John's college, Oxford. After practising in different places in the country, he removed to London, where in 1743 he published his Medical Dictionary in 3 vols. folio, a work of considerable merit, in which he was assisted by Dr. Johnson; Dr. James also published other works in the line of his profession, but he is best known by a valuable medicine universally celebrated under the name of James's powder, which has been a fortune to his family. He died in 1776.—Gen. Eng. Dict.

JAMET (Peter Charles), a French writer, was born in the diocese of Sacon in 1704. He furnished notes and remarks to the dictionary of Trevoux, and was the author of Metaphysical Essays; Dissertation on the Creation; Letters on Taste and the Doctrine of Bayle; Danccha Menhann, the Mogul Philosopher, &c. He died at the end of the 18th century.—Nouv. Dict.

JAMYN (Amadis), a French poet, and secretary to Charles IX. He died about 1565. Besides his poetical works, he wrote some academical discourses in prose, and completed the translation of the Iliad into French verse, which was left imperfect by Sabel.—Ibid.

JANEWAY (James), a nonconformist divine, was born in Hertfordshire, and educated at Christ church college, Oxford. Being deprived after the restoration, he opened a meeting-house at Rothamritch, when the act of indulgence was passed, and died there in 1674. He wrote Heaven upon Earth, 8vo.; a Token for Children, 12mo.; this has gone through numerous editions. The Saint's Encouragement to Diligence, &c. After his death was printed his Legacy to his Friends, 8vo.—Calony.

JANICON (Francis Michael), a French protestant writer, was born at Paris in 1674. He settled in Holland, and died at the Hague in 1730. He wrote the Dutch gazettes in a manner which discovered him to possess great political knowledge. He was also the author of The present State of the Republic of the United Provinces, and their Dependencies, 2 vols. 12mo. 1729.—Moreri. Diet. Hist.

JANENIUS (Cornelius), bishop of Ghent, was born at Hulst, in Flanders in 1513. Philip II. of Spain sent him to the council of Trent, where he greatly distinguished himself by his learning and modesty. On his return he was made bishop of Ghent, where he died in 1576. He wrote a Harmony of the Gospels, and other works.—Moreri.

JANSEN or JANSENIUS (Cornelius), a celebrated Roman catholic prelate, was born in 1583, at Leerdam, in Holland, and educated at Utrecht, from whence he removed to Louvain in 1602. He afterwards went to France, and after residing there some years, returned to Louvain, where he was chosen principal of the college of St. Pulcheria. Being deputed to go on a mission to the king of Spain, by his university, that monarch employed him to write a book against France, for which he was rewarded, in 1635, with the bishopric of Ypres in Flanders, where he died of the plague in 1638. He wrote several books, but that by which he is most known is his Augustinus, which was not published till after his death, and then occasioned a fierce contest among the divines of the Romish church, which even the papal bulls could not suppress. In 1641 the Roman inquisitors prohibited the perusal of the book; Urban VIII. censured it as heretical; and Innocent X. in 1653 condemned the following propositions extracted from it: 1. That there are divine precepts which even good men cannot obey without the assistance of God.—2. That no man can resist the influence of divine grace on his mind.—3. That to render human actions meritorious, it is not necessary for them to be free from necessity but constraint.—4. That the doctrine of free will is a gross error.—5. That Jesus Christ died not for all men, but only for the elect. These doctrines the pope declared heretical, and a violent persecution was excited against all who maintained them, but notwithstanding this, jansenism gained a number of disciples in France and the Low Countries.—Bayle. Dupin.

JANSON or JANSONIUS (James), a doctor of Louvain, professor of theology, and dean of the college of St. Peter in that city, was a native of Amsterdam, and died in 1625, aged 78. He wrote Commentaries on the Psalms; Song of Solomon, Job, and the Gospel of St. John, and other works.—Moreri.

JANSENS (Abraham), a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1565. A picture of his representing the descent from the cross, in the church of Ghent, has been taken for the work of Rubens, and is not inferior to the works of that painter.—De Piles.

JANSENS (Victor Honorius), an historical painter, born at Brussels in 1664. He was patronised by the duke of Holstein, who sent him to Rome for improvement. On his return to his own country he adorned most of the churches and convents with his works. He died in 1739.—Pittington.

JANSENS (Cornelius), a Dutch painter, who resided in England many years, and in many respects was equal to Vandyck. He painted portraits, and died in 1665.—Virtue. Granger.

JANUARIUS (St.), bishop of Benevento, who was beheaded in Puzosoli, in the persecution under Diocletian. His body was removed to Naples, where is a beautiful chapel erected to his memory in the cathedral. What renders his name remarkable is a pretended miracle exhibited yearly by the priests, who have what they call his blood in a phial. This at other times is congealed, but on the bringing out the head of the saint, which is carefully preserved, the blood liquifies. This mumery is always practised when Vesuvius shews signs of a convulsion, and the people devoutly believe that the influence of the saint will prevent an earthquake.—Moreri. Addison's Travels in Italy.

JAPHET, the son of Noah, was born B.C. 2448. His posterity peopled part of Asia and Europe.—Bible.

JARCHAS, the most learned of the Indian philosophers, called brachmans, and a great astronomer, according to Jerome. He is said to have given Apollonius Tyancus seven magical rings called by the names of the planets.—Moreri.

JARCHI (Solomon Ben Isaac), a celebrated rabbi, was born at Troyes in France in 1104. He spent thirty years in travelling through Europe and the eastern countries. He wrote Commentaries on the Bible, Mishna, Gemara, and Pirke Avoth, 4 vols. 12mo. They are highly esteemed by the Jews.—Moreri.

JARDINS (Mary Catherine des), an ingenious French lady, was born at Alençon in Normandy in 1640. She was obliged to quit her native place in consequence of an intrigue; on which she went to Paris, where she subsisted by her pen. She still, however, gave way to her passions, and formed various connections. Her works, consisting of novels and plays, form 10 volumes in 12mo. She died in 1683.—Moreri.

JARJYN (Karel du), an excellent painter of landscapes and animals, was born at Amsterdam in 1640. He studied in Italy, where he acquired a great reputation. He died at Venice in 1678; and so greatly was he esteemed that, though a protestant, his remains were interred in consecrated ground.—Pill. H. ubrahen.

JAROSLAW, grand duke of Russia in the 10th century. He invited learned men to his court, and caused several books to be translated from the Greek into Russian. He also framed a code of laws for his subjects, and founded a public school.—Univ. Hist.

JARRIGE (Peter), a famous jesuit, who quitted his order and turned protestant. He then published a book entitled, The Jesuits exposed upon a Scaffold; but afterwards he returned to his society at Antwerp, and printed a retraction of what he had advanced. He died at Tullies in France in 1670.—Novo. Dis.

JARRY (Laurence Juillard du), a French divine and poet, was born about 1658. He gained the poetical prize of the French academy in 1679, and again in 1714, on which last occasion he had Voltaire for a competitor. He was made prior of Notre Dame du Jarry, in the diocese of Saintes, where he died in 1730. His works consist of theological treatises, sermons and poems.—Novo. Dis.

JARS (Gabriel), a mineralogist, was born at Lyons in 1733. He visited with Duhamel the mines of Saxony, Bohemia, Austria, Hungary, and Carinthia, also those of England, and other countries. In 1768 he was received into the academy of sciences, but died the year following. His brother published his Observations under the title of Voyages Metallurgiques, 3 vols. 4to.—Novo. Dis.

JAUCOURT (the chevalier Louis de), member of the royal society of London, and of the academies of Berlin and Stockholm, died at Compeigne in 1780, aged 76. He furnished the Encyclopedie Francoise with many valuable articles, and conducted the Bibliothèque raisonnée. He also assisted in publishing the Museum Sebranum, 4 vols. folio, and composed a Lexicon Medicum universale, the MS. of which, in 6 vols. folio, perished on board a ship which foundered on her passage to Amsterdam. Jaucourt was five years the disciple of Boerhaave.—Novo. Dis. Hist.

JAULT (Augustus Francis), a French physician, and professor of Syriac in the royal college at Paris, died in 1757, aged 50. He translated Sharp's Surgery, Ockley's History of the Saracens, and Floyer on the Asthma, from English into French, also Astruc on the Venereal Disease, and other works.—Novo. Dis.

JAY (Gui Michel le), an advocate of the parliament of Paris, who printed a Polyglot Bible at his own expence, and thereby impoverished himself. Afterwards entering into orders he was made dean of Vezelai. He died in 1675. His polyglot is elegantly printed in 10 vols, and has the Syriac and Arabic versions, which are not in that of Ximenes.—Moreri.

JEANES (Henry), an English divine, was born at Alberfay in Somersetshire in 1611. He received his education at Hart-hall, Oxford, and afterwards became rector of Beer-crocomb and Capland in Somersetshire. He sided with the presbyterians, and obtained the living of Chedzoy, after the deprivation of Dr. Walter Raleigh. He died in 1662. His works are, Treatise on Abstinence from Evil, 8vo.; Want of Church Government no Warrant for an Omission of the Lord's Supper, 8vo.; Treatise on the Indifferency of Human Actions, 4to.; of Original Righteousness, and its Contrary Concupiscence, 4to.; Polemical Tracts against Dr. Hammond, Jeremy Taylor, and John Goodwin.—Wood.

JEANNIN (Peter), a French statesman, was born in Burgundy, and bred to the bar. He became chief president of the parliament of Dijon. Henry IV. made him a member of his council and kept him at court, where nothing was undertaken without consulting him. He died at the age of 82, in 1622. His Negotiations and Memoirs were published in 1659, folio, and in 1695, 4 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

JEURAT (Sebastian), a French mathematician, was born at Paris in 1704, and died in 1803. He had been a member of the academy of sciences, and afterwards a member of the national institute. He founded the observatory at the military school, and wrote a Treatise on Perspective, 4to.; New Tables of Jupiter, 4to.; Observations on the Comet of 1759; Graphical Method of Trisecting the Angle; Observations on the Solar Eclipse of 1793; Memoire sur les Lunettes dioptriques, &c.—Novo. Dis. Hist.

JEBS (Samuel), a learned physician, was born at Nottingham, and bred at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He was some time librarian to the famous Jeremy Collier, and on quitting the university he settled as physician at Stratford in Middlesex, where he resided till a short time before his death. He died in 1772, leaving several children, one of whom was fir Richard Jebb, physician to his majesty. He published, 1. S. Justini Martyris cum Tryphone Dialogus, 8vo. 2. De Vita et Rebus gestis Mariz Scotorum Reginz; also the same work in English, 8vo.; 3. An edition of Aristides, with notes, 2 vols. 4to.; 4. An edition of Bacon's Opus Majus, folio, &c.—Anecd. of Bourger.

JEBS (John), brother of fir Richard Jebb, was born in London, in 1736. He received his academical education at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He was in orders, but quitted his church preferments on turning Socinian. He then studied physic, in which faculty he took his doctor's degree, and acquired considerable reputation. He died in 1786. His miscellaneous works were published in 1787, in 3 vols. 8vo.—Life by Disney.

JECHONIAS, king of Judah, began to reign at the age of 18; about 599 B.C. He enjoyed the throne, however, but a short time, being carried prisoner to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar when he took Jerusalem. He remained in captivity till the year 562 B.C. and was then placed by Evil Merodach among the princes of his court. Zedekiah his uncle succeeded him.—Bible. Josephus.

JEFFERY (Thomas), a dissenting minister, was born at Exeter about the year 1700. He received his education under Mr. Hallet, to whom he became assistant as a preacher, and in 1726 was called to the pastoral care of a congregation at Little Baddow in Essex. In 1728 he returned to his native city, and died there soon after. He wrote the True Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion, in opposition to Collins the Deist, 8vo.; the Divinity of Christianity proved from Holy Scripture, a Sermon; a Review of the Controversy between the author of, a Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion, and his Adversaries, 8vo.; Christianity the Perfection of all Religion, 8vo.—Monthly Mag. March 1803.

JEFFERY (John), an English divine, was born at Ipswich, in 1647, and educated at Catherine hall, Cambridge. Archbishop Tillotson appointed him archdeacon of Norwich, in 1694. He died in 1720. Dr. Jeffery published a volume of Sermons, and was the editor of Christian Morals, a posthumous work by Sir Thomas Browne; and the sermons of Dr. Whichcote.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

JEFFERIES (lord George), a noted English judge, was born at Acton, in Denbighshire, and educated at Westminster school, after which he removed to the Inner Temple, where he studied the law with great application. By attaching himself to the duke of York, he obtained the place of a Welsh judge, the honour of knighthood, and the chief justiceship of Chester. In 1683 he was appointed chief justice of the king's bench, and in 1685 lord chancellor. His cruelties on the western circuit upon the deluded and unfortunate followers of the duke of Monmouth were excessive; yet they gave great satisfaction to king James, who merrily called this Jefferies's Campaign. He supported all the arbitrary acts of the court, and rendered himself so obnoxious to the people, that when his majesty abdicated the throne he attempted to leave the kingdom in the disguise of a sailor, but was recognized while drinking in a cellar in Wapping. Perceiving himself to be discovered, he feigned a cough, and turned to the wall with his pot of beer in his hand. Information of his being there having been immediately communicated to the mob, they rushed in, seized and carried him before the lord mayor, who sent him under a strong guard to the lords of council, by whom he was sent prisoner to the Tower, where he died in 1689.—Lives of the Chancellors.

JEFFERYS (George), a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, was born at Weldon in Northamptonshire, and educated at Westminster school, and Trinity college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He afterwards studied the law, and was called to the bar, but never practised. He died in 1755, aged 77. His Miscellanies in verse and prose, containing, among other pieces, the tragedies of Edwin and Metropo, acted at Lincoln's-inn-fields theatre, were published in 1754, 1 vol. 4to.—Biog. Dram.

JEHU, the son of Jehoshaphat, and the 10th king of Israel, began his reign about 885 B.C. He slew Joram with the whole family of Ahab, and put to death the priests of Baal, in the temple of their idol, but afterwards he fell into idolatry, on which he was punished by the delivery of his kingdom to Hazael, king of Syria. He died 856 B.C.—Bible. Strickbohn.

JEKYL (Sir Joseph), an English lawyer and patriot, was the son of a clergyman in Northamptonshire, and born in 1663. He distinguished himself in the reign of William III. by his attachment to the whigs, and was one of the managers on the trial of Dr. Sacheverel. At the accession of George I. he was knighted, made master of the rolls, and a privy counsellor. He successfully maintained the independence of his office against lord chancellor King, in a pamphlet, entitled, The Judicial Authority of the Master of the Rolls stated and vindicated. He died in 1738. His brother Thomas JEKYL, D. D. was educated at Trinity college, Cambridge, and became vicar of Rowd in Wiltshire, lecturer at Newland in Gloucestershire, and minister of St. Margaret's chapel, Westminster. He published Peace and Love recommended, in 2 Sermons preached at Bristol, 1674, 4th; Popery, a great Mystery of Iniquity, a Fast Sermon, 1680, 4to; Righteousness and Peace the best Means to prevent ruin, preached before the lord mayor 1681; True Religion makes the best Loyalty, 1682; Brief and Plain Exposition of the Church Catechism, 8vo.—Wood.

JELLINCKE (Christopher), a presbyterian divine, was born in Germany, and studied at Basil and Leyden. He was for some time a soldier, after which he went to Geneva, from whence he was invited to England, where he acquired a great knowledge of the language, and obtained the living of Brent in Devonshire, of which he was deprived for nonconformity in 1662. He died at Margbridge at the age of 88. He wrote, Disputatio Theologica de Sacra Cena; Fifteen Conferences with Christ; A New and Living Way of Dying; The Spiritual Merchant; and other works of a like nature.—Calamy, Palmar.

JENISCHIUS (Paul), a learned writer, was born at Antwerp in 1558. He was persecuted and banished for writing a book, entitled, Theatrum Animarum. He died at Stutgard in 1647.—Morri.

JENKIN (Robert), a learned English divine, was born in the Isle of Thanet, in 1656, and educated at the king's school at Canterbury. In 1674 he was admitted of St. John's college, Cambridge, of which society he was elected fellow in 1680. In 1711 he became master of his college, and lady Margaret's professor of divinity. He died in 1727. Dr. Jenkin wrote some esteemed theological pieces; the best known of which is entitled, The Reasonableness and Certainty of the Christian Religion, in 2 vols. 8vo., a work of great merit.—Bay. Brit.

JENKIN (William), a nonconformist divine, was the son of a puritan minister, and born at Sudbury in Suffolk in 1612. He was educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, and in 1641 was chosen minister of Christ church, near Newgate, London, of which he was deprived for nonconformity in 1662. He was sent to the Tower for being concerned in Love's plot, but was released on petitioning Cromwell. In 1684 he was committed to Newgate on the conventicle act, and died there four months afterwards. His works are: An Exposition on the Epistle of Jude, folio; Celestina seu Clamor ad Theologos Hierarchia Anglicana; and some Sermons and controversial pieces.—Calamy, Palmar.

JENKINS (Henry), a native of Yorkshire, and rendered remarkable for having lived to the extraordinary age of 169 years. He remembered the battle of Flodden Field, and gave evidence at the assizes to a circumstance within his recollection of one hundred and forty years. He retained his faculties to the last, but as he was born before parochial registers were kept, no parish would support him, so that he subsisted by begging to his death. He died in 1670; and in the parish church of Bolton, Yorkshire, to which in reality he belonged, is a monument recording his extraordinary age.

JENKINS (sic Leoline), a civilian and statesman, was born in Glamorganshire, in 1623, and educated at Cowbridge school, from whence he was sent to Jesus college, Oxford, in 1641, where he continued till the death of the king. He afterwards became tutor to some young gentlemen, with whom he travelled through France, Holland, and Germany. At the restoration he returned to his college, of which he was chosen fellow, and in 1662 elected principal.

In 1668 he was appointed judge of the prerogative court of Canterbury, and in 1670 he received the honour of knighthood. He had a principal share in negotiating the peace of Nimeguen, and on his return to England, he was chosen one of the representatives of the university of Oxford in parliament, where he strenuously opposed the bill for the exclusion of the duke of York. He was soon after made secretary of state, and a privy counsellor. He died in 1685, and was buried in the chapel of Jesus college, to which he was a great benefactor. He bequeathed to charitable uses all his property. His letters and papers were printed in 2 vols. folio. 1724.—Biog. Brit.

JENKS (Benjamin), a pious divine of the English church, was a native of Shropshire, rector of Harley in that county, and chaplain to the earl of Bradford. He died in 1724, aged 78, and was buried in Harley church, of which he had been minister 56 years. He wrote 2 vols. of Meditations; Family Devotions, 12mo; Submission to the Righteousness of God, 12mo; and other religious pieces of considerable merit and usefulness.—Oxford's Library.

JENKYNs (David), an intrepid judge, was born at Pendoyken, in Glamorganshire, and admitted a commoner of Edmund hall, Oxford, in 1597. After taking his bachelor's degree he removed to Gray's Inn, and became eminent as a counsellor. King Charles I. appointed him a Welsh judge, but in 1645 he was taken prisoner at Hereford, for his activity in the royal cause, and sent to the Tower. Being brought to the bar of the house of commons, he denied their authority and refused to kneel, for which he was fined 1000*l.* and remanded to prison. In 1650 an act was passed for his trial in the high court of justice, but Henry Martin, it is said, prevented the measure by a droll speech. Jenkyns fully expected to be hanged, and declared that he would die with the Bible under one arm, and Magna Charta under the other. In 1656, he obtained his liberty. He died in 1663. His tracts on legal and political subjects were printed together in 1681, 12mo.—Brit. Dram.

JENKINS (Charles), an ingenious English gentleman, who died at Goplat in Lancashire, in 1773. He composed the words of some of Handel's oratorios, particularly the Messiah, and published part of an intended edition of Shakespeare.—Brit. Dram.

JENNINGS (David), an eminent dissenting minister, who officiated forty-four years as pastor to a congregation in Old Gravel-lane, Wapping, and superintended the dissenting academy, founded by Mr. Coward. He obtained the degree of doctor of divinity from Scotland, and died in 1768, aged 71. Dr. Jennings wrote An Introduction to the Use of the Globes and Querry, 8vo; Introduction to the Knowledge of Medals, 12mo;

Jewish Antiquities. 9 Vols. 8vo; and several Sermons.—Toulmin's Life of Noah.

JERON, or JANSENUS (Nicolas), a French printer and letter-founder, who resided at Venice. He was the first who fixed the form and proportion of the Roman character, and his editions are highly valued on account of the beauty of the printing. The first book which came from his press was a volume in quarto, entitled, Decor Puellarum, 1471. He died about 1481.—Martini.

JENYNS (Boatne), an ingenious English writer, was born in London in 1704, and educated at a private school, from whence he was sent to St. John's college, Cambridge. In 1728 he published a poem on the Art of Dancing. He was elected into parliament in 1741, and enjoyed a seat in that house till 1780. In 1755 he was appointed one of the lords of trade, which place he held till that board was abolished. He died in 1787. His works are; 1. Poems, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Free Enquiry into the Origin of Evil, 12mo.; 3. A View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion, 12mo.; 4. Political Tracts; all collected into 4 vols. 12mo. with his life prefixed.

JEPHTHAH, one of the judges of Israel, who is rendered famous by a remarkable vow which he made before he marched against the Ammonites; that if he proved victorious he would offer to the Lord the first living thing which should come to meet him on his return home. This happened to be his only daughter; whom he is said to have sacrificed to fulfill his rash vow. But many learned writers contend that the text does not warrant the assertion; and that the daughter of Jephthah, instead of being sacrificed, was devoted to a life of perpetual virginity. And this seems to be the most probable, since human sacrifices were held in abomination by the Israelites.—Judges.

Jeremiah, the second of the greater prophets, was the son of Hilkiah, and a native of Anathoth, of the tribe of Benjamin. He was born about 629 years B.C. Having predicted the miseries which should fall on his country for the sins of the rulers, priests, and false prophets, he was thrown into prison. When Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem, Jeremiah was permitted to remain in Judaea, but Johanan, and other fugitive Jews, being resolved to go into Egypt contrary to the prophet's advice, compelled him to go with them. Some say he was slain there by his countrymen, but others assert that he died at Babylon about 586 B.C. The style of Jeremiah is elegant, and pathetic, especially the lamentations. In his prophecies he foretold the Babylonish captivity, the return of the Jews, and the destruction of Babylon. He also predicted the conception and stonement of the Messiah.—Craw's Key to O. T.

Jeroboam I. king of Israel, was appointed by Solomon governor of Ephraim and Manasseh, but when a prophet predicted that he would reign over ten tribes, Solomon ordered him to be arrested, on which he fled to Egypt, where he remained till the people revolted against Rehoboam. Ten tribes separated from the house of David, and chose Jeroboam for their king, who abandoned himself to idolatry. He died 954 B.C. after reigning 22 years.—Bible.

Jeroboam II. was the son of Joash king of Israel. He ascended the throne 325 B.C. and regained the lands which had been taken by the Syrians. But he was guilty of idolatry, and the prophets Hosea and Amos predicted the destruction of his family. The Assyrians defeated him in a bloody battle at Jezreel, and carried many of his people into captivity. He died 784 B.C.—Ibid.

Jerom (St.), a father of the church, was born of christian parents near Dalmatia, about 340. After receiving a good education under his father, he was sent to Rome, where he studied almost every branch of learning, particularly rhetoric, Hebrew, and theology. Being of a pious and sedentary turn, he was disgusted with the busy scenes and corrupt manners of the capital, and therefore resolved on leading a solitary life. He accordingly retired to the desert region of Syria, where he spent four years in severe study and mortification, and then went to Antioch, where he was ordained priest by Paulinus the bishop. In 381 he went to Constantinople, from whence he passed to Rome, where pope Damasus consulted him on several passages of the holy writings. His eloquence, learning, and virtues procured him several female disciples of rank, which excited the envy of the priests, who propagated gross calumnies against his character. Jerom then quitted Rome, and retired to the Holy Land, where he superintended several monasteries, particularly at Bethlehem. There he wrote the principal of his works, which are: a Latin Version of the Bible from the Hebrew; Learned Commentaries on several books of the Scripture; Polemical Treatises against Montanus, Helvidius, Jovinian, Pelagius, Rufinus, and the partisans of Origen; A Treatise on the Lives and Writings of Ecclesiastical Authors; History of the Fathers of the Desert, and Epistles. The best editions are those of Erasmus, 1526, and of Paris, 1693. He died in 420.—Dupin.

Jerome of Prague, so called from the place of his birth, was the disciple of Huss, and a man of considerable learning. The council of Constance sided with his master, but finding that Huss was thrown into prison, he retired to Ueberlingen, where he applied for a safe conduct, which was refused. On his journey home to his own country he was arrested, and sent to Constance in chains. After being cruelly tortured he was confined to the flames, which he endured with great constancy and triumph, in 1416.—Moreri. Mosheim.

JEROME, of Saint Faith, a Spanish Jew, named before his conversion to christianity Jesua Larchi. He became physician to Peter de Luna, who was afterwards elected pope by the name of Benedict XIII. in whose presence, and that of many cardinals and prelates, he disputed with some learned rabbins at Tortosa in 1414. The result of that conference, and of a Treatise on the Errors of the Talmud by him, is said to have been such, that about 5000 Jews were converted. Jerome's book was printed at Frankfort in 1602.—Nov. Diet. Hist.

JERVAS (Charles), a portrait painter, was born in Ireland, and studied his art under Kneller. By the generosity of a friend he was enabled to visit France and Italy, and at his return obtained considerable employment, more perhaps from the friendship of Pope and other celebrated men than from his own merit. He published a translation of Don Quixote, to which Dr. Warburton added an appendix on the Origin of Romances, and of Chivalry. He died about 1740.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

JESSEY (Henry), a nonconformist minister, was born at West Rowton in Yorkshires, in 1627, where he took his degrees in arts. He attached himself early to the independents, for which he was imprisoned in 1641, but released by the parliament. In the rebellion he officiated at St. George's in Southwark, but was ejected at the restoration, and twice sent to prison. He died in 1683. His works are; The Glory and Salvation of Judah and Israel; A Description of Jerusalem; A Narrative of Mrs. Sarah Wright; A Looking-glass for Children; The English Greek Lexicon, &c.—Calvary. Palmer.

JESTYN ab Gwrgant, prince of Glamorgan, who was rejected by his country from the sovereignty on the death of his father in 1030, on account of the violence of his temper, his uncle Howell being chosen in his room, but on his death in 1043 he succeeded him. Having made war on Rhys ab Tudor, a neighbouring prince, he sent Einion, his ally, to invite the English to his assistance, who defeated Rhys, but Jestyn refusing to give his daughter to Einion, agreeably to promise, he applied to the English, who turned their arms against Jestyn, and obliged him to quit his dominions, which they divided amongst themselves.—Queen's Camb. Biog.

JESUA (Levita), a Spanish rabbi in the 15th century, who wrote a curious book called Halichot Olam, or the Ways of Eternity, an edition of which in Hebrew and Latin appeared at Hanover in 1714, 4to.—Moreri.

JESUS the son of Sirach, and author of the book, entitled, Ecclesiasticus, was a native of Jerusalem. He lived about 200

B.C. His grandson Jesus translated this book into Greek, which is the version now extant in the apocrypha. It is full of excellent moral reflections and lively sentiments.—Dupin.

JESUS-CHRIST, the Saviour of the world; and the Son of God; was miraculously conceived by the Holy Ghost, and born of the virgin Mary in a stable at Bethlehem, A. M. 4004. His birth was announced to shepherds by angels; and a star appeared in the east which guided the magi to Jerusalem, who inquired of Herod where the Messiah was born, as they were come to worship him. This threw the king and his court into consternation. The magi following the direction of the star, went to Bethlehem, where they found the child, to whom they made their offerings; and being divinely warned did not go back to Herod, but returned home a contrary way. Herod, full of wrath, determined on the death of the infant, but Joseph, the husband of Mary, being divinely warned in a dream, fled with the child and his mother into Egypt. While they were on their journey, Herod made a horrid slaughter of all the children in Bethlehem. On the death of the tyrant, Joseph returned towards home, but finding that Archelaus reigned in the room of his father, he went to Nazareth, by which that prophecy was fulfilled which called Jesus a Nazarene. Here he dwelt with his parents, working probably at his father's trade, which was that of a carpenter, till he came to the age of 33, when he commenced his public labours; and having been baptized by John the Baptist, he called a few poor, unlearned disciples, and then went about declaring the purposes of his mission, and confirming his authority by numerous miracles. The Jews were filled with astonishment at his doctrine and works, but their hearts were hardened, and instead of receiving him as the promised Messiah, they persecuted him with the utmost malignity, and attributed his miracles to diabolical agency. The sanhedrin, or council of priests, often consulted to destroy him, and at last he was betrayed into their hands in the garden of Gethsemane, by his disciple Judas Iscariot, for thirty pieces of silver. After an examination before Caiaphas the high-priest, he was remitted to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, who made several attempts to save him from the fury of the priests and people, but being charged as an enemy of Cæsar if he let Jesus go, he caused him to be first scourged and then put to death. He was crucified between two malefactors on Mount Calvary, Friday, April 3, A. D. 36. His body was entombed by Joseph of Arimathea in a new sepulchre; and as Jesus had declared that he would rise again the third day, the Jews obtained a guard from Pilate to watch the tomb. But on the third day he arose, and the soldiers went and gave information to their employers, who bribed them to say that the body was stolen by his disciples. In confusion of this calumny, Jesus remained six weeks among his followers, and then conducting them to Mount Olivet, ascended into heaven. The christian religion has subsisted to the present day, unimpaired by all the attacks which have been made against it. The evidences upon which it stands are irrefragable, and its doctrines are of the most exalted nature. They teach that man is a miserable creature in consequence of the fall, but that he is restored to the divine favour by the obedience, death, and mediation of Christ, who came down from heaven to make an atonement for the sins of the world, and to bring that life and immortality to light by the gospel, which had been lost by the fall of Adam. The precepts of christianity are agreeable to its doctrinal system; tending to make men humble, virtuous, patient, and contented in this world, and to fit them for a state of endless purity.—New Testament.

JESUS, a man who, before the taking of Jerusalem by Titus, announced to the Jews the calamities which were about to fall upon them. Four years before the war he went about proclaiming the divine judgments on that devoted city, "Woe, woe to Jerusalem." Being taken and brought before the rulers, and interrogated, his only answer was, "Woe to Jerusalem!" At the time of the siege he went about crying, Woe to the temple! Woe to the city! Woe to the people! and at last he cried, Woe to myself! and at that instant was killed by a dart.—Josephus.

JETHRO, surnamed Raguel, king and priest of the Midianites, who received Moses into his family when he fled from Egypt, and gave him his daughter Zipporah. When Moses had delivered the Israelites from their bondage, Jethro met him, and delivered him his wife and children, with much good advice.—Exodus.

JEUNE (John le), a French priest of the oratory, who quitted a rich canonry to lead a life of devotion. He was a celebrated preacher, and indefatigable in the exercises of his calling. He died in 1672, aged 80. His Sermons were printed in 10 vols. 8vo, and were much studied by Massillon.—Moreri.

JEWEL (John), a learned prelate, was born at Berry Narber, in Devonshire, and educated at Barnstaple school, from whence he removed to Oxford, where he was first entered of Merton, and afterwards of Corpus Christi college. In the time of Edward VI. he avowed the protestant religion, and became an admired preacher, which in the succeeding reign brought him into imminent danger of his life. Finding that bishop Bonner was devising means to apprehend him, he went abroad, and resided with Peter Martyr at Strasbourg, and afterwards at Zurich. On the death of Mary he returned home, and was appointed one of the sixteen protestant divines to dispute with as many of the romanists before queen Elizabeth. In 1559 he was preferred to the bishopric of Salisbury, and in 1565 he received the degree of D.D. from the university of Oxford. His conduct as a bishop was most exemplary, and he paid great attention to the work of reformation in his diocese. His application to study was so intense as to lay the foundation of an illness of which he died in 1571. His remains were interred in Salisbury cathedral. His learning and abilities were celebrated over Europe, by his admirable Apology for the Church of England, which was attacked by his countryman and schoolfellow, Thomas Harding, and unanswerably defended by the author. His works were collected into one volume folio, and deemed of so much importance as to be placed conspicuously in the churches for the edification of the people.—Life by Humphrey. Biog. Brit.

JEZID I. the 5th caliph, or successor of Mahomet, and the second of the race of Omniades, began his reign in 680. The Arabs, in the second year of his reign, elected Hussein, son of Ali, to the caliphate, whom Jezid caused to be assassinated. He also persecuted the whole house of Ali, and put a number of persons of eminence to death. He died in 688. Jezid, though a cruel tyrant, had a taste for poetry, and wrote some amatory verses of merit.—Mor.

JOAB, the general of David king of Israel, distinguished himself equally by his valour and his cruelties. He treacherously slew Abner the general, and stabbed Absalom the son of David. That monarch, in consideration of his services, did not punish him; but Solomon put him to death for taking part with Adonijah B. C. 1014.—Stackhouse.

JOACHIM, a celebrated monk, born at Celico, near Cosenza. He went on a pilgrimage barefoot to the holy land, and on his return entered into the order of cistercians. He founded several monasteries, which he governed with great discretion. He was regarded as a prophet, and many of his predictions were printed, in a book entitled, The Everlasting Gospel. He wrote many other books, and died in 1202, aged 90. His followers pretended that miracles were wrought at his tomb, and applied to the pope to canonize him, but this was rejected on account of some supposed errors in his works.—Moreri.

JOACHIM (George), a mathematician, otherwise named Rheticus, was born in the country of the Grisons in 1514. He obtained the mathematical chair at Wittenberg, where he zealously espoused and defended the astronomical system of Copernicus. He died in 1576. His works are;

Ephemerides; de Doctrina Triangulorum; Orationes de Astronomia, &c.—Melch. Adam in vlt. Phil. Germ. Vossius de Math.

JOAN of ARC, or the maid of Orleans, a French heroine, was born about 1412 at Domremy in Lorraine, of mean parents. She was servant at an inn when she imagined that St. Michael, the tutelary angel of France, had commanded her to raise the siege of Orleans, then closely pressed by the English, under the great duke of Bedford. Her pretended visions made a great noise, and she was introduced to the king, Charles VII., whom she is said to have discovered amidst his courtiers though he was dressed like them. She promised to relieve Orleans, and to procure the coronation of Charles at Rheims. Her offers were accepted, though the parliament treated her as an impostor. Armed as a man she headed the troops, who were animated by her professions and example. The siege of Orleans was raised, after which she marched to Rheims, and assisted at the coronation of the king, who sensible of her services ennobled her family, to which he gave the name of du Lys and large grants of land. Joan was wounded in an attack on Paris, and taken prisoner at the siege of Compeigne, when the English, to their disgrace, tried and condemned her for sorcery. She was accordingly burnt at Rouen in 1431.—Mezeray. Nouv. Dict.

JOAN (Pope), a fictitious character, though asserted to be true by Platina, who calls this pope John VIII. It is said that about the middle of the 9th century a woman named Joan, born at Mentz, and who had long worn men's clothes, obtained so great a reputation as a doctor, as to be elected to the papal chair on the death of Leo IV. It is further stated that having had an intrigue with her confidential friend, and not knowing her time, she was taken in labour as she was going in a procession, and died in the street. In order to avoid such another disgrace, it has been also said that every new pope was afterwards placed in a perforated chair to be examined. The whole of this ridiculous story, however, is now abandoned as fabulous by protestants as well as catholics. David Blondel, in particular, published an able refutation of it.—Platina. Moreri.

JOAN I. queen of Naples, was the daughter of Charles king of Sicily, and born in 1326. At the age of 19 she assumed the government, and married Andrew of Hungary, whom she murdered, and married another. Lewis of Hungary, brother of Andrew, marched to avenge his death, and Joan was obliged to take refuge in Provence. She afterwards recovered her capital, and having destroyed her second husband, married a third, who dying shortly after, she gave her hand to a fourth. Having no children, she adopted her relation Charles de Duras, who revolted against her at the instigation of the king of Hungary. She then adopted Louis of France, duke of Anjou, for her heir, which produced a bloody war. Charles rendered himself master of Naples, and caused the queen to be put to death in 1381.—Univ. Hist.

JOAN II. queen of Naples, succeeded her brother Ladislaus in 1414. She was twice married, but lived a scandalous life. Her second husband, John count of March, put to death her paramour Pandolfus, and imprisoned the queen. The Neapolitans afterwards released her, and her husband became a prisoner in his turn. On recovering his liberty he went to France, where he took a religious habit and died. Joan died in 1434, after adopting Alphonfus king of Arragon for her heir.—Moreri. Univ. Hist.

JOASH, the son of Ahasiah king of Judah, escaped by means of his aunt Jehoshiba from the fury of Athaliah his grand-mother, who destroyed all the other princes of the family. At the age of seven Jehoiada the high-priest caused him to be proclaimed king, and Athaliah was put to death. During the life of Jehoiada he governed well, but afterwards fell into idolatry. He was slain by two of his servants. B. C. 483.—Bible.

JOASH, the son of Jehoahaz king of Israel, succeeded his father. He apostatized to the idolatry of Jeroboam, but paid great respect to the prophet Elisha in his last sickness. He defeated the Syrians in three battles, and recovered several cities from them. He also defeated and made prisoner Amaziah, king of Judah, and took the city of Jerusalem. He died B. C. 826, having reigned sixteen years.—Bible.

JOA, a celebrated patriarch, was born in the country of Uz, between Idumea and Arabia. His history makes the subject of a beautiful book in the sacred canon, which is doubtless the most ancient poem in the world. He is there distinguished for his unshaken integrity in the midst of the severest trials, after which he was restored to wealth and honour, and died about 1500 B. C. Some attribute this book to Isaiah, but others with more probability to Moses.—Gray's Key to O. T.

JOBERT (Louis), a French jesuit, who was distinguished for his knowledge in the science of medals, on which subject he wrote an elaborate treatise, printed in 1739, in 2 vols. 12mo. He died in 1719, aged 72.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JOELLE (Stephen), lord of Limodin, a French poet, was born at Paris in 1532. He was the first who wrote plays in that language, but they were so long, that one of them took ten mornings for its representation. He also wrote sonnets, elegies, odes, and tragedies. He died in 1579.—Moreri. Bayle.

JOEL, the second of the minor prophets, flourished about 789 years B. C. His prophesy, written in a vehement style, regards chiefly the desolation of Judea by the Chaldeans. St. Peter in the Acts applies a passage from this prophet to the establishment of christianity, and the pouring out the spirit on the day of pentecost.—Gray's Key O.T.

JOHN the Baptist, the forerunner of the Messiah, was the son of Zacharias a priest, and Elizabeth. His birth was foretold by an angel. After passing his early years in retirement, he came forth publicly as a preacher of repentance, and baptizing all who confessed their sins. Our Saviour was baptized by him in Jordan, and John bore testimony to his divinity. He was beheaded by Herod at the instigation of Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, with whom Herod lived in a state of adultery, A. D. 29.—New Testament. See Bp. Horne's Life of the Baptist.

JOHN the Evangelist, or the divine, was the son of Zebedee and Salome, and the brother of James the great. Their occupation was fishing, in which they were engaged when Jesus called them. John was the beloved disciple of his master, and leaned on his breast at the last supper. Before the ascension of our Lord, Peter asked him what should become of John, to which he answered: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" whence some have absurdly inferred that he would not die, but remain on the earth till the Messiah's second advent. He preached the gospel in several parts of Asia, and fixed his principal residence at Ephesus. In the persecution by Domitian, he is said to have been plunged into a cauldron of boiling oil, but coming out was banished to the isle of Patmos, where he received the visions contained in his Apocalypse. In the reign of Nerva he was released and returned to Ephesus, where he died under Trajan, A. D. 100, aged 94. He wrote his gospel to complete what had been omitted by the other evangelists, and also to refute the errors of Cerinthus and Ebion. In the New Testament there are likewise three epistles by him.—Gave.

JOHN, surnamed Mark, a disciple of the apostles, who accompanied Paul and Barnabas in their journeys for the propagation of the gospel. A difference arising between the two apostles, they separated, and Mark went with Barnabas to Cyprus. The other particulars of his story are unknown.—Ibid.

JOHN, secretary to the emperor Honorius, seized on the throne after his master's death in 423. He was taken prisoner at Ravenna, and beheaded in 425.—Moreri.

JOHN I. emperor of Constantinople, surnamed Zimisce, was of an illustrious family. He stabbed the emperor Nicephorus Phocas in 969, and obtained many victories over the Russians, Bulgarians, and Saracens. He was poisoned by Basil the eunuch in 976.—Moreri. Univ. Hist.

JOHN II. (Comnenus), succeeded Alexis Comnenus his father in 1118. He gained several advantages over the Turks, and governed with great prudence and liberality. He died in 1143 of a wound which he received from a poisoned arrow.—Ibid.

JOHN III. (Ducas), was crowned at Nice in 1222, at the time when the Latins were in possession of Constantinople. He was a prince of great virtues, gained many battles, defeated the Scythians, Tartars, and Bulgarians, and extended his empire on all sides. He died in 1255.—Ibid.

JOHN IV. (Lascaris), son of Theodore the younger, whom he succeeded in 1259 at the age of six years; but the despot Michael Palæologus deprived him of his crown and his eyes the same year, and then imprisoned him for life.—Ibid.

JOHN V. (Cantacuzenus), was the minister and favourite of Andronicus Palæologus, who made him guardian of his children John and Emanuel, with whose mother, Jane of Savoy, he governed for some time with great wisdom and moderation. But in 1345 he assumed the imperial title in Thrace, and in 1347 took Constantinople, compelling John Palæologus, who had been crowned in 1341, and who married his daughter, to retire to Salonica. The exiled monarch, with the help of the Genoese, defeated the fleet of the usurper, and obliged him to quit the throne and capital. He then retired to the monastery of Mount Athos, where he took the religious habit. He there devoted himself to literary studies, and wrote a valuable history of the empire, and a defence of Christianity against the Mohammedans. He died in 1410.—Ibid.

JOHN VI. (Palæologus), succeeded his father Andronicus the younger in 1341, but he was deprived by John Cantacuzenus, whose daughter he married after recovering his throne. His son Andronicus revolted against him, and the Genoese made themselves masters of the isle of Lesbos, and Amurath I. took the city of Adrianople. He died in 1391.—Ibid.

JOHN VII. (Palæologus), succeeded his father Emanuel in 1425. His reign was very unfortunate, and the Turks made such progress in his dominions as to reduce him to the necessity of imploring the succour of the Latins. He consented to promote an union between the two churches, which was performed at the council of Ferrara in 1439, at which John assisted in person. He died in 1448, after a reign of 29 years.—Ibid.

JOHN, king of England, surnamed Lackland, was the fourth son of Henry II. and born in 1199. He deprived his nephew Arthur of the throne, to which

He was heir, and confined him in prison at Rouen, where he was murdered. The states of Brittany demanded justice of Philip Augustus of France against the murderer, who was condemned to lose all his lands in that country. The pope excommunicated him, and absolved his subjects from their allegiance. He for some time resisted the papal authority, but in 1213 he found it necessary to make his submission. The English barons invited over Lewis the son of Philip, and crowned him at London in 1216, but he did not continue long in England. John died at Newark the same year, and was succeeded by his son Henry III. He signed the Magna Charta in 1215, being compelled to it by the barons. He was buried at Worcester.—Raphs. Hume.

JOHN, surnamed the Good, king of France, succeeded his father Philip of Valois in 1350. He obtained a victory over the English in 1355, but the year following he was defeated and taken prisoner at Poitiers, by Edward the Black Prince, who sent him to London, where he remained till the peace of Bretigni in 1360. The ransom agreed upon was three millions of crowns of gold, and eight provinces; but before the sum could be raised, John died suddenly in the Savoy in London, in 1364, aged 52. He was a prince of great courage and virtue.—Mexera.

JOHN III. king of Sweden, son of Gustavus Vasa, succeeded in 1568 his brother Eric XIV. who was deprived of his crown on account of his tyranny and cruelties. The first acts of his reign were the restoration of the public tranquillity, and the settlement of a peace with Denmark. He died in 1592.—Univ. Hist.

JOHN II. son of Henry III. was proclaimed king of Castile in 1406, at the age of two years. He shewed a warlike spirit, and combated, with great success the forces of Navarre and Arragon. Having made peace with these powers, he turned his arms against the Moors of Grenada, and obtained great advantages over them. He died in 1454, aged 50.—Ibid.

JOHN II. king of Navarre and Arragon, succeeded his brother Alphonfus in the latter kingdom in 1458. He sustained for a long time a war with Henry IV. king of Castile, and died at Barcelona in 1479, aged 82.—Ibid.

JOHN, King of Bohemia, the son of the emperor Henry VII. was elected to the throne in 1309, at the age of 14. He was a warlike prince, and after defeating the Lithuanians, assumed the title of king of Poland. He lost an eye in that expedition, and a Jew doctor, who pretended to restore him to sight, deprived him of the other. His military spirit, however, continued, and he accompanied Philip of France in 1346 to the battle of Cressy, where he was guided between two brave knights, each holding his bridle. He fell in that action, and was buried at Luxembourg.—Morri.

JOHN I. king of Portugal, was the natural son of Peter the Severe; and in 1383 ascended the throne to the prejudice of Beatrice, daughter of Ferdinand I. his brother. John I. king of Castile, the husband of that princess, disputed the crown, but was defeated at the battle of Aljubarota. He then turned his arms against the Moors of Africa, and took Ceuta and some other places. He died in 1433, aged 83.—Univ. Hist.

JOHN II. was born in 1455, and succeeded his father Alphonfus V. in 1481. He defeated some conspiracies which were formed against him at the beginning of his reign, and put the principal parties to death. He gained some places in Africa, and distinguished himself in the battle of Toro, against the Castilians, in 1476. His actions procured him the titles of the Great and the Severe. He encouraged navigation, and under him Portugal obtained settlements in India. He died in 1495.—Ibid.

JOHN III. succeeded his father Emmanuel, on the throne of Portugal in 1521. He greatly encouraged navigation, commerce, and the arts. His navigators discovered Japan, and he sent Francis Xavier into the Indies as a missionary. John died in 1557, aged 55.—Ibid.

JOHN IV. called the Fortunate, was born in 1604. The Spaniards rendered themselves masters of Portugal in 1580, and kept possession till 1640, when the Portuguese revolted and placed the crown on the head of the duke of Braganga, John IV. who held it to his death in 1656.—Ibid.

JOHN V. successor of Peter II. was crowned king of Portugal in 1707. He leagued with other powers in favour of Charles of Austria, who laid claim to the crown of Spain. His government was wise, and his virtues great. He died in 1750.—Ibid.

JOHN I. pope, was a native of Tuscany, and ascended the papal chair on the death of Hormisdas, in 523. Theodoric king of the Goths, a violent arian, threw him into prison at Ravenna, where he died in 526.

JOHN II. was a Roman, and succeeded Boniface II. in 533. He opposed the eutychians and nestorians, and died in 535.

JOHN VIII. a Roman, was elected to the pontificate on the death of Adrian II. in 872. He crowned the emperor Charles the Bald in 875, and three years after went to France, where he held a council at Troyes. In his time Italy was greatly ra-yaged by the Saracens, who obliged the pope to pay tribute. He corresponded with Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, who had driven Ignatius from his seat, and usurped the dignity. John, imposed upon by the pretences of the intruder, acknowledged him patriarch; but on discovering his error he excommunicated him. The pope died in 882. Many of his letters are extant.

JOHN X. archbishop of Ravenna, was elected to the papacy in 914. He was a turbulent prelate, and defeated the Saracens, who had desolated Italy a long time; but he was himself driven from Rome by Guy duke of Tuscany, who was supported by the Roman people. Being thrown into prison he was there put to death in 928.

JOHN XI. was the son of Alberic, duke of Spoletta, but some have said that his father was pope Sergius III. He was made pope at the age of 25, in 931, through the influence of his mother Maronia, wife of Guy duke of Tuscany; but afterwards his brother Alberic threw both him and her into the castle of St. Angelo, where the pope died in 936.

JOHN XII. a Roman of noble birth, was elected pope in 956. He was the first who changed his name on that occasion. At that time Berenger tyrannized over Italy, and the pope implored the assistance of the emperor Otho I. who crossed the Alps, and delivered the country. John crowned Otho at Rome, and promised him fidelity, which, however, was of short duration, for he united with the son of Berenger against his deliverer. Otho returned to Rome in 963, and called a council, in which the pope was accused of adultery, sacrilege, and other crimes, which being proved, he was deposed. On the departure of the emperor, John entered Rome, and exercised dreadful cruelties on his enemies. He was assassinated in 964, by a man whose bed he had violated.

JOHN XIII. was elected pope in 965, by the authority of the emperor, against the will of the Roman people. Peter, prefect of Rome, drove him from thence in 966, but the emperor restored him, and Peter became an exile in his turn. John died in 972.

JOHN XIV. bishop of Pavia, and chancellor to the emperor Otho II. obtained the papal chair after Benedict VII. in 983, but three months after his election he was sent to the castle of St. Angelo by the anti-pope Boniface, where he died of poison in 984.

JOHN XVII. an illustrious Roman, was elected pope after Sylvester II. in 1003, and died the same year. There was an antipope of the same name, who was called before Philagathus. The troops of Otho III. having seized him; deprived him of his hands, ears, and tongue, in 998.

JOHN XXI. was a Portuguese, and the son of a physician. He became pope in 1276, but died eight months after his election. Some works of his on philosophy, medicine, and divinity, are extant.

JOHN XXII. was elected pope at Lyons in 1316. He founded several abbeys and bishoprics, but his pontificate was disturbed by quarrels with the emperor, and the cordeliers, which order the pope endeavoured to suppress. He died at Avignon in 1334. By his works he seems to have been better fitted for a physician than pope. They are: 1. Theaurus Pauperum, or a Collection of Remedies; Treatise on Disorders of the Eyes; On the Formation of the Fetus; On the Gout; Advice for Preserving Health. They have all been printed.

JOHN XXIII. (Balthasar Cossa), a Neapolitan, studied at Bologna, and became chamberlain to Boniface IX. who made him cardinal. He was elected pope after the death of Alexander V. during the great schism, and promised to renounce the pontificate if Gregory XII. and Peter de Luna would drop their pretensions. Not fulfilling his engagements he was deposed by the council of Constance in 1415, and imprisoned at Heidelberg, where he remained three years, and was then released at the request of pope Martin V. He died in 1419. The other popes of this name were, not at all remarkable.—Platina. Bower, Moreri.

JOHN of Salisbury, a learned Englishman of the 12th century, who in 1177 was chosen bishop of Chartres in France. He died in 1181. He wrote the Life of Thomas à Becket, and several other works. Moreri.

JOHN SOBIESKI, king of Poland, was the youngest son of James Sobieski, governor of Cracow, and educated at Paris. In 1663 he was made grand marshal and general of the Polish armies, after which he was appointed master of the royal house, and palatine of Cracovia. He retook several cities from the rebellious Cossacks in the Ukraine, and distinguished himself in many gallant actions. In 1673 he gained the memorable battle of Choczim upon the Niester, in which the Turks lost 28,000 men. The year following he was elected king of Poland on the death of Michael, and the same year compelled the Turks to sue for peace. In 1683 he forced them to raise the siege of Vienna, which without him would inevitably have been taken. He died at Warfaw in 1696, aged 72. John Sobieski was a lover of learning, and patronized men of letters.—Moreri. Univ. Hist.

JOHN OF GAUNT, or Ghent, duke of Lancaster, was the third son of Edward III.

king of England, and born at Ghent in 1340. He married for his second wife Constance, a natural daughter of Peter the Cruel, king of Castile and Leon, and on the death of that monarch, he laid claim to the throne in right of his wife, in opposition to Henry of Trastamare, but without success. He served with great glory in France in conjunction with his brother the Black Prince, and on his death had the principal management of affairs during the lifetime of his father. On the accession of Richard II. he retired to private life, but the envy of the courtiers, particularly the ecclesiastics, who hated him for protecting Wickliffe, followed him with false accusations of a design to usurp the throne, from which he satisfactorily cleared himself. In 1386 his only daughter, by the princess Constance, was married to the heir apparent of the king of Castile, and John renounced his claim to that crown in consideration of a considerable sum and a pension. He took for his third wife, Catherine Swinford, sister to the wife of his friend Chaucer, the poet. He died in 1399. John of Gaunt was a man of great valour, prudence, and generosity. His son afterwards became king, by the title of Henry IV.—Collins's Life of John of Gaunt. Godewin's Life of Chaucer.

JOHN of Austria (Don), the natural son of the emperor Charles V., was bred up without the knowledge of his birth, till his father on his death-bed revealed the secret to his son Philip II. king of Spain, who caused him to be brought to his court, and publicly acknowledged him as his brother. In 1570 he was sent into Grenada against the Moors, where he terminated the war with great glory: the year following he was appointed chief of the naval squadron against the Turks, and gained the celebrated battle of Lepanto. In 1573 he took Tunis, and in 1576 he was made governor of the Low Countries, then in a state of revolt. After taking Namur, Charlemont, and Marienburg, he was vigorously opposed by the archduke Mathias, and the prince of Orange. He, however, gained a great battle at Gemblours in 1578, and died the same year, as it is supposed of poison, aged 32.—Moreri.

JOHN of Paris, a dominican and professor of theology in the 13th century. In the dispute between pope Boniface VIII. and Philip the Fair, king of France, he took the part of the latter, and defended his cause with great zeal and ability. He also started objections to the doctrine of transubstantiation, for which he was cited to Rome, where he died in 1304. He wrote Tractatus de Regia potestate & Papali; Determinatio de modo existendi corporis Christi in Sacramento Altaris; Correctorium doctrinae S. Thomae.—Cave's Hist. Lit. Moreri.

JOHN of Leyden. See BOCCOLD.

JOHNSON (Samuel), an English divine, was born in Warwickshire, in 1650, and educated at St. Paul's school, London, and Trinity college, Cambridge. In 1670 he obtained the living of Corringham in Essex, but he resided wholly in London, where he made himself conspicuous against the succession of the duke of York, and the measures of the court. Having written a book against the doctrine of passive obedience, under the title of Julian the Apostate, in which the duke was attacked, he was prosecuted and condemned to pay a fine of five hundred marks. When the army was encamped on Hounslow Heath, he published a free address of remonstrance to the soldiers in behalf of the protestant religion, for which he was tried and sentenced to stand twice in the pillory, to pay a heavy fine, to be degraded from his function, and whipped from Newgate to Tyburn. This severe sentence was rigorously inflicted; but at the revolution the parliament declared the proceedings illegal. He was also rewarded with a pension, and might have had the deanry of Durham, but he considered it as inadequate to his merits. He was an unquiet and ungrateful man, and died in 1703. His works were printed in 1 vol. folio, 1710.—Biog. Brit.

JOHNSON (John), a learned divine, was born in 1662, near Rochester, and educated at Cambridge, where he became fellow of Corpus Christi college. Archbishop Sandercock gave him two livings in Kent, and archbishop Tenison presented him to that of Margate. He had afterwards the vicarage of Cranbrook. He was twice chosen procurator in convocation for the diocese of Canterbury. On the accession of George I. he refused to take the oaths for some time, but finding that his non-compliance would bring him into trouble he submitted. He died in 1725. His works are; The Clergyman's Vade Mecum, 2 vols. 12mo.; A Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, Canons, &c. 2 vols. 8vo.; The unbodily Sacrifice and Altar unveiled and supported, 8vo.; A Paraphrase on the Psalms in the Liturgy, 8vo.—Gen. Biog. DiB.

JOHNSON (Martin), a landscape painter of great merit in the reign of James II. His views in England are very scarce and valuable, but only to be found in the collections of the curious.—Vernie. Walshe.

JOHNSON (Samuel), a learned critic, lexicographer, and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1706 at Litchfield, where his father was a bookseller. He was educated partly at the free school of Litchfield, and in 1728 admitted of Pembroke college, Oxford, which he left in 1731 without a degree. He soon after lost his father, who left him in such poor circumstances that he became usher of the school at Bosworth, where he did not continue long. We next find him residing with a printer at Birmingham, where he translated Lobo's account of Abyssi-finia. In 1735 he married a widow lady of that town, and the same year opened a school at Edgial near Litchfield, but he obtained only three scholars, one of whom was David Garrick. About this time he began his tragedy of Irene. In 1737 he set out for the metropolis accompanied by Garrick. On fixing his residence in London he formed a connection with Cave, the publisher of the Gentleman's Magazine, for which work he continued to write several years, his principal department being an account of the parliamentary debates. At this period he contracted an intimacy with Richard Savage, whose name he has immortalized by one of the most instructive pieces of biography ever written. In 1738 appeared his imitation of Juvenal's third Satire, under the title of London, a poem. In 1747 he printed proposals for an edition of Shakspeare, and the plan of his English Dictionary, addressed to lord Chesterfield. The price agreed upon between him and the booksellers for the last work was 157*l*. In 1749 Garrick brought his friend's tragedy on the stage at Drury-lane, but it was unsuccessful. In 1750 he commenced his Rambler; a periodical paper of uncommon beauty, which was continued till 1752. In this excellent work he had so little assistance that only five papers were the productions of other writers. Soon after the close of this paper he lost his wife, a circumstance which affected him sensibly, as appears from his Meditations, and the sermon which he wrote on her death. In 1755 appeared his Dictionary, and the same year the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of M.A. Lord Chesterfield also endeavoured to assist it by writing two papers in its favour in the World, but as he had neglected the author, Johnson treated him with contempt. The publication of this great work did not relieve the author from his embarrassments, for the price of his labour had been consumed in the progress of its compilation, and the year following we find him under an arrest for five guineas, from which he was released by Richardson the printer. In 1753 he began the Idler, a periodical paper, which was published in a weekly newspaper. On the death of his mother in 1759 he wrote the romance of Rasselas to defray the expences of her funeral, and to pay off her debts. In 1762 the king granted him a pension of 300*l*. per annum, without any stipulation with respect to his future literary exertions. Johnson had the honour of a conversation with the king in the royal library, in 1765, when his majesty asked if he intended to publish any more works? To this he answered, that he thought he had written enough; on which the king said, "so should I too, if you had not written so well." About this time he instituted the Literary Club, consisting of some of the most celebrated men of the age. In 1773 he went on a tour with Mr. Boswell to the western islands of Scotland, of which journey he shortly after published an account, which occasioned a difference between him and Macpherson relative to the poems of Ossian. In 1775 the university of Oxford sent him the degree of LL.D. by diploma, which had before been conferred on him by the university of Dublin. In 1779 he began his Lives of the English Poets, which work is a treasure of sound criticism, and a model of literary biography. After a long illness, during part of which he had fearful apprehensions of death, but at last his mind became calm, composed, and resigned, he died full of that faith which he had so vigorously defended and inculcated by his valuable writings, December 13, 1784. His remains were interred in Westminster-abbey, and a statue, with an appropriate inscription, has been erected to his memory in the cathedral of St. Paul. His works have been published in 13 volumes, 8vo. As a writer few have done such essential service to this country, by fixing its language and regulating its morality. In his person he was large, robust, and unwieldy. In his dress he was singular and slovenly. In conversation violent, positive, and impatient of contradiction. Yet with all his singularities he had an excellent heart, full of tenderness and compassion. All his actions were the result of principle. He was a stout advocate for truth, and a zealous champion for the christian religion as professed in the church of England. In politics he was a tory, and at one period of his life a friend to the house of Stuart. He had a noble independence of mind, and would never stoop to any man however exalted, or disguise his sentiments to flatter another. His judgment was uncommonly acute, his imagination quick and ready, his memory tenacious, and his conversation brilliant and instructive.—Life by Boswell, also by Harvinkins and Murphy.

JOHNSON (Charles), a lawyer and dramatic writer. He acquired some wealth by his plays, and having married a wealthy widow, he set up a tavern in Bow-street, Covent-garden. He died about 1744. Pope ridicules him in his Dunciad on account of his immoderate size.—Biog. Dram.

JOHNSON (Maurice), an English antiquary, was born at Spalding in Lincolnshire, of a good family, and was bred a barrister. He established a literary society at Spalding in 1712, and was one of the revivers of the antiquarian society, in 1717, to which he sent numerous literary contributions. He died in 1755.—Biblioth. Topog. Brit.

JOHNSON (Thomas), an English botanist, was born at Selby, in Yorkshire. He was:

brought up an apothecary in London, and became, says Wood, the best herbalist of his age. He wrote, Iter in Agrum Cantuariarum, 1629, and Ericetum Hamsteadianum, 1632, which were the first local catalogues of plants published in England. But his great work was a new and improved edition of Gerard's Herbal. In the civil wars he entered into the royal army; and the universality of Oxford conferred on him the degree of M.D. At the siege of Basing-house he was shot in the shoulder, and died of the wound in 1644. Besides the above, he wrote on the hot springs of Bath, and some other pieces.—Wood, Pullency. Granjer.

JOHNSTON (Arthur), a physician, was born near Aberdeen, in Scotland, and educated at that university; but he took his doctor's degree at Padua in 1610. In 1637, he published a translation of David's Psalms into Latin verse, dedicated to archbishop Laud, who procured him the appointment of physician to Charles I. He died at Oxford in 1641.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

JOHNSTONE (George), a naval commander, was the son of a Scotch baronet, and devoted himself to the sea service. After passing through the subordinate stations, he was, in 1760, made master and commander, and in 1762, a post-captain. On the peace next year he was appointed governor of West Florida; and on his return to England he took an active part in the affairs of the East India company, particularly in opposition to lord Clive. In 1771 he wrote Thoughts on our Acquisitions in the East Indies, particularly respecting Bengal, 8vo. He sat in parliament first for Cockermouth, and afterwards for Appleby, and had a duel with lord George Germaine, for some reflections which fell from him in the house, respecting his lordship. He was one of the commissioners sent to treat with the Americans. He died in 1787.—Europ. Mag. Nov. 1789.

JOINVILLE (John, Sire de), a French historian, was born at Champagne, about 1260. He was one of the lords of the court of Louis IX. whom he accompanied in most of his expeditions. He died in 1318. Joinville wrote the History of St. Louis in French, which was published by Du Cange in 1668, folio, and again in 1761.—Moreri.

JOLY (Claude), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1607. He was made precentor of the cathedral at Paris, and died there in 1700. He wrote a book entitled, Maxims for the Education of a Prince, which was burnt by the hangman in 1665. He was the author of some other pieces, chiefly religious. He is not to be confounded with GUY JOLY, secretary to cardinal de Retz, and who wrote Memoirs of his Own Times.—Moreri.

JONAH, the fifth of the minor prophets, lived under Joash and Jeroboam II. kings of Israel. Being sent by the divine command to prophesy against Nineveh, he disobeyed, and embarked in a ship for Tarshish, when a storm arose, which he knew was a judgment on him, and therefore, at his request the mariners threw him into the sea, and he was instantly swallowed up by a large fish, which three days after discharged him again on dry land. On going to Nineveh and delivering his message, the people repented, and the Lord's anger was averted. The gourd under which Jonah sat to watch for the destruction of the city, was probably the plant called Palma Christi. He died about 761 B.C.—Gray's Key to O.T.

JONAS (Anagrimus), a native of Iceland, and a writer of considerable merit. He was coadjutor to Gundebbrand, bishop of Holum, who was a disciple of Tycho Brahe. Jonas refused that see after the death of his friend, and died in 1640, aged 95. He wrote, Idea veri Magistratus; Brevis Commentarius de Islandia; Anatome Blekeniana; Vita Gundebbrandi Thoracii Islandia, seu Descriptio Popularum, et Memorabilium hujus Insule; Specimen Islandicæ historicum, &c.—Bayle.

JONAS (Justus), a learned protestant, was born at Northausen in Thuringia in 1493. In 1521 he became principal of the college of Wittemberg, and assisted Melancthon afterwards at Marburg. He zealously defended the doctrines of Luther, and died in 1555.—M. l. b. Adam. vit. Germ. Theol.

JONATHAN, the son of Saul, and the intimate friend of David, whom he saved from his father's fury at the hazard of his own life. He fell with Saul in fighting against the Philistines, 1055 B.C.—Bible.

JONATHAN, son of Matthias, and brother of Judas Maccabeus, a famous Jewish general. He compelled Bacchides, the Syrian commander, to sue for peace; defeated Demetrius Soter, and his general Apollonius. At length he fell by treachery into the hands of Tryphon, who after receiving a large sum as a ransom for him, put him to death, B.C. 144.—Josephus. Maccabeus.

JONES (Inigo), a famous architect, was born in London about 1572. He was brought up a carpenter, but recommending himself to the notice of the earl of Pembroke, he sent him to Italy, where he acquired a great knowledge of architecture. James I. appointed him surveyor-general of the works, and in the succeeding reign he had the charge of rebuilding St. Paul's cathedral, which had been burnt. He was also made manager of the masques and interludes at court, which brought upon him the anger and satire of Ben Jonson, who ridiculed him in his comedy of Bartholomew Fair, under the name of Lantern Leatherhead. He suffered considerably for his loyalty in the time of the great rebellion. He died in 1652. In 1655 appeared his Discourse on Stoucheage, in which he attempts to prove it a Roman temple. He designed the palace of Whitehall and the Banqueting-house, the church and piazza of Covent-garden, and many other fine buildings. The principal of his designs were published in 1727, folio, and some in 1744, folio.—Biog. Brit.

JONES (William), an eminent mathematician, was born in the isle of Anglesea in 1675. He settled in London as a school-master, and having instructed lord Macclesfield's son in the mathematics, that nobleman made him his secretary, and appointed him deputy teller of the exchequer. He was very intimate with sir Isaac Newton, and was chosen a fellow of the royal society. He died in 1749. His works are; A Compendium of the Art of Navigation, 8vo. 1702; Synopsis Palmariorum Mathematicarum, or a New Introduction to the Mathematics, 8vo. 1706; several papers in the Philosophical Transactions; An Analysis of several of sir Isaac Newton's papers, entitled Analysis de quantitatem Series, Fluxiones, ac Differentias; cum enumeratione Linearum Tertii Ordinis.—Gen. Biog. Dist. Hutton.

JONES (sir William), a judge and learned writer, was the son of the preceding, and born in London in 1748. Losing his father in his infancy, the care of him devolved on his mother, a woman of great virtue and understanding, from whom he learned the rudiments of knowledge, and then was removed to Harrow school, where he made so great a progress in his studies that Dr. Sumner, the master, affirmed that his pupil knew more Greek than himself. In 1764 he left Harrow, and was entered of University college, Oxford, where to his classical pursuits he added the study of the Persian and Arabic languages, also the Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese. At the age of 19 he became tutor to lord Althorpe, now earl Spencer, and during his residence at Wimbledon in that noble family he read the greatest part of the Old Testament in Hebrew. In 1769 he made the tour of France, and about the same time he undertook, at the request of the king of Denmark, to translate the History of Nadir Shah from Persian into French. In 1770 he entered on the study of the law at the Temple, but still continued his application to oriental learning and literature in general. In 1774 he published his Commentaries on Asiatic Poetry, dedicated to the university of Oxford. In 1779 he published his translation of the Speeches of Iseus, from the Greek, with notes; and the year following, An Inquiry into the legal Mode of suppressing Riots, occasioned by the disgraceful scenes which happened that year in the metropolis. About this time he was invited to offer himself as a candidate to represent the university of Oxford in parliament; but another interest appearing more likely to prevail, he declined. In 1793 he obtained the appointment of a judge of the supreme court at Calcutta, a situation which had been the object of his anxious wishes. The honour of knighthood was on this occasion conferred upon him, and he soon after married Anna Maria Shipley, daughter of the bishop of St. Asaph. In April of that year he embarked for India, leaving his native country, to which he was never to return. On the voyage his active mind projected the establishment of a society in Bengal for the purpose chiefly of illustrating oriental antiquities and literature. This scheme he had the happiness to see carried into complete effect, and under his auspices, and by his direction, it acquired a high reputation. The volumes of its Transactions are inestimable, and are enriched by several valuable productions from his pen. As a judge he was indefatigable and impartial. He studied the native laws of the country, and became so versed in the Sanscrit and the codes of the Brahmins as to gain the admiration of the most learned men in that country. To his vast acquirements and enlarged mind he added the humility and sincere faith of a christian. He was firmly persuaded of the truth of the scriptures, to whose divine authority he bore testimony, and supported it by proofs and researches that are invincible. This excellent man died in India in 1794. His works were collected and published in 6 vols. 4to. 1799, and his Life written by sir John Shore, lord Teignmouth, in one volume, 4to. in 1804. A beautiful monument has been erected to his memory in St. Paul's cathedral by the East India Company.

JONES (William), an English divine, was born at Lowick in Northamptonshire, in 1726. He received his education at the Charterhouse, from whence, at the age of 18, he removed on an exhibition to University college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and in 1749 entered into orders. His first situation was on the curacy of Finedon in Northamptonshire, where in 1753 he wrote his Answer to bishop Clayton's Essay on Spirit, which is a tract of considerable merit. The year following he married the daughter of the Rev. Brook Bridges, and went to reside at Wadenhoe as curate to his wife's brother. Here he wrote his Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity, which, though repeatedly printed, has never been answered. In 1762 he published An Essay on the first Principles of Natural Philosophy, in which he espoused the Hutchinsonian system. This work he completed in 1781 by his Physiological Disquisitions, or Discourses of the Natural Philosophy of the Elements. Archbishop Secker gave him the vicarage of Betheredon in Kent, in 1764, and soon after the rectory of Pluckley in that county. Some years afterwards he removed to Nayland in Suffolk, and exchanged Pluckley for Paston in Northamptonshire, though he continued to reside at Nayland. When Dr. Horne became bishop of Norwich he appointed his old friend Mr. Jones his domestic chaplain, and he has embalmed the memory of his patron by an excellent memoir of his life. At the desire of that pious prelate he published two volumes of sermons in 1790. When the French revolution broke out, and democratical principles began to spread in this country, Mr. Jones wrote some seasonable pamphlets, and published a valuable collection of tracts, entitled, The Scholar Armed, 2 vols. 8vo. To him also that excellent work the British Critic owed its origin. At the request of lord Kenyon he became tutor to his sons, the eldest of whom, a very promising young man, died not long after, to the great grief both of his father and tutor. In 1798 the archbishop of Canterbury presented Mr. Jones to the sinecure rectory of Hollingbourne in Kent. This worthy and pious divine died on the morning of the Epiphany in 1801. All his works have been collected and published in 12 vols. 8vo. with his life prefixed.

JONES (Jeremiah), a learned dissenting divine, is supposed to have been a native of the north of England. He received his education under his uncle, the Rev. Sam. Jones, of Tewksbury, the tutor of bishops Chandler, Butler, and Secker. On leaving his uncle he became minister of a congregation at Avening in Gloucestershire, but resided at Nailsworth, where he kept an academy. Though a deep scholar and hard student, he was a man of pleasant manners, and regularly attended a bowling party near his residence. He died in 1724, aged 31. His works are: 1. A Vindication of the former part of St. Matthew's Gospel from Mr. Whiston's Charge of Dislocations, &c. 1719; 2. A new and full Method of settling the Canonical Authority of the Old Testament, 3 vols. 8vo. 1726. These volumes having become very scarce, were lately reprinted at the Clarendon press, Oxford.—Monthly Mag. April 1803.

JONES (Paul), a naval adventurer, was a native of Selkirk in Scotland, but settling in America he in 1775 obtained from congress the command of a ship under commodore Hopkins, and distinguished himself in several engagements, for which in 1776 he received his commission as captain of the marine. He then sailed for France, and, being well acquainted with the Irish coast, and the northern part of England, he conceived the design of effecting a descent. He accordingly landed at Whitehaven, and having dismantled a fort, set fire to some shipping in the harbour. From thence he sailed for Scotland, where he landed on the estate of the earl of Selkirk, and plundered his lordship's house of all the plate. He next took the Drake ship of war off Carrickfergus, with which he returned to Brest. He afterwards sailed round Ireland into the North Sea with three ships, the Richard, Pallas, and Vengeance. Having committed great mischief on that coast he fell in with the Baltic fleet, convoyed by the Serapis frigate and the Countess of Scarborough armed ship, both of which, after a severe action, he captured off Flamborough-head. For these services the king of France conferred on him the military order of merit, and gave him a gold-bitted sword. The career of his exploits finished with the American war, and some private affairs calling him to Europe, he died at Paris in 1792.—Monthly Mag. Sept. 1802. Dict. par L'Euay.

JONES (John), a medical writer, who was born in Wales, and took his doctor's degree at Cambridge. He died about 1580. He wrote; The Diall of Agues, 1556; A Discourse of the natural Beginning of all growing and living Things; A translation of Galen's four books of Elements.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

JONES (sir William), an English judge, who wrote Reports of Cases in the king's bench and common pleas, folio. He was made a justice of the common pleas in 1634, and removed to the king's bench in 1627. He is not to be confounded with sir Thomas Jones, lord chief justice of the common pleas in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. When the last-mentioned monarch consulted him on his dispensing power, and said that he could soon have twelve judges of his opinion, sir Thomas answered, "Twelve judges you may possibly find, sir, but not twelve lawyers." He was also author of Reports.—Granger.

JONES (Henry), a dramatic writer, was born at Drogheda in Ireland, and was originally a bricklayer. Some of his poetical attempts attracting the notice of lord Chesterfield, then lord lieutenant of Ireland, he took him under his patronage, and brought him to London, where he published his poems by subscription, and produced his tragedy of the Earl of Essex, which gained him wealth and reputation. However, he died poor in 1770, and was buried by charity. He is not to be confounded with John Jones, who wrote in the time of Charles I. a play called Adraste, or the Woman's Spleen.—Biog. Dram.

JONES (Griffith), a writer, was born in 1731, and died in 1786. He was many years editor of the London Chronicle and other papers. He had also a concern in the Literary Magazine, and, with a brother of his, projected those useful little publications for children, which were so successfully printed by Mr. John Newbery.—Gen. B. D.

JONES (Richard), a Welsh divine, who compiled in his native language a curious work, called Gemma Cambrium, containing a summary of all the books and chapters of the Bible. He was matriculated of Jesus college, Oxford, in 1621, and died in Ireland, about 1652.—Wood.

JONES (John), an English benedictine monk, was born in London, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he was elected to St. John's college, Oxford, in 1591: but his inclination leading him to the Roman catholic religion, he went to Spain, where he entered into the order of St. Benedict, changed his name to Leander de Sanctis Martino, and became D.D. He was afterwards professor of Hebrew and divinity, and vicar-general of his order. He died in London in 1636. His works are; Sacra ars Memorizæ ad Scripturas divinas in promptu habendas memoriterque edificandas, accommodata, 8vo; Conciliatio Locorum communium totius Scripturæ; and the Bible with Glosses, in 6 vols. folio.—Wood, A. O

JONES (David), a Welsh poet, was a native of Caernarvonshire, and flourished from about 1750 to 1780. He was the editor of two collections of Welsh poetry, and formed a large collection of ancient MSS. in that language.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

JONES (John), a Welsh antiquary, who continued transcribing old manuscripts for about forty years, as appears from some of his volumes dated variously from 1590 to 1630. Of his collection above fifty large volumes are still in existence.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

JONES (Rice), a native of Merionethshire, and an eminent Welsh poet, died in 1801, aged 86. In 1770 he published a Welsh Anthology, in quarto, containing selections from the poets of different periods.—Ibid.

JONGE (Ludolph de), a painter, was born in Holland in 1619. His abilities were great in portrait painting, and he acquired a considerable fortune by his profession. He died in 1697.—Pilkington.

JONGHE (Baldwin), or Junius, a franciscan monk, was born at Dordt in Holland, and died at Brussels in 1634. He wrote, Tuba Concionatorum, Sententiarum Catholicarum Fidei, and several books of practical divinity.—Moreri.

JONIN (Gilbert), a jesuit and poet, was born in 1596, and died at Tournon in 1638. He wrote odes, epodes, elegies, and enigmas, in elegant Latin, and translated Anacreon into that language.—Baillet, Jugemens des Savans.

JONIVS (John), a learned writer of the 17th century, was born at Holstein, and educated at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, where he died young in 1659. He wrote The History of Philosophers, in Latin, a work exact and judicious.—Moreri.

JONSON (Benjamin), an English comic poet, was born in Westminster in 1574. His father was a clergyman, and died about a month before the birth of our poet, who received his education at Westminster school, but his mother marrying again, his father-in-law, who was a bricklayer, compelled him to work at his business. This proving disagreeable to him he lifted for a soldier, and went to the Netherlands, where he distinguished himself by his courage. On his return he went to St. John's college, Cambridge, but did not remain there long, owing to his extreme poverty. He then turned his attention to the stage, and became both a player and dramatic writer, but with very indifferent success till Shakspeare gave him his assistance. His first printed play was his comedy of Every Man in his Humour, after which he produced a new piece annually for several years. He engaged with Chapman and Marston in writing a comedy called Eastward Hoe, which being construed into a satire on the Scotch nation, had nearly brought the authors to the pillory. At the accession of James I. Jonson had the honour of preparing the spectacle for his entertainment on his passage from the Tower to Westminster-abbey, and he continued to have the management of all the masques and public shows during that and the succeeding reign. In 1615 he was made poet laureat; the salary of which he afterwards procured to be raised from a hundred marks to as many pounds, with a butt of Canary wine. In 1619 the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of M.A. Notwithstanding his pension and the profits of his performances, he was generally poor, and sometimes was in such distressed circumstances as to be relieved by the king's bounty. He died in 1637, and was buried in Westminster-abbey, and on his grave-stone is the following inscription:

O! rare Ben Jonson!

His works, consisting of plays, poems, and some pieces in prose, were published in 1756, in 7 vols. 8vo. by the Rev. Mr. Whalley.—Biog. Brit.

JOINSTON (John), an eminent naturalist and physician, was born at Samsler, in Poland, in 1603, and died in Silesia, in 1675. He published the Natural History of Birds, Fishes, Quadrupeds, Insects, &c. 5 vols. folio, 1653; a Treatise on Trees and Fruits, fol. 1662.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JORAM, king of Israel, succeeded his brother Ahaziah, 896 B.C. He defeated the Moabites; but the Syrians under Benhadad so closely besieged him in Samaria, that the people were reduced to the last stage of famine. In this exigency the king sent to slay Elisha, as the author of his calamity, but the prophet predicted a speedy deliverance, which accordingly happened. Joram fell into gross idolatry, and cruelty, and was wounded in fighting against Hazael, king of Syria, and died, but was slain by his own general Jehu, 884 B.C.—Bible.

JORAM, king of Judah, succeeded his father Jehoshaphat, 849 B.C. He married

Athaliah, daughter of Ahab, and was an idolater and tyrant. The Edomites revolted from him, and he was also attacked by the Philistines. He died of a tormenting disease, B. C. 885.—Bible.

JORDENS (James), a celebrated painter, was born at Antwerp in 1594. He was the disciple of Adam van Oort, and afterwards of Rubens. He painted with extraordinary freedom, ease, and expedition; there is a brilliancy and harmony in his colouring, and a good understanding of the chiaro-scuro. His composition is rich, and his expression natural and strong, but his designs want elegance and taste. Many of his pieces are preserved in the churches of Antwerp, and other cities of the Netherlands. He died in 1678.—Filkington.

JORDAN (sir Joseph), a gallant English admiral, who, by his presence of mind and valour, gained the celebrated battle of Solebay, in 1672. The advantage was long on the side of the Dutch fleet, as the English were overpowered by numbers; but sir Joseph fell into the midst of the enemy, and throwing them into confusion, the fortune of the day was reversed, and the English gained the victory.—Granger.

JORDAN (Charles Stephen), a Prussian writer, originally of a French family, was born at Berlin in 1700. He became vice-president of the academy of sciences at Berlin, where he died in 1746. Frederick the Great caused a monument to be erected to his memory with this inscription: "Here lies JORDAN, the friend of the muses, and of the king." That monarch also composed a handsome eulogy upon him, in which he bestows upon his talents and virtues a great encomium. He wrote, Literary Travels in France, England, and Holland, with Satirical Anecdotes, 12mo; A Miscellany of Literature, Philosophy, and History, 12mo; and the Life of M. de la Croze.—Newb. Dict. Hist.

JORDAN (Thomas), a dramatic writer in the reign of Charles I. He wrote two comedies and a masque, mentioned by Langbaine with respect.—Biog. Dram.

JORDAN (John Christopher), an able antiquary, was privy-counsellor to the king of Bohemia. He wrote several chronological works, and illustrated some of the ancient historians. He died in 1740.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

JORDANO (Luca), a famous Italian painter, was born at Naples in 1632. He studied the manner of Pietro da Cortona, but chiefly the works of Paul Veronese. The king of Spain employed him to paint the Escorial, and in several other great works, by which he acquired considerable wealth. He died at Naples in 1705.—Pilkington.

JORDEN (Edward), an English physician, was born at High Halden in Kent in 1569, and educated at Hart hall, Oxford, but he took his doctor's degree at Padua, and afterwards settled in London, from whence he removed to Bath, where he died in 1632. He wrote, a Brief Discourse of a Disease, called the Suffocation of the Mother, 4to; Discourse of Natural Baths, and Mineral Waters, 4to. 1631; afterwards reprinted in 8vo. by Guidott, who added thereto a Treatise Concerning the Bath; wherein the Antiquity both of the Baths and the City is discovered, 1669.—Wood, A. O.

JORNANDES, a Goth, who in the reign of Justinian wrote a work, entitled, De Rebus Gothicis, and another de Origine Mundi, et de Rerum et Temporum successionem, 1617, 8vo.—Moreri.

JORTIN (John), an eminent divine, was born in London in 1698, and educated at the Charter-house, from whence he removed at the age of 17 to Jesus college, Cambridge, where he was elected fellow, and took his degrees in arts. While he was under-graduate he translated for Mr. Pope, some of Eustathius's Notes on Homer. In 1732 he was appointed moderator, and taxor the year following. In this year he published some Latin poems, in quarto, under the title of Lusus Poetici, which went through three editions, but were not published, being given as presents to friends. About this time he entered into orders, and in 1736 was presented by his college to the living of Swavesey, near Cambridge, which he resigned in 1739, on going to reside in London, where he officiated at a chapel in Bloomsbury. In 1730 he published four Sermons on the truth of the Christian Religion; and the year following, Miscellaneous Observations upon Authors, Ancient and Modern, 2 vols. 8vo. In 1734 appeared his Remarks upon Spenser's Poems, with some Remarks on Milton. In 1737 he obtained the rectory of Eastwell, in Kent, which he soon resigned, the air of that place not agreeing with his health. In 1746 he was appointed afternoon preacher at Oxendon chapel in the parish of St. Martin in the Fields. This year he published six Discourses on the Truth of the Christian Religion, 8vo. The next year he became assistant to Dr. Warburton at Lincoln's-inn. In 1749 he was appointed to preach the Boyle's lecture, which he held for three years. In 1751 archbishop Herring gave him the rectory of St. Dunstan in the East; and about this time he published the first volume of his Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, which he continued to 5 vols. In 1755 appeared his six Dissertations on Different Subjects, and the same year the archbishop conferred on him the degree of D.D. In 1758 appeared his Life of Erasmus, in 2 vols. 4to. Dr. Osbaldiston, bishop of London, made him his chaplain in 1762, gave him a prebend in St. Paul's, and the living of Kennington, to which, in 1764, was added the archdeaconry of London. Dr. Jortin died Sept. 5, 1744, and was buried in Kenfington church-yard. Seven volumes of his sermons were published after his death, and two volumes of posthumous tracts. A uniform edition of his works is now at press.—Nichols's Anecd. of Bortyer.

JOSEPH, the favourite son of the patriarch Jacob, by Rachel, was hated by his brethren, to whom being sent by his father when they were attending their flocks, they designed to put him to death, but were diverted from their project by Reuben. In Reuben's absence they sold him to some Midianitish merchants, and having dipped Joseph's coat in blood, carried it to his father, who lamented grievously, thinking he had been slain by a wild beast. Joseph was sold in Egypt to Potiphar, a lord of the court, who made him steward of his affairs; but his mistress falling in love with him, and he resisting her criminal desires, she accused him to his master of having attempted her virtue, on which he was thrown into prison; there he interpreted the dreams of the king's butler and baker, which came true; and Pharaoh having been perplexed by an extraordinary dream, the butler mentioned Joseph, who explained the mystery, and was made prime minister of Egypt. His brethren coming to Egypt during a famine, prostrated themselves before him. After different interviews he discovered himself to them, and sent for his father and all the family, whom he settled in the province of Goshen. Joseph married the daughter of the priest or prince of On, by whom he had the two patriarchs, Ephraim and Manasseh. He governed Egypt with great wisdom till his death, which happened B. C. 1636. Moses, agreeably to the dying command of Joseph, carried up his bones out of Egypt, and laid them with Jacob's in Canaan.—Genesis. Exodus.

JOSEPH, the husband of Mary, the mother of Jesus Christ, was of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David. St. Matthew calls his father Jacob, and St. Luke gives him the name of Heli, which is thus explained, Heli and Jacob were brothers, and the first dying without children, the second married the widow according to the law of Moses. Thus Jacob was his natural father, but he passed for the son of Heli, agreeably to the Jewish law.—New Testament.

JOSEPH of Arimathea, a counsellor, who went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, which he laid in his own sepulchre. He afterwards joined the disciples, and died at Jerusalem.—New Testament.

JOSEPH I. and the 15th emperor of Germany, of the house of Austria, was the son of the emperor Leopold, and crowned king of Hungary in 1687, elected king of the Romans in 1690, and ascended the imperial throne on the death of his father in 1705. He engaged in his interests Savoy, England, and Holland, against France, in support of the claim of the archduke Charles to the crown of Spain, in which war the allies were very successful. In 1706 he put the electors of Bavaria and Cologne to the ban of the empire for taking part with France, and having deprived those princes of a great part of their estates, bestowed the same on his relations and favourites. He made himself master of Italy, and levied heavy contributions on Mantua, Parma, Modena, Lucca, Genoa, and other places. His armies also defeated the revolted Hungarians, headed by prince Bagotzki, who was forced to take refuge in Turkey. In the midst of all these successes Joseph was taken off by the small-pox, April 17, 1711, aged 33.—Univ. Hist. Nov. Dict. Hist.

JOSEPH II. emperor of Germany, was the son of the emperor Leopold and of Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary, and archduchess of Austria. He was crowned king of the Romans in 1764, and the year following succeeded his father in the empire. He early displayed great talents and activity by new modelling the armies, and introducing several wise regulations in all the departments of government. He also made excursions through his dominions, and visited foreign countries, as Prussia, Italy, France, and Russia. Among other excellent regulations which he adopted, was the setting apart one day every week to receive petitions, and to hear complaints from his subjects. In 1771 Germany suffered the horrors of a famine, yet amidst this calamity the emperor joined Prussia and Russia in the dismemberment of Poland. In 1780, by the death of the empress queen, he succeeded to the crown of Hungary and Bohemia. The year following he issued a decree in favour of the liberty of the press, which was followed by others equally liberal, particularly one of toleration. In a journey to the Netherlands the emperor gained the love and admiration of the people by his courtesy and generosity to all classes. On this visit he declared Ostend a free port, and ordered several improvements to be made in the harbour at his own expence. He afterwards demanded from the Dutch the free navigation of the Scheldt, but in this design he failed. On his return to Vienna he abolished the system of vasalage, by which the peasants of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia, had for centuries been kept in a state of slavery. This measure was followed by an imperial edict, disclaiming all secular subjection to the court of Rome, and the suppression of many monasteries, and the regulation of others. On this remarkable occasion pope Pius VI. made a journey to Vienna, to alter the emperor's designs, but though pompously received, he could not effect his purpose. In 1786 the emperor followed up his attack on the papal authority, by an assembly of the ecclesiastical princes at Ratibon, in which it was resolved to withdraw themselves from the jurisdiction of the pope. In 1788, a declaration of war was published at Vienna against the Turks, and the same year the emperor in person reduced Schabatz; but this was followed by the defeat of prince Linchenstein, who fell in the action. Soon after this a bloody battle was fought for four days between the Imperialists and Turks, on the heights of Rohadin, in which neither could claim the victory. Joseph next made an attempt to possess himself of Belgrade, but without success. Marshal Laudohn taking upon him the command of the army, restored confidence to the Austrian soldiers, who took Durbieza and Novi. In 1789, Laudohn reduced Belgrade; but soon after a peace was concluded, chiefly occasioned by the discontented spirit which prevailed in Germany at such a waste of men and treasure. In February following the emperor died of a lingering illness, which he endured with christian fortitude and resignation. He was succeeded by his brother Peter Leopold, grand duke of Tuscany.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JOSEPH king of Portugal, of the family of Braganza, was born in 1717, ascended the throne in 1750, and died in 1777. A conspiracy, which was formed against him in 1751, occasioned the expulsion of the jesuits from his dominions. He had afterwards a dispute with the court of Rome, and a war with Spain, in which he was supported by England.—Univ. Hist.

JOSEPH (Ben Gorion), a Jewish historian, whom the rabbins falsely confound with Flavius Josephus. He lived at the close of the 5th century, and wrote in Hebrew a History of the Jews, which bears evident marks of being an abridgement of Josephus's larger work. It was published in a Latin version by Gagnier at Oxford in 1706, 8vo. and in Hebrew and Latin at Gotha in 1707, 4to.—Moreri.

JOSEPH of Paris, a famous capuchin commonly called Father Joseph, who was employed by cardinal Richelieu in most of his political intrigues. Louis XIII. procured him a cardinal's hat, but he died of an apoplexy before he received it, in 1638.—Moreri.

JOSEPH (father), an apostate monk of Hungary, who headed a numerous banditti, about 1678, whom he called the people of God, and assuming to himself the name of Joshua, he entered the Austrian dominions, where he committed dreadful outrages, burning churches, putting priests to death, and despoiling nuns, and all under pretence of zeal for true religion. The motley crew were at last dispersed, on the sudden death of their leader.—Ibid.

JOSEPHUS (Flavius) a Jewish historian, was born of a priestly family at Jerusalem about A. D. 37. He received a liberal education among the Pharisees, after which he went to Rome, where he cultivated his natural talents to great advantage. On his return to his own country, he commanded the troops employed to defend Jotapat against Vespasian and Titus, which he maintained bravely seven weeks. Vespasian took him into favour, and he was also held in great esteem by Titus, whom he accompanied to the siege of Jerusalem, at the taking of which he obtained the sacred books, and many favours for his countrymen. When Vespasian became emperor he gave Josephus a palace, with a large pension, the freedom of the city, and a grant of lands in Judea. Titus added to these favours, and Josephus out of gratitude assumed the name of Flavius. During his residence at Rome he wrote his History of the Wars of the Jews, first in Syriac, and afterwards in Greek. Its style approaches nearest to that of Livy. He also wrote the Antiquities of the Jews, in which it is supposed there are some interpolations of modern transcribers, particularly with regard to what is said of our Saviour. He wrote likewise two books in defence of the Jews against Apion, and his own Life. The best editions of his works are Hudson's at Oxford, 2 vols. fol. 1720, and Havercamp's at Amsterdam, 1727, 2 vols. fol. Josephus died A. D. 93.—Moreri.

JOSHUA, the son of Nun, of the tribe of Benjamin. He succeeded Moses as the leader of the Israelites, whom he conducted into Canaan, and signalized himself by his valour and his prudence. He died in the 110th year of his age, B. C. 1424. The book bearing his name is usually ascribed to him, also the concluding part of Deuteronomy.—Gray's Key O. T.

JOSEPH, king of Judah, succeeded his father Ammon, B. C. 641, at the age of eight years. He destroyed the idols, and restored the worship of the true God, established virtuous magistrates for the administration of justice, and repaired the temple. He also caused the law of Moses to be sought for and preserved. He was wounded in a battle which he fought at Megiddo, against Necho king of Egypt, of which he died, B. C. 610.—Bible.

JOUBERT (Laurence), physician to the king of France, was born at Valence in Dauphiny, in 1529. On the death of Rondelet in 1562, he became regius professor of physic at Montpellier, and Henry III. appointed him his physician. He died in 1582. His works make 2 vols. folio.—Mar.

JOUBERT (Francis), a priest of Montpellier, was born in 1689. He was a zealous jansenist, and on that account was confined for some time in the Bastille. He wrote a Commentary on the Revelations, and other works, and died in 1763.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JOUBERT (Bartholomew Catherine), a French general, was born at Pont-de-Vaux in the department of Ain in 1769. He was bred to the law, which profession he quitted for the army, and in 1789 commenced his military career as a grenadier, from whence he rose by degrees to be general in chief. He seconded Buonaparte in the conquest of Italy, and signalized himself at Millesimo, Ceva, Montebaldo, Rivoli, and the Tirol. He was opposed to the Russian general Suwarrow, but was slain at the commencement of the battle of Novi in 1799.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JOUSSE (Daniel), a French lawyer, was born at Orleans in 1704, and died in 1781. He published many works in the line of his profession.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JOUVENCY (Joseph), a French jesuit, was born in 1643, and died at Rome in 1719. In an apology which he published he defended Chastel, who attempted the life of Henry IV. and calls him a martyr. He continued the History of the Jesuits, and wrote some other works.—Moreri.

JOUVENET (John), a French painter, was descended from an Italian family of that profession, and born at Rouen in 1641. His first instructions were derived from his father, but he afterwards improved himself under le Brun. He passed through all the offices of the academy, and at last became one of the perpetual rectors. He died at Paris in 1717.—D'Argenville.

JOVLANUS (Flavius Claudius), a Roman emperor, was born in Pannonia, of a noble family, in 331. He was elected emperor by the Roman soldiers after the death of Julian, but refused the dignity unless they turned christians, to which they consented. He made a disadvantageous peace with Persia, shut up the heathen temples, and recalled the banished clergy. He died after reigning seven months, owing to the suffocating vapour of burning charcoal which had been placed in his room, A. D. 364. It was not to his credit that he burnt a famous library at Antioch.—Ammianus Marcellinus. Grovier.

JOVINIAN, a monk of Milan in the 4th century, who after leading a life of great austerity, debauched a number of women, and procured many disciples. He held that the body of our Saviour was not real flesh, but a phantom, and that it was lawful to indulge in all manner of sensual pleasures, with many other errors equally offensive to good morals, on which account the emperor Honorius ordered him and his followers to be scourged and banished. Jovinian died in Dalmatia of a debauch, A. D. 406. He wrote several books which were refuted by Jerome.—Cave. Dujin.

JOVIUS (Paul), an eminent historian, was born at Como in Lombardy, in 1483. Having received an excellent education, he went to Rome, where he wrote his piece, De Piscibus Romanis. He received a pension from Francis I. king of France, and Clement VII. gave him the bishopric of Nocera, which dignity he disgraced by his course of life, being much given to women. He died in 1452, and was interred at Florence. His greatest work is a history of his own time, in folio, 3 vols. Strasbourg, 1556. It is written in an admirable style, but must be read with caution. He also wrote the Lives of Illustrious Men. His brother Benedict wrote the History of Switzerland.—Moreri.

JOYEUSE (Anne de), a French duke, and admiral of France, who distinguished himself by many gallant exploits. He was killed in an expedition against the huguenots in 1587.—Moreri.

JOYNER (William), otherwise Lyde, was born at Oxford in 1622, and became fellow of Magdalen college, but on turning Roman catholic he went abroad. He returned at the restoration, and retired to an obscure village in Buckinghamshire, where he led a life of devotion, and died in 1706. He wrote, 1. The Roman Empress, a comedy, 1670, 4to.; 2. Observations on the Life of Cardinal Pole, 8vo. 1686; 3. Miscellaneous Poems, English and Latin.—Wool. A. O.

JUAN (George), a knight of Malta, who accompanied Don Anthony de Ulloa and the French mathematicians to Peru to ascertain the figure of the earth. He published, Astronomical Observations on this voyage, prefixed to Ulloa's Historical Narrative. He also wrote a treatise on the Construction and Management of Ships. He died at Madrid in 1773.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JUBA, king of Mauritania and Numidia. He took the part of Pompey against Cæsar, for which he was driven from his throne, and killed himself, B. C. 42.—Suetonius. Plut.

JUBA, son of the preceding, was carried prisoner to Rome by Cæsar. He there became the favourite of Augustus, who gave him for a wife Cleopatra, daughter of Antony, and restored him to his throne. He wrote the History of Arabia, on the Antiquities of Syria, the History of Rome, and other works in Greek, fragments of which are extant.—Vossius de Hist. Græc. Bayle.

JUDA (Leo), a protestant minister at Zurich, was the son of a priest in Alsace, by his concubine, born in 1482, and died in 1542. He was learned in the Hebrew, and translated the Old Testament from that language. He also wrote against Erasmus, who had reproached him for changing his religion.—Melch. Adam. in Vit. Theol. Germ.

JUDA-MARKADOSSU, or the saint, a famous rabbi in the time of the emperor Antoninus, to whom he was preceptor. He is said to have been the original compiler of the Mischna, or the Talmudical text, of which the best edition is that of Surenhusius, 1698, 5 vols. folio.—Moreri.

JUDAH-CHING, a celebrated rabbi and grammarian of the 11th century. He was a native of Fez, and wrote many works, particularly an Arabic Dictionary. He was called the prince of Jewish grammarians.—Ibid.

JUDAH, the fourth son of Jacob and Leah, was the head of a tribe, to which his father gave this famous promise, "that the sceptre should not depart from it till Messiah or Shiloh should come," which was fulfilled in Jesus Christ. He died 1636 B. C. aged 119 years.—Bible.

JUDAS ISCARIOT, so called from the place of his birth, a city in the tribe of Ephraim. He was one of the disciples of Jesus Christ, and purse-bearer. His avaricious disposition led him to betray his master to the Jews for thirty pieces of silver; but when he found that Jesus was condemned, he was seized with remorse, gave back the wages of his iniquity, and went and hanged himself.—New Testament.

JUDE (St.), an apostle of Jesus Christ, was called Lebbaeus, Thaddeus, or the Zealous. He was the brother of St. James the Less, and preached the gospel in Mesopotamia, Arabia, Syria, Idumea, and Libya. He is said to have suffered martyrdom at Berytus, A. D. 80. An epistle of his stands in the sacred canon as the last of the seven general epistles.—Greeks.

JUDE (Mathew), a learned German, was born in Misnia in 1528. He became a teacher in the university of Magdeburg, and also a minister, but died at the age of 36, in 1534. He was the author of many books, and had a considerable share in the two first Centuries of Magdeburg, a famous work so called, in 8 vols folio, Basil.—Bayle.

JUGLARS (Aloysius), an Italian jesuit, was born at Nice. He became preceptor to prince Charles Emanuel of Savoy, and died at Messina in 1653. He wrote, Panegyrics on Jesus Christ, on Louis XIII. and several bishops.—Moreri.

JUGURTHA, the natural son of Mastabal, brother of Micipsa, who were the sons of Masinisa king of Numidia. Jugurtha was brought up by Micipsa with his children Adherbal and Hiempsal, after which he served under Scipio. Micipsa at his death left him his successor in conjunction with his two sons; but Jugurtha murdered Hiempsal, and forced Adherbal to fly to Rome, where his cause was at first espoused, but the bribes of the usurper proved more effectual with the senate, and the unhappy fugitive was treacherously destroyed by Jugurtha. At length Metellus was sent against him, and forced him to fly from his dominions, and to seek refuge among his neighbours. He was betrayed into the hands of Sylla by his father-in-law Bocchus, and carried in triumph to Rome, where he died in prison six days after his arrival, B. C. 106.—Sallust in Bell. Jugurth.

JUIGNE BROISSINIERE (D. de, Sieur de Moliere), a French gentleman and an advocate in parliament, who wrote Dictionnaire Theologique, Historique, Poetique, Cosmographique, et Chronologique, Paris 1644, 4to. and Rouen 1668. This work is censured by Moreri.

JULIA, a virgin martyr of Carthage. When that place was taken by Genferic she was sold to a heathen merchant, and carried into Syria. Refusing to take a part in some of the festivals instituted in honour of the female deities, she was put to death about 440.—Bullet. Vies des Saints.

JULIA, the daughter of Cæsar, and Cornelia, was one of the best of the Roman ladies. She married first Cornelius Cæpion, and afterwards Pompey, who had an uncommon tenderness for her. She died in childhood about 53 B. C.—Plutarch in Vit. Pomp.

JULIA, the daughter of Augustus. Her beauty and accomplishments were very great, on which account she was her father's favourite, till her licentious conduct alienated his affections. She was successively the wife of Metellus, Agrippa, and Tiberius. Augustus sent her into banishment, and when Tiberius came to the throne he suffered her to perish for want. She had a daughter of the same name who was as vicious as her mother.—Suetonius.

JULIA, the daughter of Titus the Roman emperor, and wife of Sabinus. She committed incest with her brother Domitian, who after her death caused her to be deified.—Ibid.

JULIA DOMNA, a native of Syria, and the wife of Severus emperor of Rome, was a woman of great accomplishments, and well acquainted with philosophy and the sciences. On the death of Severus in 211, her sons Caracalla and Geta succeeded to the imperial throne, the latter of whom was murdered by his brother in the arms of his mother, who was also wounded in defending him. After the death of Caracalla, she is said to have starved herself on finding that Macrinus had assumed the imperial title.—Gibbon's Decline of the Roman Empire.

JULIAN, emperor of Rome, surnamed the Apostate, was the younger son of Julius Constantius, brother of Constantine the Great, and born in 331. In the dreadful massacre made of his family by the sons of Constantine, he and his brother Gallus narrowly escaped. The two princes were carefully educated in the principles of christianity under Mardonius, but with different effects, for though Gallus possessed real piety, the attachment of Julian to that religion was merely affected, having secretly a strong inclination to paganism. On being sent to Athens at the age of twenty-four, he discovered this disposition by his application to astrology, magic, and other pagan illusions. He attached himself particularly to a philosopher named Maximus, who flattered his ambition by promising him the empire. He commanded with great reputation in Gaul in the reign of Constantius, who, jealous of his success and popularity, sent to recall him, which gave so much offence to his soldiers that they immediately proclaimed him emperor, and on the death of Constantius in 361, he found himself in complete possession of the imperial throne. He was then in the east, where his title had been recognized as readily as it had been in the west. He then threw off the mask, publicly renounced christianity, and opened the temples of the gods of ancient Rome, in which he offered sacrifices. On this account he is called the Apostate. Soon after his accession he resolved to chastise the Persians, who had frequently made inroads on the empire in the preceding reigns. When he had crossed the Tigris he burned his ships that his soldiers might proceed with firmness and resolution. After marching through Assyria without opposition, he was on his return, when his army encountered that of Sapor king of Persia, and Julian was mortally wounded, A. D. 363, aged 32. Theodoret asserts, that he took some of the blood from his wound, and casting it towards heaven exclaimed, Thou hast conquered, Galilee! a story which is hardly credible. Julian was virtuous and modest in his manners, and liberal in his disposition. He abolished the luxurious and indecent practices of the court of Constantinople, and was averse to public amusements. His History of the Cæsars is the most celebrated of his writings, though it is very partial. His works were published by Spanheim at Leipzig in 1696, folio.—Eutropii. Gibbon. Grevier.

JULIAN (St.), archbishop of Toledo in Spain, was a man of learning and piety. He died in 690. His works are, 1. A Treatise against the Jews; 2. Testamentum xii. Prophetarum; 3. Prognostica futuri Seculi; 4. Historia Wambæ.—Moreri.

JULIANA, an anchoress of Norwich in the reign of Edward III. who assumed the prophetic character. She was the author of a singular book entitled "Sixteen Revelations of Divine Love, shewed to a devout Servant of our Lord, called Mother Juliana, an Anchoress of Norwich, who lived in the days of King Edward III." published by F. R. S. Cressly, 1610. She led a life of remarkable austerity, immuring herself between four walls many years.—Biog. Brit.

JULIUS I. pope, and saint of the Roman calendar, succeeded Mark in 337. He strenuously supported the cause of Athanasius, and was a man of great learning and piety. He died in 352. Some of his letters are extant.

JULIUS II. (Julian de la Rovere), was born at Abizuola about 1440. Sixtus IV. his uncle made him cardinal and commander of his troops, a post which suited his enterprising genius. He was chosen pope in 1508 through simony, yet he published a bull to prevent similar practices in future. The emperor Maximilian, with the kings of France and Arragon, endeavoured to depose him, but he frustrated their design, and formed an alliance with them, at Cambray, in 1508. He then demanded of the Venetians the territories of Faenza and Rimini, which had been originally taken from them by Alexander VI. and on the death of that pontiff recovered by the Venetians, who, for refusing Julius's unjust claim, were put under an interdict. At last being reduced to the greatest extremities, the state of Venice was obliged to submit. The pope then turned his armies against France and besieged Mirandola in person, which he entered in triumph in 1511: but fortune soon turned, and he was driven to Rome, and the council of Pisa declared him suspended and contumacious. He died in 1513, aged 70. He was a man of great courage and address, but his manners were dissolute and his temper turbulent.

JULIUS III. an Italian, obtained the tiara in 1550. He had presided at the council of Trent under Paul III. and on being elected to the papacy joined the emperor against Octavius Farnese, duke of Parma. He was a man of no firmness and of a narrow mind. He died in 1555.—Moreri.

JUNCKER (Christian), a celebrated medallist, was born at Dresden about 1668. He wrote, 1. Schediasma de diariis Eruditorum; 2. Centuria Fæminarum eruditiorum et scriptis illustrium; 3. Vita Lutheri ex nummis; 4. Theatrum Latinitatis universæ Rehero-Junckerianum; 5. Linææ eruditioris universæ et Historiæ Philosophicæ; 6. Vita Ludolphi, &c.—Moreri.

JUNCTIN, or Giuntino, (Francis) a mathematician of Florence, was for some time a carmelite, but quitted his order, and going to France abjured the Roman catholic religion. He became a corrector of the press, and afterwards a manufacturer of paper and a banker, by which means he gained a large fortune. He died about 1580. He wrote some arithmetical works, commentaries on the sphere of Sacrobosco, a treatise of the Reformation of the Calendar, and a discourse on the Age of the Loves of Petrarch.—Bayle.

JUNGEMAN (Godfrey), a learned German, was born at Leipzig. He published a good edition of Julius Pollux, and other works. He died at Hanau in 1610.—Moreri.

JUNGEMAN (Lewis), brother of the above, was a good botanist, and published Catalogus Plantarum quæ circa Altorfinum nascuntur, 8vo, 1646; Cornucopia Floræ Gießensis, 1623, 4to. He died at Altdorf in 1653.—Bayle.

JUNGUS (Joachim), a learned German, was born at Lubeck in 1559. He studied at Gießen, where he applied to metaphysics and mathematics, and wrote some Latin tragedies. He was for some time professor of mathematics, but quitted that Ration and went to study physic at Augsburg. He took his doctor's degree at Padua, and died at Hamburg in 1657.—Moreri.

JUNILIUS (St.), bishop of Africa in the sixth century. He wrote two books on the divine law by way of dialogue.—Moreri.

JENIUS (Adrian), a learned Dutchman, was born at Moorn in 1511. He studied physic, and took his doctor's degree at Bologna, after which he went to England, where he wrote several works, particularly a Greek and Latin lexicon, which he dedicated to Edward VI. He afterwards returned to his own country, and practised physic. He died at Middleburgh in 1575. His works are, 1. Commentaries on various Latin Authors; 2. a Poem on the Marriage of Philip II. King of Spain with Mary Queen of England; 3. Translations from the Greek; 4. Critical Animadversions, which Gruter has inserted in his Theatrum Criticæ; 5. Phallæ fungorum descriptio; 6. Nomenclator omnium Rerum.—Moreri.

JUNIUS (Francis), professor of divinity at Leyden, was born at Bourges in 1545. He studied at Geneva, and in 1565 became minister of the Walloon church at Antwerp, and afterwards chaplain to the prince of Orange; at last he was made theological professor at Leyden, where he died of the plague in 1602. He is chiefly known by a Latin version of the Bible with notes, in translating which he was assisted by Tremellius.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Theol.

JUNIUS (Francis), son of the preceding, was born at Heidelberg in 1589. In 1690 he visited England, and was taken into the family of Thomas earl of Arundel. Here he studied the northern languages, in which he acquired an uncommon skill. He died at Windsor in 1677, and left his MSS. to the public library at Oxford. His works are, 1. Glossarium Gothicum; 2. De pictura veterum, 1637; this book he afterwards published in English; 3. Observationes in Willeramii Francicæ paraphrasin Cantici Canticorum. His Etymologicum Anglicanum was published in 1743 in folio.—Bayle.

JUNTA (Philip and Bernard), celebrated Italian printers in the 15th and 16th centuries. They printed at Lyons the Letters of Leo X. by Bembo, and the works of Sanezi Pagninus. They had also printing offices at Genoa, Venice, and Florence. Philip began printing at Genoa in 1497, and died about 1519. Bernard was either his brother or cousin. Philip printed some excellent editions of Greek authors, as Plutarch, Xenophon, Aristophanes, Sophocles, and Homer.—Moreri.

JUNTA (Thomas), a Venetian physician, who published in 1554 a learned book on the Battles of the Ancients.—Gen. Biog. Diff.

JUREL (Francis), a French divine, and canon of Langres, was a native of Dijon, and died in 1626, aged 73. He wrote notes on Symmachus, and poems in the Delicæ Poetarum Gallorum.—Moreri.

JURIEU (Peter), a French protestant divine, was the son of Daniel Jurieu, pastor of the reformed church at Mer in the diocese of Blois, and born there in 1637. His mother was sister to the famous Peter du Moulins. He received his education partly in Holland, and partly in England, and while in the latter country received episcopal ordination. On his return home he became assistant to his father, and afterwards was chosen professor of divinity and Hebrew at Sedan, where he gained great reputation by his lectures and by his preaching. He wrote with ability against Bossuet's Exposition of the Doctrine of the Catholic Church, and defended the moral character of his sect against the accusations of M. Arnauld. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he retired to Holland, and was chosen pastor of the Walloon church at Rotterdam. He there applied so assiduously to the study of the Revelations that he fancied he had discovered most of the mysteries therein concealed, particularly with regard to Antichrist. He addressed William III. king of England, as the instrument appointed by the Almighty to destroy the kingdom of the beast. He embroiled himself in controversy with Bayle and Bannal, who had objected to the extravagance of his opinions. He also offended his best friends by the irascibility of his temper in charging M. Saurin and other eminent persons with being heterodox. He died at Rotterdam in 1713. The principal of his works are, the History of Calvinism and Popery, with a Parallel between them; Pastoral Letters; Treatise on the Unity of the Church; Treatise of Nature and Grace; Critical History of the Doctrines and Worship of the Church, and those of the Pagans; [this is a very curious book, and has been translated into English in 2 vols. 8vo.] On the Revelations, and the Accomplishment of the Prophecies.—Moreri. Bayle.

JURIN (James), secretary to the royal Society of London, and president of the college of physicians, died in 1750, at a very advanced age. He wrote papers on philosophical and medical subjects in the Philosophical Transactions, and a tract of his on Vision is appended to Smith's Optics. He had a dispute with Michellotti on the motion of currents; with Keill and Senar on the motion of the heart; with Robins upon distinct vision; and with the partisans of Leibnitz on the active forces.—Gen. B. D.

JUSSEU (Anthony de), a French botanist and physician, was born at Lyons in 1686. After travelling through various parts of Europe he settled at Paris, where he became a member of the academy of sciences, professor of botany in the royal garden, and secretary to the king. He enriched the memoirs of the academy with several valuable papers, the result of observations made in his travels, on botany and mineralogy. He also wrote the appendix to Tournefort, and abridged Barrelier's work upon the Plants of France, Spain, and Italy, and he was likewise the author of a Discourse on the Progress of Botany. He died in 1758.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JUSSEU (Bernard de), brother of the above, was born at Lyons in 1699. He distinguished himself as an able physician and an accurate botanist. He became professor and demonstrator in the royal garden, and was chosen a member of the academy of sciences and of several foreign societies. He published an edition of Tournesort's History of Plants about Paris, 2 vols. 12mo. and was the author of a book entitled, the Friend of Humanity, or the Advice of a Good Citizen to the Nation. He died in 1777. His brother Joséph was also a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and accompanied M. de la Condamine to Peru in 1735. He was not only a good naturalist and physician, but an excellent engineer. He published a Journal of his Voyages, and died in 1779.—Ibid.

JUSTEL (Christopher), counsellor and secretary to the king of France, was born at Paris in 1580. He published, 1. The Code of Canons of the Universal Church, and the Councils of Africa, with notes; 2. The Genealogical History of the House of Anvergne. He died in 1649.—Moreri.

JUSTEL (Henry), the son of the above, and his successor as counsellor and secretary, was born in 1690. He was a man of learning and liberality, and so partial to England that he sent his father's MSS. to the university of Oxford, which learned body complimented him in return with the degree of LL.D. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to London, and was appointed keeper of the king's library. He died in 1693. He published, chiefly from his father's collections, Bibliotheca Canonici veteris, 2 vols. folio. He was the author of some learned works.—Moreri. Wood, A. O.

JUSTI (N. de), a German mineralogist, who was educated on charity at Jena in 1720. He was there taken notice of by Zink, professor of political economy, who directed his studies. Devoting himself with great assiduity to the study of mineralogy, he acquired such a knowledge therein as to be named a member of the council of mines. He afterwards became professor of political economy and natural history at Göttingen, where he died some time since. His books are, 1. a Treatise on Mineralogy, 1757; 2. a Treatise on Monies; for some free remarks in which on the states of Prussia and Wittenberg he was confined a considerable time in the castle of Breslaw; it is however a work of merit, and deserving attention; 3. Miscellaneous on Chemistry and Mineralogy, 2 vols. 4to. He had projected a German Encyclopædia, and wrote some pamphlets against several eminent naturalists.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JUSTIN I. emperor of the east. He rose to the rank of general from being a private soldier, before which he was a swineherd. The soldiers of the prætorian band forced him to accept the imperial dignity on the death of Anastasius in 518. He recalled the bishops who had been banished by the arians, and published several severe edicts against that sect. Hearing of the destruction of Antioch by an earthquake, he laid aside the imperial robes, clothed himself in sackcloth, and passed several days in fasting and prayer to avoid the divine judgments. He rebuilt that city, and other places which were destroyed by the same calamity. He died A.D. 527, aged 57.—Univ. Hist. Moreri.

JUSTIN II. was the nephew and successor of Justinian in 565. He caused his cousin Justin to be strangled, and put to death some of his senators from a suspicion of their being disaffected. He made war against Persia, and Chosroes, king of that country, being defeated at the head of a numerous army, was obliged to sue for peace. Justin married Sophia, niece of Theodora, wife of the emperor Justinian, a woman of high spirit, who taking the advantage of her husband's weakness, governed the empire in conjunction with Tribesius. Justin, who was of a debauched and indolent character, died in 578.—Ibid.

JUSTIN, a Latin historian of the second century, who made an abridgment of the Universal History written by Trogius Pompeius. This work remains, but the original is lost. It is composed in an excellent style; clear and interesting. The best editions are that of Oxford, 8vo. 1705, and that of Barbou, Paris, 1770, 12mo.—Voss. de Hist. Lat.

JUSTIN (St.), a christian philosopher and martyr in the second century, was a native of Sicheon or Sichar in Samaria. His parents were heathens, and he became himself a zealous adherent to the platonic system, but disputing with a christian in 152, he was converted to that faith, though he still continued to wear the pallium, or peculiar cloak of the Grecian philosophers. He was an equal honour to christianity by his knowledge, his firmness, and the purity of his life. A persecution breaking out against the christians, under Antoninus, Justin had the courage to present to that emperor an admirable apology in their behalf, which had the desired effect. He afterwards addressed another apology to Marcus Aurelius, in which he defended those of his religion against the calumnies of Crescensius, a Cynic philosopher. This last is said to have gained him the crown of martyrdom in 166. Besides these two apologies we have extant of his a Dialogue with Trypho a learned Jew; and some other pieces in the Greek language. The best edition of his works is that of Paus, fol. 1636.—Grev. Dupin.

JUSTINIAN I. emperor of Rome, succeeded his uncle Justin I. in 527. He was the protector of christianity, and carried his arms with great success against his enemies, for which however he was chiefly indebted to his general Belisarius, who also preserved him from a formidable conspiracy that was formed against him. Peace being restored, Justinian set himself to form into a body all the Roman laws, which was executed under the title of Digests or Pandects. After this great work was finished the laws of modern date were collected into one volume, called, the Novelle. He exerted himself against the ecclesiastical encroachments of popes Sylvester and Vigilius, and died in 565, aged 83. He built many churches, particularly the famous Sancta-Sophia at Constantinople, and abolished the consulate.—Univ. Hist. Gibbon.

JUSTINIAN II. was the elder son of Constantine Pogonatus, whom he succeeded in 685. He recovered several provinces from the Saracens, and made an advantageous peace with them, but his exactions, cruelties, and debaucheries, tarnished the glory of his arms. He formed the design of destroying all the inhabitants of Constantinople, which being discovered, the tyrant was deposed in 694, and banished to the Chersonesus. Leo the patrician gained the throne, but he was displaced by Tiberius. About 704 Justinian being aided by the Bulgarians regained his seat, but he was slain with his son Tiberius in 711, by Philippicus Bardanes, his successor.—Ibid.

JUSTINIANI (St. Lawrence), the first patriarch of Venice, was born there of a noble family in 1381. He obtained the patriarchate in 1451, and died in 1455. He wrote Lignum Vitæ; De Disciplina & Spirituali Perfectione; de Casto Connubio; Fasciculus Amoris; de Triumphali agno Christi; which were printed together in 1 vol. folio, at Lyons in 1568, and at Venice in 1755. He was canonized by Alexander VIII. in 1698.—Moreri.

JUSTINIANI (Bernard), nephew of the preceding, was born in 1408. He obtained several honourable employments, and was sent ambassador to Louis XI. of France, who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. In 1474 he was made procurator of St. Mark, the second dignity in the republic. He died in 1489. He wrote De Origine urbis Venetiarum, 1492, fol. the Life of his uncle Lawrence the patriarch; a History of Venice in Italy, and other works.—Ibid.

JUSTINIANI (Augustin), bishop of Nebio in Corsica, was born at Genoa in 1476. Francis I. of France made him his almoner, and royal professor of Hebrew at Paris. He perished in a shipwreck in sailing from Genoa to Corsica in 1536. He published, Psalterium Hebræum, Græcum, Arabicum, et Chaldæum, cum Tribus Latinis Interpretationibus et Glossis, and other works.—Bayle. Moreri.

JUSTINIANI (Fabio), bishop of Ajaccio, was born at Genoa in 1568, and died in 1627. He wrote a Commentary on Tobit, and an Index of all writers who had written commentaries on the whole or any part of the Bible.—Moreri.

JUVARA (Philip), an Italian architect, was born at Messina in 1685. He was the disciple of Fontana, and employed by the king of Sardinia to build some fine structures at Turin. In 1734 the old royal palace at Madrid being accidentally burnt, Philip V. king of Spain, sent for Juvara to erect another more magnificent; he accordingly formed an approved plan, but the commencement of the work being delayed from day to day, it is supposed the architect died of chagrin in 1735.—D'Argenville.

JUVENAL (Decius Junius), a Roman poet, was born at Aquinum in Italy. He went to Rome when young, and was for some time a declaimer, after which he applied himself to writing satires with great success. Domitian sent him into honourable exile by making him governor on the frontiers of Egypt. He died at Rome in the reign of Trajan, A.D. 128. His writings are animated, pointed, and humorous, but at the same time highly offensive to decency, and rather tend to encourage than repress licentiousness. The best editions are those of Calaubon, L. Bat. 1695, 4to. and Grævius, 8vo. 1634. He has been translated into English by Dryden and others.—Vossius & Poet. Lat.

JUVENAL de Carleues (Felix de), an ingenious French writer, was born at Pezenas in 1669, and died in 1760. He wrote, 1. The Principles of History; 2. Essays on the History of the Sciences, the Belles Lettres, and the Arts.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

JUVENUS (Cassius Vedius Aquilinus), a Latin poet; was born in Spain of an illustrious family in the fourth century. He wrote a poem in four books on the life of Christ, of which there have been several editions, though it possesses no other merit than the subject.—Moreri.

JUXON (William), archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Chichester, and educated at Merchant Taylors' school, from whence he was removed to St. John's college, Oxford, of which he became fellow in 1598, and in 1621 was elected president. In 1637 he was promoted to the deanry of Worcester; in 1633 appointed clerk of the closet to the king and the year following nominated to the bishopric of Hereford, but before consecration he was advanced to the see of London. In 1635 he was appointed lord high treasurer, which excited great indignation against archbishop Laud, as the means of it, but the conduct of bishop Juxon in that high dignity was irreproachable. He suffered with the rest of his brethren, in the rebellion, the loss not only of his ecclesiastical revenues; but a great part of his temporal estate. In 1648 he attended the king after his trial, and upon the scaffold, after which the regicides caused him to be taken into custody, to make him reveal what his majesty had secretly entrusted to him, but his integrity and prudence were superior to their craft and tyranny. At the restoration he was made archbishop of Canterbury. He died in 1663, and was buried in St. John's college chapel, Oxford.—Wood, A. O. Le Neve's Lives of the Archbishops.

KÄHLER (John), a Lutheran divine, was born at Wolmar in the landgraviate of Hesse Cassel in 1649. He became professor of poetry, mathematics, and theology to Rinletz, and member of the society at Göttingen. He died in 1729. He wrote several dissertations on theology and philosophy, collected into 2 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

KAIN (Henry Louis le), a celebrated French actor, called the Garrick of France, was born at Paris in 1729. He was originally a cutler for making surgeons' instruments, but having a great turn for dramatic representation, Voltaire took him under his particular direction. He made his first appearance on the stage in 1750, and soon acquired a wonderful reputation. He obtained a royal pension, and died in 1778.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

KALE (William), a Dutch painter, was born in 1630, and died in 1693. He painted gold, silver, and crystal vases, gems, glasses, and agates, with an extraordinary lustre.—Pilkington.

KALGREEN (N.), a Swedish dramatic, satirical, and lyric poet, who wrote an opera, entitled, Gustavus Vasa. He died in 1798.—L'Eury, Diß. Hist.

KALRAAT (Barent van), a landscape painter, was born at Dort in 1650, and died in 1721. He painted several fine views of the banks of the Rhine, and adorned his landscapes with figures.—Ibid.

KALUBKO (Vincent), a Polish prelate and historian. His learning recommended him to the chapter of Cracow, who elected him their bishop, and he founded several new prebends in that and other churches. The cathedral being destroyed by lightning in 1218 he retired to a monastery of the order of Cistercians, where he wrote his Chronicon Regni Poloniae in the form of a dialogue. He died in 1223.—Moreri.

KAM-HI, emperor of China, was the grandson of a Tartar prince who conquered that country in 1644, and ascended the throne in 1661. He had a great love for the arts and sciences of the Europeans, and liberally patronized the missionaries, but though he was fond of geography and directed the construction of maps and charts, he would suffer none to be laid before him unless China was represented therein as the middle of the world. He died in 1722, aged 71.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

KAMPEN (Jacob van), an historical painter of Haarlem, was born in 1658. The figures in his pieces were as large as life, well designed and coloured.—Pilkington.

KANDLER (John Joachim), master modeller in the porcelain manufactory at Meissen, was born in 1706 at Seligstadt in Saxony, and died in 1776. He executed many beautiful figures, particularly of the apostle Paul, the death of St. Xavier, the scourging of our Saviour, the twelve apostles, &c. Augustus king of Poland employed him to make an elegant groupe for Louis XV. who liberally rewarded him.—Novo. Diß.

KANOLD (John), a German physician, who died at Breslaw in 1729, aged 50. He wrote some works on the plague, and other subjects, but he is best known by a curious periodical publication, entitled, Memoirs upon Nature and Art, in German.—Moreri.

KANT (Immanuel), a Prussian philosopher, was born at Königsberg in 1724. His father, who was a saddler, descended from a Scotch family, the name of which was Ispelt Cant, but it was altered by our philosopher to Kant. He received his first education at the charity school of the parish, from whence he was removed to the college Fredericianum, and in 1740 to the university. On the completion of his studies he became tutor in a clergyman's family, and afterwards in that of a nobleman, on quitting of which he returned to the university, and subsisted by teaching private pupils. In 1755 he obtained the degree of M. A. and on commencing public lecturer obtained a number of pupils. He now became a most prolific writer, and it is impossible within these limits to give a list of his publications. In natural philosophy, on the Theory of the Winds, Sketch of physical Geography, New Principles of Motion and Rest, Examination of the Prize Question, Whether the Earth, in turning round its Axis, by which the Succession of Day and Night was produced, had undergone since its origin? What were the Causes of it, and how we could be assured of it? and on Volcanoes in the Moon. But it was in metaphysics that he chiefly excelled, and upon which he published a prodigious number of works, which are extremely refined and obscure. His principles made considerable noise in Germany, and though they obtained many followers, were also attacked by several able writers. He died Feb. 19 1804.—Monthly Mag. May 1805.

KATEB, a Persian poet, who distinguished himself at the court of the sultans of the race of Samanides. He wrote some elegant moral poems.—D'Herbelot.

KAUNITZ-RITBERG (the prince of), an eminent statesman, who died at Vienna in 1794, aged 84 years, during forty of which he was chancellor and prime minister of Austria. He commenced his political career by an embassy to France, and obtained successively the confidence of Maria Theresa, Joseph II. and Leopold II. Under his prudent administration the cabinet of Vienna obtained a great influence in the other courts of Europe.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

KAY (William), a portrait and historical painter, was born at Breda in 1520, and died in 1568. His death was occasioned by grief, caused by the duke of Alva's sentencing counts Egmont and Hoorn to death, while the duke was sitting to him for his picture.—De Piles.

KEACH (Benjamin), a baptist teacher, who died at the close of the seventeenth century. He wrote an allegorical piece, entitled, the Travels of True Godliness, in the manner of Bunyan; but his greatest work is a folio volume on the Scripture Metaphors, reprinted in 1777. It exhibits much reading and considerable learning.

KEATE (George), a miscellaneous writer, was born at Trowbridge in Wiltshire, in 1729, and educated at Kingston school, after which he went to Geneva, where he contracted an intimacy with Voltaire. Having completed the tour of Europe, he returned to England, became a student in the Inner Temple, and was called to the bar, but not meeting with much encouragement in the law, he abandoned that profession. His first literary performance was Ancient and Modern Rome, a poem, 1760. His publications after this were very numerous, the principal is an Account of the Pelew Islands, which he compiled from the papers of captain Wilson. He died in 1797.—Genl. Mag.

KEATING (Jeffrey), an Irish ecclesiastic of the Roman church, and doctor of divinity, was a native of Tipperary. He wrote a history of the poets of Ireland, and the genealogies of the principal families. He died in 1650.

KEBLE (Joseph), an English lawyer, was the son of Richard Keble, serjeant-at-law, and born in Suffolk in 1632. He was educated at Oxford, where he took his degree of bachelor of law, and became fellow of All Souls college. Afterwards he settled in Gray's inn, was called to the bar, and became a benchler. He died in 1710. His works are; An Explanation of the Law against Recusants, 8vo.; An Assistance to Justices of the Peace, folio; The Statutes at Large, in paragraphs and sections, &c. folio; Reports in the Courts of the King's Bench, 3 vols. folio; two essays, one entitled, Human Nature, the other on Human Actions. He also left a number of folio and quarto volumes in MS.—Wood, A. O. Gen. Biog. Dict.

KECKERMANN (Bartholomew), a learned divine of Dantzic, was born in 1571. He became professor of Heidelberg, and of philosophy at Dantzic, where he died in 1608. All his works were collected and published at Geneva in 1614, 2 vols. fol.—Moreri.

KEENE (Edmund), an English prelate, was born at Lynn in Norfolk, of which place his father was alderman. He received his education at Caius college, Cambridge, and in 1710 obtained the rectory of Spawhope, in the bishopric of Durham: in 1750 he was chosen master of St. Peter's college, and two years after served the office of vice-chancellor, in which he promoted the regulations for improving the discipline of the university. In 1752 he was made bishop of Chester, from whence he was translated in 1770 to Ely. He obtained an act for selling Ely House, in Holborn, by which means that bishopric was released of a great incumbrance, and considerably enriched. He also nearly rebuilt the palace at Ely. He died in 1781. His lordship's brother was several years ambassador to the court of Madrid.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

KEILL (John), a learned mathematician, was born at Edinburgh in 1671. After taking his degree of M. A. at that university, he followed his tutor Mr. David Gregory, to Oxford, where he entered of Balliol college, and is said to have been the first who taught sir Isaac Newton's principles by the experiments on which they are founded. In 1698 he published an Examination of Burnet's Theory of the Earth, to which he subjoined Remarks on Whiston's Theory. The year following he was appointed deputy professor of natural philosophy, and in 1701 he published his Introductio ad veram Physicam, as a preparation for the study of Newton's Principia. In 1708 he defended Newton's claim to the invention of Fluxions, which brought him into a dispute with Leibnitz. In 1709 he was appointed treasurer to the Palatines, and attended them in that capacity to New England. Soon after his return in 1710 he was chosen Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, and the year following appointed decypherer to the queen. In 1714 the university conferred on him the degree of M. D. and in 1715 he published an edition of Commandinus's Euclid, with an admirable preface. In 1718 appeared his Introductio ad veram Astronomiam; which treatise he afterwards translated into English. He died in 1721.—Biog. Brit. Martin's Biog. Phil.

KEILL (James), younger brother of the preceding, was born in Scotland in 1673. He obtained the degree of M. D. at Cambridge, and settled as a physician at Northampton, where he died of a cancer in his mouth, in 1719. His works are; The Anatomy of the Human Body, 8vo.; An Account of Animal Secretion, the Quantity of Blood in the Human Body, and Muscular Motion, 8vo.; Papers in the Philosophical Transaction; and a translation of Lemery's Chemistry, 8vo.—Ibid.

KEITH (James), field-marshal in the Prussian service, was the younger son of George Keith, earl-marshal of Scotland, and born in the county of Kincardine, in 1696. He attached himself to the pretender in 1715, and was wounded at the battle of Sheriffmuir. He, however, escaped to Spain with his brother, and became an officer in the Irish brigade, where he served ten years. He afterwards went to Russia, where the czarina made him a general. He signalized himself in all the battles between the Russians and Turks, and was the first who entered the breach at the taking of Oczakow. He also displayed great military skill against the Swedes, and on the restoration of peace was made field-marshal, and sent on several embassies. Conceiving, however, that his services had not been duly compensated, he accepted an invitation from the king of Prussia, who gave him a considerable pension, made him governor of Berlin, and field-marshal of his armies. That great monarch took him into his entire confidence, and made him the companion of his travels into various parts of Europe. He was killed at the battle of Hockerschen, in 1758.—Nouv. D. H.

KELLER (James), a German jesuit, born at Seckingen, in 1568. He was confessor to the prince of Bavaria, and the confident of the emperor Maximilian. He died at Munich in 1631. He wrote several books under fictitious names. His work, entitled, Mysteria politica, 1625, 4to, written against France, was censured by the Sorbonne, and sentenced to be burnt.—Boyle.

KELLER (John Balthasar), an excellent founder in brass, was a native of Zurich. He cast the equestrian statue of Louis XIV. which was set up at Paris in the place of Louis the Great. Keller was made inspector of the foundry at the arsenal, and died in 1702. His brother John James, who died at Colmar in 1700, excelled in the same art.—Moreri.

KELLEY (Edward), an English alchemist, was born at Worcester in 1555. He received his education at Oxford, which he quitted without taking a degree, and rambling about the country, for some offence or other lost his ears at Lancaster, after which he became an assistant to Dr. Dee, whom he accompanied in his journey abroad. The emperor Rodolphus II. was so much deceived by his pretensions to making gold, that he conferred the honour of knighthood on him, but afterwards sent him to prison at Prague, from whence, in endeavouring to make his escape by tying the sheets together, he fell and broke both his legs, of which he died in 1595. He wrote a poem on chemistry, and another on the philosopher's stone.—Wood, A. O.

KELLY (Hugh), an Irish dramatic writer, was bred a staymaker, which profession he quitted in London, and became writer to an attorney. Afterwards he turned author with considerable success, and died in 1777. His works are, False Delicacy; A Word to the Wife; The School for Wives; The Romance of an Hour, comedies; Clementina, a tragedy; Thespia, a poem in the manner of Churchill's Rosciad; Memoirs of a Magdalen, a novel; and the Babbler, a collection of essays.—Life prefixed to his works.

KEMPIS (Thomas à), a pious writer of the 14th century, was born at a village of that name, in the diocese of Cologne, in 1380. At the age of 19 he entered into a society of canons regular, of Mount St. Agnes, near Ywol, where his brother was prior, where he led a life of strict devotion, and died in 1471. The Treatise De Imitatione Christi, or of the Imitation of Christ, so universally known under his name, has been variously contested; some asserting it to be his, and others attributing it to one Abbot Gerfen. The style, however, exactly comports with the acknowledged works of Kempis.—Dupin. Moreri.

KEN (Thomas), an English bishop, was born at Berkhamstead in Hertfordshire, in 1637. He was educated at Winchester school, from whence he removed to New college, Oxford, where he was elected fellow. About 1680 he was appointed chaplain to the princess of Orange, whom he accompanied to Holland. He afterwards went with lord Dartmouth to Tangier, and on his return was made chaplain to Charles II. whom he attended in his last illness, but was hindered from exercising the duties of his function by the Romish priests. That monarch, who had a great regard for him, nominated him to the bishopric of Bath and Wells, which was confirmed by James II. The bishop governed his diocese in a manner the most exemplary. He strenuously opposed the endeavours of James to introduce popery, and was one of the seven bishops sent to the Tower for resisting that monarch's dispensing power. He refused, however, to take the oaths at the revolution, for which he was deprived. Queen Anne granted him a pension of 200l. a year, and he was universally esteemed for his amiable manners and unaffected piety. He died suddenly at the seat of lord Weymouth, in Wiltshire, in 1710. He published some pious manuals; and wrote several hymns, an epic poem entitled, Edmund, and two sermons, published by his nephew Mr. Hawkins, with his life prefixed, in 4 vols. 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

KENDAL (George), a nonconformist divine, was born at Dawlish, in Devonshire, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford. Bishop Brownrigg gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Exeter, and in 1647 he became rector of Blisland, in Cornwall, from whence he removed to London, where he obtained a living. In 1654 he took his doctor's degree. At the restoration he recovered his prebend, but lost that and his living in 1662, for nonconformity. He died in 1663. Dr. Kendal wrote, A Vindication of the Doctrine generally received in the Churches concerning God's Intentions of special Grace and Favour to his Elect, in the Death of Christ, fol.; the Doctrine of the Perseverance of the Saints against John Goodwin, folio, &c.—Calamy. Palmer.

KENNEDY (John), a learned physician, was a native of Scotland, and resided at Smyrna some years. He died in 1760. He had a valuable collection of pictures and coins, which at his death was sold by auction. He wrote a dissertation on the Coins of Carausius, which occasioned a controversy between him and Dr. Stukely. He is not to be confounded with John Kennedy, a divine of the church of England, and rector of Bradley in Derbyshire, who wrote Scripture Chronology, 8vo. 1751; An Examination of the Rev. Mr. Jackson's Chronological Antiquities, 8vo. 1753; and the Doctrine of Commensurability between the Diurnal and Annual Motions Illustrated, 8vo. 1753.—Anecd. of Boswell.

KENNEDY (James), archbishop of St. Andrews, and chancellor of Scotland, was the son of sir William Kennedy by Margaret, daughter of Robert III. king of Scotland, and born in 1404. He was a great encourager of learning, and founded the college of St. Mary, in the university of St. Andrews. He died in 1472.—Gen. Bior. Diet.

KENNET (White), an English prelate, was the son of Basil Kennet, vicar of Postling in Kent, and born at Dover in 1660, and educated at St. Edmund hall, Oxford, where he distinguished himself by his abilities, and published several pieces, particularly a translation of the Moriz Encomium of Erasmus. In 1684 he took his degree of M.A. and was presented to the vicarage of Ameriden in Oxfordshire. As he was shooting, the gun burst, by which accident his skull was laid open, so that he was ever after obliged to wear a black velvet patch on the part. In 1693 he obtained the rectory of Shottesbrook in Berkshire. In 1695 he commenced D.D. and the year following obtained the living of St. Botolph, Aldgate, being then archdeacon of Lincoln. In 1701 he engaged in the controversy on the rights of convocation against Dr. Atterbury. In 1707 he was made dean of Peterborough; but he was at this time very unpopular, owing to his whig principles, and his opposition of Dr. Sacheverel. Dr. Welton, rector of Whitechapel, at this time presenting an altar piece, representing the last supper, to his church, caused the figure intended for Judas Iscariot to be drawn exactly like the dean of Peterborough, with a black patch. This giving great offence, the bishop of London ordered it to be taken down. In 1718 he was preferred to the bishopric of Peterborough. He died in 1728. He published a collection of English historians, under the title of the Complete History of England, in 3 vols. folio, the last of which was wholly written by himself. He also wrote the Life of Mr.

William Somner, the Antiquary, 8vo; Historical Account of Appropriations; and several sermons and miscellaneous tracts.—Wood, A. O. Biog. Brit.

KENNET (Basil), brother of the above, was born at Postling in Kent, in 1674, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Oxford. In 1696 he published his Romæ Antiquæ Notitia, or the Antiquities of Rome, 8vo. a book of considerable utility. The year following he was chosen fellow of his college, and published the Lives of the Grecian Poets. In 1706 he was appointed chaplain to the English factory at Leghorn, where he ran a great risk of his life from the inquisition. In 1714 he returned to England, and commenced D.D. but he died at the close of the same year. He published some sermons, and several translations of foreign writers.—Ibid.

KENNETH II. the 69th king of Scotland, succeeded Alpin, his father, in 823. He made war upon the Picts, and subdued their dominions beyond the North, which he divided among his soldiers. He translated the stone chair to Scone, where his successors were crowned, till it was removed to England by Edward I. He died in 854.—Buchanan.

KENNETH III. was the son of Malcolm. He subdued the Britons at Strathclyde, and was equally successful against the Danes, who had invaded his dominions. But attempting to alter the succession of the crown in favour of his own family, the people were so dissatisfied that they assassinated him in 994.—Buchanan.

KENNICOTT (Benjamin), a learned divine, was born in 1718, at Totness in Devonshire, of which place his father was parish-clerk. By the liberality of some gentlemen, who perceived his merits, he was sent to Exeter college, Oxford, where he applied to his studies with such diligence, that while an under-graduate he published two dissertations on the Tree of Life, and on Cain and Abel, for which the university presented him his bachelor of arts degree, without fees, and before he had completed his terms. He next undertook an herculean task, which was nothing less than to publish a correct edition of the text of the Hebrew Scriptures, collated from ancient manuscripts. In this great work, for which he was admirably fitted by wonderful patience, unremitting industry, and great learning, he met with extensive encouragement, and many crowned heads, and other illustrious personages appeared in his list of subscribers. To enable him to bring this design to perfection he was made keeper of the Radcliffe library, and canon of Christ church. The first volume of the Bible he published in 1776, and the last, which is the 8th, in 1780. He died at Oxford in 1783. After his death appeared

KENRICK (William), a miscellaneous writer, was born at Watford in Hertfordshire, and bred a rule maker, which profession he abandoned for that of literature. To improve himself he went to Leyden, and afterwards settled in London, where he published in 1759 Epistles, philosophical and moral, in verse, a work of little merit. In 1766 appeared his comedy of Falstaff's Wedding, which is an admirable imitation of Shakespeare. He was some time a writer in the Monthly Review, but on account of a difference with the proprietors, he set up another Journal in opposition to it, called the London Review. He was also editor of the Morning Chronicle; but a quarrel with the proprietor induced him to start another paper against it, but in neither instance was he successful. He translated Rousseau's Emilius and Eloisa, and other works from the French, and published several original pieces. He died in 1779.—Biog. Dram.

KENT (William), an English painter and architect, was a native of Yorkshire, and bred to the profession of coach-painting, which he quitted for the higher branches of the art. In 1710 he went to Italy, where he became acquainted with the earl of Burlington, through whom he gained considerable employment, and was appointed principal painter and architect to the king. He was however an indifferent painter, though a good architect. He was the great improver of modern gardening. He died in 1748, aged 43.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

KENTIGERN, or St. Mungo, a Scotchman, was the disciple of Palladius in the sixth century. Camden says that he was bishop of Glasgow, and that he was a member of the university of Oxford. He is also said to have founded the monastery of St. Asaph.—Moreri.

KENYON (Lloyd, lord), an eminent English judge, was born at Gredington in Flintshire, in 1733, being the eldest son of Lloyd Kenyon, esq; of Brynno in that county. He received his education at Ruthin school in Denbighshire, after which he was articled to Mr. Tomlinson, an attorney, at Nantwich in Cheshire. After serving his clerkship he went to London, and became a member of the society of Lincoln's Inn, where he was called to the bar in 1761. After practising as a conveyancer some years, his reputation as a sound lawyer brought him into great notice at the chancery bar; but he does not appear to have made any conspicuous figure till 1780, when he led the defence, with Mr. Erskine, for Lord George Gordon. In 1782 Mr. Kenyon was made attorney general and chief justice of Chester. He was also returned to parliament for Hindon in Wiltshire. In March 1784 he was appointed master of the rolls, and on the resignation of the earl of Mansfield in 1788, by the prompt interference of lord Thurst-low, he was raised to the high office of lord chief justice of the king's bench, and at the same time created baron Kenyon. As a judge his lordship conducted himself with strict integrity, and though he was occasionally warm, it was never from petulance, but from his ardent love of justice. Lord Kenyon was a steady friend to the established church, very correct in his mode of living, and resolutely punished fashionable vice whenever it came before him. The death of his eldest son in a decline, a very promising young man, is supposed to have preyed upon his spirits, and to have produced the black jaundice, of which he died at Bath, April 2, 1802. He left two sons, George, the present lord Kenyon, and the hon. Thomas Kenyon.—Gen. Mag. Monthly Mag.

KEPLER (John), a famous astronomer, was born of a reduced family at Weil in the duchy of Wirtemberg in 1571. Here received his education at Tübingen, and in 1599 was appointed professor of mathematics at Gratz. In 1600 he went to Bohemia on the invitation of Tycho Brahe, by whom he was introduced to the emperor Rodolphus, who appointed him his mathematician. Kepler completed the tables left unfinished by Tycho, and which he called the Rudolphine Tables. In 1613 he was at the assembly of Ratisbon, and assisted in the reformation of the calendar. He died there in 1630. He was the author of many valuable works on astronomy, besides his Tables and Ephemerides, as, 1. Physica Cælestis, Tractatus Commentarius de Motibus Stellarum Martis; 2. Epitome Astronomicæ Copernicæ; 3. Somnium Astronomicum; de Astronomia Lunari, &c. His son Lewis was a physician at Königsberg. He published his father's Somnium Astronomicum, and died in 1663.—Bayle. Hutton.

KEPPEL (Augustus viscount), a celebrated English admiral, was the second son of William earl of Albemarle. He accompanied commodore afterwards lord Anson in his voyage round the world, and afterwards raised himself to the first honours of his profession. In 1778 he commanded the channel fleet, and July 12 that year fell in with the French off Ushant under count d'Orvilliers. A partial action ensued, which the English admiral thought to have renewed in the morning, but the enemy had retired. This affair gave great dissatisfaction to the nation, which was aggravated by Sir Hugh Palliser, second in command, preferring a charge against admiral Keppel, who was honourably acquitted by a court martial at Portsmouth. Sir Hugh was also tried and censured. In 1782 admiral Keppel was raised to the peerage, and he was also at two separate periods first lord of the admiralty. He was a thorough seaman, and a man of great humanity and integrity. He died in 1786.—Gen. Mag.

KERACOWE (Joseph van der), an historical painter of Bruges, was born in 1669, and died in 1724. In the town-hall of Ostend there is a fine piece by him, representing the council of the gods.—Pilkington.

KERCKRING (Thomas), a learned physician of Amsterdam, who was the duke of Tuscany's resident at Hamburg, and fellow of the royal society of London. He died in 1693. His works are, 1. Spicilegium Anatomicum, 4to.; 2. Anthropogenia Ichthyographia; this last is a curious work.

KERGUELIN DE TREMARE (Yves Joseph), a French naval commander, who wrote, 1. Relation of a Voyage in the North Sea, 1767-8, 1 vol. 4to.; 2. Relation of the Naval Events of the War between France and England in 1778, &c. He died in 1797.—Nouv. Dict.

KERI (Francis Borgia), an Hungarian jesuit, who published a history of the Emperors of the East, and another of the Ottoman princes. He was likewise a good astronomer, and made some improvements on the telescope. He died in 1769.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

KERKHERDERE (John Gerard), historiographer to the emperor Joseph I. was born near Maastricht in 1678, and died in 1738. He wrote a Commentary on Daniel, and a treatise on the Seat of the Terrestrial Paradise, all in Latin.—Ibid.

KERSEY (John), an English mathematician, was born at Bodicot, near Banbury in Oxfordshire, in 1616, and died about 1690. He wrote an excellent work on algebra, in 1 vol. folio, honourably noticed in the Philosophical Transactions. He also published an improved edition of Wingate's Arithmetic; and a Dictionary of Hard Words.—Granger.

KERVILLARS (John Marin de), a French jesuit, who published a translation of Ovid's Fasti and Elegies. He had also a concern in the Memoires de Trevoux. He died in 1745.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

KESSEL (John van), an eminent painter, was born at Antwerp in 1626. He was famous as a painter of flowers, birds, and insects, which he executed according to the different seasons of the year. His pieces of this kind are very scarce. He was also eminent in portrait painting, and in his manner resembled Vandyck. His son Ferdinand painted in the same line, but not with equal ability. He lived in the royal palace at Warsaw, being patronized by John Sobieski. He had a nephew who lived at Antwerp, and painted conversations in the manner of Teniers.—Houbraken.

KETEL (Cornelius), a Dutch painter of history and portrait, who came to England, where he painted the picture of queen Elizabeth and the portraits of several of the nobility. After his return to Holland he laid aside his pencils and painted with his fingers, and even with his toes. He died in 1602.—Granger.

KETT (William), a tanner of Norfolk, who in the reign of Edward VI. excited a revolt in that county against the government. The insurgents, to the number of near twenty thousand men, marched to Norwich, which they took, and Kett formed a tribunal under a large oak, which was called the tree of reformation. They first protested only against inclosures and the exactions of the nobility and gentry, but they afterwards inveighed against innovations in religion, and demanded the restoration of popery. After defeating the marquis of Northampton they were routed by the earl of Warwick, and Kett with several others hung upon the tree of reformation in 1549.—Ripin. Camden.

KETTLEWELL (John), a pious English divine, was born at North Allerton in Yorkshire in 1653. He was educated at St. Edmund hall, Oxford, and afterwards was chosen fellow of Lincoln college, Oxford, where he became an eminent tutor. In 1681 he published his book, entitled, Measures of Christian Obedience, which brought him considerable reputation, and the vicarage of Colehill, in Warwickshire, given him by lord Digby. At the revolution he refused the oaths to William and Mary, and in consequence was deprived of his preferment. He then settled in London, where he was held in great esteem by all good men. He died in 1695. Besides the above book he wrote a Help and Exhortation to worthy Communicating, or a Treatise describing the Meaning, worthy Reception, Duty and Benefits of the Holy Sacrament, 12mo. The Practical Believer, 8vo. Of Christian Prudence, 8vo. The Duty of Allegiance settled, 8vo. Death made Comfortable, and other pieces; all of which were collected into 2 vols. folio, with his life prefixed.—Biog. Brit.

KEULEN (Janssen van), a portrait painter, was born in London of Dutch parents, and before Vandyck came to England, was in great favour with Charles I. Though that great painter supplanted him in his profession, the warmest friendship subsisted between them. He died in 1665.—Vertue.

KEYSLER (John George), a German antiquary, was born at Thornau in 1689. Going to England he entered himself of St. Edmund's-hall, Oxford, where he applied to the study of the civil law. On leaving that university he became travelling tutor to some young noblemen, and spent many years in that capacity. He was a fellow of the royal society, and was found dead in his bed in 1743. He wrote an interesting account of his travels, translated into English in 1756. He was also the author of a work entitled, Antiquitates selectæ Septentrionales et Celticæ, and a Dissertation on the Antiquity and Origin of Stonehenge.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

KHERASKOF (Michael), a Russian poet in the 18th century, who published a poem on the use of science, and an epic, called the Rossiada, the subject of which is the conquest of Cusan by Iwan Vassilievitch II. He was appointed vice-president of the college of mines, counsellor of state, and curator of the university of Moscow.—Coxe's Travels.

KHILKOF (prince), a Russian nobleman, and ambassador to Charles XII. who threw him into prison when war broke out between the two countries. In his confinement he wrote an abridgment of the Russian History. He died just as he was about to be restored to his liberty after an imprisonment of eighteen years. His work was published in 1770, 8vo. by Mr. Muller.—Ibid.

KICK (Cornelius), a flower painter of Amsterdam, born in 1635, and died in 1675. His manner of painting was delicate, and his colouring brilliant, shewing all the freshness of nature.—Houbraken.

KIDDER (Richard), a learned English prelate, was born in Suffolk, and educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge, by which society he was preferred to a living in Huntingdonshire, from whence he was ejected for nonconformity in 1662, but afterwards he thought proper to comply, and obtained the rectory of Raine in Essex. In 1674 he was presented to the living of St. Martin Outwich, London; and in 1689 made dean of Peterborough. On the deprivation of Dr. Ken, bishop of Bath and Wells, for refusing the oaths to William and Mary, he was promoted to that see. He was killed in bed with his lady by the fall of a stack of chimneys on his palace at Wells, in the great storm Nov. 3, 1703. Besides several sermons and religious tracts, he published a valuable work, entitled, a Demonstration of the Coming of the Messiah, 3 vols. in 8vo. and 1 vol. folio.—Biog. Brit.

KIEN LONG, emperor of China, who died at the end of the eighteenth century, aged ninety, having reigned above sixty years. He wrote some poetical pieces, and when lord Macartney went thither as ambassador he gave him some of his verses to present to the king. He favoured the missionaries, and was in all respects a very amiable monarch.—Staunton's Embassy to China. Nouv. Dict.

KIRKINGS (Alexander), a landscape painter of Utrecht, was born in 1590, and died in 1646. His views were copied from nature, and he finished them with amazing patience, even the bark and the fibres of the trees being distinctly marked.—Pilkington.

KILBYE (Richard), an English divine, was born at Radcliffe in Leicestershire, and became fellow of Lincoln college, Oxford, in 1577. In 1590 he was elected rector of that college, and afterwards was made Hebrew professor and prebendary of Lincoln. He was one of the translators of the present version of the Bible, and printed some sermons. He died in 1620. There was another divine of both his names who was minister of Allhallows in Derby, and died in 1617. He wrote the Burthen of a loaden Conscience, which book went through several editions.—Wood.

KILBURN (Richard), an English topographer, is supposed to have been a native of Kent, of which county he wrote a Survey, published in 1639 in 4to. at which time the author was fifty-four years of age.—Kennet's Life of Somner.

KILIAN (Cornelius), a native of Brabant, who was corrector of the press to Plantin for half a century. He published an Apology for Correctors of the Press, against Authors; also Etymologicon Linguæ Teutonice, and some Latin Poems. He died in 1607.—Bayle.

KILLIGREW (Katherine), the daughter of sir Anthony Cooke, was born at Giddyhall in Essex, about 1530. She married sir Henry Killigrew of Cornwall, and was a lady of great accomplishments, being mistress of the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages. She had also a turn for poetry, and died about 1600.—Ballard's British Ladies.

KILLIGREW (William), a dramatic writer, was the son of sir Robert Killigrew, and born at Hanworth in Middlesex in 1605. He received his education at St. John's college, Oxford, after which he went on his travels. On his return he was made governor of Falmouth and Pendennis castle. For his faithful services to Charles I. he suffered considerably in his estate. At the restoration he was knighted, and made vice-chamberlain to the king. He died in 1693. Besides the following plays, viz. the Siege of Urbin, Sekindra, Ormasdes, or Love and Friendship, he wrote Midnight and Daily Thoughts in Prose and Verse, 8vo. the Artless Midnight Thoughts of a Gentleman at Court, 8vo.—Wood, A. O. Biog. Dram.

KILLIGREW (Thomas), brother of the preceding, was born in 1611. He was page to Charles I. and groom of the bedchamber to Charles II. He wrote nine plays, which were collected into a folio volume in 1664. He died in 1682. This is the man who is commonly called king Charles's jester. He had more wit in conversation than in writing.—Ibid.

KILLIGREW (Henry), brother of the above, was born in 1612, and educated at Christ church, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of doctor in divinity in 1642, in which year he was made prebendary of Westminster. He suffered much for his loyalty in the rebellion, but at the restoration he recovered his prebend, and was also appointed master of the Savoy, and rector of Wheathamstead in Hertfordshire. He wrote the Conspiracy, a tragedy, 1638, 4to. Pallantus and Eudora, a tragedy, 1652, fol. and sermons on several occasions. He died about 1690.—Ibid.

KILLBROW (Anne), a beautiful and accomplished lady, was the daughter of the last-mentioned, and born in Westminster. She received a liberal education, and distinguished herself in painting, and drew the portraits of the duke and duchess of York in a beautiful manner. She was also eminent for her great piety, and died of the small-pox in 1685, aged 25. The year after appeared her poems in 4to. with an elegiac ode by Dryden prefixed.—Ibid.

KILLIGREW (Margaret), daughter of Thomas Lucas, esq. and wife of William Cavendish, duke of Newcastle, whose life she composed in a good style. She also wrote various other works, amounting to 12 folio volumes. She died in 1673.—Biog. B.

KILWARDEN (Arthur Wolfe, lord), chief justice of the king's bench in Ireland, was born of an obscure family, but educated at Trinity college, Dublin, and in 1766 called to the bar. He was soon appointed king's counsel, and brought into parliament. In 1787 he was made solicitor general, and two years afterwards attorney general. On the death of lord Clonmell he was appointed chief justice of the king's bench, in which dignity he conducted himself with strict impartiality and moderation. Notwithstanding this he fell a victim to a ferocious mob, who dragged his lordship from his coach, with his nephew, the rev. Richard Wolfe, and barbarously piked them in Thomas-street, Dublin, July 23, 1803. Miss Wolfe, his lordship's daughter, was in the coach, but one of the mob took her under his protection, and conveyed her to a place of safety.—Gent. Mag.

KIMBER (Isaac), a dissenting divine, was born at Wantage in Berkshire, in 1692, and died in London in 1758. He was editor of the London Magazine many years, and wrote, 1. The Life of Oliver Cromwell, 8vo.; 2. The Life of Bishop Beveridge, prefixed to his works; 3. The History of England, 4 vols. 8vo.; 4. Twenty posthumous Sermons, 8vo. &c.

KIMBER (Edward), son of the above, was born in 1719. He was brought up a bookseller, but entered into the army, and served in America with reputation. He succeeded his father as editor of the London Magazine, and compiled the Pocket Peerage of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and a History of England in 10 vols. 8vo. He was also the author of Joe Thompson, a novel, and some other works. He died in 1769.

KIMCHI (David), a Jewish rabbi and commentator of the thirteenth century. He was a native of Spain, and had two brothers, Joseph and Moses, both men of great learning. David's Commentary on the Old Testament is a work of great value. He was appointed in 1232 to arbitrate the differences between the French and Spanish synagogues respecting the books of Maimonides. His Hebrew grammar was printed at Venice in 1545, and his Talmudical dictionary in 1506, fol.—Bafnage.

KINASTON (Francis), the son of Sir Edward Kinaston, was born in Shropshire, and educated at Oriel college, Oxford, but took his degree of M.A. at Cambridge. Being introduced at court he received the honour of knighthood. He was the first regent of a kind of academy or society called the Museum Minervæ, the constitutions of which he published in 1636. He translated from English into Latin Chaucer's Troilus and Cressid. He died in 1642.—Wood, A. O.

KING (John), a learned prelate, was born at Wornal in Buckinghamshire about 1559, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford. On entering into orders he obtained various preferments, and in 1611 was made bishop of London. He died in 1621. He published lectures on Jonah, and several sermons.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

KING (Henry), son of the preceding, was born at Wornal in 1591. He became student of Christ church, Oxford, in 1608, and after obtaining several eminent stations in the church, was made bishop of Chichester in 1641, but suffered considerably in the civil wars. At the restoration he recovered his bishopric, and died in 1669. His works are, Sermons on several occasions; Exposition of the Lord's Prayer; A poetical Version of the Psalms of David; Poems in Latin, Greek, and English.—Ibid.

KING (John), second son of Dr. King, bishop of London, was a student of Christ church, Oxford, public orator of the university, and canon of Christ church and of Windor. He died in 1639. He wrote Oratio panegyrica de auspicio Caroli principis in regnum Hispanicum adventu; Gratulatio pro Carolo reduce Oxoniensium nomine recitata; Cenotaphium Jacobi, five laudatio funebris pie & felicis memor. Jac. Mag. Brit. Reg. and some sermons.—Ibid.

KING (Edward), an ingenious and promising young man, who was fellow of Christ college, Cambridge, in 1633, and was drowned not long after in his passage from Chester to Ireland, which melancholy event occasioned Milton's beautiful poem entitled Lycidas. Some of Mr. King's poems are in Nichols's collection of the poets.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

KING (William), an ingenious writer, was born in London in 1663, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford, of which he became student in 1686, and entered upon the law line. His first performance was a Vindication of Wickliffe from the aspersions of Varillas. In 1692 he accumulated the degrees of bachelor and doctor in civil law, and the same year was admitted a member of Doctors' Commons. In 1694 he published Animadversions on Lord Moleworth's pretended Account of Denmark, for which he was appointed secretary to the princess Anne. In 1696 he joined in the controversy relative to Phalaris's Epistles, and was rather rudely handled by Dr. Bentley on that occasion. Being more a man of pleasure than business he involved himself in difficulties, to relieve him from which he was appointed judge of the high court of admiralty at Dublin, commissioner of prizes, and keeper of the records in Birmingham's tower. He returned from thence not much richer than he went, in 1708. Being a zealous tory he interested himself greatly in the cause of Dr. Sacheverel, and wrote some humorous pamphlets on that occasion. In 1711 he was appointed Gazette writer, but resigned the post in 1712, in which year he died, and was buried in the cloisters of Westminster abbey. He was a writer of considerable humour both in prose and verse. Besides his fugitive pieces, which have been collected into 3 vols. 8vo. he published an Historical Account of the Heathen Gods, 12mo. for the use of Westminster school.—Biog. Brit.

KING (William), an Irish prelate, was born at Antrim, in 1650, and brought up at Trinity college, Dublin. He resisted popery so powerfully in the reign of James II. that after the revolution he was made dean of St. Patrick's, and in 1690 bishop of Derry. The year following he published 'The State of the Protestants in Ireland, which was accounted very serviceable to king William. In 1694 he printed a Discourse concerning the Inventions of Men in the Worship of God, against the Dissenters, which brought him into a controversy with Mr. Boyle. In 1702 appeared his greatest work, on the Origin of Evil, in Latin, which was animadverted upon by Bayle, Leibnitz, and other writers. In that year he was promoted to the archbishopric of Dublin, where he died in 1729. Dr. Edmund Law, bishop of Carlisle, published a corrected and enlarged edition of his grace's book on the Origin of Evil, in English, with notes.—Ibid.

KING (Peter), chancellor of England, was born at Exeter in 1669. His father was a grocer in that city, and intended his son for the same business; but a love of learning rendered him superior to trade, and he was suffered to follow his inclination. Mr. Locke, who was his maternal uncle, left him half his library at his death, which was of great service to him. By the advice of the same great man he went to Leyden; and at his return entered himself a student of the Inner Temple, where he applied to the law with great assiduity. While he was thus employed he did not neglect other studies, particularly theology, for in 1691 he published, but without his name, An Inquiry into the Constitution, Discipline, Unity, and Worship of the Primitive Church, that flourished within the first 300 years after Christ, 8vo. This work was well received, and soon reached a second edition. In 1699 he was chosen member of parliament for Beer-Alston, in Devonshire. In 1702 appeared his History of the Apostles' Creed, 8vo. It is a book of considerable information, and extremely well written. In 1708 he was chosen recorder of London, and the same year received the honour of knighthood. In 1709 he was appointed one of the managers of the house of commons on the trial of Dr. Sacheverel. At the accession of George I. he was made chief justice of the court of common pleas, and 1725 created a peer by the title of lord king, baron of Ockham in Surrey, and shortly after appointed lord chancellor. He resigned the seals in 1733, and died the same year, leaving behind him four sons and two daughters.—Biog. Brit.

KING (William), an English civilian, and ingenious writer, was born at Stepney in 1685, and educated at Balliol college, Oxford. In 1718 he was chosen principal of St. Mary hall; but, on offering himself a candidate to represent the university in parliament, he refused that place. Being disappointed in his expectation he went to Ireland, but how long he remained there is not said. While he was in Ireland he wrote a satirical poem, entitled, The Toast. In 1749 he spoke the oration in the theatre at Oxford, on the dedication of Radcliffe's library. Dr. King was a zealous tory, and generally looked upon as disaffected to the Brunswick family, which brought upon him much abuse. He published several curious tracts of his own, and also five volumes of South's Sermons. He died in 1763.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

KING (sir Edmund), an English physician and chemist. Charles II. used frequently to amuse himself in his laboratory. He attended that monarch in his last illness, and was ordered one thousand pounds, but never received the money. In the Philosophical Transactions there are some observations by him on ants, and the animalcula in pepper, also a paper on transfusing blood from a calf to a sheep. The time of his death is not known.—Granger.

KING (John Glen), an English divine, and chaplain to the factory at Petersburg, was a native of Norfolk, and educated at Caius college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of D.D. He was also medallist to the empress of Russia, and died in 1787. His works are, 1. The Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church, containing an Account of its Doctrine, Worship, and Discipline; 2. Observations on the Climate of Russia and the Northern Countries, with a View of the Flying Mountains near Petersburg; 3. Observations on the Barberini Vase.—Gen. Mag.

KIPPINGIUS (Henry), a learned lutheran, was born at Rostock, and took the degree of M.A. at that university. He was professed for a soldier, but a Swedish counselor of state observing him with a Latin book in his hand, took him from the army, and made him his librarian. He also procured him the place of sub-rector of the university of Bremen. He died in 1678. He wrote Supplement to the History of John Pappus; a Treatise of Roman Antiquities; and another on the Creation.—Moreri.

KIPPIS (Andrew), an English divine and biographical writer, was born at Nottingham in 1725, and educated under Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton. His first settlement, as a minister, was at Boston in Lincolnshire, in 1746. From thence he removed to Dorking in Surrey, in 1750, and in 1753 he became pastor of a congregation in Princes-street, Westminster. He was a writer in the Monthly Review some time; and in 1761 he had a share in a periodical work, called the Library, which failed. Two years afterwards he was chosen philological tutor to the academical institution for the education of dissenting ministers, supported by the friends of Mr. Coward. In 1773 he published a Vindication of the Protestant dissenting Ministers, with regard to their late application to parliament, which brought him into an amicable controversy with dean Tucker. In 1777 he became the editor of the new edition of the Biographia Britannica, in which capacity he greatly distinguished himself. Five volumes of this work were published in his life-time, and the greatest part of the sixth was prepared before his death. In 1788 he published the Life of Captain Cook, in one volume, 4to., and the same year a Life of Dr. Lardner prefixed to his works. Dr. Kippis was also the writer of the History of Knowledge, &c. in the New Annual Register, and a variety of other pieces, particularly sermons and tracts. He was complimented with the degree of D.D. by the university of Edinburgh, and was a fellow of the royal and antiquarian societies. His performances shew that he was an intelligent and industrious writer, and his style is pure and perspicuous. He died in Westminster in 1795, and was interred in the burying-ground of Bunhill-fields.—Necrology.

KIRCH (Mary Margaret), a learned woman who distinguished herself by her skill in astronomy, was the daughter of Mathias Winkelman, a lutheran divine, and born near Leipzig in 1670. She married in 1692 M. Godfrey Kirch, an able astronomer, who was a native of Luben in Lower Lusatia. Madame Kirch assisted her husband in his astronomical observations, and in the calculation of his Ephemerides. When the king of Prussia founded the academy of sciences at Berlin in 1700, M. Kirch was appointed astronomer, with a pension. There his lady acquired the friendship and admiration of all the learned. In 1702 she discovered a comet, of which her husband published their observations. In 1707 she made a discovery of a remarkable aurora borealis, of which mention is made by the academy of sciences at Paris. Mr. Kirch died in 1710, and the year following his widow published a discourse on the approaching conjunction of Saturn, Jupiter, &c. She died at Berlin in 1730. Her son Christian FREDERIC was astronomer to the academy of sciences at Berlin, and acquired great reputation by his observations. He died in 1740, aged 46.—Moreri. New. Dict.

KIRCHER (Athanasius), a learned jesuit, was born at Fulde in Germany, in 1601. He settled in the Jesuits' college at Avignon about 1635, and was called from thence to Rome to teach the mathematics, where he died in 1680. His works evince a wonderful extent and depth of learning: the principal are, 1. Œdipus Ægyptiacus: hoc est, Universalis Hieroglyphicæ veterum doctrinæ temporum injuria abolitæ instauration, 1652, 4 vols. folio; 2. Ars Magnæ; 3. Lingua Ægyptiacæ restituta; 4. Mundus Subterraneus, in quo universæ naturæ majestas et divitiæ demonstrantur; 5. Organon Mathematicum ad disciplinas mathematicas facili methodo addiscendas.—Niceron.

KIRCHER (Conrad), a protestant divine of Augsberg, who published a Greek Concordance of the Old Testament in 1602. He has inserted the Hebrew words alphabetically, and under them the corresponding Greek words.—Moreri.

KIRCHMAN (John), a learned German, was born at Lubec, in 1575. He studied at various universities, after which he became a tutor, and in 1613, rector of the college at Lubec. He died in 1642. His principal works are; 1. De Funeribus Romanorum; 2. De Annulis.—Bayle.

KIRCHMAN (N.), professor of philosophy at Peterburg, was celebrated by his electrical experiments, and particularly the manner of his death. Being engaged in attracting, by his apparatus, the electric fluid from the clouds, a ball of fire struck him on the head and killed him on the spot, August 6, 1753.—New. Dict. Hist.

KIRCHMAYER (George Gasper), professor of logic at Wittemberg, who died in 1700, aged 65. He published commentaries on Tacitus, Cornelius Nepos; Cicero, Pliny, and Sallust; also some Latin poems, and dissertations on different subjects.—Moreri.

KIRK (Colonel), an English military officer, notorious for his brutality. Being sent against the followers of the duke of Monmouth in 1685, he committed the most inhuman barbarities in the west of England. But the story related of him by Pemsford in his poem of Cruelty and Lust does not appear to be well authenticated. James II. stooped so low as to solicit this butcher to turn Catholic, but Kirk roughly replied, that when he was at Tangiers he had promised the dey that if he ever changed his religion, he would turn mahometan.

He afterwards served in the army of king William, and died at the close of the 17th century.

KIRKLAND (Thomas), an eminent physician, and a member of the royal medical society at Edinburgh, and the medical society at London. He died at Ashby de la Zouch in Leicestershire, in 1798, aged 77. He was ardent in the cultivation of medical and physical science, and a successful practitioner. He published, An Enquiry into the State of Medical Surgery, 2 vols. 8vo; Observations on Pott's Remarks on Fractures; a Treatise on Child-bed Fevers, 8vo; Thoughts on Amputation, 8vo; and a Commentary on Apoplectic and Paralytic Affections, 8vo.—Gent. Mag. Monthly Mag.

KIRSTENIUS (Peter), an eminent physician, and professor of medicine at Upsal in Sweden, was born at Breslaw in Sillesia, in 1577. He was well skilled in Arabic, and understood twenty-five other languages. He died in 1640. His principal works are; 1. Grammatica Arabica, 1608; 2. Vitz quatuor evangelistarum ex antiquissimo codice MS. Arabico erutæ, 1609, folio. He is not to be confounded with George KIRSTENIUS, a native of Stettin in Pomerania, who was physician to Christina, queen of Sweden, and died in 1660, aged 48. He was an excellent botanist, and published Disquisitiones philologicæ, 4to; Adversaria et Animadversiones in Joannes Agricola Commentaria in Pappium, et Chirurgiam parvam, 4to.—Bayle. Moreri.

KLEBER (J. B.), a French general, was born at Stralburg in 1750. He was bred an architect, and sent to Paris to improve himself under the celebrated Chalgrin. Being in a coffee-house where some strangers were insulted, he took their part with so much spirit that they prevailed on him to accompany them to Munich, where Kaunitz, son of the Austrian minister, gave him a lieutenancy in his regiment. After eight years service he returned to his own country, and became inspector of public buildings in Upper Alsace. The revolution in France rekindled his military ardour, and he obtained a commission in that service. He displayed great skill and bravery at the siege of Mayence, after which he was employed in La Vendee, but the sanguinary scenes exhibited there so disgusted him that he solicited and obtained his recall, and was then engaged in the north, where he defeated the Austrians, took Mons, and drove the enemy from Louvain. He also captured Maastricht, and contributed also to that of Dusseldorf, to Frankfurt, and to the victory of Butzbach. Discontented, however, with the directory, he left the army and returned to Paris, where he led a private life, writing his Military Memoirs, till Bonaparte being appointed general of the army of Egypt chose Kleber as his companion. At the siege of Alexandria, he was wounded in the head while scaling the ramparts, and did not retire till he received a second wound. He defeated the Turks in several actions, and Bonaparte on quitting Egypt left Kleber in the chief command. Soon afterwards he signed the treaty of El-Arish with sir Sidney Smith, by which the French agreed to leave Egypt, but it was annulled by the British government, and hostilities were renewed. Kleber, though greatly reduced, opposed to his unfavourable circumstances a determined mind, and defeated the Turks, who were vastly superior in numbers, at the obelisk of Heliopolis. He next took Cairo by storm, and entered into an alliance with Murat Bey; but was assassinated by a Turk named Solyman, who gave him four stabs with a dagger, in 1800.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

KLEIST (Ewald-Christian de), a Prussian officer and poet, was born at Zeblin in Pomerania in 1715. He was major of the regiment of Haussen, and died of his wounds received in the bloody battle of Kunnersdorf, fought between the Russians and Prussians in August 1759. He wrote Idylls in the manner of Gœtze, which possess great simplicity and neatness. He was also the author of some moral treatises; and Reflections on the Art of War, printed in 1759.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

KLINGSTADT, a celebrated painter, was born at Riga in Livonia, in 1657, and died at Paris in 1734. He excelled in miniature painting, particularly in pictures on snuff-boxes, for which he had extravagant prices.—Pilkington.

KLOCKER (David), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Hamburg in 1629. He travelled to Italy for improvement, after which he settled at Stockholm, where he was patronised by the king, so that few of his paintings are to be seen out of Sweden. He died in 1698.—Ibid.

KNAFTON (George), an English portrait painter in crayons, was the scholar of Richardson, and surveyor and keeper of the king's pictures. He died at Kensington in 1778, aged 80.—Ibid.

KNELLER (sir Godfrey), an eminent painter, was born at Lubeck, in 1648, of a noble family, and educated at Leyden with a view to the military profession, but having a strong inclination to drawing he resolved to apply himself to painting. He studied first under Rembrandt, and afterwards went to Rome, where he greatly improved himself, and then visited England, where he soon acquired unrivalled distinction as a portrait painter. King William conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and the university of Oxford the degree of LL.D. He painted a prodigious number of portraits of illustrious personages, and to a striking likeness he always added grace and elegance in his figures. He was created a baronet by Geo. I.

and the emperor Leopold gave him a patent of nobility. He died in 1723.—Walpole. Gen. Hist. Diet.

KNIGHT (Samuel), a learned English divine, was born in London, and educated at St. Paul's school, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Cambridge. He obtained several church preferments, and was chaplain to George II. Dr. Knight wrote the Lives of Dr. Colet and Erasmus, both in 8vo. and died in 1746.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

KNOLLES (Richard), an English historian, was born in Northamptonshire, and in 1564 became fellow of Lincoln college, Oxford, after which he became master of the grammar school at Sandwich in Kent, where he died in 1610. He wrote the History of the Turks, folio, 1610. Of this book there have been several editions and continuations, particularly by Rycaut. Knolles also wrote the Lives and Conquests of the Ottoman Kings; a Discourse of the Greatness of the Turkish Empire; and a Compendium of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew Grammar.—Wood.

KNOLLES (Sir Robert), an English commander in the reign of Edward III. was of low origin in Cheshire, but being of an enterprising and valiant mind, obtained the rank of general, and the order of knighthood. His name was formidable in France, where he took several places. He was made grand seneschal of the province of Guienne, where by his prudence he allayed an insurrection. At the close of life he retired to his estate in Kent, where he built Rochester bridge. He died in 1407, aged 90.—Rapin. Moreri.

KNOLLIS (Francis), an English statesman, was born at Grays in Oxfordshire, and after receiving a university education, he went to court, and became a zealous friend to the reformation in the reign of Edward VI. at whose death he went abroad. On the accession of Elizabeth he returned, and was made a privy-counsellor and vice-chamberlain of the household. He was also employed in several important matters of state. He was one of the commissioners who sat in judgment on Mary queen of Scots: was appointed treasurer of the royal household, and knight of the garter. He died in 1596. Sir Francis wrote a Treatise against the Usurpation of Papal Bishops, printed in 1608, 8vo.; A General Survey of the Isle of Wight. This last was never printed.—Wood, A. O.

KNORR VON ROSENROT (Christian), a learned German, who passes for the author of a very curious and scarce book, entitled, Kabbala denudata, seu doctrina hebreorum transcendentalis, &c.; opus antiquissimæ philosophiæ barbaricæ, translatum ex hebreo, Sultzbach, 1677, and Frankfort, 3 vol. fol. 1684. He died in 1689, aged 53.—Novo. Diet.

KNOTT (Edward), an English Jesuit, whose real name was Mathias Willson. He was born in Northumberland in 1580, and entered among the Jesuits in 1606. He taught divinity in the English college at Rome, and was afterwards appointed provincial of his order in England. He died at London in 1656. Knott was the antagonist of Chillingworth, and occasioned him to write his Religion of Protestants.—Bayle. Allegambe. Bibl. Scrip. Soc. Jes.

KNOWLER (William), a learned English divine, who translated Chrysostom's Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. He died in 1767, aged 68.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

KNOWLES (Thomas), an English divine, was a native of Ely, and after receiving his education at the grammar school there, was removed to Pembroke hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. He obtained the lectureship of Bury St. Edmunds, and a prebend in Ely cathedral. He died at Bury, in 1802. His works are: 1. The Scripture Doctrine of the Existence and Attributes of God, in twelve Sermons, 8vo; 2. An Answer to Bishop Clayton's Essay on Spirit, for which archbishop Secker gave him the degree of D.D.; 3. Lord Hervey's and Dr. Middleton's Letters on the Roman Senate; 4. Observations on the Tithe Bill; 5. Dialogue on the Test Act; 6. Primitive Christianity, in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity; 7. Observations on the divine Mission of Moses; 8. Advice to a Young Clergyman, in Six Letters; 9. The Passion, a Sermon; 10. On Charity Schools, Sunday Schools, and a discourse on Confirmation.—Monthly Mag.

KNOWLTON (Thomas), an English botanist, who was gardener to Dr. Sherard, and afterwards to the earl of Burlington, at Lanesborough in Yorkshire. He died in 1782 at the advanced age of 90. Mr. Knowlton discovered that singular production, the globe conserva, or moor balls, (Conserva Agagropila, Lin.) which he first found in Wallengfen Mere. There are some extracts of letters by him to Mr. Cateby in the Philosophical Transactions, one concerning the situation of the ancient town of Delgovicia, and of two men of extraordinary bulk and weight, and another giving an account of two extraordinary deer's horns found in Yorkshire.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

KNOX (John), the Scotch reformer, was born at Giffard in East Lothian of an ancient family, in 1504. He received his education at St. Andrews, under the celebrated John Major, and entered into priest's orders, but the writings of St. Augustine and the conversation of a monk are said to have occasioned his renunciation of popery. Being accused of heresy to cardinal Beaton, he addressed to him a confession of faith, which was condemned. In 1548 he wear to France, and soon after landed in England, where he was well received, and made chaplain to Edward VI. who offered him a bishopric, which he declined, being averse to episcopacy and the common prayer. In the reign of Mary he went to Frankfort, where he occasioned a schism amongst the English exiles by his opposition to the liturgy, and being accused to the emperor as a seditious person, he retired to Geneva, where he was greatly esteemed by Calvin, to whose doctrines he was zealously attached. There he wrote his Blast of a Trumpet against Female Government, which contains very pernicious principles. In 1559 he returned to his native country, and commenced his ministerial office at Edinburgh by violent invectives against the queen and clergy. His sermons produced a general commotion, and the cathedral and parish churches were not only deprived of their ornaments, but reduced almost to ruins. This furious zealot wrote the History of the Reformation in Scotland, in which he defended all the atrocious actions which were committed there, particularly the murder of cardinal Beaton. Knox died at Edinburgh in 1572, and was buried with great ceremony.—Biog. Brit.

KNOX (John), a bookseller of London, who wrote a Systematic View of Scotland, and planned a herring-fishery and settlement on the north-east coast of that country. He died in 1790.—Gen. Biog. Brit.

KNUPPER (Nicholas), an eminent painter, was born at Leipzig in 1603, and died in 1660. He excelled in painting battle pieces and conversations.—Pitt.

KNUTZEN (Matthias), a famous atheist, born in Holstein. He publicly defended atheism, and even took journeys to make proselytes. His followers were called conscienciaries, because they held that there is no other deity than conscience. He died about the close of the seventeenth century. Knutzen wrote a letter in Latin, and two dialogues in defence of his principles.—Moreri.

KNUTZEN (Martin), professor of philosophy at Königsburg, was born in 1713, and died in 1751. He wrote an able defence of christianity.—Nov. Diss.

KNYGHTON (Henry), an English ecclesiastic and historian. He wrote a Chronicle of the English History from 950 to 1395, also a History of the Deposition of Richard II. They are in the collection of English historians, printed in 1652. Knyghton was a canon regular at Leicester.—Pitt.

KOEBERGER (Wenceslaus), an historical painter, was a native of Antwerp. In the church of Notre-dame, at Antwerp, is a picture of his representing the martyrdom of St. Sebastian, which is beheld with pleasure by every lover of the art. He died in 1604, aged 70.—Houbraken.

KOEMPFER (Engelbert), a German physician and naturalist, was born in Westphalia in 1651. He became secretary of the embassy sent from Sweden to Persia in 1683; in which journey he had ample opportunities of gratifying his curiosity; and when the ambassador returned, he preferred remaining in the east, as surgeon to the Dutch East-India fleet. In this capacity he visited various islands, particularly Japan, of which he wrote an excellent account. He returned to Europe in 1693, and settled in his own country, where he died in 1716. Sir Hans Sloane purchased of his executors the manuscripts and drawings of Koempfer. His History of Japan was published at London in 1727, in 2 vols. folio. He was also the author of a work, entitled, Amoenitates exoticæ, 1712.—Niceron. Moreri.

KOENIG (Daniel), a Swiss, who died at Rotterdam, aged 22, in consequence of the ill usage he met with from the populace of Franeker, who mistook him for a French spy. He translated Arbuthnot's Tables of Coins into Latin, printed at Utrecht in 1756.—Nov. Diss. Hist.

KOENIG (Samuel), brother of the preceding, was professor of philosophy and law at Franeker, and librarian to the prince of Orange. He was a great mathematician, and had a dispute with Maupertuis. He died in 1757.—Ibid.

KOERTEN (Johanna), an ingenious woman, was born at Amsterdam in 1650. She had a fine taste for drawing in water-colours and for embroidery. She also modelled in wax, and made artificial ornaments and flowers; but her principal excellence was in cutting figures out of paper with scissors, and her portraits and landscapes in this way were so much talked of that foreigners used to visit Amsterdam on purpose to see them, among whom was Peter the Great of Russia. She made a magnificent work for the consort of the emperor Leopold, consisting of trees, arms, eagles, and crowns, for which she received above 4000 guilders. She also executed the portrait of that emperor. She died in 1715.—Houbraken.

KORTS (Ruelof), an eminent portrait painter, was born at Zwoll in 1655. He was distinguished by several sovereign princes, particularly William III. of England, and it is said he painted 5000 portraits, all of them well finished. He died in 1725.—Pilkington.

KONIG (George Matthias), a learned German, was born at Altdorf in Franconia, in which university he became professor of poetry and Greek, and library keeper. He died in 1699, aged 83. His principal work is a Biographical Dictionary in Latin, printed at Altdorf in 1678, &c.—Niceron.

KONIG (Emanuel), a physician, and professor at Basil in Switzerland, where he was born in 1658. He was highly esteemed as a learned man, and so eminent in his profession as to be called another Avicenna. He died in 1731. His works are, Regnum vegetable & animale; Regnum minerale; Scholia in Observationes Chirurgicas; Augmentum Hippocratis Helvetici; Thesaurus remediumum; De triplici regno; Observationes Miscellanæ, Medicæ, Physicæ, Chymicæ, &c.—Morri.

KORNHANN (Henry), a German lawyer of the 17th century, who published some curious works, as, 1. De Miraculis Vivorum; 2. De Miraculis Mortuorum; 3. De Virginitatis Jure; 4. De Linca Amoris—Bayle.

KORTHOIT (Christian), professor of divinity at Kiel in Holstein, was born in 1633. After studying at various universities, he became Greek professor at Rostock, and next professor of divinity and ecclesiastical antiquities at his native place. He died in 1694. He wrote de Veracitate & Taciturnitate; de Natura Philosophiæ ejusque in Theologia usu; and a celebrated work on Christ as God man.—Bayle.

KORTHOIT (Christian), grandson of the last mentioned, was professor of divinity at Gottingen. He wrote many works, and edited the Epistles of Leibnitz in 5 vols. He died in 1751.—New. Dict.

KOTTET (Christopher), one of the fanatics whose visions are to be found in a book printed at Amsterdam in 1657, entitled, Lux in Tenebris. He prophesied terrible judgments that were about to fall upon Europe, and formed a close friendship with Comenius. He was pilloried in Silesia, and then banished. He died in Saxony in 1647.—Bayle.

KOTCK (Peter), a Dutch painter, was born in 1500. He visited Constantinople, and drew some fine views in the neighbourhood of that city, some of which have been engraved. He settled at Antwerp, and became principal painter to Charles V. He died in 1550.—De Piles.

KOULI-KHAN (Thamas), or Nadir Sebâh, was born in the province of Khorasan, and his father was chief of a branch of the Afghans, which rank descended to Nadir when he was a minor, but his uncle usurped the government. On this Nadir entered into the service of the Beglerbeg, governor of Muschada, in Khorasan, who appointed him to command an army sent against the Tartars. Nadir gained a complete victory with an inferior force, and took the Tartar general prisoner. The Beglerbeg at first treated Nadir with great distinction, but being jealous of his aspiring spirit, he refused him the rank of lieutenant-general which he had promised him; and when Nadir complained of his breach of faith, he caused him to be severely bastinadoed. Exasperated at this ungrateful and dishonourable treatment, he fled, and joined a banditti of robbers. With this troop, consisting of five hundred well mounted men, he committed great ravages. The Afghans having made themselves masters of Isaphan, and the Turks and Muscovites ravaging other parts of Persia, Shah Thamas was persuaded to apply to Nadir for his assistance. He accordingly entered into the service of the Schah, but one of his first actions was to murder his uncle who had usurped his title. He then distinguished himself against the Turks, whom he defeated in several actions, for which he was made a general, and the Schah conferred upon him the title of Thamas Kouli, or the slave of Thamas; he was also ennobled with the title of Khan. Notwithstanding these distinctions, he deposed Thamas, and placed a son of that prince on the throne, to whom he became regent. In 1735 he gained the battle of Erivan, in which the Turks lost above 50,000 men. After this he assumed the royal title, and was acknowledged by the graundes of the empire. The year following he took Candahar, and in 1739 he conquered the Mogul empire, making himself master of Delhi, where he acquired immense riches. He then caused himself to be proclaimed emperor of the Indies; but disgraced himself by ordering a general massacre of the inhabitants of Delhi, in revenge for an insult offered to some of his troops. The cruelties and tyranny of Kouli-Khan at length excited a general hatred against him, and a conspiracy being formed, by some Persian officers, he was assassinated June 8, 1747.—Life by Sir W. Jones.

KRACHENINNIKOW (Stephen), a Russian naturalist, was born in 1713. He was educated in the academy of Petersburg, and when young went to Kamtschatka to make researches. He returned in 1743 with a great number of observations made in ten years travels. The academy then nominated him an associate, and in 1753 he was made professor of botany and natural history. He died in 1755. He wrote an account of his travels and discoveries, to be found in Chappe d'Aueroche's Account of Siberia—New. Dict. Hist.

KRANTZ (Albert), an historian and divine, was a native of Hamburg, and rector of the university of Rostock; he also became dean of the cathedral in his native city, where he died in 1517. He wrote an ecclesiastical history under the title of Metropolis; a History of the Saxons; also of the Vandals; a Chronicle of Sweden, Denmark, and Norway. He was likewise the author of a small book, de Officio Missæ, printed at Rostock in 1505.—Moreri.

KRAUSE (Francis), an historical painter, was born at Augsburg, in 1706. He was a disciple of Piazzetta, who often mistook the works of Krause for his own. He resided in France several years but died poor in 1754.—D'Argenville.

KRESA (father), a learned ecclesiastic and mathematician, was a native of Moravia, and became confessor to the king and queen of Bohemia, where he died in 1715, aged 67. Besides his native tongue he under-flood Hebrew, Latin, Greek, French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese. He wrote Analys. speciosa Trigonometrix sphaerica, &c.—Moreri.

KRUGER (John Christian), a German author and actor, who died at Hamburg in 1750, aged 28. He wrote some poems and comedies, and translated into German the Theatre of Marivaux.—Novv. Diss. Hist.

KUHLMAN (Quirinus), a German fanatic, was a native of Silesia, and a man of some learning; but a violent sickness disordered his brain, and he pretended to be a prophet. The writings of Behmen added fuel to the fire, and he had no doubt of being inspired. He published several strange visions, which he pretended to have received, and was at last burnt as a heretic in Muscovy, in 1689.—Bayle.

KUHNUS (Joachim), professor of Greek and Hebrew at Strasburgh, was a native of Pomerania, and distinguished himself by some learned works, as editions of Ælian's Various History, Pausanias's Description of Greece, and some original pieces of his own. He died in 1697, aged 50.—Niceron.

KUICK (John van), an historical and portrait painter of Dort, was born in 1530. Having given offence to the jesuits, he was accused of being a heretic, and burnt in 1572.—Houbraken.

KUNCKEL (John), a German chemist, who died in 1702, aged 72. He published at London Observationes Chemicæ, 1678, 12mo. Kunckel discovered the phosphorus of urine, and made many other improvements in chemistry.—Moreri.

KUPIESKI (John), a Bohemian painter, was born in 1667. After learning the rudiments of his art in his own country, he went to Italy, where he gained a great reputation. He was employed by the emperor Charles III. the czar Peter, and other illustrious personages.—Pilkington.

KUSTER (Ludolph), a learned critic, was born at Blomberg in Westphalia in 1670. He studied at Berlin, and afterwards travelled into foreign countries, particularly England, where he completed his edition of Suidas, printed at Cambridge in 1705, 3 vols. folio, and for which that university conferred on him his doctor's degree. From hence he went to Berlin, where he became professor and librarian to the king. He did not however long retain these honours, but went to Amsterdam, where he published Jamblichus's Life of Pythagoras, the works of Aristophanes, and an edition of Mills's Greek Testament. In 1715 he went to Paris, and abjured the protestant religion, and obtained a pension. He died in that city in 1716. Besides the above he published Historia Critica Homerii; Bibliotheca novorum librorum ab 1697 usque 1699, 5 vols.; De vero usu Verborum mediærorum apud Græcos, &c.—Niceron. Moreri.

KUYF (Jacob), a celebrated landscape painter, who founded the academy of painting at Dort in 1643. He copied after nature with great exactness. His son Albert was also an eminent artist, and excelled his father both in variety and the style of his painting.—Houbraken.

KYD (Thomas), an English writer in the reign of Elizabeth, who published, in 1595, a play called Pompey the Great, taken from the French of Garnier.—Biog. Dram.

KYDERMYSTER (Richard), a native of Worcester, and abbot of a monastery of benedictines at Winchcombe in Gloucestershire, of which abbey he wrote the history. He also wrote some pieces against the reformation. He died in 1531.—Wood, A. O.

KYNASTON (John), an English divine, was born at Chester in 1728, and educated at Brazen-nose college, Oxford, of which he was chosen fellow in 1751. He wrote De Impietate C. Cornelio Tacito falso Objectata; Oratio habita in sacello Collegii Ænei Nasi, Oxon. 1761. He died in 1783.—Gen. Biog. Diss.

KYNWELMARSH (Francis), an Essex gentleman, and a member of Gray's Inn in the 16th century. He was a friend of Gascoigne, with whom he was concerned in translating Euripides's Tragedy of Jocasta. He and his brother Antony were accounted good poets, and some of their pieces are in the collection called the Paradise of dainty Devises, 1576.—Theat. Poet. Angl.

KYRLE (John), a benevolent Englishman, was born at Rofs in Herefordshire. Though he had only an estate of five hundred pounds a year, he bestowed large sums in the course of his life in charity, and built a church, but towards this last good work he obtained subscriptions from other pious and charitable persons. On all accounts, however, he deserved the fine eulogium bestowed upon him by Mr. Pope, who emphatically calls him the Man of Eps.—Europ. Mag. Gen. B. D.

L.

LABADIE (John), a famous enthusiast, was born at Bourg in Guienne, in 1610. He received his education among the jesuits, and was admitted a member of that order, which, however, he quitted, and became an itinerant preacher. The austerity of his manners, his zeal, and affected piety, procured him many admirers, particularly at Amiens, where he obtained a canonry, but being detected in some criminal intrigues, the bishop ordered him to be put under arrest. Labadie, however, es-escaped to Toulouse, and became director of a convent of nuns, among whom he introduced a new rule, and the particular notions of the quietists, with some additions of his own, viz. that the Scriptures are not necessary to salvation; that outward worship is of no use, but that all prayer should be mental; and that there are two churches, that of Christians in degeneracy, and the other regenerate, or Labadiſts, as his followers were called. He renounced the romish religion at Montauban in 1650, and after exercising the ministry there some time he went to Geneva, from whence being expelled he removed to Middleburg, where he gained many followers, among whom was the famous Anna Maria Schurman. Labadie sent disciples to propagate his doctrines, and to gather contributions, in different parts of Holland, on which account he was obliged to withdraw to Erfurt, and from thence to Altona, where he died in 1674. His works are full of the most extravagant mysticism, and are now dis regarded.—Bayle. Moreri.

LABAT (John Baptist), a dominican, who was professor of philosophy at Nancy, and was sent by his superiors to America as a missionary in 1693. He returned to France in 1705, and died at Paris in 1738. His works are, Voyage to the American islands, 8 vols. 12mo.; Travels in Spain and Italy, 8 vols.; New Relation of Western Africa, 5 vols.; Voyages of the Chevalier Merchaux to Guinea, &c.; Historical Relation of Western Ethiopia; Memoirs of Chevalier d'Arvieux.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

LABBE (Philip), a jesuit, was born at Bourges in 1607, and died at Paris in 1667. He was a man of great learning, and of a prodigious memory. His principal works are, 1. De Byzantinæ Historiæ Scriptoris, fol.; 2. Nova Bibliotheca Manuscriptorum, 2 vols. fol.; 3. Bibliotheca Biblicarum, fol.; 4. Concordia Chronologica, 5 vols. fol.; 5. Le Chronologie François, 6 vols. 12mo.; 6. Concordia Sacre et Profane Chronologie ab orbe condito ad annum Christi, 12mo.; 7. Bibliotheca Anti-Janseniana, 4to.; 8. Notitia dignitatum omnium Imperii Romani, 12mo.; 9. De Scriptoris Ecclesiasticis dissertatio, 2 vols. 8vo.; 10. Conciliorum Collectio maxima, 17 vols. fol.; 11. Lives of Jesuits who have distinguished themselves in the world of letters. He also wrote some esteemed books on grammar.—Moreri.

LABBE (Louisa-Charly), a French poetess, furnished the fair rope-maker, on account of her marriage with a wealthy manufacturer of cables at Lyons, who left her at his death a large fortune. Her first passion was that of arms, and she distinguished herself in a masculine dress at the siege of Perpignan. She had a taste for literature, and her library was enriched with the best writers, French, Italian, and Spanish; but her fine qualities were tarnished by a libertinism which equalled that of Laïs. Her poems were printed at Lyons in 1555, and again at the same place in 1762, in 12mo. She died in 1566, aged 40.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

LABEO (Quintius Fabius), a Roman consul, B.C. 184. He was a foldier, and a man of liberality and talents, and is said to have assisted Terence in writing some of his plays.—Living. Moreri.

LABEO (Antistius), a Roman lawyer, who refused the consular dignity when offered him by Augustus, whose projects he opposed. He was a man of considerable talents, and composed several works which are lost. His father was one of the conspirators who assassinated Cæsar; he was afterwards killed at the battle of Philippi. There was another Labeo who was tribune of the people, B.C. 148. He caused the censor Metellus to be thrown from the Tarpeian rock.—Ibid.

LABERIUS (Decimus), a Roman knight, who wrote Mimes, or satirical productions for the stage. Cæsar obliged him to perform one of his own Mimes against his will; on which occasion Laberius spoke a satirical prologue against Cæsar, which is preserved in Aulus Gellius; fragments of his other works are also extant. He died B.C. 44.—Bayle.

LABOUREUR (John le), a French writer, was born at Montmorency in 1623. He was at first a gentleman's servant, but afterwards entered into orders, and became prior of Juvigné, commander of the order of St. Michael, and almoner to the king. He died in 1675. He wrote the history of the Marshal of Guebriant, with the genealogy of Budos, and some other houses in Brittany; he also published an edition of the Memoirs of Michael de Castelnau, and other curious works. His uncle, Claude le Laboureur, an ecclesiastic, published several books of considerable merit.—Moreri.

LACARRÉ (Giles), a French jesuit, was born in 1605, and died in 1684. He wrote, 1. Historia Galliarum sub prefectis Prætorii Galliarum, 4to.; 2. Historia Coloniæ Gallis in exteris nationes miserum, 4to.; 3. De Regibus Franciæ et Lege Salicâ; 4. Historia Romana, 4to.; 5. Notitia Provinciarum Imperii utriusque cum Notis, 4to.—Ibid.

LA COLONIE (John Martin de), a marshal of the army in the Austrian service, was born at Perigord, and died at Bourdeaux in 1759, aged 85. He published his military memoirs, at Frankfort in 1780, and at Brussels in 1789, 2 vols. 12mo. He was also the author of the History of Bourdeaux, 3 vols. 12mo.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

LA COMBE (Guy du Rousseau de), an advocate in the parliament of Paris, who died in that city in 1749, aged 44. He published several works on Jurisprudence in French and Latin.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

LA COMBE (Francis), a French miscellaneous writer, was born at Avignon, and died at Paris in 1795. He published Orrery's Life of Swift, Shaftsbury's Letters on Enthusiasm, from the English; the Letters of Christina Queen of Sweden; a Dictionary of the old French Language; Observations on London and its Environs, &c.—Newsp. Dict. Hist.

LACTANTIUS (Lucius Caelius Firmianus), an eloquent father of the church, was according to some an African, and to others a native of Fermo in Italy. He studied under Arnobius, and became so famous as a rhetorician, that Constantine appointed him preceptor to his son Crispus. He formed his style upon the model of Cicero; but though he wrote with great purity and force, particularly in confuting the pagan errors and follies, he was more of a rhetorician than a theologian. He blended philosophy with divinity, and thereby involved the truths of religion in a mist of obscurity. His works were published at Rome in 1468, folio; but the best edition is that of Paris, 2 vols. 4to. 1748.—Gaw. Dupin.

LACY (John), an English actor and dramatic writer in the reign of Charles II. with whom he was a great favourite. His plays are, 1. The Dumb Lady; 2. The Old Troop, or Monsieur Ragou; 3. Sir Hercules Buffoon. He is not to be mistaken for John LACY, an English gentleman, who became the zealous friend of the French impostors, who called themselves prophets, at the beginning of the 18th century. He wrote some incoherent tracts on that subject, and was imprisoned for his zeal.—Biog. Dram. Gen. Biog. Dict.

LAERTIAS, a Greek philosopher of Cyrene, and disciple of Arcefilaus, whom he succeeded as master of the second academy. Attalus gave him a garden in which to read his lectures. He foolishly mourned the loss of a favourite goose, which he caused to be buried magnificently. He died of intemperance, B.C. 212.—Diog. Laertius.

LADISLAUS I. king of Hungary, the son of Bela I. succeeded his brother Geiza in 1080. He added to his dominions Dalmatia and Croatia, reduced the Bohemians who had revolted, expelled the Huns, and conquered part of Bulgaria and Russia. He also defeated the Tartars, and was distinguished by his piety as his valour. He died in 1095, and was canonized by pope Celestin III. in 1198.—Moreri.

LADISLAUS III. succeeded Stephen V. his father in 1272. He was a debauched prince, divorced his lawful wife, and kept a number of women. He also ill used the clergy, and rendered himself an object of universal hatred, and was assassinated in 1290.—Univ. Hist.

LADISLAUS IV. called also Uladislas, was grand duke of Lithuania, and king of Poland, and elected to the throne of Hungary in 1440. He declared war against the Turks, and employed as his general John Huniades, who was very successful. Ladislaus, however, made peace, which gave such dissatisfaction to the pope, and other christian princes, that he was induced to break it; but he was very unfortunate afterwards, and lost his life in the battle of Varna in 1444.—Ibid.

LADISLAUS V. the son of Albert of Austria, was made king on the death of Ladislaus IV. under the guardianship of John Huniades. He was very zealous against the Hussites, by whom he is said to have been poisoned in 1457.—Ibid.

LADISLAUS VI. was the son of Casimir, king of Poland, and was elected king of Hungary on the death of Mathias Corvinus in 1490, in opposition to his own brother Albert, and to John the natural son of his predecessor, and to Maximilian of Austria. His reign was very turbulent, being constantly at war with the Turks, and other neighbouring powers. He died in 1516.

LADISLAUS, or LANCELOT, king of Naples, called the Liberal and Victorious, succeeded his father, Charles Duras, in 1386. He was before entitled count of Provence, and king of Hungary. He obtained the latter crown in 1403, during the imprisonment of Sigismund, who afterwards compelled him to return to Italy. On the death of his father he was opposed by Louis II. duke of Anjou, which occasioned some bloody wars. Pope John XXIII. at first espoused the cause of Louis, but afterwards took the part of Ladislaus, who, however, marched against Rome, and having taken it, turned his arms on the Florentines, whom he compelled to sue for peace in 1418. He died at Naples in 1414, aged only 38, being poisoned, as it is said, by his mistress, who was the daughter of a physician, and bribed to perpetrate the deed by the Florentines.—Newsp. Dict. Hist.

LADISLAUS I. king of Poland, succeeded his brother Boleslas II. in 1081. He defeated the armies of Prussia and Pomerania, and died in 1102.—Univ. Hist.

LADISLAUS II. king of Poland, succeeded his father, Boleslaus III. in 1199. He made war against his brothers on vain pretences, and after several battles was driven from his throne, but Boleslaus IV. his successor, gave him Silesia at the request of Frederic Barbarossa. He died at Oldenburg in 1159.—Ibid.

LADISLAUS III. king of Poland, came to the throne in 1296. He pillaged his subjects, and seized on the goods of the clergy, for which he was expelled, and the crown given to Wenceslaus, king of Bohemia. Ladislaus retired to Rome, but on the death of Wenceslaus he was recalled to Poland, where he governed with great moderation and wisdom. Pomerania having revolted, he called to his aid the Teutonic knights, who repaid themselves by seizing Dantzic and other places, but Ladislaus marched against the knights and defeated them. He died in 1383.—Ibid.

LADISLAUS V. surnamed Yagello, grand duke of Lithuania, obtained the crown of Poland in 1386, by his marriage with Hedwige, daughter of Louis king of Hungary. That princess was elected queen of Poland on condition of marrying the person whom the states of the kingdom should choose. Their choice fell on Ladislaus, who was then a pagan, but was baptized previous to the marriage. He added Lithuania to Poland, and defeated the Teutonic knights in several battles. He refused the throne of Bohemia, which was offered to him by the Hussites. Ladislaus died with the reputation of a wife, upright and generous prince, in 1434, aged 80.—Univ. Hist.

LADISLAUS SIGISMUND VII. king of Poland and Sweden, succeeded Sigismund III. his father in 1632. Before his advancement to the throne he signalized himself against the Turks, whom he defeated in several actions. He also repulsed the Russians, and forced them to make peace. He died in 1648.—Ibid.

LADVOCAT (John Baptist), a French Jesuit, was born in 1709, in the diocese of Toul, and became doctor, librarian, and professor of the Sorbonne. The good duke of Orleans having founded a Hebrew professorship in the Sorbonne, appointed LadvoCAT to it in 1752. He died at Paris in 1785. His works are, a Geographical Dictionary, 8vo.; an Historical Dictionary, 2 vols. 6vo. which has since been repeatedly enlarged; a Hebrew Grammar; a tract on Councils; a Dissertation on the 67th Psalm; a Critique on some new Translations of the Scripture, &c.—New. Dict. Hist.

LADVOCAT (Louis Francis), a philosophical writer, and dean of the chamber of accounts at Paris, where he died in 1785, aged 91. His principal work is entitled, Entretiens sur un nouveau Systeme de morale et de physique.—Ibid.

LÆLIUS (Caius), consul of Rome, B.C. 140. He distinguished himself as a soldier in Spain, and was no less celebrated for his eloquence and poetical genius. He was the intimate friend of Scipio Africanus the Younger, and is said to have assisted Terence in his comedies. There was another Roman consul of this name, B.C. 190. He accompanied the elder Scipio to Africa, and bore a part in the victories over Asdrubal and Syphax.—Ibid.

LÆT (John de), director of the Dutch East-India company, was a native of Antwerp, where he died in 1640, leaving behind him some useful works, as, 1. Novus Orbis, 1633, folio; 2. Historia Naturalis Brasiliæ, folio; 3. De Regis Hispaniæ Regnis et Opibus, 8vo.; 4. Repubblica Belgarum; 5. Gallia; 6. Turcici Imperii Status; 7. Perfiz Imperii Status; 8. An Edition of Vitruvius.—Moreri.

LÆVINUS (Torrentinus), or van der Beken, or Torrentin, a prelate of the Roman church, was a native of Ghent. He studied at Louvain, and was afterwards employed as an ambassador by Philip II. of Spain, who gave him the bishopric of Antwerp from whence he removed to the archbishopric of Mechlin, where he died in 1595. He founded the Jesuits' college at Louvain. He wrote some fine lyric poems in Latin, and published an edition of Suetonius.—Moreri.

LÆVIUS, a Roman poet, who is supposed to have flourished before Cicero. He wrote a poem called Love Games, and another entitled, The Centaurs, which are lost.—Var. de Poet. Lat.

LAFITAU (Joseph Francis), a French Jesuit, who was a missionary among the Iroquois in America. He wrote the Manners of the Native Americans compared with those of the Primitive Times, 2 vols. 4to.; a History of the Discoveries of the Portuguese in the New World, 4 vols. 4to.; Remarks upon Ginfeng, 12mo. He died in 1753.—New. Dict. Hist.

LAFITAU (Peter Francis), brother of the above, was a native of Bourdeaux. He also entered among the Jesuits, and distinguished himself as a preacher. Being sent to Rome on some negotiations, he became so great a favourite with the pope as to be promoted to the bishopric of Sisteron. He died in 1764, aged 79. Lafitau wrote 2 History of the Constitution Unigenitus, 2 vols. 12mo.; History of Clement XI. 2 vols.; Sermons, 4 vols.; Spiritual Letters, &c.—Ibid.

LAGALLA (Julius Cæsar), a learned physician, was born at Padulla in the kingdom of Naples, in 1576. He studied at the university of Naples, where he received his doctor's degree gratuitously, and at the age of eighteen was appointed physician to the pope, who also made him professor of logic at Rome, which place he filled with great reputation till his death in 1623. He wrote a treatise, entitled, Disputatio de Coelo animato.—Moreri.

LAGERLOOF (Peter), a learned Swede, who was professor of eloquence at Upsal, and wrote the Ancient and Modern History of the Northern Parts of Europe. He died in 1599, aged 51.—Moreri.

LAGNY (Thomas Fantet, sieur de), a celebrated mathematician, was born at Lyons in 1660. He was designed for the bar, but he preferred geometry to jurisprudence, and was educated accordingly at Paris by the liberality of the duke de Noailles. He became a member of the academy of sciences, and Louis XIV. appointed him royal hydrographer at Rochefort; but sixteen years afterwards he was recalled to Paris, and made librarian to the king with a considerable pension. He died in 1734. He wrote, 1. New Methods for the Extraction and Approximation of Roots, 4to.; 2. Elements of Arithmetic and Algebra, 12mo.; 3. La Cubature de la Sphere, 12mo.; 4. a General Analysis, or Method of Resolving Problems, 4to.; 5. several papers in the Memoirs of the Academy.—New. Dict. Hist.

LAGUNA (Andrew), a physician, was born at Segovia in 1499. He was a favourite with the emperor Charles V. at whose court he resided, and died in 1560. He published Annotations on Dioscorides; an epitome of the Works of Galen; and a treatise on Weights and Measures.—Moreri.

LAINÉZ (Alexander), a French poet, was born at Chimay in Hainault, in 1650. After travelling through Greece, Asia Minor, Egypt, Sicily, Italy, and Switzerland, he returned to his native place, where he lived in great poverty, till the abbé Fautrier became his patron. He died at Paris in 1710. His manners were gay, and his conversation brilliant. His poetical pieces were collected and published in 1753, 8vo.—Nouv. Dict.

LAINÉZ (James), a Spaniard, and one of the companions of Loyola, whom he succeeded in the generalship of the order of jesuits in 1558. He assisted at the council of Trent, where he supported the papal authority to an extravagant degree. He obtained from pope Paul IV. the perpetual generalship of the order, and the following extraordinary privileges; the right of making all manner of contracts without the privacy or consent of the society; that of giving authority and authenticity to all comments and explanations of the constitutions; the power of making new, and altering the old; that of having prisons independently of the secular power. Lainéz refused a cardinalship, and died at Rome in 1565, aged 53.—Nouv. Dict. Life by Ribadeneira.

LAIRESSÉ (Gerard), a celebrated painter and engraver, was born at Liege in 1640. He studied painting under his father, whom he far excelled. After residing some years at Utrecht, he was persuaded by a merchant of Amsterdam to remove to that city, where he gained a great reputation, and died in 1711. He excelled in historical subjects, and his principal performance is said to be the Child Moses trampling on the Crown of Pharaoh. While painting a picture he used to relieve himself by playing on the violin. Lairessé was also a good engraver; and he likewise wrote a very excellent work on the principles of painting. Before his death he became blind. His brother James was a flower painter, and John and Ernest painted insects. Two of his sons were also painters.—Pilkington.

LAIRE (Francis Xavier), a learned bibliographer, was born at Vadans, near Gray in France, in 1739, and died at Sens in 1800. He was celebrated for his knowledge of bibliography, and published, 1. Mémoires towards a History of some Great Men of the sixteenth century, with a Supplement to Maittaire's Annals of Typography, 4to.; 2. Specimen Historicum Typographiarum Romanarum cum Indice librorum, 8vo.; 3. Epistola ad abbate Ugolini, 8vo.; 4. On the Origin and Progress of Printing in Franche-Comté, 12mo.; 5. Seconde delle Edizioni Aldini, 12mo.; 6. Index librorum ab inventa Typogra- phia ad an. 1500, 2 vol. 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LAIS, a celebrated courtesan, was a native of Hyccara in Sicily. She was taken from thence at the age of seven years by Nicias the Athenian, who carried her to Greece. She afterwards resided at Corinth, where she had Aristippus and Diogenes among her admirers. The price for her favours was so enormous as to occasion the proverb, "It is not in every man's power to visit Corinth." Going with a lover to Thebes, she is said to have been stoned to death there by the women, out of jealousy, in the temple of Venus.—Plutarch. Bayle.

LAKE (Arthur), an English prelate, was born at Southampton, and bred at Wykeham's school, from whence he was elected to New College, Oxford, where he became fellow. In 1608 he obtained the deanry of Worcester, and in 1616 the bishopric of Bath and Wells. He was a learned man, a sound divine, and an exemplary bishop. He died in 1626. After his death was printed a large volume in folio of his sermons and meditations.—Wood, A. O.

LALANDE (Michael Richard de), a French musician, was born in Paris in 1657, and died at Versailles in 1726. When very young he became a chorister in the church of St. Germain-l'Auxerre, having an uncommon propensity to music. On arriving to manhood he lost his fine voice, and applied to the violin in hopes of being employed by Lulli at the opera, but being refused he broke his instrument and studied the organ. The duke de Noailles became his patron, and recommended him to Louis XIV. who appointed him musical instructor to two of the princesses. He also became composer to the king, and master of the chapel. His compositions, in 2 vols. folio, have been greatly admired.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LALLI (John Baptist), an Italian poet, who was employed by the duke of Parma and the pope in the government of several cities. He died at Norcia in Umbria in 1637, aged 64. He wrote, 1. Domiziano moscheida; 2. Il mal Francese; 3. La Gerusalemme desolata; 4. L'Eneide travistita; 5. a volume of miscellaneous poems.—Tiraboschi.

LALRY (Thomas Arthur, count), a gallant general in the French service, was a native of Ireland, whose family had suffered by their attachment to the house of Stuart. He signalized himself at the battle of Fontenoy, and was appointed brigadier in the field by Louis XV. In 1756 he was sent to the East Indies as governor of the French possessions there. He took Gondalore and fort St. David, but was defeated before Madras, and forced to retire to Pondicherry, which he was forced to surrender to the English in 1761. On his arrival in France the popular clamour was so great that he was sent to the Bastille, and afterwards tried by the parliament, which condemned him to be beheaded, on the absurd charge of having sold Pondicherry to the enemy. He suffered his fate with great fortitude in 1766; but his son, M. Lally de Tollendal, obtained a reversal of the sentence, and a grant of his father's estates in 1783.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LAMBALLE (Maria Theresia Louisa of Savoy Carignan, princess de), was born at Turin in 1749, and married to the duke de Bourbon-Penthièvre, but became a widow in the flower of youth and beauty. Being appointed superintendant of the household to Maria Antoinette queen of France, she became the particular favourite of that unfortunate princess. On the flight of Louis XVI. and his family she took another route, and having arrived at Dieppe, passed over to England. Her attachment however to the queen was so great that she braved all dangers and returned to France, and entered the prison of the Temple with her royal friend. From thence she was dragged to another, and lastly, Sept. 3, 1793, brought before a ferocious tribunal, where her courage and calmness would have excited respect in any but tygers. She was there butchered with sabres, her head and breasts cut off, and her heart taken out. These borne on pikes were carried about in savage triumph, and inhumanly taken to the king and his family.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LAMBECIUS (Peter), a learned writer, was born in 1628 at Hamburg. At the age of 19 he published Remarks on Aulus Gellius. In 1652 he was appointed professor of history at Hamburg, and in 1660 was chosen rector of the college, but having married a rich old woman, but so peevish and covetous that he quitted Hamburg and went to Rome, where he turned Roman catholic. He afterwards became librarian to the emperor of Germany, and died at Vienna in 1680. He was the author of Origines Hamburgenses, 2 vols. 4to.; and other learned works.—Moreri.

LAMBERT of Schawemburg, a celebrated German benedictine, who in 1058 made a journey to Jerusalem, and on his return to Europe composed a chronicle from Adam to 1077; the greatest part of it, however, is a history of Germany. It was printed at Basil in 1669, folio.—Moreri.

LAMBERT (Anne Theresa, marchioness of), an ingenious French lady, was born at Paris in 1647. She married Henry Lambert, marquis of St. Bris, in 1666, and lost him in 1686. She died universally esteemed in 1733. Her works are, 1. Advice of a Mother to a Son and Daughter, full of good rules; 2. New Reflections on Women; 3. Treatise on Friendship; 4. On Old Age; 5. The Female Hermit; 5. Miscellaneous. All her writings shew a fine taste and an excellent heart.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LAMBERT (John), major-general in the parliament army during the civil wars in the reign of Charles I. He distinguished himself at the battles of Naseby and Fife; and assisted Cromwell in his advancement to the protectorate, but opposed his taking the title of king. At the restoration he was tried and condemned, but was pardoned, and died an exile at Guernsey.—Granger.

LAMBERT (Claude Francis), a French aesthetic, which profession he quitted, and went to Paris, where he wrote for the booksellers. He died in 1765. He wrote the New Telemachus, 3 vols.; Memoirs of a Woman of Quality, 3 vols.; History of all Nations, 14 vols. &c.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LAMBERT (George), an English landscape painter, was instructed by Haffel, and imitated Wootton, but he afterwards adopted the manner of Gaspar. He painted scenes for the theatres, and some pictures for the India-house. He died in 1765.—Pilkington.

LAMBERT (John Henry), an eminent mathematician, was a native of Mulhausen in Alsace. He wrote a Treatise on the Orbits of Comets; a Treatise on the Properties of Light; another on Perspective, &c. He died at Berlin in 1777, aged 49.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LAMBIN (Dennis), a learned Frenchman, was born in Picardy in 1516. He became professor of the belles-lettres at Paris, and published Commentaries on Plautus, Lucretius, Cicero, and Horace. He also translated into Latin Aristotle's Morals and Politics, and some of the orations of Demosthenes and Æschines. He died of grief on account of the death of Peter Ramus, in 1572.—Moreri.

LAMBAUN (Margaret), a Scotch heroine, was a servant of Mary Stuart, as was her husband, who died of grief occasioned by the death of his mistress. Margaret, resolved to avenge the death of her husband and mistress upon Elizabeth, to accomplish her purpose assumed a man's habit, and repaired to the English court, but as she was pushing through a crowd to get near the queen, she dropped one of her pistols. This being observed, she was seized and brought before Elizabeth, who examined her strictly, and Margaret replied, "Madam, though I appear in this habit I am a woman; I was several years in the service of queen Mary, whom you have unjustly put to death; you have also caused that of my husband, who died of grief to see that innocent queen perish so iniquitously. Now, as I had the greatest love for both, I resolved to revenge their deaths by killing you. I have made many efforts to divert my resolution from this design, but in vain; I found myself necessitated to prove by experience the truth of the maxim, that reason nor force can hinder a woman from vengeance, when she is impelled thereto by love." The queen heard this discourse with calmness, and answered; "You are then persuaded that in this action you have done your duty, and satisfied the demands which your love for your mistress and your spouse required from you; but what think you is my duty to do to you?" Margaret asked if this question was put as a queen or a judge; and on her majesty's saying as a queen, "Then," said Margaret, "your majesty ought to grant me a pardon." "But what assurance can you give me," said the queen, "that you will not repeat the attempt?" "Madam," Lambrun rejoined, "a favour which is given under restraints is no more a favour; and in so doing your majesty would act against me as a judge." The queen was so struck with her behaviour, that she gave her a pardon, and a safe conduct till she got out of the kingdom.—Greg. Let's Life of Queen Elizabeth.

LAMI (Bernard), a Cartesian philosopher, and priest of the oratory, was born at Mons of a noble family in 1645. He was deprived of a professorship at Saumur, and also of some ecclesiastical preferment for his zeal in behalf of the doctrines of Des Cartes. He died at Rouen in 1715. He wrote, 1. Elements of Geometry and Mathematics, in 2 vols. 12mo; 2. Treatise on Perspective; 3. Discourses on the Sciences and the Manner of Study, 12mo; 4. Demonstration of the Holiness and Truth of Christian Morality, 5 vols. 12mo; 5. Apparatus Biblicus, 4to. [This is a work of great merit.] 6. De Tabernaculo fœderis, de sancta Civitate Jerusalem et de Templo ejus, folio; 7. Harmonia five Concordia Evangelica, 2 vols. 4to; 8. The art of Speaking, with Reflections on Poetry, 12mo.—Niceron.

LAMI (Dom-Francis), a French ecclesiastic, of the congregation of St. Maur, was a native of Chartres, and an elegant writer. His book on Self-knowledge, 6 vols. 12mo, has been greatly valued. He died in 1711, aged 75. Besides the above work he wrote against Spinoza; Philosophical Letters; a Treatise on the Effects of Thunder, and several other pieces.—Moreri.

LAMI (John), professor of ecclesiastical history at Florence. He published an edition of the works of Meursius, in 12 vols. folio, and wrote a book on the Trinity, which was censured by the jesuits and defended by the author, who died in 1774.—Nouv. Dict.

LAMIA, a courtesan of Greece, was born at Athens, and became concubine to Ptolemy I. king of Egypt, with whom she was taken prisoner by Demetrius Poliorcetes, who made her his mistress. The Athenians erected a temple to this courtesan, under the name of Venus Lamia.—Plutarch.

LAMOIGNON (Christian Francis de); an eminent French lawyer and magistrate, was the son of the marquis de Baisville, and born at Paris in 1644. To a very fine and cultivated understanding he added the charms of eloquence, and he discharged the important duties of advocate-general and president of the parliament of Paris with the greatest reputation. He died in 1709. Louis XIV. had a great respect for his talents and his virtues, and gave him many proofs of his regard. He wrote a work entitled Le Playdoier, and a letter on the death of Bourdaloue. His father was also president of the parliament of Paris, and a great lover and patron of literary merit. He died in 1677.—Moreri.

LAMPE (Frederic Adolphus), professor of divinity, and rector of the university of Bremen, where he died in 1729, aged 46. He wrote, 1. De Cymbalis Veterum, 12mo; 2. History sacred and ecclesiastical, 4to; 3. Commentary on the Gospel of St. John, &c.—Nouv. Dict.

LAMPLUGH (Thomas), an English prelate, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, of which he became fellow in 1642. He complied with the presbyterians in the time of the civil war, but conformed at the restoration and became D. D. principal of Alban-hall, and vicar of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. In 1672 he was made dean of Rochester, and in 1676 bishop of Exeter. When the prince of Orange landed the bishop made a speech to the clergy and gentry, encouraging them to be loyal to James, who gave him the archbishopric of York. Notwithstanding this he took the oaths to William and Mary, and died at Thorp castle in 1691, aged 76. Wood, A. O.

LAMPRIIDIUS (Ælius), a Roman historian of the 4th century. He wrote the Lives of the Emperors Commodus, Antoninus, Diadumenius, Heliogabalus, and Alexander Severus, which are in the Historia Augustæ Scriptores, 2 vols. 8vo. Leyden 1671.—Vossius de Hist. Lat.

LAMPRIIDIUS (Benedict), a Latin poet of the 16th century, was a native of Cremona, and became professor of Greek and Latin at Rome, from whence he removed to Padua. At the invitation of Frederic Gonzaga he went to Mantua as tutor to his son. He wrote epigrams and lyric poems with elegance. He died in 1540.—Moreri.

LANA (Francis de), an eminent mathematician, was born at Brescia in Italy in 1637, and entered of the society of jesuits. He was the first who conceived the idea of aërostation, as appears in his voluminous work, entitled Magisterium Naturæ et Artis, published at Brescia in 1684, in 3 vols. folio. A particular dissertation on the subject, entitled, Navis Volans, tending to abate the claims of Montgolfier to this discovery, was published, from Lana's work, at Naples in 1784.

LANCASTER (Dr. Nathaniel), an English divine, was born in Cheshire, and became rector of Stamford Rivers in Essex, where he died in 1775. He wrote an essay on Delicacy, 8vo; a sermon entitled, Public Virtue, or a Love of our Country; and a poem against methodism.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LANCASTER (James), an English navigator, who in 1591 failed as commander of a squadron to the East Indies, where he touched at Ceylon and Sumatra, and after taking several vessels and losing some of his own, shaped his course for England, but in the voyage meeting with adverse winds he was driven on the coast of America. Lancaster landed on a small island, and the crew taking advantage of his absence, cut the cable and sailed to England. He afterwards got a passage on board a French ship, and arrived at Rye in 1594. Soon afterwards he went out again with another fleet, with which he committed many depredations on the coast of Brazil, and took the town of Fernambuco, which was plundered of immense treasure, which he brought to England in 1595. He next commanded the fleet sent out by the new East India company, and obtained the grant of a settlement at Achen, from the king of that country, and also at Bantam, after which he returned to England, and spent the remainder of his days in the calmer scenes of private life. He died about 1620.—Harris's Voyages. Hackluyt.

LANCELOT (Claude), a learned Frenchman, was a benedictine of the abbey of St. Cyran, from whence he was banished to Lower Brittany, on account of some disturbances which broke out in his monastery. He died in 1695, aged 79. He wrote, a new Method of learning the Latin and Greek Languages, both published under the title of Port Royal Grammars. They have been translated into English by Nugent, and are very valuable. Lancelot was also the author of Spanish and Italian Grammars, on a similar plan; and a Universal Grammar. His other works are: Delectus Epigrammatum, 2 vols. 12mo.; Memoirs of the Life of St. Cyran; Observations on Sacred Chronology; and some religious pieces.—Moreri.

LANCELOTTI (John Paul), a famous canonist, who was employed by pope Paul IV. in compiling the Institutions of Canon Law, in imitation of the Civil Institutions of Justinian. He was born at Perugia, in 1511, and died in 1591. There are other writings of his in print besides the above.—Moreri.

LANCISI (John Maria), a physician, was born at Rome in 1654, and died professor of anatomy, and physician to the pope, in 1720. He published several books on medical subjects, and his extensive library he gave to the hospital of the Holy Ghost for public use.—Nicéron.

LANCJEAN (Remi), a painter, was a native of Brussels, and the best of Vandyke's pupils. He died in 1671. His works are mostly on religious subjects, and painted in a fine style.—D'Argenville.

LANCRET (Nicholas), a French painter, was born at Paris in 1690. He copied the manner of his master Watteau, but did not equal him in taste or expression. He was a member of the academy of painting at Paris, and died there in 1743.—D'Argenville.

LANCRINCK (Prosper Hearnicus), an eminent landscape painter, was born at Antwerp about 1625. He came to England when young, and was patronised by several of the nobility and gentry. He represented broken, rude, and uncommon views. He died of intemperate living in 1692.—Vertue.

LANDA (Catherine), a learned lady, who wrote a Latin letter to Peter Bembo, in 1526. She was the sister of count Augustin Landon, and the wife of count John Fermo Trivalcio.—Tiraboschi.

LANDEN (John), an eminent mathematician, was born in Northamptonshire in 1719. He was a self-taught genius, and acquired a profound knowledge of abstract mathematics. He wrote some curious papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and in 1755 he published a volume, called, Mathematical Lucubrations. He was afterwards appointed agent to earl Fitzwilliam, which employment he fulfilled till within two years of his death. In 1766 he was chosen a fellow of the royal society. He published two volumes of Mathematical Memoirs, full of curious matter, but only calculated for the higher mathematicians. He died in 1790.—Tutton.

LANDINI (Christopher), a learned Venetian of the 15th century, who translated Pliny's Natural History into Italian, and wrote Commentaries on Horace.—Narr. Dis. Hist.

LANDO (Hortensio), an Italian physician of the 16th century, was a native of Milan, and author of several works under fictitious names, particularly two dialogues, one called Cicero Relegatus, and the other Cicero Revocatus; which have been falsely attributed to cardinal Aleander. He is not to be confounded with Bassano Lando, a physician of Padua, who was assassinated by a robber in 1562. He wrote several medical works.—Bayle.

LANDRI, bishop of Paris, was a man of unbounded charity and eminent piety. He founded the hospital called Hôtel Dieu, and died about 660.—Moreri.

LANE (Jane), an English heroine, who was the principal instrument in effecting the escape of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester. That monarch, disguised in her father's livery, rode before her on horseback from Bentley-hall, the seat of Mr. Lane, about twelve miles from Boscobel wood in which Charles had been concealed in an oak, to Mr. Norton's near Bristol, and from thence he went to Brightelmston, where he embarked for France.

She was well rewarded at the restoration, and married Sir Clement Fisher, bart. of Warwickshire.—Clarendon.

LANFRANC, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Pavia, and studied at Bologna, after which he went to France, where he retired to the abbey of Bec, of which he was elected prior in 1044. William duke of Normandy gave him the abbey of St. Stephen at Caen, and after his conquest of England he advanced him to the archbishopric of Canterbury. In 1071 he went to Rome to receive the pallium from pope Alexander II. but it must be observed to his honour, that he resisted the encroachments of Gregory VII. who repeatedly cited him to Rome to answer the charge of heresy. He rebuilt the cathedral of Canterbury, and founded several other churches and hospitals. He died in 1089. He wrote a book against Berenger on the Eucharist, and other works, which were published together in 1647.—Dupin.

LANFRANC (John), an Italian painter, was born at Parma in 1581. He became a domestic in the service of count Horatio Scotti, who perceiving his taste for drawing placed him under Augustin Caracci, after whose death he went to Rome and studied under Annibal, who employed him in several great works. He excelled in painting domes and ceilings in fresco. He died in 1647, leaving several children all very ingenious. He studied Correggio's manner with success.—Felicien vies des peintres.

LANFRANC, a physician and surgeon of Milan. He was greatly persecuted in his own country, on which he retired to France, where he died about 1300. He restored surgery to a degree of respectability, for which he incurred the hatred of the ignorant pretenders to the art. His Chirurgia Magna et Parva was printed at Venice in 1490, in folio, and at Lyons in 1553.—Moreri.

LANG (John Michael), professor of divinity at Altdorf, and the author of Philologia Barbaro-Græca, Nurimb. 1708, 4to.; Dissertationes Botanico-Theologicæ, Altorf, 1705, 4to.; and De Fabulis Mohammedicis, 1697, 4to. He died in 1731, aged 67.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

LANGALERIE (Philip de Gentils, marquis de), first baron of Saintonge, was a famous general, and served his country with great reputation for many years. However, this did not prevent his being disgraced by the persecutions of his enemy Chamillant the minister, on which he went into the service of the emperor and the king of Poland; the former of whom caused him to be arrested at Stadt, on a charge of having concerted a plan with the Turks to make a descent on Italy. He died in prison at Vienna in 1717, aged 66. The Memoirs under his name, printed in 1708 in French, is a mere romance.—Novo. Diet.

LANGBAINE (Gerard), a learned divine, was born in Westmoreland about 1608, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and proceeded to the degree of B.D. He printed an edition of Longinus at Oxford, and several other learned works. In 1645 he was chosen provost of his college, which, with the office of keeper of the archives, he held to his death in 1657. He was esteemed by Selden, Usher, and other great men, his correspondence with whom has been printed. His son Gerard LANGBAINE, born in 1656, became superior beadle of law at Oxford, and published an Appendix to the University Catalogue of Graduates, and an Account of the English Dramatic poets, 8vo. He died in 1692.—Wood.

LANGDALE (Marmaduke), a gallant English gentleman, who in the civil war raised a troop in the king's service, gained some advantage over general Fairfax, raised the siege of Pontefract castle, and made himself master of Berwick and Carlisle. On the ruin of the royal cause he went to Flanders, and was created by Charles II. lord Langdale. He died in 1681.—Clarendon.

LANGÉ (Joseph), professor of Greek at Friburg in the year 1610. He afterwards quitted the protestant communion, and turned catholic. He composed several works, and among others, one entitled, Elementale Mathematicum, reprinted in 1625. He was also the editor of the famous Polyanthes, 2 vols. folio.—Bayle.

LANGÉ (Charles Nicholas), an ingenious Swiss naturalist, who published, 1. Historia Lapidum figuratorum Helvetiæ; 2. Origo eorumdem; 3. Methodus Testaceæ Mariæ distribuéndi, in 1722, 4to.—Novo. Diet.

LANGÉ (Rodolphus), a German Latin poet, was nephew of Herman Lange, dean of the church of Munster, who gave him a canonry in the same church. He went to Italy, where he studied the Greek and Latin languages. Afterwards he composed a poem on the Taking of Jerusalem, and others. He died in 1519, aged 81.—Melch. Adam, in vit. Germ. Phil.

LANGELAND (Robert), an old English poet, and one of the first disciples of Wicliffe, who distinguished himself by a curious poem, entitled, The Visions of Pierce Plowman, written about 1369, intended as a satire on almost every description of men, but especially the clergy. It is written in blank verse with considerable force and humour, and in an alliterative measure.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

LANGHAM (Simon), an English prelate and cardinal, was abbot of Westminster, afterwards bishop of Ely, and lastly archbishop of Canterbury, in 1366. Edward III. made him treasurer of England, and Urban VIII. gave him a cardinalate with the title of legate. He died at Avignon in 1376.—Godwin de Presulibus.

LANGHORNE (Dr. John), an ingenious divine and poet, was the son of a clergyman, and born at Kirby Steven in Westmoreland, but where educated is not ascertained. On entering into orders he became tutor to the sons of a Lincolnshire gentleman, whose daughter he married. He held the living of Blagden in Somersetshire, and was besides a justice of the peace, and prebendary of Wells. He died in 1779. He was a writer in the Monthly Review, and also published, 1. Poems, in 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Letters of Theodosius and Constantia, 2 vols. 12mo.; 3. Solyman and Almena, a tale; 4. Frederick and Pharamond, 12mo.; 5. Sermons, 2 vols.; 6. Effusions of Fancy, 2 vols.; 7. Fables of Flora, in verse; 8. A translation of Plutarch's Lives.—Europ. Mag.

LANGIUS (John), a physician of Silesia, was born in 1485, and died in 1565. He took his degree at Pisa, after which he practised at Heidelberg, and became physician to the elector palatine. He published at Basil in 4to. 1554, Medical Epistles, which are very curious.—Morri.

LANGLE (John Maximilian de), a French protestant minister, was born at Evreux in 1590. He served the reformed church at Rouen twenty-five years, and died in 1674. He wrote a Defence of Charles I. King of England; 2 volumes of Sermons; and translated from the English the Whole Duty of Man.—Bayle.

LANGLE (Samuel de), son of the above, was born at London; but taken to France when he was a year old. He was minister of the church at Rouen, from whence he removed to Charenton, where he was greatly esteemed for his learning and virtues. On the persecution breaking out against the protestants he removed to England, where he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Westminster, and the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.D. He died in 1699. Bishop Stillingfleet printed a letter of his on the difference between the church of England and the dissenters.—Ibid.

LANGLEY (Batty), an English architect, who died in 1751. He published many useful practical books, as the Builder's Jewel; the Builder's Price-Book; and other works for masons, bricklayers, and carpenters.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LANGTON (Stephen), archbishop of Canterbury, was born in England, but educated at Paris. He was chancellor of Paris, cardinal of Rome, and made archbishop by the pope in opposition to king John and the clergy. John forbade Langton from entering his dominions, and banished the monks of Canterbury, for which the kingdom was laid under the papal interdict.

The king was afterwards excommunicated, and his subjects absolved from their allegiance; on which he made his submission by complying with the papal terms, after which he received the papal absolution from Langton, who, however, refused the pope's bull of excommunication against the barons for leaguely against John, and for which he was suspended at Rome, where he suffered also many mortifications. At length he purchased his pardon, and he was permitted to return to England, where he died in 1228. He composed some theological works.—Pitts. Rapin.

LANGTON (John), an English monk of the order of Carmelites, who appeared with advantage at the council of Basil, and wrote a Chronicle of England.—Pitts.

LANGUET (Hubert), minister of state to Augustus elector of Saxony, was a native of France, and converted to the protestant faith by Melancthon. He was at Paris during the massacre of St. Bartholomew, as ambassador from the elector, and narrowly escaped with his life, after saving that of Wichelius the printer, in whose house he lodged, and also the famous de Mornay. He was employed in several other embassies; but being suspected of favouring the Zuinglians, he quitted the service of the elector, and entered into that of the prince of Orange. He died at Antwerp in 1581. His principal works are; a Collection of Letters in Latin to the Elector of Saxony, printed at Halle in 4to. 1699; Letters to Sir Philip Sidney, 12mo. 1646. Other pieces have been attributed to him, but not on sufficient proof.—Bayle. Moreri.

LANGUET (John Baptist Joseph), doctor of the Sorbonne, and vicar of St. Sulpice at Paris, was a relation of the above, and born at Dijon in 1675. He built a new church for his parish, and founded the house of the Infant Jesus, which consisted of two divisions, the first of thirty-five ladies descended of decayed but noble families, the second of above 400 poor women and children. The young ladies received a suitable education, and were also employed in domestic concerns. The others worked at the spinning-wheel, and made a quantity of linen and cotton cloths. Nothing could be more excellent than this institution, which the revolution swept away, as it did every thing else that was good. Languet devoted himself wholly to the service of the poor, and spent his all on works of charity. He refused several bishoprics, and died in 1750.—Nouv. Dict.

LANGUET (John Joseph), brother of the above, was archbishop of Sens. He translated the Psalms into French, and published several polemical treatises. He died in 1753.—Ibid.

LANIER, a painter, who was employed to collect pictures in foreign countries for Charles I. He placed a particular mark on all which he brought to England. No further account is known of him.—Virtue.

LANSBERGE or Loufbergius (Philip), a learned mathematician, was born at Ghent in 1561. He was minister of the gospel at Antwerp several years, but on the taking of that city by the Spaniards he removed to Holland, and died at Middleburg in 1632. He wrote, Sacred Chronology, 1626; Essays on the Resurrection of Astronomy; four books of Geometrical Triangles; On Measuring the Heavens; On the Diurnal and Annual Motion of the Earth, &c. His son James was also a good mathematician, and published a defence of the works of his father against Fromond, a professor at Louvain, who maintained that the earth stands still. He died in 1657.—Martin Biog. Phil. Neuro. Dict. Hist.

LANZANO (Andrea), an Italian painter, was born at Milan, and educated under Carlo Maratti. He was esteemed for the excellence of his composition and the beauty of his colouring. He died in 1712.—Pilkington. D'Argenville.

LAFARELLI (Francis), an eminent architect and mechanic, was born at Cortona in 1521. His knowledge of the military science and mechanics recommended him to Cosmo I. grand duke of Tuscany; and pope Pius IV. entrusted him with the defence of Civita Vecchia, which place he strongly fortified. Michael Angelo confided to him the execution of his designs for the church of St. Peter. In 1565 he was sent to fortify Malta against the attempts of Solymán, and there he planned the city of Valette. He next engaged in the service of the Venetians, but died of the plague before Candia, in 1570.—Newo. Dict. Hist.

LANZONI (Joseph), a learned physician and professor at Ferrara, was born in 1663, and died in 1730. He was the restorer of the academy of his native place, and became secretary to it. He was also an associate of many other societies. To great skill as a physician, he added a knowledge of antiquities, and a fine taste for polite literature. His works were collected into 3 vols. 4to. Latin, in 1738.—Newo. Dict. Hist.

LAPIDE (Cornelius à), a learned jesuit, who died at Rome in 1637, aged 71. He devoted himself to the critical elucidation of the scriptures, and his works amount to 10 vols. folio.—Moreri.

LAPO (Arnulphus di), a famous architect, was born at Florence in 1232, and died in 1300. He was the first who revived the true principles of architecture, and united in his structures elegance with solidity. He built the cathedral at Florence, and other great works.—Newo. Dict. Hist.

LARDNER (Nathaniel), a learned dissenting divine, was born at Hawkhurst in Kent, in 1684. After receiving his academical education at London, he went to Utrecht, and from thence to Leyden, where he followed his studies with close application, and then returned to England. Soon afterwards he became tutor to the son of lady Treby. In 1723 he was engaged with some other ministers in a course of theological lectures at a meeting in the Old Bailey, but he did not obtain a fixed settlement till 1729, when he became pastor of a congregation in Crutched Friars. He wrote an excellent answer to Woolston on the miracles, and about the same time, published a Letter on the Logos. In 1738 appeared the first part of the Credibility of the Gospel History, a work admirably executed, and of the greatest service to christianity. The university of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of D.D. for his useful labours. He died at his native place in 1768. All his works have been published in 11 vols. 8vo. They abound in critical elucidations of the scripture, and early ecclesiastical history, evincing profound learning and intense application.—Life by Kippis.

LARGILLIERE (Nicolas de), a French painter, was born at Paris in 1656. He lived some time in England, and was employed by Charles II.; but a regard for his family induced him to return to France, where he obtained the friendship of Le Brun, and the post of historical painter to the academy. On the accession of James II. he again visited England, and painted the portrait of that monarch and that of his queen, after which he returned to Paris, where he became director of the academy, and died in 1746.—D'Argenville.

LARON (Marcellus), a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1653. He accompanied his father to England. He drew correctly, and painted drapery so well that Kneller employed him to clothe his figures. But his greatest merit is the exactness with which he copied the works of eminent masters. He died in 1705.—Virtue.

LARRY (Isaac de), a French protestant, who was obliged to quit his country at the revocation of the edict of Nantes, on which he took an asylum in Holland, where he was made historiographer to the States. He wrote, the History of England, 4 vols. folio; the History of Louis XIV. 3 vols. 4to; the History of Augustus, 8vo; the History of the Seven Wise Men, 3 vols. 8vo. He died in 1719.

LARROQUE (Matthew de), a French protestant divine, was born at Lierac in 1619. The duchess de la Tremouille chose him for minister at Vitre in Brittany, where he served twenty-seven years, and then removed to Rouen. He died in 1684. His principal works are; A History of the Eucharist, 4to; An Answer to the Book of Bussuet, bishop of Meaux, on Communion of two kinds, 12mo; A Treatise upon the Regale. His son Daniel, on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, went to London, from thence to Copenhagen, and afterwards to Amsterdam. Having resolved to turn catholic he went to Paris, but writing a satirical piece against Louis XIV. on occasion of the famine in 1693, he was sent to prison, where he was kept five years. On his release he obtained a place and a pension. He died in 1781. He wrote the Life of Mahomet; the Life of Mezeray, the historian; and translated Echard's Roman History into French.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

LASCARIS (Constantine), a learned Greek, who went to Italy on the taking of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453. He settled at Messina, where he taught Greek with reputation, and had a great number of scholars. He died there at the end of the 15th century, and left his library to the senate. He wrote a Greek grammar, printed at Milan in 1476, 4to.—Ib.

LASCARIS (Andrew-John), surnamed Rhyndacenus, a learned Greek, who was employed by Lorenzo de Medici to collect books in Greece, and the grand-signior allowed him to examine his libraries, whereby he acquired inestimable treasures. On his return he was invited to France by Louis XII. who employed him as ambassador to Venice. When Leo X. ascended the papal chair Lascaris went to Rome, and became director of the Greek college. He died there in 1535. He revived the use of the capital letters of the Greek alphabet, and wrote some epigrams in that language.—Ibid.

LASCENA (Peter), a learned Neapolitan, was born in 1590. He lived at Rome with cardinal Barberini, and died in 1636. He wrote; Nepenthes Homeri seu de abolendo lactu; Cleombrotus; Dell'Antico Ginnasio Napoletano, 4to.

LASSELLS (Richard), a priest of the Romish communion, was born of a good family in Yorkshire, and bred first at Oxford, and afterwards at Douay. He died at Montpelier in 1668, aged 65. He wrote Travels in Italy, 2 vols. 8vo. A gentleman of his name and family was a cornet in the royal army during the civil wars, and contributed much to the escape of Charles II. after the battle at Worcester.—Wood, A. O.

LATIMER (Hugh), an excellent prelate and martyr, was born at Thurcotton in Leicestershire, of humble parentage, in 1475. He, however, received a good education at Cambridge, where at the beginning of the reformation he was very zealous against popery, but on conversing with Bilney the martyr, he renounced the Romish tenets, and became as ardent on the other side. He now laboured earnestly in preaching the gospel, and his fame reaching the ears of Henry VIII. that monarch sent for him, and was so pleased with his discourses that he at length conferred on him the bishopric of Worcester. But Latimer was no time-server: on the contrary he expostulated with the king for his cruelties, and went so far as to present him a New Testament with a leaf doubled down to the text, "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge." He afterwards resigned his bishopric and went to live privately, but on the fall of lord Cromwell, his patron, he was sent to the Tower, where he remained till the accession of Edward VI. who would have restored him to his diocese, but he refused it. He then went to reside with archbishop Cranmer, whom he assisted in framing the homilies, and in completing the work of reformation. When Mary came to the throne he was committed to the Tower, from whence he was sent with Ridley and Cranmer to Oxford, to have a conference with some popish divines. In that dispute he conducted himself with remarkable clearness and simplicity; and when it was over sentence was passed upon Ridley and Latimer, who were burnt together at the same stake, A.D. 1555. Latimer, after recommending his soul to God, thus cheered his brother sufferer: "We shall this day, my lord, light such a candle in England as shall never be extinguished." His sermons have been several times printed.—Bigg. Brit.

LAUD (William), a learned and celebrated prelate, was the son of a clothier at Reading in Berkshire, and born there in 1573. From Reading school he was removed to St. John's college, Oxford, of which he was elected fellow in 1593. In 1601 he entered into orders, and having opposed some of the innovations of the puritans, he fell under the displeasure of Dr. Abbot then vice-chancellor, which continued during the life of that divine. His first preferment was the living of Stamford in Northamptonshire, and in 1608 he obtained that of Northkilworth in Leicestershire, at which time he took the degree of D.D. and became chaplain to Neile, bishop of Rochester. In 1611 he was elected president of his college, and in 1616 preferred to the deanry of Gloucester. The year following he attended king James to Scotland, and in 1620 he obtained a prebend of Westminster, and about the same time was made bishop of St. David's. In 1622 he held a conference with Fisher the jesuit, in the presence of the marquis of Buckingham and his mother, to confirm them in the protestant religion. An account of this conference was printed but never answered. At the coronation of Charles I. he officiated as dean of Westminster, and in 1626 he was translated to the see of Bath and Wells, and in 1628 to London. The university of Oxford in 1630 elected him chancellor, than whom it never had a more liberal patron. He ornamented St. John's college, erected the building at the end of the divinity school, founded an Arabic lecture, and gave a collection of MSS. and coins to the university. He succeeded archbishop Abbot in 1633 in the see of Canterbury, and began a work of reformation not more necessary than it was unpopular. The puritans had increased to an extraordinary degree, and in the church there was a great want of conformity to the liturgy, owing to the laxity of his predecessor. Archbishop Laud not only paid minute attention to the state of the Anglican church, but also to that of Ireland, for which he obtained all the impropriations that remained in the crown. On the breaking out of the rebellion his palace was assailed by the mob; and in 1640 he was impeached by the house of commons, and sent to the Tower, but not brought to his trial till three years afterwards, when he made a most able and satisfactory defence of himself. Though no treason could be proved, the house of commons passed an act of attainder against him, which the lords were compelled to confirm by threats. He was beheaded on Tower-hill, January 10, 1644, and his behaviour in his last moments was calm and intrepid. His corpse was interred in the church of Allhallows, Barking, but afterwards removed to the chapel of St. John's college, Oxford. Archbishop Laud was a man of quick passions, but of strict integrity and unaffected piety. He possessed great learning and extensive abilities, and he was the firm friend of the church of England, though the puritans maliciously represented him as inclined to popery. After his death appeared his sermons in 1 vol. 12mo.; Devotions, 1 vol.; and in 1694 Mr. Wharton published his Diary and Remains, 2 vols. folio.—Biog. Brit.

LAUDER (William), a native of Scotland. He taught Latin at the university of Edinburgh, where he published in 1739 an edition of Johnstons's Psalms. From thence he came to London, and published a remarkable book, entitled, An Essay on Milton's Use and Imitation of the Moderns in his Paradise Lost. His alleged quotations from Grotius and others passed as genuine for some time, but at length they were detected and proved forgeries of Lauder's own by Mr. Douglas, since bishop of Salisbury. Lauder, on being discovered, subscribed a confession of his offence dictated by Dr. Johnson, after which he went to Barbadoes, where he kept a school. He died in 1771.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

LAUDON (Gideon Ernest), or Louden, an eminent German general, was born at Tootzen in 1716, of a noble family, which came originally from Scotland. In 1731 he entered into the Russian service as cadet, but though he behaved with great gallantry he only obtained a lieutenancy, on which he went into the Austrian service in 1742, and had a captain's commission. After the peace in 1748 he was raised to the rank of major. At the beginning of the seven years' war he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of Croats, and soon displayed brilliant military talents against the king of Prussia. In 1757

he was made a major general, and the year following invested with the military order of Maria Theresa. The same year was gained the great battle of Hochkirchen, the merit of which is generally attributed to Laudon, who next gained the battle of Kunersdorf, for which the empress Elizabeth of Russia presented him with a magnificent sword. He afterwards defeated the Prussians at Landshut, and took the town of Glatz. At the conclusion of the war in 1763 he was rewarded with a pension and a barony. In 1766 he was nominated a member of the aulic council of war, and in 1778 elevated to the dignity of field-marshal. In the last Turkish war he served with additional reputation, and in 1789 added Belgrade to the imperial dominions. This great man died July 14th, 1790.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

LAUGIER (Mark Antony), an ingenious French writer, was born in Provence in 1713. He entered into the order of jesuits, which, however, he quitted on account of some dissatisfaction. He died in 1769. His works are, an Essay on Architecture; the History of Venice, 12 vols. 12mo.; the History of the Peace of Belgrade, 2 vols. 12mo.; Apology for the French Music, &c.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

LAUNAY (Francis de), a French advocate, who wrote a Commentary on the Institutes Coutumieres of Loysel, and Remarks on the Roman and French Jurisprudence. He died in 1693, aged 81.—Ibid.

LAUNOY (John de), a learned French divine, was born in Normandy in 1603, and died at Paris in 1678. He wrote several books on ecclesiastical history, and defended the liberties of the Gallican church against the papal claims. He also exposed legends and canonizations.—Bayle.

LAUNOY (Charles de), a celebrated commander, who served the emperor Charles V. and was made governor of Tournay, and viceroy of Naples. He took Francis I. prisoner at the battle of Pavia, and treated him with the greatest respect and liberality. He was afterwards appointed to conduct the French king back to his dominions. He died in 1527.—Moreri.

LAURA. See PETRARCH.

LAURENS (Andrew), a French physician, was a native of Arles, and became professor of medicine at Montpellier, and physician to Henry IV. He died in 1609. His anatomical works were printed at Paris in 1600, folio. His brother Honorius was an advocate in the parliament of Paris, and a distinguished partizan of the League. Having embraced the ecclesiastical state, Henry IV. gave him the archbishopric of Embrun. He died in 1612. He wrote the edict of Henry III. for re-uniting the protestants to the Romish church, and some other works.—Moreri.

LAURENT (Peter Joseph), an eminent mechanic, was born in Flanders in 1715. At the age of eight years he constructed an hydraulic machine, and when he was twenty-one he was entrusted with the superintendence of several public works. He had also the direction of the canals in the Low Countries and Hainault. He formed a grand design of joining the Somme with the Scheldt; and performed many other admirable and almost insurmountable schemes, for which he was rewarded with the order of St. Michael. He died in 1773.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LAURI (Philippo), a painter, was born at Rome in 1623. His father and eldest brother were also eminent artists. He studied under Angelo Caroselli, whom he excelled. He painted historical pieces, with landscapes in the back-ground, also large pictures for churches, but his chief subjects were metamorphoses and bacchanals. He died at Rome in 1694.—D'Argenville.

LAVATER (John-Gaspard-Christian), a Swiss divine and ingenious writer, was born at Zurich in 1741. He became pastor of the principal church of St. Peter, at his native place, and was distinguished for his unwearied zeal in behalf of practical christianity. He died January 2, 1801, in consequence of a wound which he received in 1799, when the French troops under Massena took Zurich by storm. Lavater was a man of brilliant talents, which were, however, mingled with much mystic enthusiasm. He wrote; 1. a Treatise on Physiognomy, which has been translated into English and other languages; 2. Poems; 3. the Journal of a Self-Observer; 4. Jesus the Messiah, in 4 vols.; 5. Fraternal Letters, 8vo.; 6. Letters supposed to have been written by St. Paul before his Conversion, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LAVINGTON (George), an English prelate, was born at Heavitree in Devonshire, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of LL. D. He successively became prebendary of Worcester, canon-residentary of St. Paul's, and lastly bishop of Exeter. He died in 1762, aged 79, and lies buried in Exeter cathedral. His lordship wrote a very curious book, entitled, the Enthusiasm of Methodists and Papists compared, 8vo., another on the Moravians, and some single sermons.—Poyns's Hist. Devon.

LAVIROTTE (Louis Anne), a French physician, was born at Nolay in the diocese of Autun, and died in 1759, aged 34. He translated Maclaurin's Account of Newton's Discoveries, and wrote Observations on the Hydrophobia, with some other works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LAVOISIER (Anthony Laurence), a celebrated French chemist, was born at Paris in 1743. In 1766 he obtained a prize from the academy for a dissertation on the best mode of lighting the streets, so as to combine the several properties of economy, distinctness of vision, and facility of operation. Two years after, he was chosen a member of the academy, to which he contributed a number of curious papers. He invented a new theory of chemistry, which was received with great applause in Germany and France, though strenuously opposed by Dr. Priestley, whose phlogistic hypothesis it tended to overthrow. In 1789 he published his Elements of Chemistry, a work of great merit and importance. He succeeded Buffon and Tillet as treasurer of the academy, and he became also farmer-general, and commissary of the national treasury, in all which offices he conducted himself with strict integrity, but notwithstanding his talents and virtues he was dragged before the revolutionary tribunal, who sentenced him to death, and though he only asked for a little time to complete some experiments, he was guillotined April 6, 1794. Besides his Elements he wrote Chemical and Philosophical Miscellanies, 2 vols. 8vo.; Report of the Commissioners charged with examining Animal Magnetism; Instructions for the making Nitre, &c.—Eloge by Fourcroy: and Life by Lalande.

LAW (John), a famous projector, was born at Edinburgh in 1671. He acquired a considerable knowledge of practical mathematics, and particularly excelled as a calculator and accountant. Having seduced the daughter of a gentleman in England, he flew the brother of his mistress, and to avoid being hanged went to Holland, and from thence to Italy. He is said afterwards to have returned to his own country, and to have made proposals to parliament for issuing paper currency, which was rejected. Law then went abroad again, and after residing in different places, settled at Genoa. In 1716 he established a bank at Paris under his own name, but with the authority of the regent duke of Orleans. To this was joined the company of the Mississippi, a pretended scheme for paying off the national debt, and of enriching subscribers. The project became extravagantly popular, and every one was anxious to convert his gold and silver into paper. In 1720 Law was made comptroller of the finances. The bubble, however, at length burst, and the people, enraged, besieged the palace of the regent, crying out as they held up their hands full of bills, "See the fruit of your system." Law was exiled to Pontiole, from whence he escaped to Italy, and died at Venice in 1729. He wrote a small book on Money and Paper Credit.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LAW (William), a pious English divine, was born at King'scliffe in Northamptonshire in 1686, and educated at Oxford, where he took his degrees, and entered into orders, but entertaining scruples respecting the oaths, he remained a nonjuror, and thus missed preferment which was repeatedly offered to him. He lived for the most part a retired life at the house of Mrs. Hester Gibbon, aunt of the celebrated historian, in Northamptonshire, where he died in 1761. He wrote against bishop Hoadley, and some valuable practical books, 'as, a Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life; a Treatise on Christian Perfection, &c. In his latter days he fell into the mystic reveries of Jacob Behmen, whose works he published.—Gibbon's Posth. Works.

LAW (Edmund), a learned English prelate, was a native of Westmoreland, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, but became fellow of Christ's college. He was a member of a society at the university called the Zodiac, consisting of several learned and ingenious young men. In 1739 he was presented to the living of Graystoke, from whence he removed to Salkeld. In 1755 he was chosen master of St. Peter's college; in 1767 he obtained a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Durham, and in 1769 the bishopric of Carlisle. He died in 1787, aged 84. He published, 1. The Theory of Religion, in 1 vol. 8vo.; 2. Archbishop King's Origin of Evil, with notes, 8vo.; 3. A Review of the Controversy concerning an intermediate State, 12mo.; and some Sermons.—Encycl. Brit.

LAWES (Henry), an English musician, was born at Salisbury in 1600. He became a gentleman of the chapel royal, and one of the band of Charles I. In 1653 he published his Ayres and Dialogues, &c. folio. He set to music the Comus of Milton, with whom he was intimate. He also set most of Waller's songs, and died in 1662. His brother William was an excellent performer. He was commissary in the royal army, and was killed at the siege of Chester.—Hawkins. Burney.

LAWRENCE (Stringer), an eminent general, in the service of the East-India company, was born in 1697, and died in 1775. The company, out of gratitude for his services, erected a fine monument to his memory in Westminster abbey.—Mortimer.

LAWSON (sir John), a brave English admiral, was born at Hull, and rose from the lowest station to the command of a ship. He served the parliament with great fidelity, but co-operated with Monk in effecting the restoration, for which he received the thanks of both houses. He served under James duke of York as rear admiral in 1665, and was killed in the engagement with the Dutch fleet.—Campbell.

LAZARELLI (John Francis), an Italian poet, was born at Gubio. He wrote sonnets and satirical poems, which have been often printed. He died in 1694, aged 80.—Tirabeschi.

LEAKE (Richard), master-gunner of England, was born at Harwich in 1629. He distinguished himself in several naval actions, particularly in the engagement with van Tromp in 1673. He was then on board the Royal Prince, which had lost all her masts, most of her guns were dismounted, and 400 of her men either killed or wounded; notwithstanding which he defended the ship against a superior force, and brought her safe to Chatham. In this action his son Henry was killed by his side. He was afterwards made master-gunner of England, and store-keeper of the ordnance at Woolwich. He had a great skill in fire works, and was the inventor of a new method of firing a mortar. He died in 1686.—Life by S. M. Leake.

LEAKE (sir John), son of the above, was born at Rotherhithe in 1656, and was with his father in the memorable engagement just mentioned. In 1688 he was appointed to the command of a fire-ship, and after the revolution he distinguished himself in the relief of Londonderry. In 1702 he expelled the French from Newfoundland, and on his return was made rear-admiral of the blue. The year following he assisted admiral Rooke in taking Gibraltar, for which he received the honour of knighthood. In 1705 he saved that important fortress from the combined attacks of France and Spain. The same year he was engaged in the reduction of Barcelona, and in 1706 he so seasonably relieved that place, that king Philip was obliged to raise the siege. This was followed by the reduction of Carthage-na, Alicante, and Majorca. On the death of sir Cloudesly Shovel he was appointed admiral of the white, and commander-in-chief of the fleet. In 1708 he convoyed the queen of Spain to her consort king Charles, after which he reduced the islands of Sardinia and Minorca. Having thus terminated the campaign he returned to England, where he was chosen member of parliament for Rochester. On the death of the queen he lost his places, after which he led a retired life, and died in 1720.—Life by S. M. Leake.

LEAKE (Stephen Martin), son of captain Martin, who married a sister of admiral Leake, which gallant officer being without issue bequeathed his property to the captain, and his son out of gratitude took upon him the name of Leake. He was garter king at arms, and published, 1. A History of British Coins, 8vo.; 2. The Life of Sir John Leake, 8vo.; 3. The Statutes of the Order of the Garter, 4to. He died in 1773.—Anecd. of Boswell.

LEAKE (John), an eminent English physician, was the founder of the Westminster lying-in-hospital, and died in 1792. He published several esteemed books on midwifery and female diseases.—Cent. Mag.

LEAFOR (Mary), an ingenious woman, was born in 1722. Her father was gardener to judge Blencowe at Marlton in Northamptonshire, and the only education she received was under her parents. She died in 1746, a few days after her mother. Two volumes of her poems were printed after her death, in the last of which is a tragedy entitled the Unhappy Father.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

LEBIN, an Arabian poet, who was employed by Mohammed to answer the satires which were written against him. He died at the age of 140.—D'Herbelot.

LEBLANC (Marcel), one of the fourteen jesuits sent by Louis XVI. to Siam. He laboured for the conversion of the Talapoins, and embarked for China, but the vessel was taken by the English, and he continued a prisoner till 1690. He died at Mozambique in 1693, aged 40. We have by him a History of the Revolution of Siam, 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

LECLAIR (John), a French musician, was born at Lyons in 1697. He was assassinated in the night at Paris, Oct. 23, 1764. He excelled on the violin, and his compositions are much admired, being sonatas, duets, trios, and concertos, with an opera called Scylla and Glaucus.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

LECTIUS (James), syndic of Geneva, was a respectable poet and critic. His greatest work is a Collection of the Ancient Greek Poets, in 2 vols. folio. He died in 1611, aged 53.—Moreri.

LEDRESMA (Alphonfus), a Spanish poet, called by his countrymen the divine. He died in 1623, aged 71. The title given him seems to have been more from his writing on sacred subjects, than from the sublimity of his genius.—Ibid.

LEDYARD (John), an American, who is rendered remarkable by his adventures. After going round the world with captain Cook, he formed the design of traversing the whole north of Europe on foot, which he accomplished even to the straits of Behring and Hudson's bay. This romantic enterprise he executed alone and unarmed. He next undertook to traverse the regions of Africa, but died at Cairo, in 1786.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

LEE (Samuel), a non-conformist divine, was born in London, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. He afterwards obtained the living of Bishopsgate, London, from whence he was ejected at the restoration. About 1686 he went to New England, but on hearing of the revolution he embarked for his native country, and was taken by the French. He died in confinement, aged 64. He wrote a curious Description of Solomon's Temple, folio; a Discourse on the Ten Tribes; Israel redux; the Life of Mr. John Rowe; and other works.—Calamy. Pulmer.

LEE (Nathaniel), an English dramatic writer, was the son of a clergyman, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree. Being disappointed of a fellowship, he went to London, and made an attempt as an actor, but without success, on which he commenced tragic poet. His first piece was Nero, Emperor of Rome, which came out in 1675, and had a favourable reception. He now continued to write a play every year till 1681, when he began to shew symptoms of insanity. These increasing he was confined for some time in Bedlam, from whence he was discharged in 1688. He wrote two plays after this, but never recovered his senses entirely, and died in 1690, in consequence of a drunken frolic. Lee had a great power over the passions, but his language is mere rant and bombast. His Rival Queens and Theodosius are still occasionally performed.—Biog. Dram.

LEECHMAN (Dr. William), a learned Scotch divine, and principal of the college of Glasgow, wrote two volumes of excellent Sermons, and an Essay on Prayer. He died in 1785, aged 78.—Gen. Mag.

LEFFE (John Anthony van der), a celebrated painter, was born at Bruges in 1664. He painted landscapes sketched after nature; also sea views. He died in 1720.—Pilkington.

LEEUW (Gabriel van der), a Dutch painter, was born at Dort in 1643. He painted animals, particularly droves of oxen and sheep. He died in 1688. His brother Peter was a good artist in the same line.—Houbraken.

LEGGE (George), baron of Dartmouth, and an eminent naval commander, was brought up under admiral Spragge, and at the age of twenty obtained the command of a ship. In 1673 he was appointed governor of Portsmouth, master of the horse, and gentleman to the duke of York. In 1682 he was raised to the peerage, and the year following sent to raze the fortifications of Tangier. James II. appointed him master of the horse, general of the ordnance, and constable of the Tower. He had also the command of the fleet at the time of the prince of Orange's invasion, but was prevented from acting by contrary winds. At the revolution he was committed to the Tower, where he died in 1691, aged 44.—English Peerage.

LEGGE (Elizabeth), the eldest daughter of Edward Legge, Esq. an ancestor of the earl of Dartmouth, was born in 1580. She studied the Latin, French, Spanish and Irish languages, and had a fine poetical genius, but became totally blind by midnight reading. She lived chiefly in Ireland, and died unmarried at the age of 105. Her family was remarkable for longevity. One of her brothers lived to be 109, one sister to be more than a century, and another died in her 112th year.—Ballard's British Ladies.

LEGUANO (Stefano Maria), an historical painter, was born near Bologna in 1660, and educated under Cignani and Carlo Maratti. His works display a fine imagination, a charming diffusion of light, and touched with a free and sweet pencil. He died in 1715.—Pilkington.

LEIBNITZ (William Godfrey baron de), a celebrated philosopher, was born at Leipzig in 1646. His father was professor of moral philosophy in that university, but died when his son was six years old. At the age of fifteen he began his studies at the university of Leipzig, from whence he removed to Jena. In 1664 he was admitted M.A. at the former university, and about the same time applied to the study of the Greek philosophers, but having chosen the law for his profession, he took his doctor's degree in that faculty at Altorf, after which he obtained a post at the court of the elector of Mentz. In 1672 he was at Paris, where he formed an acquaintance with several eminent mathematicians. The year after he visited England, and while here Mr. Collins gave him some hints of sir Isaac Newton's discovery of fluxions, to the merit of which invention Leibnitz afterwards laid claim. The elector of Hanover, George I. employed him in writing the History of the House of Brunswick. In 1700 he was admitted a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and on the erection of that of Berlin he was appointed perpetual president. In 1711 he was made aulic counsellor to the emperor, and Peter the Great of Russia appointed him privy counsellor of justice, with a pension. Leibnitz was engaged in a controversy at the time of his death in 1716, with Dr. Samuel Clarke, on the subjects of free-will, space, and other abstruse points. He was a good mathematician, an acute philosopher, and a man of lively genius, but vain and avaricious. His works are: Scriptores Rerum Brunswicarum, 3 vols. folio; Codex Juris Gentium Diplomaticus, 2 vols. fol.; De Jure Suprematûs ac Legationis Principum Germaniæ, under the fictitious name of Furstenberg; Miscellanea Berolinensia; Notitia Opticæ promotæ; De Arte Combinatoria; Miscellaneous Questions of Philosophy and Mathematics; Essays of Theodicea on the Goodness of God, and the Liberty of Man, 2 vols. 12mo; Metaphysical Tracts; Theoria Motus Abstracti, et Motus Concreti; Accessiones Historica, 2 vols. 4to.; De Origine Francorum Disquisitio; Poems, Latin and French, &c. His mathematical works were published by the Rev. Mr. Dutens, in 6 vols. 4to. 1767.—Moreri.

LEIGH (sir Edward), an English critic, was a native of Leicestershire, and educated at Magdalen hall, Oxford. He sat in the long parliament, and in the assembly of divines at Westminster. He was a man of great erudition, as his Critica Sacra, and Annotations on the New Testament, abundantly prove. He died at Rusball in Staffordshire, in 1671. Besides the above works he wrote, Observations on the Twelve Cæsars; a Body of Divinity; an Illustration of Terms of Law; Treatise of Religion and Learning, &c.—Wood, A. O.

LEZOW (Charles), a physician and naturalist, was a native of Lancashire. He was a fellow of the royal society, and published an account of the Natural History of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derby; also a History of Virginia, and Exercitationes de Aquis Mineralibus, 8vo. He died at the beginning of the 18th century.—Gen. B. D.

LEIGHTON (Alexander), a Scotch presbyterian divine, was born at Edinburgh in 1587. He became noted for his sufferings on account of some libels which he published against Charles I. and the church of England. For these he had his nose slit, his ears cut off, and a public whipping inflicted on him. In 1640 the parliament appointed him keeper of Lambeth palace, which was converted into a state prison. He died insane in 1644.—Neale's Hist. Pur.

LEIGHTON (Robert), archbishop of Glasgow, was son of the preceding, and born at Edinburgh. He became a most exemplary parish priest, and the magistrates of Edinburgh chose him president of their college. Soon after the restoration he was consecrated bishop of Dunblane, in which diocese he governed with great moderation. On account of the violent animosities which prevailed between the episcopalian and presbyterian parties, he went to London and resigned his see, but the king constrained him to accept the archbishopric of Glasgow, in which station he made another effort to restore moderation, but finding that all was in vain, he went to London, and resigned his dignity. He then led a retired life in Sussex, and died suddenly at London in 1684. His principal work is a Commentary on St. Peter's Epistles.—Life prefixed to his works.

LEISMAN (John Antony), a German painter, who died in 1698, aged 94. He painted two excellent pictures, one a landscape with dreary mountains and thick woods, from which issues a gang of robbers preparing to assault some unfortunate travellers; the other is a seaport enriched with views of elegant buildings and antiquities.—Pillington.

LELAND (John), a famous antiquary, was born in London, and educated at St. Paul's school, from whence he was sent to Christ's college, Cambridge, but afterwards he removed to All Souls college, Oxford. On entering into orders he became chaplain to Henry VIII. who gave him the title of his antiquary. By virtue of the royal commission he searched various cathedrals and religious houses for curious records and other pieces of antiquity, in which employment he spent six years, travelling over every part of the kingdom. Having completed his labours he was presented to the valuable living of Hasely in Oxfordshire, and to a prebend in the church of Salisbury. In 1545 he presented his collections to the king under the title of a Newe Yeare's Gifte. This, however, was only the beginning of what he proposed to execute, but while he was intent on his studies he was seized with a phrenzy, in which state he continued to his death in 1552. His Itinerary and Collectanea were published by Hearne.—Biz. Brit.

LELAND (John), a learned dissenting divine, was born at Wigan in Lancashire, in 1691. His parents going to settle at Dublin, he received his education there, and in 1716 became assistant to Mr. Nathaniel Weld, in the pastoral charge of a congregation of dissenters. His eminent labours in this character, and above all his invaluable writings in defence of christianity, procured him the degree of D. D. from two universities in Scotland. He died at Dublin, January 16, 1766. His works are: a Defence of the Christian Religion against Tindal, 8vo.; a View of the deistical Writers that have appeared in England, 2 vols. 8vo.; the Advantage and Necessity of the Christian Revelation, 2 vols. 4to.; a volume of Family Devotions, 12mo.—Fun. Sermon by Weld.

LELAND (Dr. Thomas), a divine of the established church, was a native of Dublin, and senior fellow of Trinity college there. He wrote a History of Ireland, 4to.; the Life of Philip of Macedon; and the Principles of Human Eloquence, which last was attacked by Warburton. He also translated the Orations of Demosthenes. Dr. Leland died in 1785, aged 83.—Gent. Mag.

LELY (Sir Peter), a famous painter, was born in Westphalia in 1617, and studied under Grebber, after which he came to England, where he at first painted landscapes and historical subjects, but finding that more encouragement was given to portrait painting he turned his attention that way, and became unrivalled in the graceful airs of his heads, the pleasing variety of his postures, and the elegance of his draperies. He was in great favour with Charles I. and II. by the latter of whom he was knighted. He died in 1680.—Virtue.

LEMENS (Balthazar van), an historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1637. He settled in London, and died in 1704. He had a free pencil with a ready invention, and sometimes shewed elegance in his figures.—Pilkington.

LEMERY (Nicolas), a French chemist, was born at Rouen, in 1645, and bred an apothecary. He afterwards studied chemistry at Montpellier, and made so great a proficiency as to become a lecturer. In 1683 he visited England, being of the reformed religion, then violently persecuted in his own country. He was well received by Charles II. and great offers were made him to induce him to continue here, but in 1686 he returned to France and professed himself a Roman catholic. In 1699 he was made associate chemist to the royal academy, and the same year became a pensionary. He died in 1715. He wrote, 1. a Course of Chemistry, which went through many editions; 2. a Universal Pharmacopœia; 3. a Treatise on Simple Drugs; 4. a Treatise of Antimony. His son Louis became physician to the king, and to the Hotel Dieu at Paris. He was also a member of the academy of sciences, and died in 1743. He wrote a treatise on Aliments; another on Worms in the Human Body; and several papers in the Memoirs of the Academy.—Moreri.

LEMNIUS (Lævinus), a learned physician, was born in Zealand, in 1504. On the death of his wife he entered into orders, and obtained a canonry. He died in 1568. He wrote an account of the plants mentioned in Scripture; a book on astrology, and another De occultis Naturæ Miraculis.—Moreri.

LEMOINE (Francis), a French painter, was born at Paris. His chief performances are: The Nativity; a Transfiguration; the Flight into Egypt; and the Apotheosis of Hercules at Versailles, the saloon of which took him four years in painting. He put an end to himself in 1787.—D'Argenville.

LEMON (George William), an English divine and lexicographer, who published in 1789 an Etymological English Dictionary in 1 volume 4to., which shews considerable industry and learning.—He died in 1797, aged 71.—Gent. Mag.

LE MONNIER (Peter Charles), a French astronomer, was member of the academy of sciences, and of the national institute. He was born at Paris in 1715, and accompanied Maupertuis in his tour towards the north pole for measuring a degree of the meridian. His principal works are: Astronomical Institutions; Lunar Nautical Astronomy; Tables of the Sun, and Corrections for those of the Moon. He died in 1799.—Nouv. Dict.

LE MONNIER (Louis William), brother of the above, was also a member of the academy of sciences, of the national institute, and of the royal society of London. He was a very able physician and experimental philosopher, and contributed several articles to the Encyclopædie on Electricity, &c. He died in 1799. Neither of these is to be confounded with an abbé of that name who translated Terence and Persius into French, and wrote fables, tales, and epistles. He died in 1797.—Ibid.

LENCLOS (Ninon de), a celebrated French lady, was born at Paris, of a noble family, in 1615. Her mother wanted to place her in a convent, but was prevented by her father, who was a man of gaiety. Ninon lost both her parents at the age of fifteen, and possessing great charms and a lively temper, she was followed by some of the greatest men, but would never unite herself in marriage. She studied the works of Montaigne and Charron, and had a very fine understanding, but it is truly observed that though she thought as Epicurus, she lived like Laïs. She did not, however, prostitute herself for gain; and her wit and behaviour were such, that even virtuous ladies courted her acquaintance. She was held in great respect by men of genius, who consulted her upon their works. This extraordinary woman died in 1706, aged 90. She left some children. One of her sons died before her; and the circumstance of his death is singular: having been bred without knowing his mother, he conceived a passion for her; and when she discovered to him the secret of his birth, he stabbed himself in her presence. There are a few genuine letters by her in the works of St. Evremond; but those under her name addressed to the marquis de Sevigné are fictitious.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LENFANT (James), a French protestant divine, was born in 1691. He was educated at Geneva, and became minister of the French church at Heidelberg; but when the palatinate was invaded by the French, he retired to Berlin, where he died in 1728. He published histories of the councils of Constance, Basle, and Pisa, very faithfully written. He likewise translated the New Testament into French, with notes, in conjunction with Beaufobre. His other works are; a History of Pope Joan; Sermons; a Preservative against Uniting with the Church of Rome, &c.—Moreri.

LENGLET (Nicolas du Fresnoy), a French writer, was born at Beauvais in 1674. He became secretary to the French ambassador at Cologne, and librarian to prince Eugene. He was burnt to death by falling into the fire at the age of 81 years, in 1755. His works are voluminous, but incorrect. The best is his Method for Studying History, which has been translated into English.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LENNARD (Samson), an English soldier, who was with sir Philip Sidney at the battle of Zutphen. He published some translations from the Latin and French, and had a good knowledge of heraldry. He died about 1630.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LENS (Bernard), a miniature painter, and enameller to George II. He published some drawing-books, and several views. He died about 1741.—Ibid.

LENTHALL (William), an English lawyer and speaker of the long parliament, was born at Henley on Thames, in Oxfordshire, in 1591, and educated first at Alban hall, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, where he was called to the bar, and became eminent as a counsellor. In 1639 he was elected into parliament for Woodstock, and in 1640 he was chosen speaker, in which capacity he made a considerable fortune by siding with the ruling party. He was also master of the rolls, a commissioner of the great seal, and chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. He was turned out by Cromwell in 1653, but the year following he became speaker of the parliament called by the usurper, as he did also of the rump. At the restoration he was exempted from the act of indemnity, but obtained a general pardon from the king. He died expressing great penitence for the part he had borne in the rebellion, in 1662. Several of his speeches and letters are in print.—Wood, A. O.

LENTULUS (Cneius), surnamed Gæticulus, a Roman of an illustrious family, who was raised to the consulate A. D. 26, but was put to death some time after by Tiberius, who was jealous of his popularity. He wrote a history mentioned by Suetonius, and Martial terms him a poet.—Moreri.

LEO I. or the elder, emperor of the East, ascended the throne in 457. He is said to have been a Thracian of obscure birth. He confirmed the council of Chalcedon's decrees against the Eutychians, and renewed the war with the Vandals; but was unfortunate through the treachery of his general Aspar, whom he put to death with his family in 471. The Goths, to revenge the fate of Aspar, poured into the empire, which they ravaged even to the walls of Constantinople. Leo died in 474, leaving a dubious character behind him, being praised by some for his virtues, and censured by others for his avarice and cruelty.—Univ. Hist.

LEO II. or the Younger, was the son of Zeno, and of Ariadne daughter of Leo I. He succeeded his uncle in 474 under the guardianship of his father, who soon after caused himself to be proclaimed emperor. Leo died the same year, having ruined his health by his debaucheries.—Ibid.

LEO III. called the Isaurian, from the country of his birth, where his parents were poor mechanics. Leo entered into the army, and became one of the guard to Justinian II. Anastasius II. made him a general, and afterwards took him as a coadjutor in the empire in 717. The Saracens having ravaged Thrace, laid siege to Constantinople, which was bravely defended by Leo, who compelled the infidels to retire. His reign, however, was tyrannical, and he drove the patriarch Germanus from his seat, in which he placed Anastasius. He was also guilty of burning the library of Constantinople, containing a quantity of medals, and above 80,000 volumes. The popes Gregory II. and III. excommunicated him, for which he prepared an armament to invade Italy; but the ships were destroyed by a storm. Leo died in 741.—Ibid.

LEO IV. the son of Constantine Copronymus, succeeded his father in 775, at the age of 25. In his time the great controversy raged between the iconoclasts, or the image-breakers, and their adversaries, both of whom he protected by turns. Leo repulsed the Saracens in Asia, and died in 780. He married the famous Irene.—Ibid.

LEO V. or the Armenian, from the coun-ary of which he was a native. He rose to the rank of general by his valour; but the emperor Nicephorus disgraced him, and sent him into exile. Michael Rhangabus recalled him, and Leo, profiting by the misfortunes of his master, got himself elected emperor by the troops in 813. He was assassinated in 820.—Univ. Hist.

Leo VI. or the Philosopher, was the son and successor of Basil the Macedonian. The Hungarians, Saracens, and Bulgarians, having united against the empire, he called to his assistance the Turks, who entered Bulgaria, which they ravaged with fire and sword. Leo drove the patriarch Photius from his seat; and Nicholas, one of the successors of Photius, excommunicated the emperor, for which Leo deposed him. He died in 911, after a reign of 25 years. He wrote some books, the most interesting of which is a treatise on Tactics, printed at Leyden in 1612.—Ibid. Moreri.

Leo I. pope, furnished the Great, was an Italian by birth, and had been employed by popes Celestin I. and Sixtus III. in several important affairs. He succeeded the latter pontiff in 440, and distinguished himself by his zeal against the Manichees, Pelagians, and Eutychians. In his time the council of Chalcedon was called, to which he sent four legates. While that council was sitting in the East, Attila and the Huns ravaged the West, and advanced towards Rome. The emperor Valentinian, alarmed, applied to the pope, who went to meet Attila, and by the power of his eloquence prevailed with him to leave Italy. Genseric, however, sacked Rome in 455. The pope died in 461. His works have been printed in 2 vols. 4to. and also in folio.—Moreri. Bayzer. Dupin.

Leo II. was born in Sicily, and succeeded Agatho in the popedom in 682. He pretended to have an authority over the eastern church, and he also instituted holy water. He died in 685.—Ibid.

Leo III. succeeded in 795 Adrian I. the nephews of whom formed a conspiracy against Leo, and having seized him in a procession, dragged him to a monastery, where they sadly mangled him, but he recovered, and retired to France. Charlemagne restored him to his seat, and he crowned that monarch emperor of the West. On the death of Charlemagne a new plot was formed against the pope, who caused the conspirators to be put to death. He died in 816.—Ibid.

Leo IV. a Roman, succeeded Sergius II. in 847. The Saracens having invaded the ecclesiastical state, he marched against them, and obtained a complete victory; after which he put the city of Rome into a strong state of defence. He died in 855.—Ibid.

Leo VIII. was elected pope on the deposition of John XII. in 963, by the authority of the emperor Otho, whence Baronius and others treat him as an intruder, but his character stands so high that many catholics regard him as a legitimate pontiff, and an honour to the chair. He died in 965.—Ibid.

Leo IX. who bears the distinction of a saint in the calendar, was born of an illustrious family, and became bishop of Toul, and in 1048 was chosen pope. He convened several councils to reform the manners of the ecclesiastics, and to condemn the errors of Berenger. The Normans having marched into Italy in 1053, he went against them at the head of a German army; but was defeated and taken prisoner. The conquerors conducted him to Rome, where he died the year following. Some sermons and letters of his are extant.—Ibid.

Leo X. (John de Medicis) was born at Florence in 1475. At the age of eleven he was made an archbishop by Louis XI. king of France, and at fourteen Julius II. invested him with the dignity of legate, and he served as such in the army which was defeated by the French near Ravenna, in 1512. He was taken prisoner after that battle; but the soldiers shewed the most superstitious veneration for his person, as the representative of the pope. He was elected to the papacy in 1513, and his coronation was celebrated with unusual pomp. Leo was very fond of magnificence, but he had a taste for letters, and liberally patronized men of learning and genius, particularly poets. He terminated the disputes which had subsisted between his predecessor and Louis XII. of France. He concluded the council of Lateran, and formed a splendid library, which he enriched with inestimable manuscripts. But notwithstanding his liberality, a conspiracy was formed against him by the cardinals Petrucci and Sauli, which being discovered, the two principals were condemned to death. Petrucci died in prison, but the other purchased his pardon by his riches. Leo formed two great projects, the one was to effect a general association of the Christian powers against the Turks, and the other to complete the church of St. Peter at Rome. To aid these schemes he issued plenary indulgences, by which the purchasers procured the pardon of their sins. These indulgences being carried into Germany, occasioned the great secession from the church of Rome, begun by Luther, whom the pope anathematized in 1520. A war also broke out between the emperor Charles V. and Francis I. of France, who both courted the alliance of the pope, and were both deceived by his promises. He died of a fever in 1521.—Ibid.

Leo, archbishop of Thessalonica, was one of the revivers of Greek literature, and a good mathematician. He flourished in the 9th century.—Moreri.

Leo (Piliatus), the first professor of Greek at Florence about 1360. He was a learned man, and read Homer's poems in the schools of Florence. He perished by shipwreck on

LEO of Modena, a learned rabbi of Venice, in the 17th century, who wrote a History of the Jewish Rites and Ceremonies; also a Dictionary, Hebrew and Italian, Venice 1612, 4to. and Padua, 1640.—Ibid.

LEO the grammarian, who lived in the 12th century. He compiled a chronicle of Constantinople from Leo the Armenian to Constantine VII.—Moreri.

LEO (John), an able geographer, was a native of Grenada, after the taking of which he went to Africa, whence he is by some called the African. He abjured Mohammedanism under pope Leo X. who gave him several marks of his esteem. He died about 1526. We have by him the Lives of the Arabian Philosophers, and a Description of Africa.—Moreri.

LEONE (Arto), called also Conario, an historical painter, was born in 1498, and the disciple of Cornelius Engelbrecht. He died in 1564.—Pilkington.

LEONI (Jacomo), a Venetian architect, who settled in England, and published at London, an excellent edition of Palladio's Architecture, in folio, 1742. He died in 1746.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LEONICENUS (Nicolas), professor of physic at Ferrara, was the first who translated Galen's works, to which he added commentaries. He also translated Hippocrates's Aphorisms, and other works. He died in 1524, aged 96.—Moreri.

LEONICUS THOMÆUS (Nicholas), a learned Venetian, who studied Greek at Florence under Demetrius Chalcondyles. He revived a taste for literature at Padua, where he read Lectures on Aristotle, and died in 1531 aged 75. He translated the Commentary of Proclus on the Timæus of Plato, and other works.—Moreri.

LEONIDAS, king of Sparta. He opposed Xerxes when he invaded Greece, and fought the whole Persian army at the straits of Thermopylæ with such bravery as to compel them to retire. At last a detachment of the Persians was led by Ephialtes, the Trachinian, by a secret path up the mountains, and coming down on the rear of the Spartans, obtained a complete victory. Out of the three hundred, only one man escaped, and he was treated with ignominy by his countrymen, for leaving so glorious a field, where death was more honourable than life. This battle happened B. C. 480.—Plutarch.

LEONTIUM, an Athenian courtesan, who was remarkable for her attachment to the philosophy of Epicurus, and had a son by Metrodorus, one of his disciples. She wrote a book against Theophrastus, which is commented on by Cicero, but is now lost.—Bayle.

LEOPOLD I. emperor of Germany, was the second son of Ferdinand III. and of Mary Anne of Spain. He was born in 1640, became king of Hungary in 1655, king of Bohemia in 1656, and emperor in 1658. He had to contend against France and the Turks, and suffered in his war with both: France took from him Alsace, and many other frontier places of the empire; and the Turks would have captured Vienna had they not been compelled to raise the siege by John Sobieski king of Poland. Prince Eugene of Savoy, a young and enterprising general in the Imperial service, gave also a turn to the affairs of Leopold; whose tyranny, however, was so great, that his Hungarian subjects were nearly on the point of revolting when he died in 1705.—Univ. Hist.

LEOPOLD II. the son of the emperor Francis I. and of Maria Theresa of Austria, was born at Vienna in 1747, and succeeded his father in 1765 in the duchy of Tuscany, which he governed with great wisdom; but the toleration which he granted to the protestants occasioned great discontents among the people, excited by the priests. In 1790 he succeeded the emperor Joseph II., and when he was gone to Vienna the malcontents shewed themselves in opposition to the measures he had adopted. But, by a summary punishment of the ringleaders, this insurrection was soon quelled. In 1790 Leopold concluded a peace with the Turks. He was preparing to go to war with the French when he was carried off by a fever, March 1, 1792. He was succeeded by his son Francis.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LEOPOLD, duke of Lorraine, was the son of Charles the fifth duke, and of Eleanor of Austria. He distinguished himself early as a soldier, and at the peace of Ryswick in 1697 was restored to his estates, which had been taken from his father by the French. He restored his country to a flourishing condition, maintained the poor, and assisted the nobility who had been reduced. He founded a university at Luneville, and was a liberal patron of the arts and sciences. He died, greatly regretted, in 1729, aged 50.—Ibid.

LEOTAUD (Vincent), a French jesuit and mathematician, who published a work entitled, Examen Circuli Quadraturæ, in which he proves the impossibility of demonstrating the quadrature of the circle. He died in 1672.—Moreri.

LEOWICZ (Cyprian), or Leovitius, a Bohemian astrologer, was born in 1504. He published ephemerides, and some pieces of a like kind, in which he inserted many bold predictions; particularly that the end of the world would be in 1584, which occasioned great alarm in Germany, and made many people very religious for a short time. He died in 1574.—Ibid.

LEPANTE (John Andrew), a French clock and watch-maker, who died in 1802. He made several improvements in his art, and wrote some books, particularly a Treatise on Clock-making, published in 1755, and again in 1768, 4to.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LEPICIÉ (Bernard), a French engraver, who was also secretary and historiographer to the academy of painting at Paris, where he died in 1755. His engravings of portraits and historical subjects are very fine. He compiled a catalogue of the pictures in the possession of the king, 2 vols. 4to. His son Nicholas Bernard was a professor in the academy of painting and sculpture, and died at Paris in 1784, aged 49. He painted several fine pictures after the manner of his master, Carlo Vanloo.—Ibid.

LEPIDUS (Marcus Æmilius), one of the triumvirs with Anthony and Octavius. He obtained Africa for his part, but was soon deprived of it by Augustus. He spent the remainder of his days in Italy, in obscurity.—Freinsheimius's Supplem. to Livy.

LEPRINCE (John), a French painter and musician; who, in his voyage to Holland in order to proceed to Peterburgh, was taken by an English privateer, the crew of which plundered him of all his effects except his violin, on which he began to play with so much skill, that the sailors gave him back the whole of his property. He was employed at Peterburgh in ornamenting the imperial palaces, but on the accession of Catharine II. he returned to France, and became a member of the academy. He died in 1781, aged 48. His pictures are mostly in the manner of Teniers and Wouvermans.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

LE QUIEN (Michael), a French ecclesiastic of the order of St. Dominic, who wrote against Courayer on the validity of the consecrations of English bishops. He was well read in ecclesiastical history, and died in 1703, aged 42.—Moreri.

LERNUTIUS (John), a modern Latin poet, was born at Fruges in 1545. His works were published by Elzevir, with this title: Jani Lernutii Basia, Ocelli, et alia Poemata. He died in 1619.—Ibid.

LEBONAZ, a philosopher of Mitylene, who flourished in the first century. There are two orations under his name in Aldus's edition of ancient orators, and a treatise De Figuris Grammaticis, printed at Leyden in 1739.—Vossius. Fabricius.

LESCAILLE (Catharine), a native of Holland, and called by some the Dutch Sappho and the tenth muse, was the daughter of a poet and an engraver. She died in 1711, aged 62. Her works chiefly consist of tragedies, very irregular, but discovering strong marks of genius.—Moreri.

LESLEY (John), bishop of Ross in Scotland, was born of a noble family in 1527, and educated at Aberdeen, in the cathedral of which place he was made canon in 1547, but he did not enter into orders till 1554. He accompanied queen Mary from France to Scotland, and soon after became bishop of Ross and a privy counsellor. He zealously defended the Romish religion, and when queen Elizabeth appointed commissioners to meet at York for the purpose of considering the complaints made against

Mary by her subjects, Lesley appeared in behalf of his mistress, whose cause he pleaded with great ability. He also tried many expedients to procure her liberty, for which he was committed to the Tower; but in 1578 he recovered his liberty on condition of quitting the kingdom. While abroad he endeavoured to interest many foreign princes in the interest of Mary, and wrote several able pieces in her defence. Being appointed vicar-general by the bishop of Rouen, while he was visiting that diocese he was seized by the huguenots, who would have sent him to England but he recovered his liberty by paying a large ransom. He afterwards obtained the bishopric of Constance, and died near Brussels in 1596. The bishop's principal work is a history of Scotland, entitled, De Origine, Moribus, et Rebus gestis, Scotorum, 1578, 4to.—Brog. Brit.

LESLIE (John), bishop of Clogher, was born in Scotland, and educated at Aberdeen and Oxford. His first preferment was the bishopric of the Orkneys, from whence he was removed to Raphoe in Ireland, where he built a stately palace, in which he endured a long siege against Cromwell, but was at last forced to surrender. In 1661 he was translated to Clogher. He died in 1671, aged above 100 years.—Ibid.

LESLIE (Charles), son of the last-mentioned, was born in Ireland, and educated at Dublin, where he took his degree of M. A. and on entering into orders became chancellor of the diocese of Connor. He rendered himself obnoxious to the Romanists by disputing successfully with some of their priests, and converting several persons of consequence. But though he opposed popery and some of the arbitrary measures of James II, he continued his allegiance to that monarch, and thereby lost his preferments at the revolution. He also wrote several pieces against the doctrine of resistance, and in defence of hereditary right; on which account he was under the necessity of retiring to France, where he espoused the cause of the Pretender, and had the liberty of officiating in a private chapel to several other protestant exiles. He went with that prince to Italy; but not being well treated there, he returned to his paternal estate, at Glaslough in the county of Monaghan in Ireland, where he died in 1722. Mr. Leslie was an admirable controvertist, and wrote with great success against deists, Jews, Socinians, and quakers. All his theological works have been collected into two volumes, folio.—Ibid.

LESSING (Gotthold Ephraim), a German poet, was the son of a protestant minister at Kametz, and educated at Meissen, from whence he removed to Leipzig, where he applied chiefly to dramatic poetry, and finished a comedy called the Young Scholar; but leading an irregular life, he quitted Leipzig and went to Berlin, where he formed an acquaintance with Voltaire. Here he wrote and translated several books, and formed many plans which he did not live to execute. He was some time secretary to general Tatiensien, at Breslaw; where he addicted himself to gaming, to the neglect of literary pursuits, in which he was so well fitted to shine.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

LESSIUS (Leonard), a learned jesuit, was born near Antwerp in 1554. He became professor of philosophy at Douay, and afterwards of divinity at Louvain, where some propositions by him on scholastic points were censured. Lessius appealed to pope Sixtus V., who reversed the censure. He died in 1623. His principal works are, De Justitia et Jure, folio; De Potestate Summi Pontificis; Hygiasticon, seu vera Ratio Valetudinis bonæ Vitæ, &c. His books on the Existence of a Deity, and the Immortality of the Soul, have been translated into English.—Moreri.

L'ESTRANGE (Roger), an English writer, was born in Norfolk in 1616. His father was sir Hamond L'Estrange, a zealous royalist and a very learned writer, who published an elaborate work on the liturgy, entitled, the Alliance of Divine Offices, folio; also a History of Charles I., and other works. The son had a liberal education, and in 1639 attended king Charles I. in his expedition to Scotland. He adhered steadfastly to the royal cause, and in 1646 was taken up and condemned as a spy, but after remaining in confinement four years he made his escape, and went abroad. In 1653 he returned to England, under the shelter of Cromwell's act of indemnity. After the restoration he was appointed licenser of the press. He also set up a newspaper, called, the Public Intelligencer, which was dropped on the publication of the London Gazette in 1665. In 1679 he commenced another paper, called the Observator, designed to vindicate the court measures. This procured him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1704, and was buried in the church of St. Giles in the Fields. Sir Roger was an industrious writer, and besides his own pamphlets, which were numerous, he published translations of several books, particularly Josephus, from the French version of D'Andilly; Seneca's Morals; Erasmus's Colloquies; Quevedo's Visions; and a number of others.—Biog. Brit.

LETHBRULLIER (Smart), an English antiquary and virtuoso, was born in Essex, and educated at Trinity-college, Oxford. He made a noble collection of antiquities, fossils; and other curiosities, and died in 1760, aged 59.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

LETI (Gregorio), an Italian writer, was born at Milan in 1630, and received his education among the jesuits, after which he went to Switzerland, and at Laufanæ he embraced the protestant religion. He resided for some time at Geneva, from whence he removed to London, and finally settled at Amsterdam, where he died in 1701. John le Clerc married his daughter. Leti wrote the History of Louis XIV.; of Philip II. of Spain; of the emperor Charles V.; queen Elizabeth; Oliver Cromwell; and pope Sixtus VI.; also the History of Geneva.—Moreri.

LEUCIPPUS, a philosopher of Abdera, who flourished about 428 years B. C. He was the disciple of Zeno, and invented the atomical system of philosophy, or that the world was formed by the casual union of a quantity of particles of matter, called atoms.—Life by Diogenes Laertius.

LEUNCLAVIUS (John), a learned German, who travelled into Turkey, and wrote a History of the Ottoman Empire, and other works. He died at Vienna in 1598, aged 60.—Moreri.

LEUSDEN (John), a professor of Hebrew at Utrecht, of which city he was a native. He acquired a great reputation for his learning and virtues, and died in 1699, aged 75. His works are, 1. Onomasticon Sacrum; 2. Clavis Hebraica et Philologica veteris Testamenti; 3. Novi Testamenti Clavis Græca; 4. Compendium Biblicum veteris Testamenti; 5. Compendium Græcum Novi Testamenti; 6. Philologus Hebræus; 7. Philologus Hebræo-Græcus; 8. Philologus Hebræo-mixtus; 9. Notes upon Jonah, Joel, and Hosea, &c.—Moreri.

LEUWENHOEK (Anthony de), a celebrated physician, was born at Delft in Holland, in 1632. He acquired a great reputation on account of his microscopical experiments and discoveries. He died in 1723. Leuwenhoek wrote a work entitled, Arcana Naturæ detecta, 1714, 4 vols. 4to.; and Letters to the Royal Society of London, of which he was a member, 1722, 4to.—Moreri.

LEVER (sir Ashton), a curious collector, was the son of sir D'arcy Lever, knt. of Alkington near Manchester. He became a gentleman commoner of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, where he was greatly distinguished for his skill in horsemanship. On leaving the university he went to reside with his mother, and afterwards settled at his family seat, which he rendered famous by the best aviary in the kingdom. He next extended his views to all branches of natural history, and became possessed of one of the finest museums in the world, sparing no expence in procuring specimens from the most distant regions. This museum was disposed of by way of lottery in 1785, but did not pay the proprietor one-fourth of the original cost. It is now on the Surrey side of Blackfriars-bridge. Sir Ashton died in 1788.—Gen. Biog. Diß. Europ. Mag.

LEVESQUE DE POUILLI (Louis), a member of the French academy of inscriptions. He died, governor of Rheims, in 1746. He established schools for mathematics and design, and greatly ornamented and improved the city of Rheims. He wrote an ingenious book entitled, the Theory of agreeable sensations, which has been translated into English.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LEVI, the third-son of Jacob and of Leah, was born B.C. 1748. He was guilty of a dreadful massacre of the Sichemites, whose prince had violated the chastity of his sister Dinah. He went into Egypt with his father and brethren, and died there in 1612 B.C. His family were consecrated to the service of God.—Genesi.

LEVINGSTON (James, earl of Calendar), a famous soldier of Scotland, was gentleman of the bedchamber to Charles I., who created him lord Levingston of Almont in 1633, and afterwards earl of Calendar. At the commencement of the civil war he sided with the parliament, but soon returned to his duty, and distinguished himself by his activity in the king's service. He took Carlisle, where he found a considerable supply of ammunition, and endeavoured to rescue Charles from his confinement in the Isle of Wight. He died in 1672.—Gen. B. D.

LEWIS (John), a learned divine, was born at Bristol in 1675, and received his academical education at Exeter college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. Archbishop Tenison gave him the vicarage of Minster, in the Isle of Thanet, with the mastership of Eastbridge hospital, in Canterbury. He died at Margate in 1746. He published, 1. The Life of John Wickliffe, 8vo.; 2. Wickliffe's Translation of the New Testament into English, folio; 3. The History and Antiquities of the Isle of Thanet, 4to.; 4. The History of the Abbey and Church of Faversham, 4to.; 5. The Life of William Caxton, 8vo.; 6. History of the several Translations of the Holy Bible and New Testament into English, 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

LEY (Sir James), a learned English judge, was the son of Henry Ley, esq. of Jessont, in Wiltshire, and for his extraordinary merit was made lord chief justice, first in Ireland, and afterwards in England. He was also created baron Ley, lord high treasurer, and earl of Marlborough. Hearn has published some pieces by him, and his Reports were printed in 1659.—Granger.

LEYBOURN (William), an English mathematician, was originally a printer in London. His Curfus Mathematicus, or Course of Mathematics, in 1 vol. folio, was once held in esteem. He also wrote a Treatise on Surveying, folio, which was re-published and improved by Cunn; also a book on Dialling, 4to. and a useful and popular book called, the Trader's Guide. Leybourn died about 1690.—Granger.

LEYDECKER (Melchior), a protestant divine, was born at Middleburg in 1652. He became professor of theology at Utrecht, where he died in 1721. He wrote a Treatise on the Republic of the Hebrews, 2 vols. folio, which is very curious; an Analysis of the Scripture; a History of Jerusalem; a Continuation of the Ecclesiastical History of Hornius; History of the Church of Africa, 4to.; and other works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LEYDEN (Lucas Van), a Dutch painter in oil, distemper, and on glass, also an eminent engraver. His picture of the history of St. Hubert procured him a great reputation. He died in 1533, aged 39.—Felicien. De Pile.

LEYSSENS (N.), an historical painter of Antwerp, was born in 1661, and died in 1720. He resided at Rome some time, but returned to Antwerp to support his aged father, and Providence rewarded his goodness of heart, for he had more employment than all the painters in that city.—P. II.

LEWYD (Edward), a Welch antiquary, was a native of Caermarthenshire, and educated at Jesus college, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1701. He succeeded his tutor, Dr. Plot, as keeper of the Ashmolean museum, and applied himself with great assiduity to the observation of the antiquities of Wales. He made large collections, and died in 1709. Many of his observations were communicated to bishop Gibson, and inserted in his edition of Camden's Britannia. He also published the Archæologia Britannica, or an Account of the Languages, Histories, and Customs, of the original Inhabitants of Great Britain, &c. fol. Oxford, 1707. He left in MS. a Scottish or Irish-English Dictionary, and other proofs of his great learning and industry.—Biog. Brit.

LEWYD, or LLWYD (Humphry), a learned antiquary, was born at Denbigh, and educated at Brasenose-college, Oxford, where he studied physic, and practised with reputation at his native town. He died about 1570. His principal works are, 1. Commentarioli Britannicæ Descriptionis Fragmentum, 1572; a new edition of which book appeared by Moses Williams in 1731, 4to. and an English translation was published by Thomas Twyne in 1753, under the title of the Breviary of Britain; 2. De Mona Druidum Insula, Antiquitati suæ restitutâ, 1568; 3. Chronicon Walliæ, a Rege Cadwalladere, usque ad A.D. 1294, MS.; 4. The History of Caumbria, now called Wales; which was published by Dr. Powel in 1584, 4to.—Wood, A. O.

LIBANIUS, an ancient sophist, was born at Antioch on the Oronates, in 314. He became so eminent a teacher at Constantinople, that some other professors procured his banishment, on the charge of magic. He then went to Nicomedia, where he obtained a great number of disciples, amongst whom was Julian, afterwards called the Apostate. He died at Antioch about the year 390. His remains were published in 2 vols. folio, at Paris, in 1606 and 1627. He was a virulent enemy to christianity, and at the time of Julian's Persian expedition, Libanius impertinently asked a christian grammarian,

*What the carpenter's son was then about?"
 *He is making a coffin for your master," replied the other.—Moreri.

LIBAVIUS (Andrew), a physician, was born at Hall in Saxony, and died at Cobourg in Franconia, in 1616. His works are, Synagma selectorum Alchemiæ Arcanorum, 2 vols. fol.; Epistolarum Chymicarum, 1595. He wrote zealously against Paracelsus and his followers.—Moreri.

LIBERI (Peter), an Italian painter, was born at Padua in 1600, and died in 1677. There are several fine pictures by him in different churches in Italy; the principal is a representation of Moses striking the rock.—Pilkington.

LIBERIUS (pope), was a native of Rome, and succeeded Julius I. in 352. He was compelled to consent to the condemnation of Athanasius, by the emperor Constantius. He died in 366.—Platina. Dupin.

LICETUS (Fortunius), a physician, was born in the state of Genoa in 1577, and became professor of philosophy and physic at Padua, where he died in 1656. His book De Monstris is curious and scarce. He also wrote some other works.—Moreri.

LICHTENBERG (George Christoffer), a learned German writer, was professor of philosophy in the university of Göttingen, and died there in 1799.—Monthly Mag.

LICINIUS (Tegula), a comic Latin poet, who lived about 200 years B. C. His fragments have been published by H. Stephens, and in the Corpus Poetarum of Maittaire. There was also an orator and poet of the same name, who lived at the same time with Cicero.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

LICINIUS (C. Flavius Valerianus), a Roman emperor, was the son of a peasant in Dalmatia; he became a soldier in the Roman army, and Galerius Maximianus made him his coadjutor in the empire, and gave him the government of Pannonia and Phœacia. Constantine had also a great esteem for him, and bestowed his sister on him in marriage; but afterwards so serious a difference broke out between the two emperors, as ended in the death of Licinius, after several battles, A. D. 324. His son was put to death two years afterwards.—Moreri.

LICINIUS (Caius), a Roman tribune, of a plebeian family, who rose to the rank of tribune, when he obtained the surname of Stolo, or Ulf'si Sprout, on account of the law which he enacted forbidding any one to possess more than 500 acres of land, alleging as his reason, that when they cultivated more they could not pull up the useless shoots (Stolones) which grew from the roots of trees. He also made another law, which allowed the plebeians to share the consular dignity with the patricians; and he himself became one of the first plebeian consuls, B. C. 364.—Livy. Pliny. Eutropius.

LIEVENS (John), an historical and portrait painter, was born in 1607 at Leyden. Charles I. of England invited him to his court, where he painted portraits of the royal family and most of the nobility. After remaining here three years he returned to Antwerp, where he died.—Pilk.

LIEUTAUD (Joseph), a physician, was born at Aix in Provence, and became first physician to the king, and in 1752 member of the academy of sciences. He died in 1780. He wrote Anatomical Essays; Elements of Physiology; Synopsis of the Practice of Medicine; and Historia Anatomico Medica, 2 vols. 4to.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

LIGARIUS (Quintus), proconsul in Africa, who conducted himself so well in that station, that, at the desire of the people, he was appointed perpetual governor. He opposed Cæsar, who, however, pardoned him after the defeat of Scipio. Not thinking himself safe he kept from Rome, on which account Tubero accused him, but Ligarius was powerfully defended by Cicero and acquitted. He was afterwards one of the conspirators with Brutus and Cassius against Cæsar.—Cicero Orat. pro Ligario. Plutarch in Vit Cicero.

LIGER (Lewis), a French horticulturist, was born at Auxerre in 1658. He published a Paris Guide, and some works on gardening. He died in 1717.—Novo. Diet.

LIGHTFOOT (John), a learned divine, was born at Stoke-upon-Trent in Staffordshire, in 1602, and educated at Christ's college, Cambridge. He became chaplain to sir Rowland Cotton in Shropshire, from whom he learnt the rudiments of the Hebrew language, in which he afterwards acquired a prodigious knowledge and reputation. In 1631 his patron presented him to the living of Ainsley in Staffordshire, which he resigned to his brother in 1642, and went to London, where he was chosen minister of St. Bartholomew behind the Exchange. During the civil war he complied with the ruling party, and became one of the members of the assembly of divines, at Westminster, in which he was a frequent speaker. In 1653 he was appointed master of Catherine hall, Cambridge, and in 1655 he served the office of vice-chancellor. He retained his preferences at the restoration, and was chosen one of the assistants at the Savoy conference. Dr. Lightfoot died in 1675. His works, which are a treasure of scriptural and biblical learning, were published in 2 vols. folio, 1684; and a third volume was published by Leusden at Utrecht in 1699, folio. His remains, or posthumous tracts and notes on scripture, were published in 1700, in one volume 8vo.—Life prefixed to his Works. Biog. Brit.

LIGNAC (Joseph Adrian de), a French priest of the oratory, was born at Poitiers, of a noble family. He published several works: particularly Letters to an American on Buffon's Natural History, 2 vols. 12mo.; and other works. He died in 1762.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

LIGNIER (John earl of), field-marshal of the English army. He served in all the wars of queen Anne, under the great duke of Marlborough, with distinguished glory, and was employed in every succeeding war. He died in 1770, aged 92.—Gent. Mag.

LIGORIO (Peter), a painter and architect of Naples, who died in 1580. His Designs after the Antique make thirty volumes in folio. Ligorio was nominated architect of the church of St. Peter at Rome, in the pontificate of Paul IV.; but was deprived of that post afterwards, and succeeded by Michael Angelo.—D'Argenville.

LILBURNE (John), an English enthusiast, was born in the county of Durham in 1618, and bound apprentice to a draper in London, where he studied puritanical books more than business. In 1636 he became assistant to Dr. Bastwick the libeller, and was employed by him in circulating his seditious pamphlets, for which Lilburne was publicly whipped, pilloried, and imprisoned. While in confinement he wrote several virulent tracts against the church, but in 1640 he regained his liberty, and was rewarded by parliament with a grant of 2000*l.* out of the estates of some of the royalists. He then entered into the army, and was made a major and afterwards a colonel, in which capacity he behaved gallantly at the battle of Marston-moor; but publishing a libel against the earl of Manchester, he was confined a considerable time in the Tower. In 1648 he was released and remunerated, but he still continued writing libels, particularly against parliament, for which he was heavily fined and sentenced to be banished. Lilburne, however, withdrew privately to Holland, where he joined the royalists, and proposed to restore the king for 10,000*l.* which offer was treated with contempt. He then returned to England, where he was taken up, tried, and acquitted. After this he turned quaker, and became a preacher. He died in 1657. Lilburne wrote a number of tracts not worth naming.—Biog. Brit.

LILIENTHAL (Michael), a learned Prussian, and professor at Königsberg, who wrote several dissertations in the Memoirs of the academy at Berlin; and other works. He died in 1750.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LILLO (George), a tragic writer, was born in London in 1693. He carried on the business of a jeweller many years with great reputation. His plays, though founded on common incidents, are more affecting than listless productions. He well knew how to touch the heart, and his pieces are all subservient to the cause of virtue. His plays are, George Barnwell; Fatal Curiosity; and Arden of Feversham. He died in 1739, aged 47.—Biog. Dram.

LILY (John), an English writer, was born in Kent about 1553, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Cambridge after taking his degrees in arts. He afterwards became a courtier, and died about 1600. He wrote Euphues, a miscellaneous description of different characters; also some plays, as Endimion; Campaspe; Midas, played before queen Elizabeth; the Maid's Metamorphosis; Woman in the Moon, &c.—Ibid.

LILLY (William), an English astrologer, was born in Leicestershire, in 1602. After receiving a common education he came to London, where he became book-keeper to the master of the salters' company, on whose death he married his widow. In 1632 he became the pupil of Evans, the astrologer, and soon excelled his master. He was employed by both parties during the civil wars, and even Charles I. himself is said to have made use of him. Lilly certainly was consulted respecting the means and success of the king's projected escape from Carisbrook castle. He, however, gained more from the parliament's party; and the predictions contained in his almanacks had a wonderful effect upon the soldiers and common people. After the restoration he was examined respecting the king's executioner, who he affirmed was cornet Joyce. He died at Horsham, in 1681. His principal works are, 1. Christian Astrology, 1647, 4to.; 2. A Collection of Nativities; 3. Observations on the Life and Death of Charles, late King of England; 4. Annus Tenebrosus, or the Black Year.—Biog. Brit.

LILY (William), a famous grammarian, was born at Odiham in Hampshire, about 1466, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, where he took his degree of B.A., and then went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. During his journey he learned the Greek language at Rhodes. On his return to England in 1509 he was appointed master of St. Paul's school; which trust he discharged with great reputation, and brought up many eminent scholars. He died of the plague in 1522. His Latin Grammar, which was ordered by royal authority to be used in all schools, was not wholly of his own composition, part of it being written by cardinal Wolsey, and part by Erasmus and Colet. Though still the foundation made use of in most public seminaries, it has been severely censured by Ascham and other eminent scholars. Lily wrote several other grammatical pieces.—Biog. Brit.

LILY (George), eldest son of the above, was born in London, and educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, after which he became prebendary of Canterbury. He was the first who published an exact map of Britain, and died in 1559. He also wrote some books on the English history.—Ibid.

LIMBORCH (Philip), a learned divine, was born at Amsterdam in 1633. He was educated among the remonstrants, and in 1654 became a minister at Haarlem, from whence he removed to Gouda. In 1667 he was called to the pastoral charge at Amsterdam, and the year following succeeded Pontanus in the divinity professorship. In 1686 he published his System of Theology, folio, which soon passed through four editions. The same year he had a dispute with Balthasar Orobio, a Spanish Jew, the result of which was published by our author under the title of Collocatio Amica de Veritate Religionis Christianae cum erudito Judaeo. In 1694 he recovered a young woman to christianity, who had been perverted to judaism. Limborch died in 1712. Besides the above books he published the History of the Inquisition, and several of the works of Episcopius, his great uncle.—Le Clerc's Funeral Discourse on Limborch. Moreri.

LINACRE or LYNACER (Thomas), an English physician, was born at Canterbury about 1460, and educated at the King's school there, from whence he was sent to All Souls college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. After completing his academical studies he travelled to Italy, where he learned Greek. On his return he took his doctor's degree, and was made professor of physic at Oxford. Henry VII. appointed him preceptor to prince Arthur; he also became physician to the king, and his successor Henry VIII. In 1509 he entered into orders, and obtained the precentorship of York, which he resigned on being made prebendary of Westminster. He died in 1524. He projected the foundation of the college of physicians, of which he was the first president. He published, 1. A Latin Translation of Proclus's Sphere, 1499; 2. The Rudiments of Grammar, for the use of the princes (afterwards queen) Mary; 3. De emendata Structura Latini Sermo; 4. A Translation of some of the works of Galen.—Wood. Bi. Br.

LINANT (Michael), a French poet, who obtained the prize of the academy three times, and published some pieces of merit. He was the intimate friend of Voltaire; and died in 1749, aged 41.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LAND (James), an English physician, who wrote some excellent medical treatises, particularly one on the Diseases of Seamen, 8vo. He died in 1794.—Europ. Mag.

LINDANUS (William), a Dutch divine, was born at Dordt, and appointed by Philip II. king of Spain, the first bishop of Ruremonde, from whence in 1588 he was removed to the see of Ghent. He died the same year, aged 63. He wrote some theological works in Latin, chiefly in defence of the tenets of the Roman church.—Moreri.

LINDENBACH (Frederick), a learned Flemish critic of the 17th century, who published editions of Virgil, Terence, and other classic authors; he also composed a curious work entitled, Codex Legum antiquarum, folio. He died in 1638.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LINDSAY (John), a learned nonjuring divine, who was educated at St. Mary-hall, Oxford. He officiated many years to a congregation of his own sentiments in Aldersgate-street, and was corrector of the press to Mr. Bowyer. He died in 1768, aged 82.

He translated Mason's Vindication of the Church of England, folio, 1726; and wrote a short history of the Royal Succession; and Remarks on Whiston's Scripture Politics.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

LINDSAY (Sir David), a Scotch poet, was a native of the county of Fife, and educated at the university of St. Andrews. He was at the battle of Pavia, and on his return to Scotland James V. appointed him master of the heralds' office. He wrote several poems, some of which have been printed, particularly his satires on the clergy. He died in 1557, aged 61.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LINDSAY (David), a relation of the above, was born in 1527. He was a zealous promoter of the reformation, and died in 1593. He wrote the History of Scotland from 1437 to 1542.—Ibid.

LANDWORN (William), an English prelate, was a professor at Oxford in the reign of Henry V. who sent him ambassador to Spain in 1422. In 1434 he was made bishop of St. David's, and died in 1436. He compiled the Constitutions of the Archbishops of Canterbury from Stephen Langton to Archbishop Chicheley, printed at Paris in 1505, and at Oxford in 1663.—Dupin. Wood.

LINGELBACK (John), a German painter, was born at Frankfurt in 1625. He travelled into Holland, France, and Italy; for improvement, and in 1650 returned to Amsterdam, where he settled, and painted landscapes, which he enriched with views of antiquity and figures.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

LINGUET (Simon-Nicholas-Henry), a French political writer, was born at Rheims, in 1736. In his early years he was in the suite of the French general who commanded the army against Portugal, and while in Spain he acquired a knowledge of that language. After his return to France he studied the law, and practised with reputation; but his brethren of the profession, jealous of his success, contrived to frame an accusation against him, and he was forbidden to plead again. On this he turned writer, and published a periodical journal, which was suppressed; and Linguet, apprehending danger to himself, withdrew to Holland, and from thence to England. He next went to Brussels, where he wrote a letter to the count de Vergennes, requesting leave to return to France, which was granted; but new complaints being made against him he was sent to the Bastille, where he remained above two years. On his release he visited England, where he wrote his Memoirs of the Bastille: from England he went to Brussels, and recommenced his political annals; an article in which, on the liberty of the navigation of the Scheldt, gave so much satisfaction to the emperor Joseph II. that he rewarded him with a present, and permitted him to settle at Vienna. Linguet, however, joined Vandermoot and the revolutionists of Brabant, for which he was expelled from Germany; and in 1791 he returned to Paris, where he declaimed at the bar of the national assembly in behalf of the negroes of St. Domingo. He was guillotined June 27, 1794. Besides the above he wrote a Theory of Laws; History of the Age of Alexander; the Fanaticism of Philosophers; History of the Revolutions of the Roman Empire; History of the Jesuits; Reflections on Light; and several other works.—Ibid.

LINIERE (Francis), a French poet, whose verses are elegant, and his satires pointed; but he was a man of dissolute life, and an avowed atheist. He died in 1704, aged 76.—Ibid.

LINLEY (Thomas), a celebrated English musician and composer, who was also one of the proprietors of Drury-lane theatre. He died in 1795.—Europ. Mag. Gent. Mag.

LINNÆUS (Charles von), or Linné, a celebrated naturalist, was the son of a clergyman, and born at Rhoeshult in the province of Småland in Sweden, in 1707. He studied physic at Leyden, and in 1735 took his doctor's degree in that faculty, after which he settled at Stockholm, where he exercised his profession with such reputation, that at the age of 34 he was appointed professor of physic and botany in the university of Upsal. He also became physician to the king, who created him a knight of the polar star, and conferred on him a pension with patents of nobility. He was the founder and first president of the academy of Stockholm, and a member of several foreign societies. Linnæus travelled into Norway, Dalecarlia, Desert Lapland, Germany, Holland, France, and England, in eager pursuit of his favourite study. While here he was greatly noticed by our most famous naturalists, and brought a letter of introduction to sir Hans Sloane from Boerhaave. He invented a new method of dividing plants into classes, and he extended the same to animals. He died in 1778. His works are, 1. Systema Naturæ, fiftens Regna tria Naturæ, 1735, folio, and 1756, 2 vols. octavo; 2. Bibliotheca Botanica, octavo; 3. Hortus Cliffortianus, folio; 4. Critica Botanica, octavo; 5. Flora Laponica, octavo; 6. Genera Plantarum, earumque Characteres Naturales, octavo; 7. Flora Suecica; 8. Fauna Suecica, octavo; 9. Flora Zeylanica, quarto; 10. Hortus Upsaliensis, octavo; 11. Amoenitates Academicæ, 5 volumes octavo; 12. Materia Medica, octavo; 13. Animalium Specierum in Classes, octavo; 14. Oratio de Incrementis Telluris habitabilis, octavo; 15. Nemesis divina; 16. Plantæ Surinamenses. His son Charles LINNÆUS was professor of medicine at Upsal, and died in 1783, aged 45: he was the last of the family.—Life by Pulteney.

LINT (Peter Van), an historical and portrait painter of Antwerp, was born in 1609. He painted in Italy several years, and then returned to his own country increased in wealth and reputation. A relation of his,

Hendrick van Lint, was an eminent painter in landscape, and executed some fine views about Rome. Two of his pictures are in the possession of the earl of Moira.—Pitt.

LINTRUSI (Severinus), bishop of Wiburg in Jutland, and professor of divinity and eloquence at Copenhagen. He wrote several theological books in Latin. He died in 1732.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LINUS (St.), said to have been the successor of St. Peter in the bishopric of Rome, but Tertullian asserts that St. Clement succeeded that apostle; the Roman church, however, enrols Linus among her prelates and martyrs.—Dupin. Mereri.

LIOTARD (John Stephen), a painter in crayons, was born at Geneva in 1703, and studied at Paris, after which he went to Rome, and travelled into the east. In 1772 he visited England, where he disposed of a collection of pictures by auction. There is a portrait of him in Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting. He died about 1780.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LIOTARD (Peter), a French botanist, was originally a peasant in Dauphiny and afterwards a common soldier; but being wounded at the taking of Mahon, he left the army and went to live with his uncle, an herbalist at Grenoble. Liotard was above 40 years old when he began to study botany, but he applied to it with such ardour that in 1782 he was appointed director of the public garden instituted at Grenoble, where he died in 1796. He was very intimate with Rousseau, and had Linnæus's System of Plants by heart.—Ibid.

LIPPI (Philip), called the Old, an historical painter, was born at Florence in 1421, and died in 1488. He had been a monk of the order of Carmelites, but quitted the habit and applied to painting, under Massaccio, whose style he adopted. He was a man of loose character, and left a son named Philip, who was also a painter. He died in 1505, aged 45.—De Piles.

LIPPI (Lawrence), a painter and poet, was born at Florence in 1606, and died in 1664. He excelled in historical and portrait painting, and as a poet he is known by a burlesque piece entitled, Malmantile Raggiustato, printed at Florence in 1688, quarto, under the name of Perloni Zipoli. It was re-printed in 1731, with notes, quarto; and at Paris in 1768, 12mo.—Mereri.

LIPSIUS (Justus), a learned critic, was born near Brussels in 1547. He studied the civil law at Louvain, and in 1567 became secretary to cardinal Granville at Rome, but two years afterwards he returned to Louvain, where he read lectures in history and belles-lettres with great reputation. He was some time a professor at Cologne, and next at Leyden, where he resided several years; but in 1596 he returned again to Louvain, where he died in 1606. His changes in religion were very remarkable; being a Roman catholic, then a Lutheran, afterwards a Calvinist, and lastly a catholic again. His learning was great, but his superstitious contemptible, attributing some of his pieces to the inspiration of the Virgin Mary. The works of Liplius were published at Antwerp in 6 volumes, folio, 1637. The principal are, a Commentary on Tacitus; Saturnalia; De Militia Romana; Electorum; Satira Menippæa; De Amphitheatris; De rectâ pronunciatione Lingue Latinæ.—Bayle. Moreri.

LIXON (John), a learned benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, who published, 1. Bibliothéque des Auteurs Chartrains; 2. Les Amenités de la Critique; 3. Les Singularités Historiques et Littéraires, 4 volumes, 12mo. He was born at Chartres in 1665, and died at Mans in 1749.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LIS (John van der), a painter, was born at Oldenburgh in 1570. His subjects were usually taken from the sacred history, and he also delighted in representing moral sports. He died in 1629. There was another painter of the same name, a native of Breda and the disciple of Cornelius Poelemborg. He painted historical subjects.—Houbraken.

LISLE (sir George), a gallant English officer, was the son of a bookseller in London, but on the breaking out of the civil wars he entered into the royal army, where he behaved so well as to rise to a command. At the battle of Newbury, when it grew so dark that his men could not distinguish him, he put his shirt over his clothes that they might be encouraged by his presence and example. He bravely held out the town of Colchester a long time against the parliament's forces, and surrendered as prisoner of war, but was basely put to death by the victors, August 28, 1648.—Charendon.

LISLE (Claude de), a French writer on geography and history, was born at Vaucouleurs in Lorraine in 1644. He was bred to the law, but quitted that profession and became a teacher of geography, and had for a pupil the duke of Orleans, afterwards regent of France. He died at Paris in 1720. His works are, Historical Relation of the Kingdom of Siam, 12mo; an Abridgement of Universal History, 7 volumes, 12mo; Introduction to Geography, with a Treatise on the Sphere, 2 volumes, 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LISLE (William de), the son of the above, was born at Paris in 1675. In 1699 he published an accurate and extensive map of the world, for which he was elected a member of the academy of sciences. He was also appointed geographical tutor to Louis XV. for whose use he executed several valuable works. He died in 1726. He wrote an Introduction to Geography.—Ibid.

LISLE (Joseph Nicholas de), an eminent astronomer, was brother of the above, and born at Paris in 1683. At the age of eighteen he made an accurate observation of the great total eclipse of the sun, and in 1714 was admitted a member of the academy of sciences. In 1724 he visited England, and was greatly esteemed by Newton and Halley; he was also chosen a fellow of the royal society. In 1726 he was invited to Peterburgh, where he obtained a considerable pension and the charge of the observatory; in 1747 he returned to Paris, where he died in 1768. His greatest work is entitled, Memoirs of the History of Astronomy, 2 volumes, quarto.—Ibid.

LISOLA (Francis baron de), a French statesman, was born at Salins in 1613. He resided four years in England as ambassador from the emperor Ferdinand III., and was afterwards envoy at the court of Madrid. He died in 1677. He wrote a work entitled, Bouclier d'Etat et de Justice; and his Letters and Memoirs have been published in 12mo.—Ibid.

LISTER (sir Matthew), an eminent physician and president of the college, was born at Thornton in Yorkshire, and bred at Oxford, where he became fellow of Oriel college, but took his doctor's degree at Basil. On his return to England he was appointed physician to Anne, queen of James I., and on the accession of Charles I. he became physician in ordinary to that monarch, who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He suffered considerably for his loyalty in the civil wars, and died near Louth in Lincolnshire in 1657, aged 92.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

LISTER (Martin), nephew of the above, was born in Buckinghamshire, and educated under his uncle, who sent him to St. John's college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. He afterwards settled at York as a physician, and on account of his skill in natural history, was elected fellow of the royal society. He then removed to London, and became a member of the college of physicians. In 1699 he published an account of his journey to Paris, which was ridiculed by Dr. King in his Journey to London. In 1709 he was appointed physician to queen Anne. He died in 1712. He wrote several books on natural history, particularly on shells, in Latin.—Biog. Brit.

LITHGOW (William), an extraordinary person, was born in Scotland. He travelled through various parts of Europe and the east on foot, and in his travels experienced a number of singular adventures. At Malaga he was seized by the Inquisition and put to the torture, but escaped with his life, and on his arrival in England was presented to James I. on a feather-bed, being so mangled as to be incapable of standing. On his recovery he applied to count Gondomar the Spanish ambassador, who promised him a reparation, but deceived him; which so provoked Lithgow that he assaulted him at court, for which he was sent to the marshalsea, where he remained a prisoner nine months. He published a curious account of his travels.—Granger.

LITTLETON, or LYTTLETON (Thomas), a famous judge, was born in Devonshire, of the family of Wylscott, but he changed his name to oblige his maternal grandfather in Worcestershire, about the beginning of the 15th century, and after receiving a liberal education, he was entered of the Inner Temple. His abilities as a lawyer procured him from Henry VI. the place of steward of the court; and in 1455 he went the northern circuit as a judge. Edward IV. appointed him one of the judges of the court of common pleas, and in 1475 he was created knight of the bath. He died in 1481, and was interred in the cathedral of Worcester. He left three sons, who all became eminent in the law. It was for the use of one them, namely, Richard, that he wrote his famous book on Tenures, which was printed first about 1477. His 3d son Thomas was knighted by Henry VII. for apprehending Lambert Simnel. The eldest son, sir William, died at his seat in Worcestershire in 1508. Sir Thomas Littleton's book of Tenures has been often printed, with sir Edward Coke's Commentary.—Biog. Brit.

LITTLETON (John), an immediate descendant from the judge, sat in parliament for Worcestershire in the 27th of Elizabeth, but being a zealous follower of the earl of Essex, was taken up, fined, and condemned for a conspiracy, with some others. By the interest, however, of sir Walter Raleigh, to whom he wrote an admirable letter, he was pardoned, and died in prison in 1600. Several of his papers are in the Biographia Britannica.

LITTLETON (Edward), an English judge, was of the same family as the preceding, and born in Shropshire in 1589. He received his education at Christ church college, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple. In 1628 he was in parliament, and was one of the members sent up to the lords with the petition of right; he was also a manager of the accusation against the duke of Buckingham. In 1639 he was made chief justice of the common pleas, and the year following lord keeper of the great seal, at which time he was created a peer by the title of lord Littleton. He lost the king's confidence, however, by leaning too much to the opposition party, who also were equally jealous of him. He died at Oxford in 1645.—Biog. Brit.

LITTLETON (Adam), a learned divine, was born at Hales Owen, in Shropshire, in 1627, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected student of Christ church, Oxford, but was ejected by the parliamentary visitors in 1648. He then became usher to Dr. Busby, and in 1658 was appointed under-master. In 1674, being then D. D., he obtained the living of Chelsea, and a prebend of Westminster. He died in 1694. He composed a Latin and English Dictionary, several sermons, and other works.—Ibid.

LITTLETON (Edward), an ingenious divine, was educated at Eton, from whence he removed to King's college, Cambridge. In 1720 he was appointed under-master of Eton school, and in 1727 elected fellow of the college. In 1730 he was appointed chaplain to the king, and the same year took his degree of L.L.D. He died in 1734, and was buried in his parish church of Maple Derham, in Oxfordshire. Two volumes of his Sermons were printed after his death, and some of his poems are in Dodley's collection.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LIVIA, the wife of Tiberius Claudius Nero, by whom she had the emperor Tiberius, and Drusus Germanicus. Augustus fell in love with her, and married her while she was pregnant. She prevailed on Augustus to adopt her children by Drusus; but she was suspected of poisoning the emperor to procure the throne for her son Tiberius, who treated her with ingratitude, and when she died, A.D. 29, refused her funeral honours.—Creever.

LIVINEUS (John), a learned divine of the 16th century, was a native of Dendermonde, and a canon of Antwerp, where he died in 1599. He translated into Latin some of the works of Gregory Nyssen, St. Chrysostom, and other fathers. He also edited the Panegyrici Veteres, Antwerp, 1599, 8vo.—Moreri.

LIVINGSTON (John), a Scotch presbyterian divine, was born in 1603, and educated at Glasgow, where he took the degree of M.A. He was banished from Scotland in 1663 for refusing to take the oath of allegiance, on which he went to Holland, where he died in 1672. He published some theological works.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LIVIVS (Andronicus), a Roman comic poet, who flourished B.C. 240. He was the freedman of M. Livius Salinator, and preceptor to his children. He acted in his own plays, which are lost.—Moreri.

LIVIVS (Titus), an illustrious historian, was born at Patavium, or Padua, of an ancient family. He resided at Rome in the time of Augustus, to whom he read his History as he composed it. That emperor appointed him tutor of his grandson Claudius. On the death of his patron he returned to his native place, where he died, A.D. 17, in the 67th year of his age. The best editions of his Roman History are that of Gronovius, Leyden, 1679, 3 vols. 8vo., and that of Creever, Paris, 1735, 6 vols. 4to. A translation into English has been published by Mr. Baker, in 6 vols. 8vo.—Vossius de Hist. Lat. Moreri.

LLOYD (William), a learned prelate, was born at Tilehurst in Berkshire, in 1627, and entered in 1638 at Oriel college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Jesus college, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1642, and was elected fellow. At the restoration he was appointed chaplain to the king, and in 1676 he obtained the living of St. Martin in the Fields. In 1680 he was promoted to the bishopric of St. Asaph, and in 1688 he was sent to the Tower with six other bishops for addressing the king against the declaration for liberty of conscience. In 1692 he was translated to the see of Litchfield and Coventry, from whence, in 1699, he was removed to Worcester. He died in 1717. Bishop Lloyd wrote several tracts against popery; sermons; the History of the Government of the Church of Great Britain; a Chronological Account of the Life of Pythagoras; a Dissertation on Daniel's seventy Weeks; and other works.—Biog. Brit.

LLOYD (Robert), an English poet, was the son of Dr. Pierfon Lloyd, second master of Westminster school, where Robert received his education, and from whence he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge. He was some time an usher in Westminster school, and while in that situation published a poem called the Actor, which possessed considerable merit. On account of his irregularities he was obliged to resign his place in the school, after which he subsisted almost wholly on charity, particularly that afforded by his friend Churchill. He died in 1764. His poems were published by Dr. Kenrick, in 2 vols. 8vo., 1774. Lloyd was also the author of the Capricious Lover, a comic opera, 1764, 8vo., and other dramatic works.—Biog. Dram. Gen. B. D.

LLOYD (Nicholas), an English divine, who was rector of St. Mary, Newington, Surry, where he died in 1680, aged 49. He compiled an Historical, Geographical, and Poetical Dictionary, to which Hoffman and the editors of Moreri were much indebted. It was printed at Oxford, in 1670, 1 vol. folio, and in 1695, in 4to.—Great Hist. Diet.

LLYWARCH ab Llywelyn, an eminent Welsh bard, who flourished from about A. D. 1160 to 1220. Many of his pieces are in the Welsh Archaology, and contain several historical notices of value.—Owen's Cambr. Biog.

LLYWARCH HEN, a celebrated Welsh poet who flourished about 630. Many of his compositions are extant, and were collected and printed by Mr. Owen, who says that he came from the north of England. He distinguished himself in the defence of his country against the Saxons; and he lost twenty-four sons in the same cause. He died in a solitary cell in the parish of Llanvor, near Bala, aged 150.—Ibid.

LLYWELYN ab Gruffydd, the last sovereign of Wales, who reigned from A. D. 1254 to 1282. He was a brave prince, and resisted the ambition of Edward I. king of England a long time, but he at last fell, and with him the independence of the Welsh as a distinct nation.—Ibid.

LLYWELYN ab Iurwerth, a prince of North Wales from A. D. 1194 to 1240. He obtained the throne by deposing his uncle Davyd ab Owain, who had rendered himself odious to his subjects by his cruelties. Llywelyn distinguished himself by his enterprise and bravery.—Ibid.

LLYWELYN ab Sitsylt, a Welsh prince who succeeded to the principalities of South Wales and Powys, in 998. In 1021 Aulaff, at the head of a Scotch army, invaded his territories, and was joined by Hywil and Meredydd, sons of Edwin ab Einion. Llywelyn marched against them, and defeated them, but he fell in the battle.—Ibid.

LLYWELYN VARD, the son of Cywryd, a celebrated Welsh poet, who flourished between A. D. 1230 and 1280. Some of his poems are in the Welsh Archaology.—Ibid.

LLYWELYN O LANGEWYDD, or Llywelyn Sion, an eminent poet of Glamorgan, who collected the System of Bardism, which collections are now preserved. He presided at several meetings of the bards, and died in 1616.—Ibid.

LLYWELYN (Thomas), a Welsh divine and critic, was a native of Glamorganshire, and died in 1796. He published a History of the different editions of the Welsh Bible.—Ibid.

LOSS (Theophilus), an English physician, was the son of a dissenting minister, and died at London in 1763, aged 87. He wrote some medical books, and also some on religious subjects.—Mortimer.

LOBEL (Mathias), an eminent botanist and physician, was born at Lisle in 1538. He studied at Montpelier, and while there applied with great assiduity to botanical researches. After travelling through Switzerland, Germany, and Italy, he visited England about 1570, and was greatly esteemed by several noblemen, and appointed physician and botanist to James I. He died in 1616. Lobel had the superintendence of a large garden at Hackney, cultivated at the expence of lord Zouch. He wrote, 1. Stirpium Adversaria, first printed at London in 1570; 2. Observaciones, five Stirpium Historiz, cui annexum est Adversarium Volumen, fol. 1576; 3. Dilucidæ simplicium Medicamentorum Explicationes, &c.—Pulteney.

LOBINEAU (Guy Alexis), a French ecclesiastic and historical writer, was born at Rennes in 1666. He became a benedictine, and died in 1727. His works are, a History of Brittany, 2 vols. folio; History of the Conquest of Spain by the Moors, 12mo; History of Paris, 5 vols. fol.; History of the Saints of Brittany, fol.—Moreri.

LOSKOWITZ (Boleslas de Haslenstein, baron de), a Bohemian nobleman and man of letters. After travelling into various countries, and bearing arms with reputation, he embraced the ecclesiastical state, and was also employed in public affairs. He died in 1510. His Latin poems were printed at Prague in 1563, and 1570.—Moreri.

Loxo (Jerome), a Portuguese jesuit, who travelled through Abyssinia, as a missionary, and published a curious account of that country, which was rendered into French by Le Grand, from whence it was translated into English by Dr. Samuel Johnson. Lobo died rector of the college of Coimbra in Portugal, in 1678, aged 85.—Moreri.

Loso (Rodriguez Francis), a Portuguese poet, was born in Estramadura. He wrote a comedy called Euphrosyne, which is a great favourite among his countrymen. He was also the author of a folio volume of poems, printed in 1721.—Ibid.

LOCKART (Alexander), a Scotch writer, was born near Edinburgh in 1673, and bred to the law. He was a member of parliament at the time of the union, which measure he violently opposed; as he also did the Hanoverian succession. He was killed in a duel in 1732. His Memoirs of Scotland were published at London in 1714.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LOCKE (John), a celebrated philosopher, was born at Wrington, in Somersetshire, in 1632, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ-church, Oxford, of which he became student. After taking his degrees in arts, he entered on the study of physic, in which he made great proficiency. Lord Ashley, afterwards earl of Shaftesbury, became his patron and urged him to apply to the study of politics. Mr. Locke followed this advice, and soon rendered himself serviceable to his lordship and his party; who, having obtained the grant of Carolina, employed him in drawing up the constitution for the government of that province. Lord Shaftesbury being made lord chancellor in 1672, made Mr. Locke secretary of presentations, which place he lost the year following, when his patron was deprived of the great seal. He continued, however, his secretaryship of the board of trade, of which lord Shaftesbury was president. In 1674 that commission was dissolved, and Mr. Locke being in an ill state of health went to Montpellier, and continued abroad till 1679, when he was sent for by lord Shaftesbury, who was appointed president of the council; but in 1682 that nobleman, to avoid a prosecution for high treason, withdrew to Holland, and was accompanied by his unalterable friend Mr. Locke. In 1684 he was removed from his student's place at Christ-church, by the king's command; and the year following the English envoy demanded him of the states of Holland, on suspicion of his being concerned in Monmouth's rebellion, which occasioned him to keep himself private several months, during which time he was employed in preparing for the press his Essay on Human Understanding, which however was not published till after the revolution, when he returned to England, and was made commissioner of appeals. In 1695 he was appointed one of the commissioners of trade and plantations, and he might have had other preferment, but the state of his health led him to decline the advantageous offers that were made him. He spent the latter years of his life at Oates, in Essex, the seat of lady Masham, devoting his time to study, particularly of the holy scriptures. In this retirement he also wrote several of his works, and died there in 1704. His remains were interred in the church of Oates, where a monument has been erected to his memory. His principal works are, an Essay on Human Understanding, 2 vols. 8vo.; Letters on Toleration, 4to.; Treatise on Civil Government, 8vo.; and Thoughts concerning Education, 12mo. These with his Letters and miscellaneous pieces have been printed together in 3 vols. folio, and 9 vols. 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

LOCKER (John), a learned English gentleman, was born of a good family in Middlesex, and educated at merchant-tailors' school, from whence he removed to Merton college, Oxford, and afterwards to Gray's Inn, where he studied the law, and was called to the bar. He translated the two first books of Voltaire's life of Charles XII., and wrote the preface. He also made collections towards a life of lord Bacon, which he communicated to Dr. Birch, and Mr. Mallet. He died in 1760.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

LOCKMAN (John), an English writer, was the author of Rosalinda, a musical drama; and David's Lamentations, an oratorio. He was also one of the compilers of the Great Historical Dictionary, and died in 1771.—Biog. Dram.

LOCKYER (Nicholas), a puritan divine, who was chaplain to Cromwell, and provost of Eton college, but at the restoration he was ejected both from that place, and from a living in the city. He died in 1684. He published some sermons.—Calamy.

LODAROG (Regner), king of Denmark, was a warrior, poet, and painter. He flourished in the 9th century. His poems are extant, but are wild and fanatical.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LODOX (Thomas), an English physician and poet, was educated at Oxford, but took his doctor's degree at Avignon. He settled in London, and being a Roman-catholic, had great practice among people of that persuasion. He died in 1625. He wrote two dramatic pieces: 1. Wounds of Civil War, a tragedy; 2. Looking-glass for London and England, a tragic-comedy. He also assisted Robert Green in writing some of his works.—Langbaine.

LOEWENDAL (Ulric Frederic Woldemar, count de), a brave general, was born at Hamburgh in 1700. He began his military career in the Polish service, from whence he passed into that of Denmark against Sweden. He next joined the imperial army, and distinguished himself in the famous battle of Peterwaradin, and at the sieges of Teneffwar and Belgrade. He had a part in most of the actions of that great war, after which Augustus king of Poland made him field-marshal and inspector-general of the saxon infantry. He was next in the service of the Russians, as commander in chief; and his reputation was so great that the king of France invited him into his employ, which he accepted. He displayed his skill and valor on many occasions, particularly at the battle of Fontenoy in 1745; but his greatest exploit was the taking of Bergen-op-Zoom by assault, Sept. 16, 1747. This place had hitherto been deemed impregnable. For this he was created field-marshal of France. He died in 1755.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LOGAN (John), a Scotch divine and poet, was born in the county of Mid Lothian, about 1748, and educated at Edinburgh. In 1770 he was ordained minister at South Leith. In 1781 he published the Philosophy of History, which he had delivered as lectures at Edinburgh. The same year he oriented his poems in one volume, of which a second edition appeared in 1782. The year following he offered his tragedy of unnamed to the manager of Covent-garden theatre, but it was refused a licence on account of some political observations. It was however performed at Edinburgh with applause. His last publication was a pamphlet entitled, A Review of the Principal Charges against Mr. Hastings, for which he publisher was tried and acquitted. Mr. Logan died in London in 1788. Two volumes of his Sermons have been published since his death.—Gent. Mag.

LOGAN (Frederic baron de), a German poet, was born in 1604, and died in 1655. Lessing and Ramler have published a new edition of his Epigrams, which are much esteemed.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LOGES (Mary Bruneau), an eminent French lady, was the wife of the signior Loges, gentleman of the bedchamber to the king. She was a protestant, and greatly esteemed by Malherbe, Balzac, and other learned and ingenious men, for her great talents. She died in 1641, but left no productions of her mind by which to judge whether she merited the encomiums passed on her, of being a divinity, and the tenth muse.—Moreri.

LOHENSEIN (Daniel Gaspard de), a learned German nobleman, was born at Imptsch in Silesia in 1638, and died in 1683. He wrote some dramatic pieces; an historical romance, entitled Arminius, or the Defender of Germanic Liberty, 2 vols. 8vo.; Poetical Reflections on 59d Chapter of Isaiah, &c.—Ibid.

LOIR (Nicholas), a painter, was born at Paris in 1624. He studied under Le Brun, and painted figures, landscapes, architecture, and ornaments. He died professor of the academy in 1679. His son Alexis was a good engraver.—D'Argenville.

LOKMAN, an Abyssinian philosopher, of whom hardly any authentic particulars are known. He appears to have been of low origin, and some say he was a slave. There are so many circumstances related of him that agree with what is said of Æsop, and their fables are so much alike, that both are conjectured to have been one and the same person. Lokman's Fables were printed in a collection by Galland at Paris in 1724.—Moreri.

LOLLARD (Walter), the founder of a religious sect in Germany about 1315. After gaining many followers on the continent he went to England, where he also had numerous disciples. The Lollards were, according to some, grossly licentious and heretical, but of this we have only the testimony of their enemies. Lollard himself was burnt at Cologne in 1322.—Moreri. Dupin.

LOM, or LOMMIUS (Jossé van), an ingenious physician, was born at Buren in Guelderland in 1500, and died in 1562. He published, Commentarii de Sanitate tuenda; Observationum Medicinalium Libri tres; De curandis Febribus. All his works were printed together at Amsterdam in 3 vols. 12mo. 1745. His Latin style is pure and elegant.—Moreri.

LOMAZZO (John Paul), a painter, was born at Milan in 1558, and died in 1598. He excelled in history, landscape, and portrait; and wrote, 1. A Treatise on Painting, in Italian, 1585, 4to.; 2. Idea del Tempio della Pittura, 1590, 4to.—Tiraboschi.

LOMBARD (Peter), called the master of the sentences, was born at Novara in Lombardy, and educated at Paris. He was tutor to prince Philip, son of Lewis the big king of France, who gave him the bishopric of Paris. He died in 1164. His work on the Sentences has been commented upon by many scholastic writers. He also left Commentaries on the Psalms and St. Paul's Epistles.—Dupin.

LOMBARD (John Louis), an eminent writer on military tactics, was born at Strasbourg in 1723. He was bred to the law, which profession he quitted and became professor of artillery, first at Metz, and afterwards at Auxonne, in the military school. He died in 1794. He translated into French Robins's Principles of Gunnery; and wrote, 1. Aide-Memoire à l'Usage des Officiers d'Artillerie de France, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Tables du Tir des Canons et des Obusiers, 8vo.; 3. Instruction sur la Manœuvre et le Tir du Canon de Bataille, 8vo.; 4. Traité du Mouvement des Projectiles, 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LOMBART (Lambert), a painter, was born at Liege in 1500. He studied at Rome, and then returned to his own country, where he exercised his profession with reputation. He had also a good knowledge of architecture. He died in 1560.—Pilk.

LOMPNIE (Henry Augustus), count de Brienne), a French statesman, was the son of Anthony Lomenie, ambassador extraordinary in England, and secretary of state, who died in 1638. The son succeeded him in his places, and managed public affairs with great prudence during the minority of Louis XIV. He died in 1666, aged 71. His Memoirs were printed at Amsterdam in 1719, 3 vols. 12mo. His son, Henry Louis count of Brienne, succeeded his father as secretary of state, though very young; but the death of his wife had such an effect on his spirits that he was rendered incapable of discharging the duties of his office, and he was placed under confinement, after committing many extravagances. He died in 1698, aged 56. He wrote Memoirs of his own Life, 3 vols. folio; Satires and Odes; an Account of his Travels; and other works.—Marcri.

LOMENIE DE BRIENNE (Stephen Charles de), a French prelate and statesman of the same family as the preceding, was born at Paris in 1727. In 1760 he became bishop of Sens, and in 1788 a cardinal and prime minister of France. He contributed to the disgrace of Calonne, and yet adopted his plans without having his talents or resolution. In his episcopal character he deserved praise by reforming many abuses, particularly among the monks. At the commencement of the French revolution, to which he contributed, he returned the cardinal's hat to the pope. He died at Sens in 1798.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

LOMONOZOV, a Russian poet of considerable merit, was the son of a fishmonger, and having fled from his father, he took refuge in a monastery, where he received his education, which he afterwards improved at a German university. In 1741 he returned to his native country, and became member of the academy of St. Petersburg, and professor of chemistry. In 1761 he was honoured with the title of counsellor of state, but died the same year aged 54. His works have been published in 3 vols. 8vo. consisting of pieces in verse and prose, the last being chiefly philosophical dissertations.—Cœne's Travels. Gen. Biog. Dict.

LONGE (Francis de la), a French poet, was born at Caen in 1685. Besides his poems, which are much esteemed, he wrote some pieces on moral subjects, and on education and antiquities. He died in 1765.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

LONG (James le), a priest of the oratory, was born at Paris in 1665, and died librarian of St. Honoré in that city in 1721. His chief works are, 1. Bibliotheca Sacra, 2 vols. folio, 1723; 2. Bibliothèque Historique de France, folio; 3. An Historical Discourse on Polyglott Bibles, 8vo.—Ibid.

LONG (Roger), a learned English divine, was a native of Norfolk, and educated at Cambridge, where he became master of Pembroke hall, and Lowndes's professor of astronomy. Dr. Long is known as the author of a valuable treatise of Astronomy in 2 vols. 4to. and as the inventor of a curious astronomical machine. This is a hollow sphere 18 feet in diameter, and capable of containing 30 persons. Within the surface, which represent the heavens, are painted the stars and constellations, with the zodiac, meridians, and axis, parallel to the axis of the world, upon which it is easily turned round by a winch. He also wrote an answer to Dr. Gally's tract on Greek Accents. He died in 1770, aged 81.—Gen. Biog. Dict. Hutton.

LONGBEARD (William), a priest in the reign of Richard I. who assembled a great mob about 1196, and by his eloquence irritated them against the government, for which he was torn in pieces by horses, with some of his companions.—Rapin.

LONGPIERRE (Hilary Bernard signior de), a French writer, was born at Dijon in 1659, of a noble family. He wrote three tragedies on the Grecian model, Medea, Elecra, and Sesoftris. He also wrote Idylls, and translated into French the works of Anacreon, Sappho, Bion, Theocritus, and Moschus. He died in 1727.—Morcri.

LONGINUS (Dionysius), a celebrated philosopher and rhetorician, was a native of Athens. He was related to Plutarch, and spent the early part of his life in travelling, after which he settled at Athens, where he taught the Platonic philosophy and rhetoric with great reputation, but was called from thence by Zenobia queen of Palmyra, to be tutor to her children. When that city was taken by the emperor Aurelian in 273, he inhumanly ordered him to be put to death. Longinus composed critical remarks on all the ancient Greek authors, but only a part of his inestimable Treatise on the Sublime exists. The best edition is that of Toup, 8vo. 1778, Oxford. It has been well translated into English by Dr. Smith, 8vo.—Vossius.

LONGLAND (John), an English bishop, was a native of Henley in Oxfordshire, and educated at Magdalen college. In 1505 he became principal of Magdalen-hall, and in 1514 dean of Salisbury. In 1521 he was made bishop of Lincoln. He is said to have recommended the divorce between Henry VIII. and queen Catherine. He died in 1547. His works were printed in 1 vol. folio in 1582.—Wood, A. O.

LONGOMONTANUS (Christian), a celebrated astronomer, was born in Jutland in 1562, of mean parents; but the minister of the parish, observing his capacity, gave him instructions, and the youth divided his time between the plough and his book. At the age of 15 he went to the university of Wibur, supporting himself by labour to enable him to follow his studies. He afterwards became an assistant to Tycho Brahe, who had a great regard for him. In 1605 he was appointed professor of mathematics at Copenhagen, where he died in 1647. He wrote, 1. Astronomia Danica, folio; 2. Systema Mathematicum, 8vo.; 3. Proble- metæ Geometriae, 4to.; 4. Disputatio Ethica de Animæ Humanæ Morbis, 4to.—Martini. Hatten.

LONGUEIL (Gilbert de), a learned physician, was born at Utrecht in 1507. He published a Greek and Latin Lexicon; Remarks on Ovid, Plautus, Cornelius Nepos, Cicero, Laurentius Valla, &c. 4 vols. 8vo. He also translated some of the lesser works of Plutarch into Latin; and wrote a Dialogue concerning Birds, with their names Greek, Latin, and German. He died in 1543.—Moreri.

LONGUEIL (Christopher de), an eminent scholar, was born at Malines in 1490. He was in favour with several crowned heads, particularly pope Leo X., who set him to write against Luther. He wrote besides, Commentaries in Latin on Pliny's Book of Plants, and Observations on the Civil Law. He died at Padua in 1522.—Ibid.

LONGUEVEZ (Louis Dufour de), a learned French ecclesiastic, was born at Charleville in 1652, and died in 1733. He wrote, 1. A Latin Dissertation upon Tatian; 2. Historical Description of France, folio; 3. Annales Arfacidarum; 4. A Discourse on Transubstantiation; 5. Remarks on the Life of Cardinal Wolfsey.—New. Dict. Hist.

LONGUEVAL (James), a French jesuit, was born at Peronne in 1680, and studied at Amiens and Paris, where he died in 1735. He wrote ten volumes of a History of the Church of France; a Treatise on Schism; a Dissertation on Miracles; and other works.—Moreri.

LONGUS, a Greek sophist, of whom we have four books of Pastorals, in prose, on the loves of Daphnis and Chloe, the best edition of which is that of Franeker, 1660, 4to.—Vossius.

LOMI (Alexander), an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1635, and died in 1702. He was a disciple of Carlo Dolce, whose style he imitated with great felicity.—Pilkington.

LONGICERUS (John), a learned German, was born at Othorn in 1499. He taught the languages and sciences at Marburg, where he died in 1569. He compiled a Lexicon Greek and Latin, and published an edition of Dioscorides, &c. His son Adam Longicerus was an able physician, and died at Frankfort in 1586. He wrote Methodus Rei Herbariæ, 4to.; Historia Naturalis Plantarum, Animalium, et Metallorum, 2 vols. fol.; Methodica Explicatio omnium Corporis humani Affectuum; Hortus Sanitatis.—Moreri.

LOON (Theodore van), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Brussels in 1630. Many of his pictures adorn the churches and palaces at Rome and Venice.—Pilkington.

LOREDANO (John Francis), a Venetian nobleman of the 17th century, who wrote the Life of Adam; a History of the Kings of Cyprus, and some Italian comedies. His works make 6 vols. 12mo. He was born in 1606, but the date of his death is uncertain.—Tiraboschi.

LORENZETTI (Ambrozio), an Italian painter, was born at Sienna in 1267. He was the disciple of Giotto, and painted rain, storms, and boisterous scenes. He died in 1350.—D'Argenville.

LORENZINI (Laurence), a Tuscan mathematician, was born at Florence in 1652. He was a pupil of Viviani, and afterwards in the service of prince Ferdinand, son of the grand-duke Cosmo III. He was for some offence confined in the tower of Volterra twenty years. During his confinement he wrote his twelve books of Conical and Cylindrical Sections, in Latin. He died in 1721.

LORET (Henry), or Glareanus, from his being born at Glaris in Switzerland, in 1489. He was particularly intimate with Erasmus, and died in 1563. He wrote discourses on classical subjects, and notes on ancient authors.—Moreri.

LORMÉ (Philibert de), an eminent architect, and master of the works to the king of France, was born at Lyons. He built the palace of the Tuilleries, and the Louvre. He died in 1570. He wrote ten books of Architecture, folio.—D'Argenville.

LORMÉ (John de), a French physician, was born in 1544, at Moulins, and took his degree at Montpellier. He became physician to Mary of Medicis, queen of Henry IV., at whose court he was greatly esteemed. He died in 1634. His son Charles became physician in ordinary to Louis XIII. and died in 1678, aged 94. He was a learned man, and published a work entitled, Lauræ Apollinaris, 8vo.—Moreri.

LORRAIN (Robert le), a famous sculptor, was born at Paris in 1666. In 1701 he became a member of the academy of sculpture, on which occasion he produced his Galatea, which is reckoned his greatest work. He died rector of the academy in 1745.—New. Dict. Hist.

LORRINE (Charles of), cardinal and archbishop of Rheims, was the son of the first duke of Guise, and born in 1525. He was both covetous and ambitious, and enjoyed almost unlimited power under Henry II. and Francis II. He displayed his abilities at the council of Trent, and in the conference at Poissy. The war of Italy is generally attributed to him. He died in 1574.—Moreri.

LORRIS (William de), a French poet, who died about the year 1260. He wrote the Romance of the Rose, the best edition of which is that of Lenglet at Amsterdam, in 1736, 3 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

LOREY (Anne Charles), an eminent French physician, was born at Crofne in 1725, and died in 1783. He published an Essay on the Use of Aliments; of Melancholy and its Disorders, 2 vols. 8vo.; a Treatise on Cutaneous Diseases, 4to. He also superintended a Latin edition of the works of Dr. Mead, &c.—New. Dict. Hist.

LOSA (Isabella), a learned Spanish lady, was a native of Cordova. She understood the Latin, Greek and Hebrew languages, and was admitted to the degree of doctor in divinity. On becoming a widow she took the habit of St. Clare, and going to Italy, founded an hospital at Loreto, where she died in 1546; aged 73.—Moreri.

LOT, the son of Haran, and nephew of Abraham, by whom he was brought up. He afterwards settled at Sodom, where he was taken prisoner by the king of Edom, but was rescued by Abraham with all his property. When Sodom was about to be destroyed, two angels came to Lot and obliged him to quit the place, with his wife and daughters, the former of whom, for looking back, was converted into a pillar of salt. He then retired to a cave, where his daughters, after throwing him into sleep by intoxicating liquor, lay with him, and the fruits of this incest were Moab and Ammon.—Bible.

LOTEN (John), a Swiss landscape painter, who lived many years in England. He painted craggy rocks with cataracts and torrents, and land storms with rain. He died in 1681.—Vertue.

LOTHAIRE I. emperor of Germany, was the son of Louis le Debonaire, associated with him in the empire in 817, and named king of Lombardy in 820. He afterwards dethroned his father, and shut him up in a monastery, on which his brothers, Louis and Charles, joined their forces against him, and obtained a great but bloody victory at Fontenai in 841. Two years after a treaty was concluded between them at Verdun, by which Lothaire obtained the empire, Italy, and some of the provinces between the Rhine and the Rhone; Louis had a tract of country bordering on the Rhine; and Charles became king of France. Ten years after this partition, Lothaire abdicated the crown, and died in a monastery in 855.—Univ. Hist.

LOTHAIRE II. emperor of the West, and duke of Saxony, was the son of Gerhard count of Supplemburg, elected king of Germany after the death of Henry V. in 1125, and crowned at Rome in 1133. He died in 1137.—Ibid.

LOTHAIRE, king of France, was the son of Louis IV., whom he succeeded in 954. He made war against the emperor Otho II. with success, and died in 986, as it is said, of poison administered by his wife Emma.—Henault.

LOTHAIRE, king of Lorraine, was the son of the emperor Lothaire I. He abandoned his wife Thietberga, and espoused his mistress. By bribery he procured two councils, one at Mentz, and the other at Aix la Chapelle, to confirm his divorce and new marriage, but pope Nicholas I. reversed their decree, and compelled him to take back his lawful wife. He died in 869.—Moreri.

LOUIS I. emperor of the West, called the Debonair, was the son of Charlemagne, born in 778, and proclaimed emperor in 814.

In 817 he associated his eldest son Lothaire with him in the empire; and to his other two sons Pepin and Louis, he gave the kingdoms of Aquitaine and Bavaria. This division gave such offence to Bernard king of Italy, the bastard of Pepin, eldest son of Charlemagne, that he raised an army against the emperor, who put himself at the head of his troops and marched into Italy, but on his approach the soldiers of Bernard fled, and the unfortunate king submitted to his uncle, who deprived him of his eyes, and he died in consequence of the operation. In 829 Louis made his younger son Charles, whom he had by Judith of Bavaria, king of Germany; on which his other sons rose against him, and being supported by the clergy, they deprived their father of his crown, and placed him in a monastery, where he died in 840.—Univ. Hist.

LOUIS II. the Young, was the only son of Lothaire I., created king of Italy in 843, and ascended the imperial throne in 855. He died in 875. He was a brave and virtuous prince.—Ibid.

LOUIS III. was the son of Boson king of Provence, and Ermengarde daughter of the emperor Louis the Young. He succeeded his father at the age of ten, and in 900 he contested the imperial throne with Berenger, who, having surprized him at Verona, deprived him of his eyes. He died in 924.—Ibid.

LOUIS IV. the son of the emperor Arnulphus, whom he succeeded in 900, at the age of seven years. The empire was a scene of desolation in his reign, being constantly ravaged by the Hungarians. He died in 911. He was the last prince in Germany of the Carolingian race.—Ibid.

LOUIS V. commonly called Louis of Bavaria, was the son of Louis the Severe, duke of Bavaria, and of Matilda, daughter of the emperor Rodolphus I. He was elected emperor in 1314, and at the same time Frederic le Bel was chosen at Cologne by another party of electors, which occasioned a war between them. Frederic was taken prisoner, and gained his liberty by renouncing his claim in favour of his rival. Pope John XXII., however, in 1322 issued his bull of deposition against Louis, who in return appealed to the next general council, and marched into Italy, where he procured Peter de Corbiere to be elected pope, and by whom he was crowned at Rome. Five electors, on the other hand, chose Charles of Luxemburg to be emperor, on which the civil war was about to be renewed, when Louis was killed by a fall from his horse in hunting in 1347.

LOUIS I. king of France; see Louis I. emperor.

LOUIS II. the Stammerer, so called from a defect in his speech, was the son of Charles the Bald, crowned king of Aquitaine in 867, and succeeded his father as king of France in 877. He was obliged to deliver up Provence to Boson, by whom it was erected into a kingdom. Louis died in 879. His children were, Louis and Carloman, who divided the kingdom between them, and a posthumous son, who was afterwards Charles the Simple.—Henault.

Louis III. the son of the preceding, and brother of Carloman, enjoyed the kingdom with his brother. He defeated Hugh the Bastard, son of Lothaire, marched against Boson king of Provence, and opposed the progress of the Normans. He died without children in 882.—Ibid.

Louis IV. was the son of Charles the Simple, and ascended the throne in 936. He invaded Normandy, but was defeated and taken prisoner in 944. He regained his liberty the following year, after being obliged to concede Normandy to Richard, son of duke William, and the county of Laon to Hugh le Blanc. He afterwards recovered the latter territory, and died of a fall from his horse in 954.—Ibid.

Louis V. succeeded his father Lothaire in 936, and soon after took the city of Rheims. He was preparing to march to the assistance of the count of Barcelona, who was pressed by the Saracens, when Louis was poisoned by his queen, May 21, 987. After his death the crown devolved by right to his uncle Charles, duke of Lower Lorraine, but that prince being disliked by the French, it was conferred on Hugh Capet.—Ibid.

Louis VI. called the Big, the son of Philip I. was born in 1081, and succeeded to the throne in 1108: His reign was disturbed by wars with the emperor and the Normans, and also by feuds among his vassals. He had all the qualities necessary to constitute a good king, and he regulated the jurisprudence of his country, in which he was greatly assisted by his minister Segur. He died in 1137.—Ibid.

Louis VII. was the son and successor of the preceding. He had a dispute with pope Innocent II. on the right of presenting to benefices, and was excommunicated by that pontiff, who also laid his kingdom under interdict. Thibault, count of Champagne, being devoted to the pope, Louis declared war against him and ravaged his country. A reconciliation afterwards took place between them, and Louis, by the persuasions of St. Bernard, engaged in a crusade, but was defeated by Saladin, and on his return to Europe he was taken at sea by the Greeks, and delivered by the general of Roger, king of Sicily. His wife Eleanor, the heiress of Guienne and Poitou, who had been the companion of his romantic expedition, committed adultery with her uncle Raymond of Antioch, and afterwards with a young Turk named Saladin, for which she was divorced from Louis; who took for his second wife the daughter of Thibault, count of Champagne. Eleanor married Henry of Normandy, afterwards king of England, to whom she brought as her dower the provinces of Poitou and Guienne. This produced a new war between England and France; which lasted, with a little intermission, twenty-one years. Louis died in 1180, aged 60.—Ibid.

Louis VIII. surnamed the Lion, was the son of Philip Augustus, and born in 1187. He signalized himself in several expeditions during the life of his father, and ascended the throne in 1223. He took Avignon and several places from the English; but died of a pestilential disease in his camp at Montpensier in Auvergne, in 1226, aged 39.—Ibid.

Louis IX. or Saint Louis, was the son of the preceding, by Blanche of Castile. He was born in 1215, and ascended the throne in 1226. He maintained a successful war against Henry III. king of England, which ended in a peace favourable to Louis; who having been seized with a dangerous illness, made a vow that if he recovered he would take the cross for the purpose of regaining the holy land from the infidels. Being restored to health he spent four years in preparing for this expedition, and in 1248 he embarked for the East with a great force, leaving his kingdom to the care of his mother. After taking Damietta he passed the Nile in view of the Saracens, and obtained two great victories over them. At length famine and disease attacked his army, and the king with his nobles fell into the hands of the infidels. Louis, to recover his liberty, consented to pay a large ransom, to deliver up Damietta, and to conclude a truce for ten years. After spending four years in Palestine he returned to France; where, in 1269, he established the liberty of the Gallican church by a pragmatic sanction. In 1270 he undertook another expedition against the infidels, but died in his camp before Tunis in Africa, August 25, the same year. He was canonized in 1297.—Ibid.

Louis X. succeeded Philip the Fair, his father, in 1314, being before king of Navarre in right of his mother. He recalled the Jews to his kingdom, and made a successful war against the count of Flanders. He died at Vincennes in 1316, aged 26.—Ibid.

Louis XI. son of Charles VII. by Mary of Anjou, was born in 1423: He distinguished himself by his valour in his youth, particularly against the English, whom he compelled to raise the siege of Dieppe in 1443; but the glory he hereby acquired was tarnished by his rebelling against his father, who died of a broken heart in 1461. Louis on ascending the throne treated France as a conquered country, for which several of the nobility formed a league against him, and some of his own family joined the malcontents: After a severe but indecisive battle at Montheri in 1465, a peace was concluded, by which Louis gave to the leaguers all their demands; but not fulfilling his engagements the war was re-kindled, and he was made prisoner by the duke of Burgundy, who compelled him to make a peace still more disadvantageous than the former. The duke of Berry, brother of the French king, having entered into a treaty of marriage with the daughter of the duke of Burgundy, was poisoned together with his mistress, by the king's almoner: to avenge this murder the duke of Burgundy marched into Picardy, which he ravaged with fire and sword. In 1474 the duke formed a league with Edward IV. king of England, and the king of Brittany, against Louis, who, by negotiation, contrived to disengage the English monarch from the alliance, by a treaty at Amiens in 1475. The duke of Burgundy was, in consequence, obliged to conclude a peace for nine years. Louis had next a war with the emperor Ferdinand III. who had espoused the only daughter of the duke of Burgundy, which ended without any great advantage on either side in 1482. A horrible melancholy seized upon the king of France, who shut himself up from the sight of his subjects, and died in 1483.—Henault.

Louis XII. surnamed the Just, was the son of Charles duke of Orleans, by Maria of Cleves: He succeeded Charles VIII. in 1498, and conquered the Milanese, Genoa, and Naples. Frederick, the king of the latter country, was sent to France, and had a pension allowed for his support; but after ravaging Italy the French were expelled in 1513. The emperor Maximilian, Henry VIII. of England, and the Swiss, attacked Louis in his own dominions, and he was obliged to sue for peace. He died in 1515.

Louis XIII. was the son of Henry IV. and born in 1601: Being only nine years old at the death of his father the care of him and of the kingdom was entrusted to his mother Mary de Medicis. The marshal d'Ancre had an uncontrouled sway at court till 1617, when he was assassinated with the king's consent, and his wife was condemned to death as a sorceress. Vitry, the perpetrator of this act, was made a marshal of France; and the bishop of Luçon, afterwards cardinal Richelieu, became prime minister, who persuaded his master that the destruction of the protestants was necessary to his security. This produced a civil war, in which the protestants were unsuccessful; Rochelle, the strongest place in their hands, was taken by the cardinal after a long siege in 1628, during which the English made two ineffectual attempts to relieve the town. After this event so fatal to the protestant interest in France, Louis assisted the duke of Mantua against the emperor, and entered on the campaign in person, in which he shewed skill and bravery. In 1631 a treaty was concluded by which the duke was confirmed in his estates. The year following Gaston of Orleans, only brother of the king, revolted, out of dislike to Richelieu, and was assisted by the duke de Montmorency, who being wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Castelnaudary in 1632 was beheaded at Toulouse. Gaston took refuge with the duke of Lorraine, who for protecting him lost his whole dominions. This was followed by a war with Spain which lasted twenty-five years, and was attended with various success; but greatly impoverished the nation and discontented the people. Louis and his minister, the cardinal, were attacked with a mortal disease nearly together: the latter died in December 1642, and the king in May following.—Ibid.

Louis XIV. son of the preceding, was only five years old on the death of his father: The regency was in the hands of the queen-mother, Anne of Austria, under whom Mazarine acted as prime minister. The nation was then involved in a war with Spain and the emperor, which was maintained with glory to the French arms by the prince of Condé and the famous Turenne. France pushed her conquests into Flanders, Artois, Lorraine, and Catalonia. The Swedes, who were in alliance with Louis, gained a great victory over the Imperialists in Bohemia; Turenne took Treves and re-established the elector; Condé gained the battle of Northlingen, took Furnes and Dunkirk, and defeated the archduke on the plains of Sens in 1648, after reducing Ypres. The Spanish fleet was defeated on the coast of Italy by the French. This year a separate peace was made between Louis, Ferdinand III. Christina queen of Sweden, and the states of the empire: By this treaty Metz, Toul, Verdun, and Alsace were attached to France; but while Louis was successful abroad his kingdom was distracted by internal divisions: The Parisians, irritated against Mazarine and the queen-mother, and set on by the duke de Beaufort and the prince of Condé, took up arms; and the king, his mother, and the cardinal were obliged to fly. The Spaniards, profiting by these troubles, made several conquests in Champagne, Lorraine, and Italy. In 1651 the king assumed the government, but Mazarine returning to power the year following, the civil war was renewed: Condé headed the malcontents and defeated the marshal d'Hocquincourt at Bleneau, but soon afterwards he was attacked by the royal army and made prisoner. In the mean while the archduke Leopold took from the French Gravelines and Dunkirk; Don John of Austria made himself master of Barcelona, as did the duke of Mantua, of Casal; but domestic tranquillity being restored these losses were repaired, and Turenne gained several battles, and took a number of places, which produced a peace between France and Spain in 1659: The principal article in this treaty was the marriage of the king with the infanta Maria Theresa. The superintendent Fouquet being condemned to banishment for peculation, was succeeded by Colbert, one of the ablest ministers and financiers that ever lived; arts and commerce were cherished and flourished; so-reign colonies were established; and at home was founded the academy of sciences and another of painting and sculpture. On the war breaking out between England and Holland, Louis joined with the latter, but after a few naval actions the peace of Breda was concluded in 1667. On the death of Philip IV. father of the queen, Louis laid claim to the vacant throne, and marched into the Low-countries, where he took a number of towns, particularly Lisle; his progress gave such alarm that a treaty was entered into between England, Holland, and Sweden, to check his ambition, but just as the treaty was completed peace was restored between Louis and Spain. In 1672 the French king made an attack on Holland, and reduced some of the provinces in a few weeks: This invasion produced a new confederacy against Louis, between the emperor, Spain, and the elector of Brandenburg, in which all the allies were unsuccessful, and which terminated, in 1678, by the treaty of Nimeguen. The Algerines having committed great depredations, a fleet was sent against them under the command of Du Quesne, who bombarded Algiers and reduced the dey to submission. Louis next avenged himself upon Genoa for selling powder to the Algerines: On this occasion the doge and four senators repaired to Versailles to sue for peace. Amidst all this glory Louis committed an act of impolitic cruelty by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, granted by Henry IV. in favour of the protestants. This measure drove from France a vast number of ingenious mechanics and others, who settled in England and Holland. About this time another league was formed against France by the prince of Orange, the duke of Savoy, and the electors of Bavaria and Brandenburg. To this league were afterwards added the emperor of Germany and the king of Spain. The dauphin had the command of the French army, and he opened the campaign by taking Philipsburg in October 1688, but he was soon forced to retreat before a superior force. In 1690 the French were more successful: Luxemburg gained the battle of Fleurus, and Catinat took Nice and gained a victory over the troops of the duke of Savoy; this was followed by the taking of Mons in Flanders, Valence in Catalonia, Carmanole and Montmelian in Savoy. These successes were counterbalanced by the defeat of Tourville's squadron off La Hogue by admiral Russel, June 2, 1692. Louis in person took Namur, and Luxemburg gained the battles of Steenkirk and Nerwinde. In 1696 Savoy made a separate peace with France, which was followed by a general one at Ryfwick in 1697. The tranquillity of Europe, however, was again broken by the death of Charles II. king of Spain, in 1700: He left his crown to Philip of France, duke of Anjou, who assumed the title of Philip V. In opposition to him the archduke Charles laid claim to the throne; and he was supported by the emperor of Germany, Holland, and England. Prince Eugene had the command of the Imperial forces, with which he took Cremona. In 1704 Eugene and Marlborough gained the great battle of Hochstet; the year following Nice and Ville-Franche were taken by the French, who also gained a dear victory at Cassano over Eugene; on the other hand Barcelona surrendered to the archduke, and Gironne declared in his favour; the battle of Ramillies was gained by the duke of Marlborough, and prince Eugene saved Turin by defeating the duke of Orleans. In 1708 Lisle was re-taken by the allies, who also gained the battle of Oudenarde, and the Imperialists made themselves masters of Naples. The year following the French lost Tournay, and suffered a defeat at Malplaquet. In 1713 a treaty of peace was signed at Utrecht by France, Spain, England, Savoy, Portugal, Prussia, and Holland; and the next year peace was concluded with the emperor at Rastadt. Louis died September 1, 1715, aged 77; by his first wife he had issue one son, Louis, dauphin of France, who died in 1711, leaving three sons, Louis, Philip, and Gaston. Louis XIV. had several illegitimate children by his mistresses. At the close of life he became serious and even devout, through the influence of Madame de Maintenon, whom he secretly married.—Volktaire's Age of Louis XIV. Nouv. Hist. Hist.

Louis XV. was the great-grandson of the preceding, and succeeded him in 1715, at the age of five years, under the regency of Philip duke of Orleans. In 1723 he was declared of age: The beginning of his reign was rendered very distressing by the Mississippi scheme of the famous Law, which ruined thousands of people. On the death of the duke of Orleans in 1723 he was succeeded, as prime minister, by the duke of Bourbon, who was displaced in 1725, when cardinal Fleury entered upon that station. The same year the king married the daughter of the king of Poland: On the death of the last-mentioned monarch in 1733 Louis supported the election of his queen's relation, Stanislaus, against the elector of Saxony, which occasioned a war between France and the emperor: Stanislaus, however, was forced to abandon the throne; but the French were successful in Italy, on which a peace was concluded in 1738. The death of the emperor Charles opened a new scene: The succession of the house of Austria was disputed by four persons, and Louis declared himself against Maria Theresa, daughter of the late emperor, contrary to his own engagements. He supported the pretensions of the elector of Bavaria, who called himself Charles VII. That prince took Prague, where he was crowned king of Bohemia, but in 1742 that city was retaken; and the allies, with the king of Great Britain at their head, gained the battle of Dettingen. In 1744 Louis took the field in person, and captured Courtray, Menin, and Ypres; he was also present at the battles of Fontenoy and Lawfeld. These advantages were accompanied by the taking of Ghent, Ostend, Brussels, Bergen-op-Zoom, and other places. On the other hand the troops of the duke of Saxony and of the queen of Hungary ravaged Provence, and the English completely ruined the French commerce at sea, which effected the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748. In 1755 a new war broke out between France and England, in which the latter power had Prussia for an ally, while Austria leagued with France. At first the French were very successful, by taking Port Mahon, defeating the duke of Cumberland at Hastinbeck, and forcing the English general and his army to capitulate at Closter-Seven; the electorate of Hanover was conquered; but in 1757 the French and Austrians were defeated at Rossbach; this was followed by other losses both by land and sea, particularly of Canada. Nor was the face of affairs altered for the better by the famous family compact in 1761, by which all the princes of the house of Bourbon allied as in a common cause. A treaty of peace was signed at Paris in 1763: the year following the order of Jesuits was abolished in France. Louis died of the small pox in 1774, aged 65; he composed a little book on the Course of the principal Rivers in Europe, 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LOUIS XVI. the son of Louis the dauphin, and of Maria Josephine, daughter of Frederick Augustus, king of Poland: He was born August 23, 1754, and immediately created duke of Berry. On the death of his father in 1765 he became the heir to the throne, and in 1770 he married Maria Antoinette of the house of Austria. In 1774 he succeeded to the crown of France, on which occasion he is said to have exclaimed, "how unfortunate for me!" It is certain that he ascended the throne at an unfavourable time; the finances were in an exhausted state, commerce was nearly ruined, the marine dismantled, and the national debt enormous. To repair the condition of public affairs, Vergennes was made secretary of state, and Turgot had the direction of the finances; Malesherbes was appointed a member of the council; Sartine had the management of the marine department; and Maurepas was placed at the head of the administration. The first act of Louis was very popular; he dispensed with the customary tax paid by the people at the beginning of every new reign. In 1774 the parliament was recalled, and affairs began to assume a favourable aspect, when unfortunately the French government, always jealous of England, took part with the revolted Americans, and a ruinous war ensued between the two countries; which, though it terminated in the loss of the colonies to the English, brought about a bloody revolution in France. The finances of the latter country were completely exhausted, and the cardinal de Brienne, who succeeded Calonne as minister, framed imposts which laid such intolerable burdens upon the people that the parliament refused to register them. For this the members were exiled to Troyes, but were afterwards recalled by Louis; who, at their request, convened the states-general of the three orders: This assembly met in May 1789; the public mind was now agitated, and artful demagogues took the advantage of diffusing the worst of principles. Mirabeau was the leader of these men; a violent republican, and an atheist. At his voice the people of Paris arose, and the 14th of July, that year, stormed the Bastille. This is called the era of French Liberty! In October the armed mob, with a prodigious number of women, marched to Versailles, which palace they forced, murdered the guards, and searched in vain for the queen, who would have shared the same fate had she not escaped from her bed, which the miscreants pierced with their sabres. The result of this insurrection was, the leading of the king and his family in triumph to Paris, amidst all the insults of a lawless rabble. In February 1790 Louis was forced to accept the new constitution; but, notwithstanding all his concessions, finding himself a mere prisoner at Paris, and exposed daily to new injuries, he resolved to escape: Accordingly in the night of June 21, 1791, he and his family quitted the Thuilleries; but at Varennes his person was recognized, and he was conducted back to Paris, where he became a prisoner in his own palace and suffered the vilest indignities. War was declared against France by the emperor and the king of Prussia, and the duke of Brunswick marched into the country but was forced to retreat. In the mean time the people were wrought up to a pitch of savage ferocity by the factious leaders, and assaulted the Thuilleries; in storming which they murdered the brave and loyal Swiss guards. The king and family sought refuge in the national assembly, who ordered them to be sent to the Temple. The legislative assembly gave way to the national convention, which brought Louis to a mock trial; his defence was conducted by Malesherbes, Tronchin, and Deseze, and his own deportment was, as it had uniformly been during his confinement, firm and modest, dignified and resigned. January 17, 1793, he was adjudged to death for conspiring against the public good: His separation from his family was uncommonly affecting; yet in every scene he manifested the spirit of a christian. January 21 he ascended the fatal scaffold, and would have addressed the people but was prevented by the noise of drums, purposely placed there. He was accompanied by his confessor, the abbé Edgeworth; who, as the monarch laid his head on the fatal block, exclaimed with energetic force, "Ascend, O son of St. Louis, ascend to heaven!" The letters of Louis, which have been published by Helen Maria Williams with notes which would have disgraced his greatest persecutors, manifest an amiable heart, an upright mind, and a refined and enlarged understanding. His son, Louis Charles, the last dauphin of France, was, at the death of his father, only eight years old; the inhuman murderers caused him to be placed with a shoe-maker named Simon; who treated him with savage barbarity. The innocent victim died shortly after, and it was generally believed of poison. The daughter of Louis, after the murder of her parents and brother, was suffered to quit France, and she married her cousin, the duke of Angoulême.—Novo. Diæ. Hist.

Louis I. king of Germany, was the third son of Louis le Debonnaire, and proclaimed king of Bavaria in 817: He joined his brothers in rebellion against his father, and afterwards assisted Charles the Bald in defeating Lothaire in 841. He died in 876, aged 70. His son Louis II. succeeded him, but was defeated by his uncle Charles, and died in 882.—Univ. Hist.

Louis I. of Anjou, king of Hungary and Poland, was born in 1326, and succeeded his father, Charles Robert, in 1342: He expelled the Jews from Hungary, and made war on the Transylvanians, Croats, Tartars, and Venetians. In 1370 he was chosen king of Poland, and died in 1382.—Univ. Hist.

Louis II. king of Hungary, succeeded his father Ladislaus, in 1516. He was drowned in the Caraffe, a river in Hungary, in 1526, aged 26.—Ibid.

Louis (Anthony), secretary of the academy of surgeons at Paris, was born at Mentz in 1723, and died in 1792. He was a very able anatomist and surgeon, and wrote a Course of Practical Surgery, 8vo.; Essay on the Mind, and on its Union with the Body, 12mo.; Observations on Electricity and its Effects on the Animal Economy, 12mo.; Observations on the Effects of the Cancerous Virus; Positiones Anatomico-chirurgicæ de Capite, quarto; De Partium externarum generatione in mulieribus, quarto; Dissertatio de apoplexia curanda; and several memoirs and eulogies.—Novo. Diæ. Hist.

LOUPIÈRE (John Charles de Relongue de la), a member of the academy of arcades at Rome, was born in the diocese of Sens in 1727, and died in 1784. He is known by a collection of Poems in 2 volumes 12mo. written with spirit and grace. We have also by him six parts of a Journal for Ladies, 1761.—Novo. Diæ. Hist.

LOUVET (Peter), a French advocate and master of requests to queen Margaret, was the author of the History and Antiquities of Beauvais, octavo; Nomenclatura et Chronologia rerum Ecclesiasticarum Diocesis Bellovacensis, octavo; Remarks on the Nobility of Beauvais, and of the principal Families of France, octavo; &c. There was another writer of this name, who was a physician, and wrote several historical pieces of no merit.—Ibid.

LOUVET DE COUVRAY (John Baptist), a writer and one of the members of the national convention of France: He had the courage to oppose Robespierre when at the height of his power; yet he escaped the vengeance of the tyrant and died at Paris in 1797. He wrote a romance entitled, The Amours of the Chevalier Faublas; a Political Journal called the Sentinel; a Justification of Paris, 1789, octavo; Emily de Varmont, or the necessary Divorce, 3 volumes, 12mo.; an Account of himself, and of the Dangers which he passed through, 1795, octavo.—Ibid.

LOUVILLE (Eugenie D'Allonville, chevalier de), a French astronomer, was born of a noble family in 1671, and died in 1732. He had been a colonel in the Spanish service, but after the peace of Utrecht he quitted the army, and applied to the study of the mathematics, particularly astronomy. In 1715 he went to London to observe the great total eclipse; there he was admitted a member of the royal society, as he also was of the academy of sciences at Paris. He wrote several curious Dissertations on Philosophy and Astronomy in the memoirs of the academy.—Ibid.

LOVE (Christopher), a presbyterian divine, who was beheaded on Tower-hill in 1651, for conspiring against the government of Cromwell. He wrote some books on practical divinity.—Neale's Puritans.

LOVE (James), an English actor and dramatic writer: His real name was Dance, and his father was surveyor to the city of London; the son was a performer on Drury-lane stage many years, and excelled in the character of Falstaff, but was not equal to Henderson. He wrote Palema, a comedy; and some other pieces. He died in 1774.—Biog. Dram.

LOVELACE (Richard), an English poet, was born in Kent about 1618, and educated first at the Charter-house, and next at Gloucester-hall, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. He was a zealous royalist, and suffered much for his attachment to Charles I. He died in 1658. His poems are elegant; and he wrote also two plays, The Scholar, a comedy, and The Soldier, a tragedy.—Wood.

LOVIBOND (Edward), an English poet, was born in Middlesex, and educated at Kingston school. He wrote some papers in the periodical paper called The World, and some pleasing poems, which were collected and published in a volume in 1785. He died at his seat near Hampton in 1775.—Anderson.

LOWE (Peter), an English surgeon of merit, who was many years in the service of foreign states, as an army-surgeon: In 1612 he settled at Glasgow, and had an authority from the king of Scotland to examine all practitioners in surgery, in the western parts of that kingdom. He wrote several books in the line of his profession.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LOWEN (John-Frederic), a German poet, was born at Klanthal in 1729, and died at Rostock in 1773. We have by him a collection of Poems printed at Hamburg in 1765; Romances, at Leipzig in 1774. The last is a work of reputation.—Novo. Dict. H. J.

LOWER (sir William), a zealous royalist in the reign of Charles I., was born at Tremare in Cornwall. On the decline of the royal cause he retired to Holland; but returned at the restoration. He wrote six Plays, and died in 1662.—Biog. Dram.

LOWER (Richard), an English physician, was the son of the above: He was educated at Westminster school, and at Christ church, Oxford. At the university he studied under Dr. Willis, and assisted him in his anatomical dissections. When that great man removed to London Dr. Lower followed him, and became a fellow of the royal society and of the college of physicians. He wrote a celebrated Treatise on the Heart, in Latin; and several papers in the Philosophical Transactions. He died in 1691.—Wood.

LOWMAN (Moses), an eminent dissenting minister, who was more than 40 years pastor of a congregation at Clapham in Surrey. He was a man of great learning, and well versed in Jewish literature and antiquities: His book on the Revelations is still held in high repute; and a tract, by him, proving mathematically "The Unity and Perfections of God a priori," has been esteemed demonstrative, but is now very scarce. After his death were published his three Treatises on the Shechinah and Logos. He died in 1752, aged 72.—Toulmin's Life of Neale.

LOWTH (William), a learned divine, was born at London in 1661, and educated at Merchant Taylors' school, from whence he was elected to St. John's college, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.D. Dr. Mew, bishop of Winchester, appointed him his chaplain, and gave him a prebend in his cathedral, and the rectory of Buriton with the chapelry of Petersfield, in Hampshire. He died in 1732. He wrote Commentaries on all the Prophets, published first in quarto and afterwards in one volume, folio; 2. Directions for the profitable Reading of the Holy Scriptures, 12mo.; 3. A Vindication of the Divine Authority and Inspiration of the Old and New Testament, in answer to Leclerc, 12mo.; 4. A Sermon on the Characteristics of an Apostolical Church, which brought him into a short controversy with one Norman; a dissenting teacher at Portsmouth.—Biog. Brit.

LOWTH (Robert), a learned prelate, was the son of the above, and born at Winchester in 1710. After receiving his education at Winchester school he went to New college, Oxford, where he prosecuted his studies with ardour and reputation. In 1741 he was elected professor of poetry, on which occasion he delivered his admirable lectures, which were printed at Oxford in 1753, under this title, De Sacra Poesi Hebræorum, quarto. A second edition appeared in octavo; and Michælis re-printed this valuable work in Germany, with additions. While at college he was appointed tutor to the marquis of Hartington, with whom he made the tour of Europe. In 1750 bishop Hoadly gave him the archdeaconry of Winchester; and in 1754 the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.D. The year following he went to Ireland as chaplain to his pupil, then appointed lord lieutenant: While there he was promoted to the bishopric of Limerick, but having a greater inclination to settle in England, he exchanged that dignity for a prebend of Durham. In 1766 he was advanced to the bishopric of St. David's, from whence he was translated the same year to Oxford, and in 1777 to the see of London. On the death of Dr. Cornwallis, archbishop of Canterbury, in 1783, he was offered the metropolitical chair, which he declined on account of his infirmities. The same year his daughter died while sitting with him and bishop Newton at the tea-table. This learned and excellent prelate died in 1787. Besides the above work, bishop Lowth published a translation of Isaiah from the Hebrew; an English Grammar, universally esteemed; the Life of William of Wykeham, octavo; the Life of his Father in the Biographia Britannica; a Poem on the Genealogy of Christ; some Controversial Letters with bishop Warburton; and Sermons on public occasions.—Gent. Mag. Gen. Biog. Dict.

LOVER (Peter le), a learned French writer, was born in Anjou in 1550, and died at Angers in 1634. He wrote a curious History of Spectres, &c.; a treatise entitled, Edom, or the Idumean Colonies in Europe and Asia, 8vo.; and some miscellaneous works in prose and verse.—Mæveri.

LOYOLA (Ignatius), the founder of the order of jesuits, was born of a considerable family, in the province of Guipuscoa in Spain, in 1491. He was brought up to the military profession, and obtained a commission in the Spanish army; but breaking his leg at the siege of Pampeluna he made a vow to the Virgin, that if he recovered he would go on pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and devote himself to a religious course of life, which resolution he fulfilled. After studying Latin a short time at Barcelona, he commenced preacher, and began to gather disciples, for which he was imprisoned; but still persevered in adding to the number of the brethren of the order of Jesus, as they were called, and for which at length he obtained a confirmation by pope Paul III. This order encreased prodigiously during the life-time of Loyola, who, however, was not the author of the pernicious maxims which afterwards disgraced it. He died in 1556, and was canonized by Gregory XV. in 1622. The order of jesuits, after being expelled from Portugal and France, was finally suppressed by pope Clement XIV. in 1773, but has since been revived in Russia, and subsists secretly in several countries.—Moreri. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LUBIENETSKI (Stanislaus), a Socinian minister and writer, was born at Cracow, in Poland, of a noble family, in 1623, and received his education at Thorn. Being persecuted in his own country he went to Denmark, from whence he removed to Hamburg, where he was poisoned with his two daughters; by a servant maid, in 1675. He wrote a History of Comets, 2 vols. folio; and the History of the Reformation in Poland, 1 vol. 8vo.—Moreri.

LUBIENETSKI (Theodore), a Polish painter of portrait and history, was born at Cracow in 1653, and died in 1716. His brother Christopher was also a good painter.—Pilkington.

LUBIN (Eilhard), a protestant divine, was born at Werterstede in Germany, in 1565. He died at Rostock, where he was professor of divinity, in 1621. His principal work is a treatise, entitled, Phosphorus, on the Cause and Nature of Evil, in which he maintained the strange notion that there are two co-eternal principles, God and nothing; the first good, and the other evil. He added that sin was only a tendency towards nothing, and that it is necessary to make known the nature of good.—Moreri.

LUBIN (Augustin), geographer to the king of France, was a monk of the Augustin order. He wrote several works, as a Description of Lapland; Sacred Geography, &c. He died in 1695, aged 72.—Ibid.

LUCA (John Baptist de), a learned cardinal, was a native of Venosa, in the kingdom of Naples. He was at first a lawyer of eminence, but entered into orders and arrived to the dignity of cardinal. His forensic works are uncommonly numerous; but his greatest performance is an Analysis of the Civil Law, 4 vols. 4to.; which may be justly called the philosophy of jurisprudence. The author died in 1683, aged 66.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LUCAN (Marcus Annæus), a Latin poet, was born at Cordova in Spain, about A.D. 89. His father was Annæus Mela brother of Seneca. He was for some time a favourite of Nero, but being discarded by him he joined in a conspiracy with Piso, for which he was sentenced to death, and was suffocated in a bath, A.D. 65. His Pharsalia is an epic poem of merit, though harsh and irregular. The best edition is that of Strawberry hill, 1760, 4to.—Bieg. Cluffica.

LUCAS (Tudensis), bishop of Tudæ, or Tuy, in Galicia, in the 13th century, who wrote; 1. a work against the Albigenses, printed at Ingolstadt in 1612; 2. A History of Spain from the Creation to 1236; 3. The Life of Ludore of Seville.—Moreri.

LUCAS of Leyden, a painter and engraver, was born in 1494. Albert Durer went to Holland to see him. Lucas spent the last six years of his life in bed, under an apprehension that he had been poisoned; but he still employed himself in painting and engraving, saying that he chose to die in the bed of honour. He died in 1533.—De Piles.

LUCAS (Brugentis Francis), dean of St. Omer, was a learned divine, and well skilled in the Oriental languages. He died in 1619, aged 67. He wrote, a Commentary on the Gospels; Remarks on Latin Bibles; and other works of a like kind.—Moreri.

LUCAS (Richard), a pious divine, was born at Presteign in Radnorshire, in 1648, and educated at Jesus college, Oxford, where he took his degree of D.D. In 1683 he became vicar of St. Stephen, Coleman-street, London, and lecturer of St. Olave, Southwark. In 1691 he was installed prebendary of Westminster. He was blind some years before his death, which happened in 1715. He wrote, 1. Practical Christianity; 2. An Enquiry after Happiness, 2 vols. 8vo.; 3. Five volumes of Sermons, 8vo.—Wool, A. O. Great Hist. Dict.

LUCAS (Paul), a French traveller, was born at Rouen in 1664. He went several times to the east, where he collected a quantity of curiosities, with which he enriched the cabinet of Louis XV. who appointed him his antiquary. He died at Madrid in 1737. His travels have been published in 7 vols. 12mo. but are inaccurate.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LUCAS (Charles), an Irish patriot, was at first an apothecary, and afterwards a physician. He became a member of the Irish house of commons, and distinguished himself by his zeal on the side of opposition. He wrote some pieces on medical subjects, and died in 1771, aged 58. His funeral was attended by the corporation of Dublin, who settled a pension on his widow.—Mortimer.

LUCCHESENI (John Vincent), an historian, was a nobleman of Lucca, where he was born in 1660. He was educated first in the college of Tolommei at Sienna, and afterwards at Pisa, after which he obtained the office of papal secretary, and a canonry of St. Peter's at Rome. His translation of Demostheues, published in 1712, was in the opinion of Rollin an unrivalled piece of modern latinity; and his Historia sui Temporis, published in 1738, 3 vols. 4to. is much admired. He died in 1744.

LUCIAN, a Greek writer, was born at Samosata. His father, who was poor, placed him with a sculptor, but disliking that business he applied to the law, which profession he also abandoned, and devoted himself to philosophy and eloquence. Marcus Aurelius had a great esteem for his talents, and appointed him registrar of Egypt. He died A.D. 180, in his 90th year. His works, which are written in the Attic dialect, consist mostly of satirical dialogues, abounding with witticisms, but profane and obscene. The best editions of Lucian, are that of Grævius, 2 vols. 8vo. Amsterdam, 1687, and that of Reitzius, 4 vols. 4to. Amsterdam, 1743.—Biog. Classica.

LUCIFER, bishop of Cagliari in Sardinia, was the author of a schism in refusing to acknowledge the decree of the council of Alexandria, A.D. 362, which enacted that arians recanting their errors should be admitted to communion. Inflexible in his sentiments, he retired from his see and gathered followers, who assumed the name of Luciferians. He died in 370. His works were printed at Venice in 1779.—Dupin. Moreri.

LUCILIUS (Caius), a Roman satirist, who served under Scipio in his expedition against the Numantians. He is considered by some as the author of poetical satire; but only a few of his verses remain, which are in the Corpus Poetarum of Maittaire. He died at Naples B.C. 103.

LUCIUS I. pope and saint, succeeded Cornelius in 253, and was martyred the year following.—Dupin. Moreri.

LUCIUS II. a native of Bologna, succeeded Celestin II. in 1144, and died in 1145, of a blow which he received in a popular commotion.—Ibid.

LUCIUS III. succeeded Alexander III. in 1181. The Roman people having risen against him he retired to Verona, but afterwards returned to Rome, and by the help of the Italian princes subdued his enemies. A new commotion compelled him, however, to retire again, and he died at Verona in 1185. He made a constitution for the extirpation of heresies, which laid the foundation of the inquisition.—Ibid.

LUCRETIA, a celebrated Roman lady, was the daughter of Lucretius, governor of Rome, and the wife of Collatinus, a relation of Tarquin. Her husband being at the siege of Ardea, a conversation took place one evening at supper, between him and the three sons of Tarquin, respecting the prudence of their wives. At length it was agreed upon to ride to Rome to see how the ladies were employed. The daughters-in-law of Tarquin were regaling with some companions of their own age, while Lucretia was engaged with her maidens in working upon wool. The dispute having terminated in her favour, the young men returned to the camp, but Sextus the eldest of the king's sons conceived a violent passion for Lucretia, which he was determined to gratify without any regard to the principles of honour. Accordingly some days after he secretly left the camp and visited Lucretia, who treated him with the civility due to his rank. After supper he was conducted to his chamber, and when he thought that the family were asleep he stole softly with a sword in his hand to Lucretia's room, and made use of every effort to prevail over her virtue. Finding his artifices fruitless he threatened, that after slaying her he would kill a slave and lay the body by hers, then report that having caught them together he had slain them both. This menace succeeded, for the dread of dishonourable reproach prevailed over Lucretia, and the base seducer in the morning returned to the camp. Lucretia the next day sent for her father and her husband, to whom she related the shocking circumstance. They endeavoured to console her, but in vain, for drawing forth a dagger she plunged it into her breast. Lucretia's death occasioned the liberty of the Romans, who, excited by Brutus, expelled the Tarquins from their city. Sextus fled to a town of the Gabii, where he soon after perished, B.C. 509.—Bayle.

LUCRETIVS (Titus Carus), a Roman poet and philosopher, was born of a good family, and educated under Zeno and Phaedrus, both of the epicurean sect. Cicero highly commends him for his learning and eloquence. He is said to have been thrown into a frenzy by his mistress Lucilia, who gave him a philtre, or love potion, of which he died or killed himself, B.C. 54, aged 42. His poem on the Nature of Things is elegant, but is founded on the atheistic doctrine of atoms or materialism. The best editions are that of Havercamp, 2 vols. 4to. L. Bat. and that of Wakefield, 4 vols. 4to. London. Lucretius has been translated into English with curious notes by Creech.—Biog. Classica.

LUCULLUS (Lucius Licinius), a celebrated Roman general and consul, who gained a great victory over Mithridates on the borders of the Granicus, B.C. 74, and conquered Bithynia. He also defeated Tigranes king of Armenia, father-in-law of Mithridates, and took his capital. But the severity of Lucullus to his soldiers gave such offence, that he was recalled, and the command given to Pompey. On his return to Rome he obtained a triumph, and then retired to a private life, possessed of immense riches. He collected a prodigious library, and patronised ingenious men. He died at the age of 68.—Univ. Hist.

LUDLOW (Edmund), an English general and regicide, was born at Maiden Bradley in Wiltshire, about 1620. He studied first at Oxford, and afterwards in the Temple, but the civil wars breaking out, he quitted the law for the army, and served under the earl of Essex. He was a firm republican, and was one of the members of the pretended high court of justice which sentenced Charles I. to the scaffold. On the death of Ireton he had the command of the army in Ireland; but was deprived of it for opposing the usurpation of Cromwell. In the parliament under Richard Cromwell he obtained a seat, and was restored to his station in Ireland, but was again recalled. Just before the restoration of the king he went to Vevay in Switzerland, where he resided till 1688, when he ventured to return to England, but the house of commons applying to king William to cause him to be apprehended, he withdrew again, to Vevay, where he died in 1693. His Memoirs, which are curious and accurate, were printed after his death in folio and octavo.—Biog. Brit.

LUDOLPH (Job), a learned German, was born at Erfurt in Thuringia, in 1624. He applied with great assiduity to the study of the Oriental languages, and travelled into several countries, where he acquired the acquaintance of the most learned men. On his return home he was made counsellor of state, which office he discharged with great reputation eighteen years, and then resigned it. He died at Frankfurt in 1704. His principal works are; 1. A Grammar and Dictionary of the Abyssinian or Ethiopic Language; 2. History of Æthiopia, with an Appendix, 1691, fol.; 3. Dissertatio de Locustis, fol. His nephew, LUDOLPH (Henry William), being secretary to prince George of Denmark, who espoused queen Anne of England, settled at London, where he died in 1710, aged 54. He wrote a Grammar of the Russian language, printed at Oxford in 1696; he also published the New Testament in modern Greek, and other works.—Moreri.

LUOWIO (John Peter), a privy counsellor to the king of Prussia, chancellor of the duchy of Magdeburg, and professor of law, who died in 1748, aged 73. He published, Scriptorum Rerum Germanicarum, 2 vols.; Manuscripta omnis ævi, Diplomata ac Monumenta Inedita, 12 vols. 8vo; The Lives of Justinian and Tribonian; Miscellaneous Works, 2 vols.—New. Dict. Hist.

LUGO (John), a Spanish jesuit and cardinal, was born in 1583 at Madrid, and educated at Salamanca. He was successively divinity professor at Valladolid and Rome, where Urban VIII. made him a cardinal. He died in 1660. Cardinal Lugo wrote several theological works, making seven volumes folio. His brother Francis was also a jesuit, and after being a missionary in India, became rector of two colleges in Spain, where he died in 1652. He wrote a Commentary on Thomas Aquinas, 2 vols. folio.

He introduced the jesuits' bark into Europe.—Moreri.

LUISINO or LUISINI (Francis), a native of Venice, who taught Greek and Latin with reputation at Reggio, and was secretary to the duke of Parma. He died in 1568, aged 45. He wrote, 1. Illustrations of obscure Passages in classic Authors, which are to be found in Gruter's Fax Artium; 2. De Componendis Animi Affectibus; 3. A Latin Commentary on Horace. In his time and country lived a physician of the same name, who turned the Aphorisms of Hippocrates into Latin verse, 8vo. 1552.—Ibid.

LUITFRAND, king of the Lombards, succeeded his father Ansprand in 712. He made several conquests in Italy, and formed a code of laws for his country. He died in 744.—Moreri. Univ. Hist.

LUITFRAND, a Lombard historian of the tenth century, was a native of Pavia. He was secretary to Berenger II. king of Italy, who also employed him as his ambassador; but falling into disgrace he fled to the emperor Otho. and was sent by him, in 968, as his ambassador to Constantinople; where he was thrown into prison by the orders of Nicephorus Phocas, for his zeal in defending the interests of his master. After continuing in confinement some months, he returned to Italy, where he had the bishopric of Cremona. He wrote the History of the Affairs of Europe in his time, and other works, printed at Antwerp in 1640, folio.—Moreri.

LUKE (St.), the evangelist, was a native of Antioch, the capital of Syria, and bred a physician, and according to some a painter. He was the companion of St. Paul, by whom he was converted to the christian faith. He wrote the gospel under his name, and also the Acts of the Apostles. His Greek is remarkable for its purity. St. Jerom says that he lived to the age of 83.—Cave.

LULLI (Raymond), called, according to the custom of his age, the Illuminated Doctor, was a native of Majorca. Falling in love with a young woman who had a cancer, he applied to the study of chemistry and physic, for the purpose of discovering a remedy for her complaint, in which he is said to have succeeded. He afterwards became a preacher, and went on a mission into Mauritania, where he was stoned to death by the natives in 1515, at the age of 80. His works on theology, physic, philosophy, chemistry, and law, have been frequently printed, but are very obscure.—Moreri.

LULLI (John Baptist), a celebrated musician, was born at Florence in 1634. He became page to madame Montpensier, niece of Louis XIV. who caused him to be taught music, in which he acquired such excellence as to be made superintendant of music to that king. He died of a gangrene in his foot in 1687. Lulli composed a number of operas, and the music of several of Moliere's plays.—Burney.

LUMLEY (Joanni, lady), an ingenious English lady, was the eldest daughter and co-heiress of Henry Fitz-Allan, earl of Arundel, and the first wife of John lord Lumley, who died in 1609. She translated from Greek into Latin three Orationes of Ilocrates, the MS. of which is still preserved in the Westminster library. She also translated the Iphigenia of Euripides into English. She died about 1620.—Baiard.

LUNEAU DE BOISSIERMAIN (Peter Joseph Francis), a laborious and voluminous French writer, who died in 1802. His principal works are, 1. a Course of History and Geography, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. the True Principles of Reading and Orthography, 4 vols. 8vo.; 3. Course of the Italian Language; 4. Course of the English Language, 2 vols. 8vo.; 5. a complete edition of the Works of Racine, 7 vols. 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LUSIGNAN (Guy de), a celebrated French nobleman, who went to the holy land in the time of the crusades, and espoused Sibylla, daughter of Amaury king of Jerusalem, whom he succeeded, but he afterwards conceded that title to Richard I. king of England, and received the isle of Cyprus in return. He died in 1194.—Ibid.

LUSSAN (Margaret de), a French romance writer, was the daughter of a coachman, and born in 1682. Attracting the notice of the famous Huet, bishop of Avranches, he gave her an education which she highly improved. She died in 1758. Her works are numerous, the best of which is entitled, Anecdotes of the Court of Philip the August, 6 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

LUTHER (Martin), the great reformer, was born at Iseben in Saxony, of mean parentage, in 1483. In 1501 he was sent to the university of Erfurt, where he studied philosophy and the civil law, but walking one day in the fields with a fellow-student, his companion was struck dead with lightning, which so affected Luther, that he determined to retire from the world. He accordingly went into a monastery of the order of St Augustine, where he led a pious and studious life; and happening to meet with a Latin bible in the monastery, he read it with the utmost care and avidity, and was struck with the manifest difference between the doctrines of the Gospel and the practices of the Roman church. This impression became deeper in 1512, when he went to Rome on some business belonging to his monastery. On his return he was created D.D. and became professor of divinity at the university of Wittenberg, then founded by Frederic elector of Saxony. In 1517 Leo X. published plenary indulgences for all sins committed by those who should purchase them. These pardons were sold in Germany by the dominicans in the most shameful manner, and gave offence to all religious persons, and to Luther in particular, who published a Thesis on Indulgences at Wittenberg, in which he exposed in the strongest manner the iniquity of this odious traffic. The propositions of Luther's Thesis were opposed by Tetzel, the papal agent; but the people at large were convinced that the truth lay on the side of Luther. The dispute growing serious throughout Germany, the emperor earnestly pressed the pope to exert his influence to put a stop to it; and accordingly Luther was cited to appear at Rome, which he prudently declined. Leo also demanded of the elector Frederic to deliver Luther up to the papal legate, which he refused; at the same time requesting that the cause might be heard in Germany. To this the pope consented, and Luther appeared before the cardinal Cajetan, at Augsburg, to whom he gave a full account of his faith, but being required to make an implicit submission to the decrees of the pope, he zealously refused. On this Leo issued a brief, threatening to excommunicate all who should presume to deny his power to grant plenary indulgences. Luther on the other hand appealed in a public declaration from the pope to a general council. The followers of Luther increased rapidly. Erasmus approved of his conduct in a great measure, and corresponded with him, but had not the courage to declare himself fully. The learned and amiable Melancthon attached himself firmly to Luther, and by his prudence and moderation rendered him essential service. In 1519 Luther had a dispute at Leipzig with Eccius, professor at Ingoldstadt. In 1520 the pope issued a formal condemnation of Luther, who immediately wrote a book, in which he called it "the execrable bull of Antichrist;" and calling the students of Wittenberg together, he flung the pope's bull and decretals into the fire. The year following he attended the diet of Worms by virtue of a safe-conduct from the emperor, and when his friends endeavoured to dissuade him from going, by urging the case of Huss, he said, that "If there were as many devils at Worms as tiles upon the houses he would go." He was here required to retract his opinions, and to promise submission to the pope, both which he resolutely refused. On his return through a wood he was seized by a party of horse, who conveyed him to a castle belonging to the elector of Saxony, where he was so secretly kept, that no one knew what was become of him except the persons concerned in the affair. In the mean time the emperor Charles V. published an edict against him, and put under the ban of the empire those who should defend him. Luther, however, was secure in his retreat, which he called his hermitage and his Patmos; and employed his time in conferences with his chosen friends, and in writing books. After an absence of ten months he made his appearance again at Wittenberg, where he wrote a severe and uncourtly reply to Henry VIII. of England, who had published a book against him on the doctrine of the eucharist. About this time he published a translation of the New Testament into German, which was universally read, though proscribed by imperial authority. In 1524 Erasmus was prevailed on to write against Luther, and chose for his subject the freedom of the human will, which he defended against our reformer, who replied in a treatise entitled, De Servio Arbitrio, which was answered by Erasmus in another called, Hyperaspistes. In 1525 Luther married Catherine de Bore, a nun, who had escaped from a convent, on which his enemies accused him of immorality and impiety, but Luther defended his act on scriptural grounds. In 1529 the emperor convened a diet at Spire, to procure aid from the German princes against the Turks, and to devise means for allaying religious disputes. In this assembly it was ordered that the mass should be universally observed throughout the empire. Against this decree the electors of Saxony and Brandenburg and other princes entered their protest, on which account the reformed party acquired the name of protestants. These princes then entered into a league for their mutual defence against the emperor. In 1530 was drawn up by Melancthon the confession of Augsburg, which was received as the standard of the protestant faith in Germany. In 1535 Luther's translation of the bible into German was published. In 1537 an assembly for religious affairs was held at Smalcald, at which Luther and Melancthon were present. At this meeting Luther was seized with so severe a fit of the stone, that his life was despaired of. He however recovered, and went on writing books, and labouring to promote the great work for which he was raised up by Providence. He died atisleben in 1546, and his remains were interred with great solemnity at Wittenberg. By his wife Catherine de Bore, who died in 1552, he had three sons, and several of his descendants were living latterly in Germany. The mind of Luther was ardent and impetuous, but honest, and earnestly bent to the discovery and propagation of religious truth. His manners were becoming his profession, and his whole life evinced a zeal for the glory of God, and the welfare of man. His works were collected into seven vols. folio at Wittenberg after his death — Life by Seckendorf. Mssheim. Dr-pin.

LUTTI (Benedict), a painter, was born at Florence in 1666. The emperor of Germany conferred on him the honour of knighthood. His paintings are rare and valuable. The principal is a miracle of St. Peter, in the palace of the Albani at Rome. He died in that city in 1724. — D'Argenville.

LUXEMBOURG (Francis Henry de Montmorency, duke of), a famous general and marshal of France, was the posthumous son of Francis de Montmorency, count of Boutteville, beheaded under Louis XIII. for fighting a duel. He was born in 1628, and at the age of 15, was at the battle of Rocroi, under the great Condé. He served as lieutenant-general at the taking of Franche-Comté in 1668, and in the Dutch campaign of 1672, about which time he effected a famous retreat with an army of 20,000 men against 70,000. In 1675 he was made marshal of France. In 1690 he gained the battle of Fleurus, which was followed by the victories of Leufen, Steinkirk, and Nerwinde. He died in 1695. — Moreri.

LUYKEN (John), a Dutch engraver, whose works are in considerable estimation. He was born at Amsterdam in 1649, and died in 1712. His plates illustrative of a Bible, and a Theatre of Martyrs are much valued. — Moreri.

LUYTS (John), a philosopher and astronomer, was born in North Holland in 1655. He became professor of philosophy and mathematics at Utrecht, where he died in 1721. He wrote, 1. Astronomica Institutio, 4to.; in which he rejected the Copernican System. 2. Introductio ad Geographiam novam & veterum, 4to. — Ibid.

LYCOPHRON, son of Periander, king of Corinth about 628, B. C. His mother Melissa, having been put to death by Periander, the young prince and his brother were taken by their maternal uncle Proclus, king of Epidaurus, who informed them in time of the manner of their mother's death. This made such an impression on the mind of Lycophron, that on his return to Corinth he would not speak to his father, who banished him to Corcyra. He afterwards relented, and offered to resign the throne to Lycophron, while he himself should live at Corcyra, but in the mean time Lycophron was put to death by the Corcyrans.

LYCOPHRON, a Greek poet and grammarian, was a native of Chalcis in Eubœa, and slain by an arrow, B. C. 304. He wrote an obscure poem called Alexandra; the best editions of which are that of Basil 1546, fol. and that of Potter, Oxon, 1702, fol. — Vossius, de Poet. Græc. Fabricius.

LYCURGUS, the famous Spartan legislator, was the son of Eunomus, king of Sparta, and brother of Polydectes, who succeeded his father. After the death of Polydectes his widow offered the crown to Lycurgus, though she was then with child, but he refused, and faithfully discharged the duty of regent and guardian during the minority of his nephew, Charilaus. When the young prince came of age, Lycurgus left Sparta, and travelled into several countries, to observe their laws and manners. On his return home he found the kingdom in a state of confusion; the king endeavoured to reign despotically, and the people would not obey. Lycurgus undertook to reform the government, and he introduced the most rigorous laws; yet such as were admirably adapted to civilize a disordered people. After this he quitted Sparta, and is supposed to have died in Crete, at an advanced age, about 870, B. C.—Plutarch.

LYCURGUS, an Athenian orator, born 408 years B. C. and died about 328. He studied philosophy under Plato, and rhetoric under Isocrates. He was the friend of Demosthenes, and a zealous advocate for liberty. There is an oration of his in Reiske's collection of Greek Orators. He died B. C. 356. Vossius de Script. Græc.

LYDGATE (John), an Augustine monk of St. Edmund's Bury, in the reign of Henry VI. He was a disciple of Chaucer, and wrote some poems, which possess merit. He died in 1440, aged 60. He is said to have been a good mathematician, and an accomplished scholar.—Pitt. Bayle.

LYDIA. This was a very ancient nation, and governed by a succession of kings till Cræsus, who in 544 B. C. was conquered by Cyrus. After this Lydia underwent the revolutions of the Persian empire, till 283 B. C. when it became part of the kingdom of Pergamus, and was seized by the Romans in consequence of the will of king Attalus, 133 B. C. It remained a part of the eastern Roman empire till about 1326, when it was conquered by the Turks.—Univ. Hist.

LYDIAT (Thomas), an English mathematician, was born at Okerton in Oxfordshire, in 1572, and educated at Winchester school, from whence he was removed to New college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. Archbishop Usher appointed him to a situation in the college at Dublin, where he continued two years. In 1612 he was presented to the rectory of Okerton. He was a great sufferer for his loyalty in the civil wars, and died poor in 1646. He wrote, 1. De variis annorum formis, 1605, octavo, against Clavius and Scaliger, and the latter having replied to it, Lydiat published a Defence in 1607; 2. On the Origin of Fountains, octavo; 3. Several Treatises on Philosophy and Astronomy. Some of his Letters have been also printed.—Wood. A. O.

LYE (Edward), a learned antiquary, was born at Totness in Devonshire, in 1704, and educated at Hart-hall, Oxford, where he took his degree in arts. He died rector of Yardley in Northamptonshire, in 1769. In 1772 appeared his Anglo-Saxon and Gothic Dictionary, 2 volumes, folio, with a grammar of the two languages. He was also the editor of Junius's Etymologicon Anglicanum.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LYNDE (Sir Humphrey), an English gentleman, was born in Dorsetshire, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ-church, Oxford. He sat in parliament many years, and died in 1636. Sir Humphrey wrote some smart books against popery.—Wood.

LYONNET (Peter), an eminent naturalist, was born at Maastricht in 1707. He acquired a knowledge of several languages, ancient and modern; he also understood music, and was a good engraver and sculptor. Being bred to the law, he became one of the secretaries to the states of Holland; and their law translator from the Latin and French. In his latter years he applied to the study of natural history, particularly insects; on which subject he wrote several esteemed books. He died at the Hague in 1789, aged 81. Lyonnet was a member of the royal society of London, and of several foreign academies.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

LYONS (Israel), was born in 1739 at Cambridge; where his father, a Polish Jew, taught the Hebrew language. Israel acquired a good education, and distinguished himself by his knowledge in mathematics and botany. In 1758 he published a good Treatise on Fluxions, and in 1763 a work entitled, Fasciculus plantarum circa Cantabrigium nascentium, 8vo. He was appointed by the board of longitude to go with captain Phipps (since lord Mulgrave), in his voyage of discovery to the north in 1773. He also calculated the Nautical Almanack, for which he had a salary of 100*l.* per annum. He died about 1775. His father published a Hebrew Grammar, and Observations on the Scripture History.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

LYSANDER, a famous Spartan commander in the Peloponnesian war. He prevailed on Ephesus to withdraw from its alliance with Athens, and he entered into a league with Cyrus the younger. He also defeated the Athenian fleet, after which the city itself fell into his hands; and thus terminated the Peloponnesian war, which had lasted twenty-seven years. Lysander overturned the democracy, and restored the government of the Archons. After this he endeavoured to seat himself on the throne of Sparta, but was unsuccessful. He was slain, fighting against the Thebans, B. C. 366.—Univ. Hist.

LYSERUS (Polycarp), a learned divine, was born at Windeken in Germany, in 1552. He became minister at Dresden, and died there in 1601. He wrote voluminous commentaries on the Scriptures.—Melch. Adm. Vit. Germ. Theol.

LYSERUS (John), a protestant divine, of the same family as the preceding. He published several books in behalf of Polygamy, and died at Paris in 1684.—Moreri.

LYSIAS, an Athenian orator. He distinguished himself by his eloquence and probity, and died B. C. 378, aged 81. Only thirty-four of his orations are extant, the best edition of which is that of Taylor, Cantab. octavo, 1740.—Vossius de Script. Græc.

LYSIMACHUS, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, after whose death he made himself master of part of Thrace, where he built a town called by his own name. He afterwards seized Macedonia, and expelled Pyrrius from the throne. He was killed in battle by Seleucus 281 B. C.—Univ. Hist.

LYSIPTUS, a Grecian sculptor, who flourished B. C. 350, was a native of Sicyon. He was first a blacksmith, which business he quitted and studied painting, and afterwards sculpture. His greatest works were, the statue of a man wiping and anointing himself after bathing, which was placed before Agrippa's baths at Rome; and a statue of the sun, represented in a car, drawn by four horses, at Rhodes. His three sons were all eminent in the same line; and his brother Lyffistratus was the inventor of plaster moulds.—Pliny. Nat. History.

LYSIS, a Pythagorean philosopher, and the preceptor of Epaminondas. Some attribute to him the golden verses of Pythagoras, and there also passes under his name a letter to Hipparchus. He lived about 388 B. C.—Vossius de Phil. Grec.

LYTE (Henry), an English botanist, was born in Somersetshire in 1529, and received his education at Oxford, after which he travelled abroad, and on his return settled in his native country, where he greatly improved his paternal estate, and formed one of the first botanical gardens in England. He died in 1607. Mr. Lyte published at Antwerp in 1578, quarto, a Translation of Doodeen's Herbal, with many additions of his own. This edition has figures, but the subsequent ones printed in England, are without prints. His son drew up a genealogy of James I. for which that monarch gave him his picture in gold, set with diamonds.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

LYTTLETON (George lord), a noble writer, was the eldest son of sir Thomas Lyttleton, of Hagley in Worcestershire, and born there in 1709. He was educated at Eton, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford. In 1728 he went on his travels, and on his return he obtained a seat in parliament, where he distinguished himself as a frequent speaker on the side of opposition, on which account he became secretary to Frederick prince of Wales, who adhered to the opposition party. In 1741 he married Miss Lucy Fortescue, sister of lord Fortescue, by whom he had a son and two daughters. This amiable woman died in 1747, and Mr. Lyttleton wrote a beautiful monody to her memory. In 1749 he took for his second wife the daughter of sir Robert Rich. On the change of ministry, by the resignation of sir Robert Walpole, he was made one of the lords of the treasury. In 1747 he published his Observations on the Conversion of St. Paul, a work of inestimable value. He acknowledges that in his younger years he had been led into scepticism; but maturer research made him a christian. In 1751 he succeeded to the title of baronet, by the death of his father; and in 1754 he was made cofferer and privy-counsellor. He was raised to the peerage in 1757. His last work was the History of Henry II. which appeared in 1764, in quarto; and a third edition in 1768. His lordship died the death of a christian in 1773. Besides the performances above-mentioned, he wrote Poems, Persian Letters, and Dialogues of the Dead.—Dodley's Ann. Reg.

LYTTLETON (Thomas lord), son of the preceding, was a young nobleman of promising talents, but of dissipated manners: his death is said to have been preceded by a very extraordinary circumstance: he saw in a dream, or otherwise, a young woman dressed in white, who warned him of his dissolution in three days from that time. On the third day, his lordship had a party to spend the evening with him, and about the time predicted said, he "believed he should jockey the ghost," but a few minutes afterwards he was taken faint, and carried to bed, from whence he rose no more. He died in 1779, aged 35.—London Mag.

LYTTLETON (Charles), an English prelate and antiquary, was third son of sir Thomas, and brother to George, lord Lyttleton. He received his education at Eton, from whence he went to University college, Oxford, and afterwards entered of the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar. He, however, quitted the law, entered into holy orders, and in 1747 was appointed chaplain to the king. The year following he was made dean of Exeter, and in 1762 promoted to the bishopric of Carlisle. He was many years president of the society of antiquaries, and contributed several valuable articles to their Archæologia. His lordship died in 1768.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

M.

MAAS (Dirk), a Dutch painter, was born at Haerlem in 1656. He excelled in painting landscapes and battles. There were two others of this name, Arnold and Nicolas; the first painted conversations in an admirable style, and the other portraits. The last died in 1693, aged 61.—Houbraken.

MABILLON (John), a learned writer, was born in the diocese of Rheims in 1632. He took the habit among the benedictines of

St. Remy in 1653, and assisted father d'Acheri in compiling his Spicilegium. The congregation of St. Maur appointed him to superintend their edition of the works of St. Bernard. He afterwards published the Acts of the Saints of the Order of Benedictines, in 9 volumes, folio. Colbert sent him to Germany in 1683 to search for manuscripts and other works, tending to illustrate the history of France. Mabillon returned with several valuable literary treasures, of which he published an account in a relation of his journey. Afterwards he went to Italy for the same purpose, and was gratified at Rome with many honourable marks of distinction. Though his learning and acquirements were immense, he was extremely modest and diffident. He died at Paris in 1707. His principal works besides the above are, 1. Analecra, four volumes, octavo; 2. De re Diplomatica, two volumes, folio; 3. Museum Italicum, two volumes, quarto.—Moreri.

MABLY (Bonnot de), a French abbé, was born at Grenoble in 1709, and died at Paris in 1785: His chief works are, 1. Observations on the Greeks; 2. Observations upon the Romans; 3. Parallel of the Romans and French, 2 volumes, 4to.; 4. Observations on the History of France, 2 volumes, 12mo.; 5. Discourses on History, 12mo. This last has been translated into English.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

MABUSE (John), a painter of Hungary, so called from the village of which he was a native. Several of his pictures are at Amsterdam, particularly one representing the decapitation of St. John. He died in 1562.—De Piles.

MAC ARDELL (James), an excellent English engraver in mezzotinto, who died in 1765. He engraved several admirable portraits with great expression and accuracy; also some fine prints after Rembrandt, and other masters.—Strutt's Dict. Engravers.

MACARIUS (St.), the elder, a famous anchorite of the fourth century, was a native of Alexandria. He spent 60 years in a monastery, and died in 391, aged 90. His Homilies were published at Leipzig, 2 volumes, octavo, 1698.—Dupin. Moreri.

MACARIUS, the younger, a celebrated monk, was a native of Alexandria, and had near 5000 monks under his direction. The Arians banished him to an island inhabited by heathens, whom he converted to christianity. He died about 394.—Ibid.

MACAULAY (Catherine), a female historian, was the daughter of John Sawbridge, esq. of Ollantigh in Kent, and born in 1733. In 1760 she married Dr. George Macaulay, a physician, who left her a widow. In 1778 she married Mr. Graham, a clergyman, and brother to the noted empiric of that name. In 1785 she went to America, for the purpose of visiting general Washington, with whom she maintained a correspondence during her life. She died in 1791. Her works are, 1. The History of England from James I. to the Accession of the House of Hanover, 8 volumes, octavo, once very popular, but now sunk into contempt; 2. The History of England from the Revolution to the present time, 1 volume, quarto, 1778; 3. Remarks on Hobbes's Rudiments of Government and Society; 4. Observations on a Pamphlet entitled, Thoughts on the Causes of the present Discontents, octavo; 5. A Treatise on the Immutability of Moral Truth, octavo; 6. Letters on Education, octavo; 7. An Address to the People of England, Scotland, and Ireland, on the present important Crisis of Affairs, 1775, octavo; 8. A modest Plea for the Property of Copy-right, quarto; 9. Observations on the Reflections of Mr. Burke on the French Revolution, octavo. Dr. Wilson, prebendary of Westminster, had so great an esteem for her as to place her statue, in the character of Liberty, in his parish church of Wallbrook; but afterwards he caused this instance of folly to be removed.—Hays's Fem. Biog.

MACBETH, a usurper and tyrant of Scotland in the 11th century. He murdered his kinsman Duncan at Inverness, and then seized upon the throne. He also put to death Mac Gill and Banquo, the most powerful men in his dominions; Macduff next becoming the object of his suspicions, he escaped into England, but the inhuman tyrant wreaked his vengeance on his wife and children, whom he caused to be butchered. Macduff, and Malcolm, son of Duncan, having obtained assistance from the English, entered into Scotland, and forced Macbeth to retreat into the highlands, where he soon afterwards was slain in battle by Macduff.—Buchanan.

MACCABEES, seven brothers of Judas, who suffered martyrdom at Antioch, in the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, with their mother and Eleazar, 168 B.C. There were several princes of this name, who displayed great courage in the defence of their country, particularly Judas and Simon Maccabæus.

MACE' (Francis), a French divine, who died at Paris in 1721. He wrote, 1. A Chronological Abridgement, Historical and Moral, of the Old and New Testament, 2 volumes, quarto; 2. A Moral History entitled, Melania; History of the four Ciceros; 4. An Analysis of the Works of Saint Augustine.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

MACE (Thomas), an English musician, who was an excellent performer on the lute. He published a work, entitled, Music's Monument, or a Remembrance of the best Practical Music, &c. folio. He was about 63 when this book was published in 1676, but when he died is not known.—Burney. Huetkins.

MACEDO (Francis), a learned Jesuit, was born at Coimbra in Portugal. He renounced the habit of his order for that of the Cordeliers. Pope Alexander VII. made him master of controversy in the college of the propagandists, professor of ecclesiastical history, and confessor of the inquisition at Rome. He afterwards fell into disgrace, on which he went to Venice, where he gave offence by meddling with the affairs of government, and was thrown into prison. He died in confinement in 1681. He wrote a great number of pieces, of little or no value.

His brother Anthony was a Jesuit, and was entrusted by Christina, queen of Sweden, with her design of renouncing the protestant religion. He wrote Lustania insulata et purpurata, quarto.—Moreri.

MACEDONIA. This kingdom was founded by Ceraunus and Perdiccas B. C. 596. Under Philip and Alexander the Great it became considerable; subdued its neighbours, and destroyed the Persian empire. Macedonia continued in the family of Alexander, or under some of his generals, till 168 B. C.; when by the defeat of Perseus it became a Roman province; and so continued till 1993, when the Turks under Bajazet IV. invaded Macedonia, which was finally conquered by them in 1429.—Univ. Hist.

MACEDONIUS patriarch of Constantinople, in which see he was placed by the Arians in 341, in opposition to Paul; the council of Constantinople deposed him in 360, and he died soon afterwards. He held that the Holy Ghost was a mere creature, and he had many followers.—Dupin. Mosheim.

MACER (Æmilius), an ancient Latin poet, was born at Verona, and flourished under Augustus. He wrote a poem on birds, serpents, and herbs, and another on the ruin of Troy, which are lost. One which passes under his name on the quality of herbs, is spurious.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

MACER (Lucius Claudius), proprætor of Africa in the reign of Nero, on whose death he assumed the imperial dignity, and committed many cruelties. By order of Galba he was arrested and put to death, A.D. 68.

MACHAM (Robert), an Englishman, in the reign of Edward III. who having conceived a passion for Anne Dorset, a lady of rank, and her parents being against their union, Macham eloped with his mistress on board a ship to go to France. At sea the wind blew the vessel out of the channel, and she was driven to the westward, when they discovered the island of Madeira. The rest of the crew went from thence and reached the coast of Morocco, where they were made prisoners. They recounted their adventure to a Spaniard named John de Morales, who on his return to his own country related the Englishmen's narrative; in consequence of which ships were sent in search of the island, where the remains of Macham and his mistress were discovered interred at the foot of a great tree.—Moreri.

MACHAVILT (John de), a French jesuit, and rector of the college of Clermont at Paris, died in 1619, aged 58. He wrote notes on the history of Thuanus, 4to. There were two other jesuits of this name, John Baptist, and James, both writers of ability; the first died in 1640, and the latter, who died in 1680, wrote De missionibus Paraguariæ & aliis in America meridionali; De rebus Japonicis; De Provinciis Goana, Malabarica, & aliis; De Regno Cochinchinensi; De missione Religioforum Soc. Jesu in Perùe, &c.—Moreri.

MACHAVEL (Nicolas), a celebrated politician, was born at Florence in 1469 of a noble family. He at first distinguished himself as a dramatic writer, and produced plays which were performed at Rome; but being suspected of taking part in the conspiracy against Julius de Medicis, afterwards pope Clement VII. he quitted Rome. He then became secretary, and historiographer of the republic of Florence, where he died in 1530. Besides his plays he wrote, 1. The Golden Ass, in imitation of Lucian and Apuleius; 2. Discourse on the First Decade of Livy; 3. A History of Florence, 4to.; 4. Life of Castruccio Castracani; 5. A Treatise on the Military Art; 6. A Treatise on the Emigration of the Northern Nations; 7. a Treatise entitled, the Prince. This last work contains the most pernicious maxims of government, founded on the vilest of principles. A translation of his works appeared in English in 1761, in 2 vols. 4to.—Bayle.

MACKENZIE (Sir George), an ingenious writer, was born at Dundee in 1686, and educated at St. Andrew's and Aberdeen. He became an eminent advocate, and was appointed judge in the criminal court. When James II. abrogated the papal laws, he resigned, but was afterwards restored by that prince. Not approving the measures of the prince of Orange, he again retired, and went to London, where he died in 1691. He wrote several pieces on the laws of Scotland; A Defence of the Antiquity of the Royal Line of Scotland; Essays on Moral Subjects; and some Poetical Pieces.—Biog. Brit.

MACKER (John), an Englishman, who followed James II. to France after the revolution, and was admitted by that unfortunate monarch to his confidence, which he basely betrayed, by giving information of every secret with which he was entrusted to William. He died at Rotterdam in 1726. His Picture of the Court of St. Germain was published in 1691; and his Memoirs of the Court of England in the reigns of William and Anne, at the Hague in 1733. They abound with many curious anecdotes.—New. Dict. Hist.

MACKLIN (Charles), a comedian and dramatic writer, was born in the north of Ireland in 1690. His real name was Mac Laughlin, which he altered to Macklin. He became a performer in the Lincoln's-inn company in 1725, and not long after was tried for killing another player in a quarrel, and found guilty of manslaughter. He had so strong a set of features, that Quin exclaimed, "If God writes a legible hand, that fellow's a villain." His greatest character was Shylock, his performance of which drew from Mr. Pope this remarkable compliment:

That is the Jew

That Shakspeare drew;

Macklin wrote two plays, Love à la Mode, and the Man of the World, which possess considerable merit, and are frequently performed, though very satirical upon courtiers and the Scotch. His last appearance on the stage was at Covent-Garden theatre, Jan. 10, 1790, in the character of Shylock, at his own benefit; but his memory failed, of that he could not go through with the part. He died in 1797.—Gent. Mag. Europ. Mag.

MACLAURIN (Colin), an eminent mathematician, was born at Kilmoddan, in Scotland, in 1698, and educated at the university of Glasgow, where he applied himself assiduously to the study of the mathematics. In 1717 he obtained the mathematical professorship in the Marischal college of Aberdeen, and two years afterwards became a fellow of the Royal Society of London. In 1725 he was chosen to supply the place of Mr. James Gregory, professor of mathematics at Edinburgh. In 1742 he published his System of Fluxions, 2 vols. 4to.; the most considerable of his works. In 1745, having been active in fortifying Edinburgh against the rebels, he was compelled to fly, on which he took refuge with archbishop Herring at York. He died of a dropy the year following. Besides the above work, he wrote several papers in the Philosophical Transactions; Geometria Organica; on the Percussion of Bodies; a Treatise of Algebra; and an Account of sir Isaac Newton's Philosophical Discoveries, 4to. and 8vo.—Biog. Brit. Martin's Biog. Phil.

MACPHERSON (James), a Scotch writer, was born in 1738. His first work, and that which brought him mostly into notice, was a translation of poems attributed by him to Ossian. These poems possess great beauty; but their authenticity has been disputed by Dr. Johnson and other writers, and as zealously maintained by the editor and Dr. Hugh Blair. Mr. Macpherson was greatly irritated at Dr. Johnson's remarks, and wrote him a threatening letter, which the doctor answered in indignant terms. In 1773 our author published a translation of the Iliad into heroic prose, which fell into contempt. He was also the author of an introduction to the History of Great Britain and Ireland; a History of Great Britain from 1660 to the Accession of the House of Hanover, 2 vols. 4to., and of some political pamphlets in defence of lord North's administration, for which he obtained a place and a seat in the house of commons. He died in 1796.—Gent. Mag.

MACQUEL (Philip), a French advocate in the parliament of Paris, was originally of a Scotch family, who quitted that country on account of their attachment to the house of Stuart, and the catholic religion. He wrote an abridgment of Ecclesiastical History, 3 vols. 8vo.; Roman Annals, 8vo.; Abridgment of the History of Spain and Portugal, 2 vols. 8vo. He died in 1770, aged 50.—Newsp. Dict. Hist.

MACQUEL (Peter Joseph), brother of the last-mentioned, was born at Paris in 1718. He studied physic, and became professor in the king's garden at Paris. He was also member of the academy of sciences, and died in 1784. He wrote Elements of Chemistry, theoretical and practical, 3 vols.; a Dictionary of Chemistry, 2 vols.; and other works.—Ibid.

MACRIANUS (Titus Fulvius Julius), an Egyptian, who, from being a private soldier, rose to the rank of general, and when Valerian was taken prisoner by the Persians in 258, Macrianus, though in the decline of life, assumed the imperial title, and distributed large sums among the soldiers. He maintained the war with great success against the Persians, but marching into the west to dethrone Gallianus, he was defeated and put to death with his son, A.D. 262.—Univ. Hist.

MACRINUS (Marcus Opilius Severus), a native of Africa, who rose from the meanest station to be emperor, on the death of Caracalla, in 217. The beginning of his reign was popular, but at last his soldiers mutinied, and he fled in disguise to Cappadocia, where he was taken and beheaded, A.D. 218.—Ibid.

MACRINUS (John), a Latin poet, whose real name was Salmon. He was born at Loudon, and died there in 1557, aged 67. He wrote Hymns, Nænix, and other pieces of Latin poetry. His son Charles surpassed his father in his knowledge of the Greek, and equalled him in his Latin poetry. He was tutor to Catherine of Navarre, sister of Henry IV. and perished in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, 1572.—Moreri.

MACROBIUS (Ambrosius Aurelius Theodosius), a Latin writer of the 4th century, is supposed to have been a Greek, but whether a christian or pagan is unknown. He wrote a Commentary on Cicero's piece, entitled, The Dream of Scipio; and also Saturnalia, or Miscellanies. The best edition of Macrobius is that of London, 1694, 8vo.—Possius de Lat. Script.

MADAN (Martin), an English divine, was born about 1736, of a respectable family, and brought up to the bar, which profession he quitted for the church. The chapel at the Lock Hospital was built chiefly by his means, and he officiated as the chaplain for many years, without any emolument. He brought upon himself some considerable obloquy for defending the conduct of Mr. Haweis, his assistant, who retained the rectory of Aldwincle, as was said, contrary to a previous agreement, but he suffered more for publishing a famous book, called Thelyphthora, or a Treatise on Female Ruin, 3 vols. 8vo. 1781. In this work he maintained the lawfulness of polygamy, in cases of seduction. Mr. Madan afterwards published a translation of Juvenal and Persius, 2 vols. 8vo. He was also the author of a pamphlet, entitled, Thoughts on Executive Justice; Letters to Dr. Priestley; and some sermons. He was of the Calvinistic class, and died in 1790.—Gent. Mag. Monthly Mag.

MADDEN (Samuel), an Irish divine, of French extraction. In 1731 he projected a scheme for promoting learning in the college of Dublin, by premiums. The year following he printed Memoirs of the Twentieth Century, being original Letters of State under George VI. 8vo.; but this work was immediately after suppressed. In 1740 he set apart the annual sum of 100l. to be divided into premiums, for the encouragement of arts and manufactures in Ireland. He had some church preferment, and died in 1765. Dr. Madden was the author of a poem called Boulter's Monument.—Europ. Mag.

MADDERSTEG (Michael), a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1659. He was a disciple of Ludolph Backhuysen, and painted sea pieces with great success. He died in 1703.—Pilkington.

MADDOX (Isaac), a English prelate, was born at London in 1697. He served his apprenticeship to a cook, which profession he quitted, and entered of Queen's college, Oxford, where he took his degrees, and then entered into orders. In 1729, he was appointed clerk of the closet to queen Caroline, and in 1733 dean of Wells; in which year he published a Vindication of the Church of England, against Neale's History of the Puritans. In 1736 he was made bishop of St. Asaph, from whence he was translated to Worcester in 1743. His lordship was a great benefactor to several hospitals, and other public charities, and died in 1759. He published some sermons on public occasions.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MADOG, the son of Owain Gwynedd, a Welsh prince, who is said to have gone to sea in ten ships with three hundred men, in 1170, after which no tidings were ever heard of him. It is strongly believed that Madog reached the American continent, for there is a tribe of white Indians there on the northern branches of the Missouri river, which still speaks the Welsh language.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

MADDOX (Thomas), an English antiquary and royal historiographer, who published, in 1702, a Collection of antient Charters and Instruments of divers kinds, taken from the Originals, from the Conquest to the End of the Reign of Henry VIII. In 1711 appeared his History and Antiquities of the Exchequer, which was reprinted in 1769. His last work was the Firma Burgi, or Historical Essay concerning the Cities, Towns, and Boroughs, of England.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MÆCENAS (Caius Cilnius), the intimate friend of Augustus, and so great a patron of men of letters, that his name has been proverbialized to express persons of the same disposition. He was descended from the kings of Etruria, according to Horace. Augustus being one day on the tribunal, passing sentence of death on several persons, Mæcenas sent up to him a paper with this inscription, "Come down, butcher;"

which struck the emperor so forcibly that he immediately descended from his seat. He was the great friend of Virgil and Horace, who in return immortalized him in their works. He distinguished himself also in the field, particularly at the battles of Modena and Philippi. When Augustus and Agrippa went to Sicily, Mæcenas had the administration of the government, though he was not a man of ambition. He died eight years B.C. Mæcenas wrote some tragedies, which are lost.—Bayle. Vossius.

MÆS (Godfrey), an historict painter, was born at Antwerp in 1660. He became director of the academy in his native city, and his pictures are held in great esteem.—Pilkington.

MÆSTLINUS (Michael), a German astronomer, was born in the duchy of Wirtemberg, and became mathematical professor at Tubingen, where he died in 1590, aged 48; leaving several works in mathematics and astronomy.—Martin's Biog. Phil.

MAFFIUS (Vegio), a Latin poet, was born at Lodi in the Milanese, in 1407. He blended the charms of poetry with the gravity of jurisprudence. After professing law at Pavia he was called to Rome, where he was appointed datary and canon of St. John de Lateran. He died in 1458. His works are: 1. De Educatione Liberorum, 4to.; 2. Of Perseverance in Religion; 3. Lives of several Saints; 4. Poetical Pieces, the most remarkable of which is a Latin poem, called a Continuation of the Æneid of Virgil. It has been translated into English burlesque by Mr. John Ellis.—Tirabuzchi.

MAFFIUS (Bernardin), a learned cardinal, who died at Rome in 1553, aged 40. He wrote a Commentary on Cicero's Epistles, and a Treatise on Medals and Inscriptions.—Moreri.

MAFFIUS (John Peter), a learned jesuit, was born at Bergamo in 1536, and died at Tivoli in 1603. He wrote the Life of Ignatius Loyola; History of the Indies, and other works, in Latin.—Ibid.

MAFFIUS or MAFFEI (Francis Scipio), an Italian nobleman, was born at Verona in 1675. He served as a volunteer at the battle of Donawert in 1704; but he soon quitted the military profession and returned to his own country, where he set himself to reform the stage, for which purpose he produced his excellent tragedy of Merope. He afterwards travelled into several countries, where he was received with marks of high distinction. He died in 1755. The marquis Maffei wrote, besides the above, a valuable work in Italian against the Practice of Duelling, 4to.; History of the Diplomatic Science; Museum Veronense, folio; Verona illustrata, fol.; a Translation of the First Book of the Iliad, and several other works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MAGALOTTI (count Lorenzo), an elegant poet and learned naturalist, was born at Florence in 1637. He was member of the academy of Crusca, and of that of Cimento. He wrote many philosophical and poetical works, of which latter the most valued is his Canzonette Anacrontiche, published under his Arcadian name, Lindoro Elateo, in 8vo. He died in 1712.—Tiraboschi.

MAGANZA (John Baptist), an Italian painter of history, was born at Vicenza in 1577, and died in 1617.—Pilk.

MAGELHAENS (John Hyacinth de), a learned Portuguese ecclesiastic, who was a member of the royal society, and of several foreign academies. He resided in London the greatest part of his life, and died there in 1790. He was well acquainted with every branch of natural philosophy, and published some useful tracts on experimental subjects.—Cent. Mag.

MAGELLAN (Ferdinand), a famous Portuguese navigator. In 1510 he served under Albuquerque, and distinguished himself by his bravery, and by his exact knowledge of the Indian seas. On his return to Portugal he expected to have been raised to the rank of commander, but being disappointed he entered into the service of the emperor Charles V. who sent him out in 1519 with a fleet, with which he discovered the straits still bearing his name at the extremity of South America, after passing through which he took possession of the Philippine islands, in the name of the king of Spain. He was slain at those islands in a skirmish with the natives in 1521. One vessel only of this expedition, with eighteen men, returned to Europe.—Moreri.

MAGINUS (John Anthony), professor of mathematics at Bologna, was born at Padua, and died in 1617. He is said to have predicted his own death by astrological calculation. He wrote Astronomical Tables, Ephemerides, and other works.—Moreri.

MAGGI (Jerome), or Magius, a learned Italian, was a native of Tuscany. He studied jurisprudence, to which he added a great knowledge of mathematics and military architecture. The Venetians appointed him judge of the admiralty in the island of Cyprus, where by his skill the city of Famagousta resisted a long time the attacks of the Turks. When it was taken he was carried in chains to Constantinople, and thrown into prison. While in confinement he wrote, without any assistance from books, a Treatise on Bells, and another on the Wooden Horse, which he dedicated to the French and Imperial ambassadors, his correspondence with whom being discovered, he was strangled by order of the vizir in 1573. Besides the above he wrote De Mundi exitio per combustionem; Commentaries on the Institutes of Justinian, and a Treatise on Fortifications, folio. His brother Bartholomew was a physician, and died at Bologna in 1552. He wrote a book on Gun-shot Wounds, 4to.

MAGGI (Charles Maria), an Italian poet of the 17th century, and one of the restorers of good taste in Italy, after the barbarous ravage of the school of Marini. He was born at Milan in 1630, and was secretary to the senate of that city. He died in 1699. His works and life were published by Muratori at Milan in 4 vols. 12mo. in 1700.

MAGLIABECCHI (Anthony), a learned Italian, was born at Florence in 1633. He was designed by his parents for a goldsmith, but having a strong inclination to learning, he abandoned that profession, and acquired such a prodigious store of knowledge as to be appointed librarian to the grand duke of Tuscany. He corresponded with most of the learned men in Europe, and astonishing things, nearly bordering on the marvellous, are told of his memory. All his delight was in books and manuscripts, and he refused preferments and riches. An old cloak served him for a garment by day and a covering at night. He had one straw chair for his table, and another to sleep on. He died in 1714. A Collection of Letters to him was published at Florence in 1745 in 8vo.—Life by Spence. Moreri.

MAGNENTIUS, a German, who rose from the ranks as a private soldier to the first employments in the empire. The emperor Constant had a great esteem for him, and in a mutiny among the troops delivered him from the fury of the soldiers by covering him with his robe. Magnentius murdered his benefactor in 350, and assumed the title of Emperor; but Constantius II. avenged the death of his brother, and after a bloody battle took Magnentius prisoner, who was put to death at Lyons in 353.—Univ. Hist.

MAGNON (John), a French poet and advocate, was born at Tournus. He exercised his profession some time at Lyons, and then quitted it for dramatic writing. His plays however are very indifferent. He was assassinated in the night in 1662, by some street robbers at Paris. He had projected an Encyclopedie in verse, but never completed it.—Moreri.

MAGNUS (John), archbishop of Upsal in Sweden, was born in 1488. He opposed the reformation in Sweden, and finding his efforts ineffectual, he retired to Rome, where he died in 1544. He wrote a History of Sweden, and Lives of the Archbishops of Upsal, in folio.—Moreri. Bayle.

MAGNUS (Olaus), brother and successor of the preceding. He was at the council of Trent, where he displayed considerable abilities. He died at Rome in 1560. His greatest work is a History of the Northern Nations, fol. 1555.—Ibid.

MAHOMET, or MOHAMMED, a famous impostor, was born in 570, at Mecca, a city of Arabia, of the noble family of Koreish. Losing his father in his infancy, the guardianship of him devolved on his uncle Abu Taleb, who employed him to go with his caravans from Mecca to Damascus. In this employment of camel driver he continued till he was twenty-eight years of age, when he married Cadiga, a rich widow. Finding himself one of the wealthiest men in Mecca, he formed the design of obtaining the sovereignty; and judging there was no way so likely to gain his end as by effecting a change in the religion of his countrymen, he suddenly assumed a very sanctified appearance. Having remarked in his travels the infinite variety of sects which prevailed, he conceived that his project was not impracticable. Accordingly he spent much of his time in a cave near Mecca, seemingly alone, and employed in meditation and prayer, but he called to his aid a Persian jew, well versed in the history and laws of his persuasion, and two christians, one of the Jacobite and the other of the Nestorian sect. By the help of these men he framed his Koran, or the book which he pretended to have received at different times from heaven by the hands of the angel Gabriel. At the age of forty he publicly assumed the prophetic character, calling himself the apostle of God. At first he had only his wife and eight other followers; but in three years his disciples were considerably numerous. On these he imposed the most marvellous tales, but well adapted to deceive ignorant and superstitious minds. He pretended to have passed into the highest heavens in one night, on the back of a beautiful ass called Al Borak, and accompanied by the angel Gabriel. There he had an interview with Adam, Abraham, Moses, David, and Jesus Christ, who all acknowledged his superiority, which was confirmed to him by the Deity himself. This romance staggered even some of his best friends, and a powerful confederacy being formed against the impostor, he was forced to quit Mecca, and to seek a refuge in Medina. This retreat occasioned the foundation of his empire, and of his religion. Mohammedans adopt it as their chronological standard, calling it the Hegira, that is the Flight or Persecution, being the first day of our July, A.D. 622: Mahomet had still a number of disciples, upon whom he inculcated this principle, that they were not to dispute for their religion by word but by the sword. This was a doctrine well adapted to a lawless and wandering people, and by them was soon carried into practice. The Jewish Arabs were the first who experienced its effects: Mahomet committed upon them the most shocking cruelties, put numbers to death, sold others for slaves, and distributed their goods among his soldiers. A faith thus propagated could not but succeed in a country like Arabia. He rewarded his adherents here by plunder, and held out to them a certain happiness of the most sensual kind hereafter. In 627 he made a treaty with the inhabitants of Mecca, which two years afterwards he violated, and stormed the place with fire and sword. Having made himself master of Arabia, he pushed his conquests into Syria, where he took several cities, and laid some of the princes under tribute. While thus engaged in his victorious career, a jewess poisoned a shoulder of mutton which was laid before him, and of which he and his companions ate heartily. One of them died immediately, but the prophet lingered some time. When the woman was examined, she intrepidly declared, that she had perpetrated the deed, to try whether he was really a true prophet. Of the effects of this poison he died, A.D. 632, and of the hegira 8, aged 62. After the death of Cadiga he had several wives and concubines, by whom he had many children, but left only a daughter, named Fatima, who married his successor Ali. It is a vulgar error, that the body of Mahomet was laid in a steel coffin, and suspended in his tomb at Medina between two magnets. The Koran of this impostor contains a good deal of practical morality, drawn from the scriptures, but blended with extravagant tales, and blasphemous doctrines. The best printed edition is that of Maracci, in Arabic and Latin, Padua, 2 vols. fol. 1698. It has been well translated into English by Sale, in 2 vols. 4to. and 2 vols. 8vo. and into French by Du Ryer and Savary.—Prideaux's Life of Mahomet. Great Hist. Dict.

MAHOMET I. emperor of the Turks, was the son of Bajazet I. and succeeded his brother Moses in 1418. He re-established the glory of the Ottoman empire, which had been ravaged by Tamerlane, and fixed the seat of government at Adrianople, where he died in 1481, aged 47.—Rycaut's Hist. of the Turks.

MAHOMET II. was born at Adrianople in 1450, and succeeded his father Amurath II. in 1451, by which means Greek literature was spread in the west. He made a number of conquests, and was the first who assumed the title of grand signior. His death in 1481 occasioned public rejoicings at Rome and other places in Italy. Mahomet is said to have been a free-thinker, and to have ridiculed even the religion in which he was brought up. His letters, collected by a knight of Rhodes, have been printed.—Ibid.

MAHOMET III. succeeded his father, Amurath III. in 1595. He commenced his reign by strangling nineteen of his brothers, and drowning ten of his father's wives. He entered Hungary, took Agria by capitulation, and then massacred the whole garrison. The archduke Maximilian marched against him, and nearly obtained a complete victory, when Mahomet, who had made a false retreat, suddenly returned to the charge, and routed the imperialists. He was afterwards less successful, and was obliged to sue for peace to the christian princes, whose states he had ravaged. He died in 1603.—Ibid. Univ. Hist.

MAHOMET IV. was born in 1642. He became emperor in 1649, after the tragical death of his father, Ibrahim I. The Turks were at this time engaged in a war with the Venetians, and made themselves masters of the isle of Candia in 1669, after losing 100,000 men. Mahomet marched in person against Poland, and having taken several places, made peace with that country on condition of an annual tribute being paid to him. Sobieski, irritated at this treaty, raised an army, and the year following defeated the Turks near Choczim. He also obtained a number of other advantages over them, and a peace was concluded favourable to Poland in 1676. In 1683 the Turks laid siege to Vienna, on which Sobieski marched to its relief, and completely routed the besiegers. The year following a league was entered into against the Turks between the emperor, the king of Poland, and the Venetians. The janissaries attributing their misfortunes to the indolence of the sultan, deposed him in 1687, and gave the sceptre to his brother Solymán III. who sent him to the same prison from whence he had himself been taken. Mahomet died there in 1691.—Univ. Hist.

MAHOMET V. or rather MAHMOUD, the son of Mustapha II. was born in 1696, and placed on the throne in 1730, after the deposition of his uncle Achmet III. Thamas Kouli Khan took from him Georgia and Armenia. He died in 1754.—Ibid.

MANUEL (Nicolas), a learned writer, was born at Langres in 1673. He was at first a jesuit, afterwards a monk of the order of La Trappe, and lastly a physician at Paris, where he was confined in the Bastille for some time. He died in 1747. He wrote an Historical Dissertation on the Antient Money of Spain, and a Letter on a Medal of the City of Carthage.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MAIER (Michael), a German alchemist and rosy crucian of the 17th century, who ruined himself by his ridiculous pursuits. He wrote many books on alchemy and the rosy crucian reveries, not worth enumerating.—Moreri.

MAIGNAN (Emanuel), a French ecclesiastic and philosopher, was born at Toulouse in 1601, and, educated among the jesuits, but he afterwards took the habit among the minims. In 1636 he went to Rome, and occupied a professor's chair with great reputation. In 1650 he returned to his native city, where he died in 1676. He published, 1. De Perspectiva Horaria; 2 a Course of Philosophy, 4 vols. 8vo.—Ibid.

MAIGROT (Charles), a doctor of the Sorbonne, who was made bishop of Conon, and vicar apostolic, and sent to China, where he strenuously opposed the jesuits, who permitted the Chinese converts to pay religious adoration at the tombs of their ancestors. He returned to Rome, where he died with the reputation of a learned and conscientious man, about 1720. He wrote an Examination of the Chinese Worship, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MAILLA (Joseph Anne Marie de Moyriac de), a learned jesuit, was born in Savoy in 1670. Having made himself acquainted with the Chinese language, he was sent missionary to that country in 1703, and was greatly esteemed by the emperor Kang-Hi, who employed him in making a map of China and Chinese Tartary. Mail-la translated the annals of China into French, part of which has been published by the abbé Grosier. He died at Pekin in 1748.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MAILLARD (Oliver), a French cordelier and doctor in divinity, who was celebrated both as a statesman and a preacher. He died at Toulouse in 1502. His sermons were printed at Paris in 1730, in 3 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

MAILLEBOIS (John Baptist Desmareta, marquis of), a French general, was the son of Nicholas Desmareta, comptroller general of the finances. He reduced Corsica to the dominion of France, for which he received a marshal's staff. He afterwards served with reputation in Germany, but in 1746 was defeated at the battle of Placentia by count Brown. He died in 1762, aged 80. The account of his campaigns was published in 1775, in 3 vols. 4to. There was another French general of this name, who commanded with success in Germany, and in 1784 was sent to Holland, to support the party there which was opposed to Prussia. Being obliged to leave France at the beginning of the revolution, he died at Maastricht in 1792.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MAILLET (Benedict de), a French writer, was born in 1659. He was sixteen years consul-general in Egypt, and enjoyed afterwards the same post at Leghorn. He died at Marseilles in 1738. He wrote a work on the Origin of the Earth, published under the name of Tellamed, in 1 vol. 8vo. and a Description of Egypt, 2 vols. 12mo.—Ibid.

MAIMBOURG (Louis), a learned French writer, was born of a noble family at Nancy in Lorraine in 1610. He entered into the society of jesuits in 1626, but was expelled by order of pope Innocent XI. in 1682, for his zeal in defending the liberty of the Gallican church. Louis XIV. however gave him a considerable pension. He then retired to the abbey of St. Victor at Paris, where he died in 1686. He wrote histories of Arianism, of the Croisades, of Calvinism, Lutheranism, and other works.—Moreri.

MAIMONIDES (Moses), or Moses the son of Maimon, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Cordova in Spain in 1131. He is commonly called Moses Egyptus, because he lived in that country as physician to the sultan. He was versed in most languages and sciences, but particularly mathematics and medicine. He was also learned in theology, and the Jews account him as second only to Moses the legislator. He exposed the fabulous traditions of the rabbins, and explained the Scriptures in a rational manner. His most considerable works are, the Jad, or Mischne Terah; the More Nevochim; and the Peruschim, or Commentaries upon the Mischna. He died at the age of 70.—Buxtorf.

MAINFROY, prince of Tarento, was the natural son of the emperor Frederic II. After the death of Conrad IV. king of Sicily, he had the guardianship of his son Conradin, from whom he took the throne, and caused himself to be crowned at Palermo. Having quarrelled with pope Innocent IV. he invaded the ecclesiastical estates, and laid siege to Rome. The pope excommunicated him, and gave his kingdoms of Naples and Sicily to Charles of Anjou. A war ensued, and Mainfroy was slain on the plains of Benevento in 1266.—Univ. Hist.

MAINTENON (Frances D'Aubigné, marchioness de), was the grand-daughter of Theodore Agrippa D'Aubigné, and born in 1635 in the prison of Niort, where her father was at that time confined. When he recovered his liberty he went to Martinico with his family for the purpose of recruiting his fortune; but a propensity to gaming proved his ruin. On his death his widow returned to Europe, leaving Frances behind, but she was soon after sent to France by those who had taken the care of her. She was at first patronized by her paternal aunt, madame de Villette, from whom she was removed by an order of court, lest she should be brought up a protestant. In 1651 she married the celebrated Scarron, who was both old and ugly, from whom, however, she learned the Latin, Spanish, and Italian languages. In 1660 she became a widow in very narrow circumstances, but the queen allowed her a pension, with which she retired to the convent d'Hospitaliers at Paris. The death of her patron deprived her of her pension, and reduced her again to great difficulties. In this situation she obtained by means of her old friend madame de Montespan, the king's mistress, the renewal of her pension. By the express command of his majesty she undertook the education of the children which he had by madame de Montespan, which trust she discharged with great fidelity. In this situation she acquired the esteem of the king, who in 1674 purchased for her the estate of Maintenon, the name of which she assumed. The royal institution of St. Louis, for the young and indigent female nobility, was founded by madame de Maintenon, and liberally endowed by the king. This was afterwards called the society of St. Cyr, and was distinguished by many excellent regulations. In 1685 the king, over whom she had gained a complete ascendancy, made her his wife; but the marriage was never publicly avowed. She has been accused of moving the king to revoke the edict of Nantes, but this is improbable, as it is certain she exerted all her influence in behalf of the suffering protestants. At her request Racine wrote his religious dramas of Esther and Athalie, which were originally performed by the young ladies of St. Cyr. For a considerable time she lived on terms of the greatest intimacy with Fenelon, and on his recommendation patronized madame Guyon; but afterwards she joined the persecutors of that excellent man. After the death of Louis she retired to St. Cyr, where she died in 1718. Many of her letters have been published.—Memoirs of Madame de Maintenon. Moreri.

MAJOR (John), a Scotch divine and historian, was born near North Berwick, in 1469. He studied at Paris, where he took his doctor's degree, and on his return to Scotland became professor of divinity at St. Andrew's, of which university he was afterwards provost. He died about 1550. He wrote the History of Scotland; the Mirror of Examples; a Commentary on the Gospels, &c.—Moreri.

MAJOR (John Daniel), a physician and naturalist, was born at Breslaw in 1634. He became professor of medicine at Kiel, where he founded a botanic garden. He died at Stockholm in 1693. His principal works are, 1. Lithologia curiosa five de animalibus et plantis in lapidem conversis, 4to.; 2. De Canceris et serpentibus petrificatis, 4to.; 3. Historia anatomiz, folio.—Moreri.

MAJORAGIO (Marc Anthony), so called from a village of that name in the Milanese, where he was born in 1514. He became professor of belles lettres at Milan, and died there in 1555. He wrote Commentaries on Aristotle's Rhetoric, Cicero's Orator, and on Virgil, folio; and some other works.—Moreri.

MAJORIANUS (Julius Valerius), emperor of the west, was raised to the throne in 457. He was of a good family, and his virtues rendered him deserving of his elevation. He made war against the Vandals with success, and concluded an advantageous peace with them. He was murdered by Ricimer, one of his generals in 461.—Crozier. Gibbon.

MAIRAN (John James d'Ortous de), an ingenious Frenchman, was born at Beziers in 1678. He was a member of the academy of sciences, and succeeded Fontenelle as secretary in 1741. He died at Paris in 1774. His principal works are, a Dissertation on the Cause of the Phosphoric Light; Historical and Philosophical Treatise on the Aurora Borealis; Letters concerning China; Dissertation upon Ice; and a number of Memoirs and Éloges.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MAIRÉ (John le), a French poet, was born in Hainault in 1478, and died in 1524. He wrote among other pieces an allegorical poem called the Three Tales of Cupids and of Atropos, &c. Paris 1525, 8vo.—Ibid.

MAIRÉ (James le), a Dutch navigator, who sailed from the Texel in 1615 with two vessels. In the following year he discovered the straits which bear his name in South America. After visiting New Guinea, he failed to Batavia, where he was made prisoner, and the only vessel he had left was confiscated, under the pretext that he had infringed on the rights of the Dutch East India Company. He died on his passage to Europe in 1617.—Moreri.

MAIRET (John), a French poet, was born at Besançon in 1604. He was page to the duke of Montmorency, who gave him a pension, and he also received some considerable favours from cardinal Richelieu. He died in 1686. Besides his poems he wrote twelve tragedies of little merit.—Moreri.

MAISTRE (Antony le), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1608. He was brought up to the bar, which profession he quitted, and entered into the society of Port Royal, where he died in 1658. He published a translation of St. Chrysostom on the Priesthood; the Life of St. Bernard; and some other works.—Moreri.

MAISTRE (Louis Isaac le), better known by the name of Sacy, was brother of the preceding, and born at Paris in 1613. He entered into orders, but being a zealous jansenist he was sent to the Bastille, where he continued two years, and wrote some of his works, particularly one, entitled, the Figures of the Bible. He also began there his translation of the Scriptures. In 1668 he recovered his liberty. He died in 1684. Besides his translation of the Bible in 3 vols. 4to. and 4 vols. folio, he wrote Letters of Piety; an Attack on the Jesuits, and other works.—Ibid.

MAITLAND (John), lord of Thyeftane, and chancellor of Scotland, was born in 1545. In 1589 he attended king James VI. to Norway, where his consort the princess of Denmark was detained by contrary winds. He died in 1595. He wrote Epigrammata Latina, published in the Deliciae Poetarum Scotorum, Amsterdam, 1637.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

MAITLAND (William), a Scotch writer, was born at Brechin about 1693. He was originally a dealer in hair, which profession he quitted for that of literature. He compiled a History of London, in 2 vols. folio; another of Edinburgh, folio; also the History and Antiquities of Scotland, 2 vols. folio. He died at Montrose in 1757.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

MAITTAIRE (Michael), a learned grammarian and bibliographer, was born in London in 1668, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was removed to Christ church, Oxford, where he took his degree. In 1695 he was appointed second master of Westminster school, which place he only held four years. He died in 1747. Mr. Maittaire published accurate editions of the Latin Classics; an edition of the New Testament in Greek; the Corpus Poetarum Latinorum, 2 vols. fol.; Annales Typographici, 5 vols. 4to.; Historia Typographorum, 2 vols. 8vo.; Historia Stephe- norum, 8vo.; Græcæ Linguae Dialecti, 8vo.; Miscellanea Græcorum aliquot Scriptorum Carmina, 4to. He was also the author of two pamphlets against Whiston on the Trinity.—Nichols's Anecd. of Bouryer.

MAIUS, or MAY, (John Henry), a lutheran divine, was born in 1653 at Pfortzheim. He became professor of the Oriental languages at Giessen, and died there in 1719. His works are, 1. Historia Animalium Scripturæ Sacræ, 8vo.; 2. Vitz Johannis Reuchlini, 8vo.; 3. Synopsis Theologiæ Symbolicæ; 4. Historia Reformationis Lutheri, &c.—Moreri.

MALACHI, the last of the twelve prophets. He lived in the time of Nehemiah, in the reign of Artaxerxes Longomanus, and is said to have died young. He prophesied the coming of John the Baptist, under the name of Elias.—Gray's Key O. T.

MALACHY (St.), was born at Armagh in Ireland, in 1094. He was successively abbot of Benetor, bishop of Connor, and archbishop of Armagh. The last dignity he resigned, after greatly reforming his diocese, in 1135. He died at Clairvaux, in the arms of his friend St. Bernard, in 1148. Several predictions have been attributed to him, but those which pass under his name are mere inventions.—Moreri.

MALAGRIDA (Gabriel), an Italian jesuit, who was sent by his superiors as a missionary to Portugal, where he gained great popularity by his eloquence. When the king banished the jesuits from his dominions, he suffered Malagrida, Alexander, and Mathos, to remain, who are supposed to have joined in the duke of Alveiro's conspiracy. Malagrida published an extravagant book, entitled, The Life of St. Anne; he also pretended to be a prophet, and preached some visionary notions, for which he was taken up by the inquisition, condemned and burnt as a heretic, in 1761, aged 75.—Nouv. Diß. Hist.

MALCOLM IV. king of Scotland, was the grandson of David, and ascended the throne in 1153. He founded several churches and monasteries, and died in 1165.—Buchanan.

MALDONAT (John), a Spanish jesuit, was born at Estramadura, in 1534. He studied at Salamanca, and entered among the jesuits at Rome in 1562. The year following he went to France, where he became professor of divinity and philosophy. But being accused of holding heretical notions, he retired to Bourges, from whence he was called to Rome to superintend the publishing of the Septuagint version of the Bible. He died there in 1583. He wrote Commentaries on the Prophets, and on the Gospels, which are highly esteemed. He was also the author of a Treatise on Grace, another on Original Sin; a Treatise on Angels and Demons, and other works.—Moreri.

MALEBRANCHE (Nicolas), a philosopher, was born at Paris in 1638. He was admitted into the congregation of the Oratory in 1660, and died in 1715. He wrote several books, the principal of which is his Search after Truth, first printed at Paris in 1674. His object in this work is to shew, that the only way of discovering truth is to observe every thing in God; or, in other words, to abstract the mind from all objects but in reference to the Fountain of Existence. His subsequent works are all on the same metaphysical principle.—Moreri.

MALEGUZZI-VALERI (Veronica), an ingenious lady, was born at Reggio in Italy. She supported two theses in public on the liberal arts, which have been published; also a drama, entitled, Innocence Recognized. She died in 1690, in the convent of Modena.—Tiraboschi.

MALELAS (John), a teacher of rhetoric at Antioch, in the year 900. He wrote a Chronicle from the Creation to the Reign of Justinian, which was printed at Oxford in 1691.—Foss. de Script. Græc.

MALERMI or MALERBI (Nicolas), a Venetian monk of the 15th century, who translated the Bible into the Italian language, which was printed at Venice, in 2 vols. fol. 1471, under the title of Biblia Volgare Istoriato. He also wrote La Legenda di Tutti Santi, Venet. 1474 fol.—Tiraboschi.

MALESHERBES (Christian William Lamignon), an eminent French counsellor, was born at Paris in 1721. His talents procured him the place of president of the court of Aids; in 1750, and he preserved his place with great reputation above twenty years, and then retired to his paternal estate. In 1775 he was recalled from his retreat, and made minister of state for the interior. Under his administration prisons were visited, and numerous abuses removed; but the year following he and his friend Turgot resigned their places. Malesherbes then travelled into different countries, in a plain attire, and under an assumed name. At the beginning of the revolution he conceived a hope that it would have been productive of good; but the illusion soon vanished. He voluntarily presented himself as the counsellor for the virtuous and unfortunate Louis XVI. and defended him with all the ardour of conscious rectitude. This excellent man was condemned to death, with his daughter and grand-daughter, by the revolutionary tribunal, April 22, 1793. He wrote a treatise on Rural Economy; Thoughts and Maxims; Two Memoirs on the Civil State of the Protestants.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MALEZIEU (Nicolas de), a learned Frenchman, was born at Paris in 1650. He was preceptor to the dukes of Maine and Burgundy, a member of the French academy, and also of that of sciences. He died in 1727. He wrote, 1. Elements of Geometry, 8vo.; 2. Miscellanies in verse, 1712.—Moreri.

MALHERBE (Francis de), a French poet, was born at Caen about 1555, and died at Paris in 1628. Balzac and Boileau give him a high character. His works consist of Paraphrases on the Psalms, Sonnets, Odes, and Epigrams; the best edition of which is that of Paris, in 1757, 8vo. He also translated some of Seneca's letters, and part of Livy.—Ibid.

MALINGRE (Claude), a French historian, who published several works of little merit. He was a native of Sens, and died at the beginning of the 17th century. His best work is a History of the Honorary Dignities of France, 8vo.—Ibid.

MALIPIERA (Olympia), an Italian lady, was born of a noble Venetian family, and died about 1559. Her poems are in a collection, published at Naples by Bulifon.—Tiraboschi.

MALLEMANS (Claude), a French priest and mathematician, was born at Beaune. He was a member of the congregation of the oratory, and was many years professor of philosophy at Paris. He died in 1723, aged 77. His principal works are; A New Philosophical System of the World, 12mo.; the Famous Problem of the Quadrature of the Circle, 12mo. His brother Jean was a captain of the dragoons, and afterwards entered into orders. He died in 1740, aged 91. He translated Virgil into French, and wrote Disertations on Difficult Passages of Scripture; a History of Religion from the Beginning of the World to the Reign of Julian, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MALLET, or MALLOCH (David), a Scotch writer was born about 1700, and educated at Edinburgh. He was tutor to the sons of the duke of Montrose, with whom he travelled, and on his return settled in London, where he became an author by profession. In 1740 he published a Life of Lord Bacon, which is a very insignificant work, and totally unworthy of the subject. The duchess of Marlborough employed him to write the life of her husband, on which it was observed, that as he had forgot Bacon was a philosopher, so he would probably omit to notice Marlborough as a general. This life, however, never appeared. Frederick prince of Wales appointed him his under-secretary; and he assisted Mr. Thomson in composing the masque of Alfred, which was performed before his royal highness at Cliefden-house. Lord Bolingbroke left him his philosophical works, which he published after the author's death. Mallet died in 1765. His poetical performances are very indifferent.—Gen. B. D.

MALLET (Edmund), a French divine, was born at Melun, in 1713. He became professor of theology in the college of Navarre at Paris, where he died in 1755. He wrote some works on the principles of Poetry and Eloquence; Essay on the Best Orator; History of the Civil Wars of France, translate d from Davila; the articles in Divinity, and the Belles Lettres in the French Encyclopédie, were also by him.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MALLET DU PAN (James), was born at Geneva in 1750. Voltaire became his patron, and obtained for him the professorship of belles lettres at Cassel. After discharging the duties of this situation with applause, he engaged in politics, and continued the Annals of Linguet. He also conducted the political part of the Mercur de France. When the revolution broke out he espoused the royal cause, and defended it with courage and at the risk of his life. Being driven from his country he came to London, where he published his Mercur Britanique, a Journal of great merit and moderation. He died at Richmond in 1800, and being in low circumstances, a liberal subscription was formed for his widow and children. Besides the above, he wrote a Discourse on the Influence of Philosophy upon Letters, 8vo; Discourse on Eloquence and Political Systems, 12mo.; Considerations upon the French Revolution, 8vo.; Correspondence for a History of French Republicanism.—Monthly Mag. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MALLINKROTT (Bernard), dean of the cathedral of Munster, to which see he aspired, but was disappointed; and conspiring against the bishop, he was degraded from his dignity, and imprisoned in the castle of Otteinzheim, where he died in 1664. He wrote, 1. De Natura et usu Literarum, 4to.; 2. De Ortu et Progressu artis Typographicae, 4to.; and some other works.—Moreri.

MALOUIN (Paul James), professor of medicine in the royal college of Paris, and physician to the queen, was born at Caen in 1701, and died at Paris of an apoplexy in 1777. His principal works are; a Treatise of Chemistry, 12mo.; another on Medical Chemistry. He was also the author of the articles on that subject in the Encyclopédie. There was another physician of the same name and family, who died in 1718. He wrote a Treatise on Solid and Fluid Bodies.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MALPIGHI (Marcello), an Italian anatomist, was born in 1628, and educated at Bologna, where he applied to the study of physics, and took his doctor's degree. In 1656 he obtained a professorship in that university; but removed from thence to Pisa, on an invitation from the grand duke of Tuscany. In 1659 he returned to Bologna; but in 1691 pope Innocent XII. sent for him to Rome, where he died in 1694. His works were printed in folio at London in 1697, and at Amsterdam in 1698, 4to. He made some anatomical discoveries.—Halleri Bibl. Anat.

MALVASIA (Charles Caesar), an Italian ecclesiastic, was a native of Bologna, of which cathedral he was a canon. He wrote in Italian a History of the Painters of Bologna, 2 vols. 1678, also a work, entitled, Marmora Fulinea, 4to. 1660.—Tiraboschi.

MALVEZZI (Virgilio, marquis of), was born at Bologna in 1599. In 1619 he took his degree of doctor of laws, after which he turned soldier, and was admitted into the council of war by Philip IV. of Spain. He died at Cologne in 1654. His discourses upon Tacitus have been translated into English. He was the author of several other works.—Tiraboschi.

MAMBRUN (Peter), a French jesuit, was born in the diocese of Clermont in 1581, and died in 1661. He is celebrated for his Latin Eclogues and Georgics, in which he has imitated Virgil.—Moreri.

MAMMEA (Julia), was the daughter of Julius Avitus, and mother of the emperor Alexander Severus, to whom she gave an excellent education. In his minority she governed with great judgment, banished flatterers, and filled the public stations with men of merit. She embraced the christian religion, and patronized Origen; but she is charged with being cruel and avaricious. In an insurrection of the soldiers she was butchered with her son in 235, at Mayence.—Crevier. Gibbon.

MAN (Cornelius de), a Dutch painter, was born at Delft in 1621. He studied nine years in France and Italy, where he copied after the best masters, and then returned to his own country, where he died in 1706. He painted history, conversations, and portraits.—Pilkington.

MANASSER, king of Judah, succeeded his father, Hezekiah, at the age of 12 years. The commencement of his reign was disgraced by all manner of crimes and idolatrous abominations. In 677 B. C. Asarhaddon king of Assyria invaded his dominions, and carried Manasseh captive to Babykon, where his misfortunes produced repentance. The king of Babylon gave him his liberty and restored him his kingdom. On his return to Jerusalem he established the worship of the true God, and died in 643 B. C. There is a fine prayer by him in the Apocrypha.—Gray's Key O. T.

MANICELLI (Antonio), an Italian writer, was born at Velletri in 1452, and died about 1506. He wrote some Italian and Latin poems, and notes on classic authors.—Tiraboschi.

MANCO-CAPAC, founder and first inca of the empire of Peru. He civilized and reunited the different tribes of Peruvians, to whom he pretended that the sun was his father. After his death they worshipped him as a deity.—Univ. Hist.

MANDEVILLE (sir John), an English traveller, was born at St. Alban's about the beginning of the 14th century. He went on his travels, and spent thirty four years in visiting various countries. On his return he published a Relation of his Voyages, which abound in such curious matter, but blended with the most extravagant fictions. The first edition is dated Liege in 1455, with this title, Itinerariis à terra Angliæ ad Partes Jerosolymitanis, 4to. The author died at Liege in 1372.

MANDEVILLE (Bernard), a Dutch physician, was born at Dort about 1670. He settled in London at the beginning of the 18th century, and published in 1709 a licentious book entitled, The Virgin Unmasked. In 1711 appeared his treatise on Hypochondriac and Hysterical Passions, 8vo. But the work by which he is most known, is his Fable of the Bees; or, Private Vices Public Benefits, 2 vols. 8vo. This book was attacked by several writers on account of its pernicious principles, equally offensive to religion and government. He died in 1733.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MANES, an heresiarch of the third century. He was a native of Persia, and taught that there were two principles of all things; co-eternal and co-equal, that all good proceeded from the former, and all evil from the latter; that the good being was the author of the New Testament, and the bad of the Old; the one the creator of the body, and the other of the soul. His followers became numerous, and were denominated Manichees. Manes was flayed alive by order of Sapor king of Persia, for failing to cure his son.—Bayle. Mæsim.

MANETHO, an Egyptian historian, who flourished in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, about 304 B. C. He was high priest of Heliopolis, and composed in Greek a History of Egypt, which is lost, but some extracts of it remain, as also does a poem of his on the influence of the stars, published by Gronovius at Leyden in 1698.—Vossius de Hist. Græc.

MANETTI (Gianozzo), a celebrated Italian, who was the scholar of Chrysoloras, and one of those who in the 15th century contributed to the revival of letters. He was a native of Florence, in which university he explained the philosophy of Aristotle. He was also employed in affairs of government, in which he shewed considerable skill and prudence: but being pursued by envy he retired to Rome, where he was greatly caressed by pope Nicholas V. who made him his secretary. He afterwards became the confidential minister of Alphonso, king of Naples, where he died in 1459, aged 63. He translated the New Testament from Greek into Latin; wrote some pieces on the works of Aristotle; a Treatise against the Jews; the Lives of Dante, Petrarch, Boccacio, and pope Nicholas V.; and, a Latin Treatise on the Dignity of Man.—Tiraboschi.

MANETTI (Rutilio), an historical painter, was born at Siena in 1571. His works were highly esteemed at Florence and Pisa. He died in 1639.—Pilkington.

MANETTI (Xavier), professor of medicine and botany at Florence, where he died in 1785. He was keeper of the Imperial Garden, and wrote, Catalogus horti academici Florentiniæ, and Viridarium Florentinum, 8vo.; Ognithologia, tomus quintus et ultimus, 1775, folio.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MANFREDI (Eustachio), an eminent mathematician, was born at Bologna in 1674, and became professor of mathematics in the university of that city. He was member of several foreign academies, and died in 1739. He published Ephemerides, in 4 vols. 4to.; De Transitu Mercurii per Solem, anno. 1723; De Annis inerrantium Stellarum aberrationibus, 4to. He was also an ingenious poet, and his sonnets and canzonets were published in 1713.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MANFREDI (Bartolomeo), an eminent painter, was born at Mantua in 1574. He was the disciple of Caravaggio, whose manner he imitated. His subjects were soldiers, or peasants, gaming scenes, and fortune-tellers.—D'Argenville.

MANGEAT (Thomas), a learned benedictine, who was antiquary, librarian, and counsellor, to the duke of Lorraine. He died in 1763. His great work is, an Introduction to the Science of Medals, folio.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MANUENOT (Louis), a French ecclesiastic and poet, was born at Paris in 1694, and died in 1768. He wrote Eclogues, Fables, Tales, and Madrigals, published at Amsterdam in 1776.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MANGET (John James), an eminent physician, was born at Geneva in 1652. He became first physician to the elector of Brandenburg, and died at Geneva in 1749. He published, Bibliotheca Anatomica; Bibliotheca Pharmaceutico Medica; Bibliotheca Chemica; Bibliotheca Chirurgica; Bibliotheca Scriptorum Medicorum, all in 13 vols. folio.—Haller's Bibl. Anat.

MANGRY (Thomas), a learned English divine, was bred at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he took his degree of D. D. He afterwards became prebendary of Durham, and published an edition of Philo Judæus, 2 vols. folio; an Answer to Toland's Nazarenus, 8vo.; a volume of Sermons on the Lord's Prayer. He died in 1755.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

MANILIUS (Marcus), a Latin poet in the time of Tiberius. His Astronomicon was discovered by Poggius in the 16th century. The best editions are that of Bentley, 4to. London, 1739, and that of Stœbur, Strasbourg, 1787, 8vo.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

MANLEY (Mary), an English writer, was born in the island of Guernsey. She was deceived into a false marriage by a relation of the same name, but who, it afterwards appeared, was already married. She wrote a tragedy called the Royal Mischief, which was performed with success at the theatre in Lincoln's-inn-fields. After this she wrote Memoirs of the New Atalanus, a satirical and indecent romance, in which she exposed the first characters in the kingdom. She was taken up on account of this publication, and brought before the privy-council; but the prosecution was dropped. She also wrote Lucius, the first Christian King of Britain, a tragedy; a volume of Letters; and some other works. She became the mistress of Mr. Barber, alderman of London, and died in 1724.—Biog. Dram.

MANLIUS TORQUATUS, a famous Roman, who displayed great courage in his youth as military tribune. In a war against the Gauls he accepted a challenge given by one of the enemy, and having slain him took his collar from his neck, on which account he assumed the name of Torquatus. He was the first Roman who was advanced to the dictatorship without being previously a consul. But he tarnished his glory by putting his son to death for fighting and defeating the enemy without having received orders to attack them. This gave great disgust to the Romans, and on account of his severity in his government, all edicts of extreme rigour were called Manliana Edicta. He flourished B. C. 340.—Univ. Hist.

MANLIUS CAPITOLINUS (Marcus), a celebrated Roman consul and commander, who when Rome was taken by the Gauls fled into the capitol with a body of his countrymen, and preserved it from a sudden attack made upon it in the night. The dogs which were kept in the capitol in case of alarm, made no noise, but the geese by their cry awoke Manlius, who had just time to repel the enemy. Geese from that period were always held sacred among the Romans, and Manlius was honoured with the surname of Capitolinus. He afterwards endeavoured to obtain the sovereignty of Rome, for which he was condemned, and thrown from the Tarpeian rock 384, B.C.—Univ. Hist.

MANNORY (Louis), an advocate in the parliament of Paris, where he died in 1778, aged 82. His Memoirs and Pleadings in 18 vols. 12mo. are full of curious and singular cases. Having been engaged in a cause against Voltaire, he became the object of the poet's satire.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MANNOZZI (John), an Italian painter, was born near Florence. He ornamented the palace of Lorenzo de Medici with several admirable pictures in fresco, and died in 1636, aged 46.—D'Argenville.

MANSARD (Francis), a French architect, was born in 1598, and died in 1666. He built a number of edifices at Paris and other places, was appointed first architect to the king, and superintendent of the royal buildings, in which offices he was succeeded by his nephew of the same name, who was honoured with the order of St. Michael. He died in 1708, aged 69.—D'Argenville Vies des Architectes.

MANSFELD (Peter Ernest count de), a German statesman and commander. He was made prisoner in 1552 at Ivoy, which place he governed. He afterwards became governor of Luxemburg, where he maintained tranquillity, while the rest of the Low Countries was in a state of civil war. He had afterwards the entire command of Brabant. He died in 1604, aged 87.—Moreri.

MANSFELD (Ernest de), natural son of the above, by a lady of Mechlin. He served with such reputation in the army, that the emperor Rodolph II. declared him legitimate. Being disappointed of his father's places and possessions, he joined the protestant party, and ravaged several of the provinces belonging to the house of Austria. He died in 1626.—Ibid.

MANSFELD. See Murray.

MANSTEIN (Christopher Herman de), a Russian officer and writer, was born at Petersburg in 1711. He entered into the Prussian service, and was shot in a battle in 1758, being then major-general of infantry. His Historical Memoirs of Russia, in 2 vols. 4to. are curious and faithful. They were published in English by the care of Mr. Hume, 2 vols. 4to. The French edition appeared at Leipzig in 1781.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MANTEGNA (Andrew), an Italian painter, was born in 1451, near Mantua. He was at first a shepherd; but his genius being discovered, he was placed with a painter, and at the age of fourteen he painted an altar-piece for the church of St. Sophia at Padua. He also painted the triumph of Julius Caesar, which was afterwards brought to Hampton-court. He died in 1517.—D'Argenville Vies des Peintres.

MANTICA (Francis), a learned writer, was born at Udina in 1534. He professed law with great reputation at Padua, from whence pope Sixtus V. called him to Rome, and Clement VIII. made him a cardinal. He died in 1614. His works are, De conjecturis ultimarum voluntatum, fol.; Lucubrations Vaticane; Decisiones Rotæ Romanæ.—Tiracabbi.

MANTINUS (James), a learned Spanish physician, who practised with great repute at Venice in the 16th century. He translated some of the works of Averroes and Avicenna into Latin; and wrote a book on the Republic of Plato.—Moreri.

MANTON (Thomas), an English non-conformist divine, was born at Lawrence Lydzard, in Somersetshire, and received his academical education at Wadham college, Oxford. He was ordained deacon by bishop Hall, and entered upon the ministry at Colyton in Devonshire. Afterwards he settled at Stoke Newington, and frequently preached before the parliament. He was appointed chaplain to Charles II. at the restoration; but was deprived in 1662 for non-conformity. In 1671 he was imprisoned for preaching in a conventicle, but was soon afterwards released. Dr. Manton died in 1677, aged 57, and was buried in the church of Stoke Newington. His works make 5 vols. folio, consisting chiefly of Sermons in a high Calvinistic strain.—Calamy.

MANUVAN (Baptist), a celebrated Italian poet, was born at Mantua in 1448, and was the natural son of Peter Spagnolo, a person of great consequence. He entered among the Carmelites, of which order he became general, but afterwards quitted that dignity. He died in 1516. His works were published at Paris in 1513, in 3 vols. folio; but the best edition is that of Antwerp in 1576, in 4 vols. 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

MANUEL (Comnenus), emperor of the East, was the son of John Comnenus, and born in 1120. He was crowned in 1143 to the prejudice of Isaac his eldest brother, whom his father had disinherited. Roger king of Sicily invaded the empire in his reign, but Manuel expelled him, and then turned his arms against Dalmatia and Hungary, with various success. He also marched into Egypt, which country he would have conquered, had he not been betrayed by Amaury king of Jerusalem, his ally. He died in 1180.—Univ. Hist.

MANUEL (Palæologus), emperor of Constantinople, was the son and successor of John IV. The Turks having invaded his dominions, he applied to the Latins for succour, but without effect, on which he resigned his sceptre to John VII. his son, and took a religious habit. He died in 1425, aged 75.—Ibid.

MANUTIUS, the name of three celebrated printers of Venice; ALDUS, the father, and his two sons, Paul and Aldus. The first died in 1516. His editions of the Classics are held in great estimation. He introduced the form still called Italic printing. Paul had for some time the care of the Vatican library at Rome, and acquired, by reading Cicero often, an elegant Latin style. He wrote Commentaries upon that author, in 4 vols. folio. He also published several other works, the best of which is his De Legibus Romanorum. He died in 1574. Aldus Manutius, the younger, was also a learned printer, and had the care of the Vatican press, notwithstanding which he died poor in 1597. He wrote a Treatise on Orthography; Commentaries on Cicero; three books of Epistles; the Lives of Cofmo de Medicis, and Castruccio Castrucani.—Tiraboschi.

MANZUOLI (Tomaso), an Italian painter, was born in 1531. He painted historical subjects, and portraits with beautiful landscapes. He died in 1570.—Pilkington.

MANZO (John Baptist), marquis de Villa, an Italian soldier and writer. He served in the Spanish army with reputation, and afterwards retired to his native city of Naples, where he was one of the principal founders of the academy degli Oziosi. He died there in 1645, aged 84. He wrote, 1.

Dell amore Dialoghi, 8vo.; 2. Rime, 12mo.; 3. Vita dell Taffio, 12mo.—Tiraboschi.

MARRE'S (Walter), an old English poet, who was chaplain to Henry II. He wrote in Latin, and some of his verses, which are light and satirical, are still extant.—Pitt.

MARLETTOT (John), a learned English divine, was born in Huntingdonshire in 1631, and educated at Westminster school; after which he went to Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow. He studied physic, and having taken his doctor's degree in that faculty, he commenced practice in London, where he lived on terms of intimacy with Willis, Sydenham, Locke, and other eminent men. In 1675 he was chosen professor of physic at Gresham college; but, in 1682, he entered into orders, and obtained the rectory of Braybrooke, in Northamptonshire. In 1685 he was appointed vicar of St. Lawrence Jewry, London. He died in 1721. Dr. Mapletost published a Latin translation of Sydenham's Medical Observations; and a useful book, entitled the Principles and Duties of the Christian Religion, 8vo.—Great Hist. Diet.

MARACCI (John), an historical painter, was born at Lucca in 1637. His invention was good, his figures elegantly disposed, and his colouring agreeable. He died in 1704.—Pilkington.

MARACCI (Louis), a learned ecclesiastic, was born at Lucca in 1612. He acquired a great reputation by his edition of the Koran, printed at Padua, in Arabic and Latin, 1698, 2 vols. folio. He also assisted in publishing the Arabic Bible, 3 vols. folio, at Rome. He died in 1700.—Moreri.

MARALDI (James Philip), a celebrated mathematician, was born in the county of Nice in 1665. He was employed under Cassini, in constructing the great meridian through France, and died in 1729, leaving behind him a valuable catalogue of the fixed stars.—Martin's Biog. Phil.

MARANA (John Paul), the author of the Turkish Spy, a work once in great repute, and which produced a number of imitations, was born at Genoa in 1642. He resided many years at Paris; but, in 1683, retired to his own country, where he died in 1693.—Moreri.

MARAT (John Paul), an incendiary, was born in 1744 in Switzerland. He went to Paris at an early age, where he studied physic, and became an empyric, selling his nostrums at an extravagant price. He was in England at the breaking out of the revolution, on which he hastened to France, where he became a leader among the most violent of the factions. In his first journal, the Publiciste Parisien, he attacked Necker, and other eminent men. This was followed by the Friend of the People, in which he recommended revolt, pillage and murder. Marat excited the troops against their generals, the poor to plunder the rich, and the people at large against the king. Named deputy of the department of Paris in the convention, he appeared there armed with pistols. The most atrocious murders were committed by his means, and he appeared to delight in nothing but the effusion of blood, when he was assassinated in the midst of his career, just as he had come from the bath, by a young female named Charlotte Corday, July 14, 1793. Marat published a work on man, or Principles of the reciprocal influence of the Soul and Body, two volumes, 12mo; and some tracts on Electricity and Light, in which he attacked the Newtonian system.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MARATTE (Carlo), an excellent Italian painter, was born at Camerino, in the march of Ancona, in 1625. He became the pupil of Andrea Sacchi, and chiefly applied himself to painting female saints. Pope Clement XI. gave him a pension, and conferred on him the order of knighthood. He was also painter in ordinary to Louis XIV. He died in 1713.—D'Argenville.

MARBACH (Joim), a German protestant divine, was born at Lindau in 1521, and died at Strasburgh in 1581. He was the author of a singular book published in 1578 with this title, "Fides Jesu et Jesuitarum; hoc est Collatio Doctrinae Domini nostris Jesu Christi cum Doctrina Jesuitarum."—Moreri.

MARBODUS, or MARBODEUS, bishop of Rennes in 1096. He wrote De Gemmis, and some sacred poems; also the Life of Magnoboldus, bishop of Angers. He died in 1123, having resigned his bishopric some time before his death.—Ibid.

MARCA (Peter de), a French divine, was born in 1594, in the province of Bearn, and educated among the Jesuits. He was for some time counsellor of state, but having defended the liberties of the Gallican church in an elaborate treatise, he was made bishop of Conserans; after which he published a book to prove that St. Peter was the only head of the church, to ingratiate himself with the court of Rome. In 1652 he was nominated to the archbishopric of Toulouse, and the year following distinguished himself in an assembly of the French clergy against the jansenists. He was afterwards made archbishop of Paris, but died in 1662, on the day that the bulls for his promotion arrived. He wrote the History of Bearn, folio; Marca Hispanica, folio; and other works.—Moreri.

MARCEL (N.), a painter, was born at Frankfort in 1628. He painted vases, filled with different kinds of fruits and flowers, and also curious shells. He died in 1683.—Filkington.

MARCEL (William), a French advocate and commissary at Arles, where he died in 1706, aged 61. He wrote a History of the Origin and Progress of the French Monarchy, four volumes, 12mo.; Chronological Tables of Profane and Ecclesiastical History.—Moreri.

MARCELLI (Benedict), an eminent composer, and denominated in Italy the Prima of Music, was born at Venice in 1686, of a noble family. What is very remarkable of this extraordinary man is his having been as eminent a poet and philosopher as a musician. His compositions in music are numerous; and his best poetical performance is the comedy Toscanismo, o la Crusca, o sia il Cruscante impazzito. His principal prose work is his Teatro alla moda (the Fashionable Stage), intended as a ludicrous criticism on modern operas. He died in 1739.

MARCELLINUS, a pope and saint, succeeded Caius in 296, and signalized himself by his courage in a severe persecution. The Donatists charged him with having sacrificed to idols; from which he was vindicated by Augustine. He died in 304.—Dupin.

MARCELLUS, surnamed Sidetes, from Side, a town in Pamphylia, where he was born. He flourished under Adrian and the Antonines, and was by profession a physician. He wrote a poem on Medicine, of which only a few fragments remain. There was another physician of the same name, who flourished at Bourdeaux about 381, and wrote poems on medical subjects.—Moreri.

MARCELLUS I. pope, succeeded Marcellinus in 308. The emperor Maxentius banished him from Rome for excommunicating an apostate. He died in 310.—Dupin. Platina.

MARCELLUS II. was a native of Montepulciano, and became secretary to Paul III. who made him a cardinal, and one of the presidents at the council of Trent. He succeeded Julius III. in 1555, but died a few weeks after his election.—Ibid.

MARCH (Ausias), a Spanish poet in the 15th century. He wrote amatory poems, and he and Petrarch are accused of having stolen from each other; but it is supposed that they both copied some earlier poet.—Moreri.

MARCHAND (Prosper), a French writer, who quitted France on account of his religion, and settled in Holland, where he conducted a Literary Journal. He died in 1756. He was also the author of a History of Printing, an Historical Dictionary, and other works.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MARCHE (Oliver de la), a French author of the 15th century, was gentleman to Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy. He afterwards served under Charles the Rash, who fell at the battle of Nancy in 1477. He was next employed by Maximilian of Austria. He died in 1501. His works are, 1. Memoirs or Chronicles, Brussels, 1616, quarto; 2. A Treatise on Duels, octavo; 3. Triomphe des Dames d'Honneur, 1528, octavo.—Ibid.

MARCHETTI (Alexander), a physician of Pisa, was born in 1633. He succeeded his friend Borrelli as professor of mathematics at Pisa, and died in 1714. He wrote 1. Poems, quarto; 2. Several Philosophical Treatises; 3. A translation of Lucretius into Italian, quarto; 4. A translation of Anacreon.—Life prefixed to his poems.

MARCIANUS, a Thracian of obscure family, who obtained the imperial throne on the death of Theodosius II. A. D. 450. He made great preparations against the barbarians who had invaded Africa, and conducted himself in such a manner as to give promising hopes of a glorious reign. But in the midst of his popularity he died in 457, aged 69.—Univ. Hist.

MARCILIUS (Theodore), a learned German, was born at Arnheim in 1548, and educated at Deventer and Louvain. He afterwards became professor of belles-lettres at Toulouse, and lastly royal professor of the Latin tongue at Paris, where he died in 1617. He published Pythagoras's Golden Verses, with a Latin version and commentaries, and also some works of his own, as Historia Strenuorum, &c.—Moreri.

MARCION, a heretic of the second century, was a native of Sinope on the Euxine, where his father was bishop, who excommunicated him for incontinence. He then withdrew to Rome; but not being received again to communion he espoused the notions of Cerdo, to which he added the doctrine of Manes, and some peculiarities of his own. The year of his death is unknown.—Dupin.

MARDONIUS, the son-in-law of Darius, and the general of Xerxes, who entrusted him with the conduct of the war in Greece, where he took Athens, but was slain at the battle of Platæa B. C. 479.—Strabo.

MARE (William de la), or Mara, a modern Latin poet, was born of a noble family in Normandy. He became rector of the university of Caen, and canon of the church of Coutances. He died about 1520. His poems are, Chimæra, printed at Paris in 1514, quarto; De tribus fugiendus venere, Ventre et Pluma, 1512, quarto.—Moreri.

MARE (Philibert de la), counsellor in the parliament of Dijon, and an elegant Latin writer, died in 1687, after publishing several works, the chief of which are the Historicorum Burgundiz conspectus, quarto; and Commentarius de Bello Burgundiz conspectus, quarto.—Moreri.

MARE (Nicolas de la), chief magistrate of the Châtelet under Louis XIV. with whom he was in favour. He died in 1723, aged 82. He wrote an elaborate Treatise on the Police, in 3 volumes, folio, to which a fourth volume was added after his death.—Ibid.

MARCHEZ (George), an eminent French surgeon, was born at Calais in 1658. He was distinguished by his skill in cutting for the stone, and in 1696 attended Louis XIV. who had an abscess in his neck. He became principal surgeon to that monarch, who appointed him maître d'hôtel, and gave him a patent of nobility. He died in 1736. He presented the academy of surgery at Paris several papers, but published no separate work. There was a miserable writer of this name, who figured in the revolution by several indecent and irreligious books, and one entitled, the Voyage of Pythagoras, in imitation of the Travels of Anacharsis.—New. Dict. Hist.

MARETS (Roland des), a French advocate, was born at Paris in 1594, and died in 1653. He wrote Latin letters of considerable merit. They were published with this title "Rolandi Mareti Epistolarum Philologicarum, lib. ii."—Bayle.

MARETS (John des), brother of the above, was born at Paris in 1595, and died in 1676. He led a dissolute life in his youth, but in his advanced years he became a fanatic, and predicted that Louis XIV. was ordained by providence to overturn the Turkish empire, and to unite all christians to the Papal see. He wrote some poems and plays; a paraphrase of the psalms of David; romances; and religious pieces.—Ibid.

MARETS (Samuel des), a French protestant divine, was born in Picardy in 1599. He studied at Saumur and Geneva, and after officiating as minister in different places, became professor of divinity at Groningen, where he died in 1673. He wrote several books against the Roman Catholics and Socinians, and also against Grotius. His Collegium Theologicum, quarto, is most esteemed. He left two sons, Henry and Daniel: the former published an edition of the Bible in French, with notes, 3 volumes, folio; and a Latin Catechism on Grace.—Ibid.

MARGARET, daughter of Waldemar III. king of Denmark, and wife of Haquin king of Norway, was placed on the throne of both kingdoms on the death of her son Olaus in 1387. The Swedes, dissatisfied with their king Albert, offered their crown to Margaret, who accepted it, and defeated Albert in 1394. Three years afterwards the states of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, passed a law known by the name of the Union of Calmar, by which the three kingdoms were united, and the monarchy limited. Margaret, however, violated all the conditions of the union, and was called the Semiramis of the North. She died in 1412, aged 59.—Univ. Hist.

MARGARET, daughter of René of Anjou, king of Sicily, and wife of Henry VI. king of England. The duke of Gloucester having opposed this marriage, she effected his ruin and he was strangled in prison. In the civil wars between the houses of York and Lancaster she displayed the character of a heroine. Her husband being taken prisoner in 1455 by the duke of York, she levied force, defeated the duke, set Henry at liberty, and entered London in triumph. But in 1460 her army was defeated at Northampton by the earl of Warwick, and Henry again became a prisoner, but the queen escaped. Not dismayed, she gathered another army, and marched against the duke of York, who fell in the battle of Wakefield. She next defeated Warwick at St. Alban's, but was routed after a bloody contest at Tawton, on which she fled to France to implore succour from Louis XI. who refused her any assistance. This intrepid woman then returned to England, where she was joined by several of her party, but was defeated at Hexham. In 1471 she was taken prisoner, but in 1475 she purchased her liberty by a large ransom. She then returned to France, where she died in 1482, aged 59.—Rapin. Mareri.

MARGARET, countess of Richmond and Derby, was born at Bletsoe in Bedfordshire, in 1441. She married Edmund earl of Richmond, by whom she had an only son, who became king of England by the title of Henry VII. After being a widow some time she married sir Henry Stafford, on whose death she united herself in marriage to Thomas lord Stanley, created earl of Derby in 1485. He died in 1504. The countess was a liberal patron of learning, and founded two colleges at Cambridge, Christ's and St. John's. She also instituted in that university a theological professorship, and endowed a school at Torrington in Devonshire. She translated from the French a work entitled, the Mirrore of Golde for the sinful Soule; also the fourth book of Gerfon's or Kempis's treatise of the imitation and following the blessed Life of our Saviour Christ, printed in 1504. She died in 1509.—Biog. Brit. Fun. Sermon. by Bp. Fisher.

MARGARET of Valois, queen of Naples, and sister to Francis I. king of France, was the daughter of Charles of Orleans, duke of Angoulême, and born in 1492. In 1509 she married Charles duke of Alençon, who died in 1525. Her next husband was Henry d'Albert, king of Navarre, by whom she had Joan d'Albert, mother of Henry IV. Margaret assisted her husband in improving his dominions, and she greatly encouraged the protestants. She also wrote a tract entitled, "The Mirrour of the Sinful Soul," which was condemned as heretical by the Sorbonne. This excellent woman died in 1549 of a catarrh caught while she was observing a comet. Besides the above work she wrote poetical pieces, which were printed in 1540, under the title of Marguerites de la Marguerite des Princefles très-illustre Reine de Navarre, quarto. She also wrote, in the manner of Boccace, a heptameron of novels, printed in 1560.—Bayle.

MARGARITONE, an Italian painter, was born at Arezzo in 1198. He invented the art of gilding with leaf-gold upon Armenian bole, and painted historical subjects in fresco and distemper. He died in 1275, aged 77.—Pilkington.

MARSON (William de), a French ecclesiastic, was a native of Languedoc. He wrote against the jansenists, and satirized several persons of distinction with so much acrimony, that he was banished and afterwards imprisoned. He obtained his liberty in 1746, on condition of retiring to a monastery of Bernardines, where he died in 1760. His principal works are, Memoirs of Marshal Villars, 3 volumes, 12mo.; Memoirs of the duke of Berwick, 2 volumes, 12mo.; Memoirs of Tourville, 3 volumes, 12mo.; Letters of Fitz Morris.—New. Dict. Hist.

MARORAAP (Andrew Sigismund), an eminent chemist and director of the academy of Berlin, was born in that city in 1709. He studied under Newman, Juncker, and Henckel. He applied assiduously to mineralogy, which science he enriched by the discovery of a demi-metal called manganese. He also made numerous experiments on precious stones and platina, and introduced into chemical operations a simple and intelligible system. He died in 1782.—Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences at Paris.

MARGONIO (Maffineo), the son of a marshal of Candia, went to Venice with his father in 1547. He there established a printing office, from which he issued several Greek works. His house having been burnt by an incendiary, he returned to his own country and became bishop of Cerigo. He died in 1602, aged 80. We have by him in Greek, Anacreontic odes, published at Augsborg in 1592, 8vo. Some of his poems are in the Corpus Poetarum Græcarum, Geneva, 2 vols. fol. 1606.—Moreri.

MARIA THERESA empress, queen of Hungary and Bohemia, was the daughter of the emperor Charles VI. and of Elizabeth Christina of Brunswick Wolfenbuttle. Her father having lost his only son, the archduke Leopold, constituted Maria Theresa the heiress of his estates. In 1713 was made the famous præmâtic sanction, by which, in default of male issue, the succession passed to the eldest of his daughters. Maria Theresa married, in 1736, Francis Stephen of Lorraine, afterwards emperor by the name of Francis I. In 1740 her father died, and immediately Europe was plunged into war in consequence of that event. The king of Prussia laid hold of the advantage offered him of invading Silesia, to the conquest of which he added that of Moravia. Charles Albert aspired to the crowns of Bohemia and the empire, and was supported by France in violation of the pragmatic sanction. Charles was crowned emperor at Frankfort in 1742. In the mean while Maria Theresa threw herself for protection upon her Hungarian subjects, to whom, with her child in her arms, she made this pathetic address in Latin: "Abandoned by my friends, persecuted by my enemies, attacked by my nearest relations, I have no other resource than in your fidelity, in your courage, and my constancy, I commit to your hands the child of your kings." At this spectacle the Hungarians, a warlike people, caught fire, and drawing their sabres exclaimed, as with one voice, "We will die for our queen, Maria Theresa." A powerful army was formed, with Kevenhuller at their head, who recovered several important places. Maria formed a treaty with England, which country supplied her with money and troops, and what was of greater consequence, detached Prussia from the league, on condition of his retaining Silesia and Gratz. Maria Theresa was crowned queen of Bohemia at Prague, May 11, 1743. On the 11th of June the king of England and his son the duke of Cumberland, in person, gained a great victory at Dettingen. The king of Sardinia now declared himself for the queen of Hungary; who, in 1745, had the satisfaction of placing the imperial crown on the head of her husband. This ceremony took place at Frankfort. After eight years of war a peace was concluded at Aix-la-Chapelle, by which Maria Theresa was secured in her rights. She employed the interval of peace in organising her armies, repairing or constructing fortifications, regulating and encouraging commerce, founding military schools, and in erecting and endowing colleges of learning. She also caused observatories to be built at Vienna, Gratz, and Tyrnau, which she supplied with the best instruments. The wounded and infirm soldiers were provided for in hospitals, and the widows and children of officers were liberally provided for. In 1756 this calm was disturbed by the king of Prussia, who marched into Saxony and Bohemia. Marshal Brown opposed him under the walls of Prague, but being wounded he was obliged to retire into that city, which was immediately bombarded. Count Daun, however, forced the Prussians to raise the siege, by gaining the victory of Chotzemitz. On this occasion Maria Theresa instituted the military order which bears her name. After a variety of engagements, by the peace of 1763, Austria was placed in the state in which she was before the war. The year following Joseph, son of Maria Theresa, was elected king of the Romans. In 1765 she lost her husband. In 1772 she joined the king of Prussia, and the empress Catherine, in the dismemberment of Poland. By the death of Maximilian Joseph, elector of Bavaria in 1777, war was re-kindled between Austria and Prussia, but was terminated in 1779, by the peace of Teschen, which added to the former state a small portion of Bavaria. Maria Theresa died, after a long and glorious reign, at Vienna in 1780, aged 69. She left at her death all her children on thrones, or nearly so. Antoinette was queen of France; Charlotte queen of Naples; Maria Amelia allied to the duke of Parma; Joseph II. succeeded to the hereditary estates of Austria; Leopold possessed the crown of the Medici; Ferdinand was governor of Lombardy; Maximilian grand master of the Teutonic order, and coadjutor of the electorate of Cologne; and Maria Theresa, wife of the duke of Saxe-Teschen, governed the Low Countries. Such was the state of the house of Austria when Maria Theresa descended to the grave, after meriting the name of mother of her country.—Newsp. Dig. Hist.

MARIA ANTOINETTE, queen of France and archduchess of Austria, was the daughter of the emperor Francis I. and of Maria Theresa. She was born at Vienna in 1755, and was married to the dauphin of France, afterwards Louis XVI., in 1770. At the celebration of the ceremony on the 16th of May, two tremendous thunder-storms happened; and at the fête given by the city of Paris on the 30th of the same month, above 1200. persons perished by the falling of a building erected for the letting off of fireworks; a great number of other spectators who were on the pont-royal fell into the Seine and were drowned. The dauphiness, on that melancholy occasion, displayed her humanity, by sending all the money she possessed to the lieutenant of police for the relief of the distressed. A number of other benevolent actions of this amiable and injured princess are also recorded, and some have been made the subject of beautiful pictures. At the death of a monarch in France it was the custom for the people to pay a tax to the new queen, this she caused to be dispensed with, when by the demise of Louis XV. she ascended the throne. In the great frost of 1788 she displayed the tenderest sensibility for the calamities of the people, and distributed all the money she could raise to supply their wants. Notwithstanding this the basest calumnies and most atrocious libels were circulated against her character. In the revolution which commenced the following year the public fury was directed against her, but she supported herself amidst the vilest indignities and brutal scenes with unshaken fortitude. On the famous 6th of October, when the cannibals led the royal family in triumph from Versailles to Paris, and uttered dreadful exclamations against the queen, she presented herself before them alone, when her intrepid air disarmed the wretches, and turned their menaces into applause. On that memorable journey the mob carried before the carriage the heads of two of the king's guard on pikes. The courage of the queen, after being arrested at Varennes and conducted back to the Tuilleries, was calm and heroic. In the Temple her behaviour was still greater. When apprized of the condemnation of her husband she felicitated him on the termination of his sufferings, and upon his near approach to an immortal crown. July 4, 1793, she was separated from her son, which excited in her the most affecting sensations. The 5th of August she was conducted in the night to the Conciergerie, where she was confined in a dark and damp dungeon. In October she was brought to trial on the charge of having embezzled the public property, corresponded with foreign enemies, and transmitted large sums to the emperor. Accusations of crimes the most unnatural were also produced; to which she opposed a spirit and resolution of conscious innocence. Though nothing was proved, sentence of condemnation was passed against her, which she heard with triumph. On the 16th of that month she was conducted in a cart to the scaffold, where after elevating her eyes to Heaven, she suffered the fatal stroke, aged 38 years and some months. Her body was thrown into a grave and consumed by quick lime. Her misfortunes had made great ravages in her beautiful countenance, and altered the colour of her hair. Maria Antoinette possessed an accomplished mind. She spoke the French language with purity, and the Italian as if it were her own tongue. She also understood Latin, and had a perfect knowledge of geography and history. She had four children, 1. Maria Thérèse Charlotte, born in 1778. She is married to her cousin the duke of Angoulême. 2. Louis, born in 1781, and died in 1789. 3. Charles Louis, born in 1785, and died in 1793. 4. A daughter who died quite an infant.—Vie de Marie Antoinette par Guenard.

MARIAMNE, the wife of Herod the Great; by whom she had two sons, Alexander and Aristobulus, and two daughters. Herod was very fond of Mariamne, but she had little regard for him, especially after he put to death her brother Aristobulus. When Herod went to Rome to court the favour of Augustus, he left secret orders with Josephus and Sohemus, to destroy Mariamne and her mother, if any misfortune should happen to him. Mariamne having obtained this secret from Sohemus, upbraided Herod, at his return, with his inhumanity, for which he put both her and Sohemus to death, B. C. 28.—Josephus.

MARIANA (John), a Spanish historian, was born at Talavera in Castile in 1537. At the age of seventeen he entered among the jesuits. He distinguished himself by a famous book, entitled, De Rege & Regis Institutione, in which he justified the assassination of heretical princes. It was burnt at Paris by order of parliament. His greatest work is, The History of Spain, written first in Latin, and afterwards in Spanish. The best edition of the latter is that of Ibarra, at Madrid, 1780, 2 vols. folio; and of the Latin, that of the Hague in 1722, 4 vols. folio. Mariana died in 1624. He wrote a Treatise on Weights and Measures, and another on the Faults of Government and Society, in Spanish.—Moreri.

MARIANUS SCOTUS, a learned Scotch monk, who died in 1086, aged 58. He was a relation of the venerable Bede, and wrote a Chronicle from Jesus Christ to 1083. It was continued by another hand to 1200.—Moreri.

MARIETTE (Peter John), a man of letters, was the son of John Mariette, a bookseller and engraver of Paris. He became secretary to the king, and comptroller of the chancery, and died in 1774. His works are; 1. Traité des Pierres gravées, 2 vols. folio; 2. Lettres à M. de Caylus; 3. Lettres sur la Fontaine de la rue Grenellé; 4. Descriptions of Plates engraved after the Pictures of M. Crozat, 2 vols. fol.; 5. A Catalogue of the Plates of M. Bafan, 8vo. He had the noblest collection of engravings in Europe.—Novo. Diâ. Hist.

MARIGNAN (John James Medichino, marquis de), a celebrated commander of the 16th century, was born at Milan. In his youth he gave great proofs of his valour, which procured him the favour of Francis Sforza, duke of Milan, who employed him and another officer to murder Visconti, a Milanese nobleman; after which he determined to sacrifice the two instruments left he should be discovered as the author of the assassination. The one perished, but Medichino escaped, and obtained the government of Musso, a strong place on the lake of Como. In 1528 he entered into the service of the emperor, and exchanged Musso for Marignan, and thence assumed the title of marquis. In 1554 he defeated the French commanded by marshal Strozzi in Tuscany, and took the city of Sienna, where he committed horrible cruelties. He died the year following at Milan, aged about 60.—Moreri.

MARIGNY (James Carpentier de), was born at a village of that name near Nevers. He became an ecclesiastic, but his life did not correspond with that profession. He attached himself to the cardinal de Retz, and was distinguished by his satires against Mazarine. He died of an apoplexy in 1670. He was a man of great wit and humour. A collection of his letters was printed at the Hague in 1678. He has also some poems in print; and there is ascribed to him a curious book under the name of Alleyn, in which it is attempted to be proved, that to slay a tyrant, by the example of Moses, is lawful. There was an abbé of the same name, who died at Paris in 1762. He wrote a History of the 12th Century; a History of the Arabs and their Revolutions, 8 vols.—Novo. Diâ. Hist.

MARIKOWSKY (Martin), a physician, was born at Rosenau in Hungary in 1728, and died in 1772, at Sirmich in Slavonia. He applied himself indefatigably to examine the causes of the epidemic which ravaged the Hungarian and Turkish armies, and published his Observations in the Ephemerides Sirmienfes, 1763. He also translated Tissot's Advice to the People on Health, into the Hungarian language.—Novo. Diß. Hift.

MARIN (Michael Angelo), a French novel writer, was born at Marseilles in 1697. He embraced the ecclesiastical state, and was in great favour with pope Clement XIII. who employed him to publish the Acts of the Martyrs. He died in 1767. Most of his novels are of a religious cast.—Ibid.

MARINARI (Onorio), an Italian painter, was the disciple of Carlo Dolce, whose style he imitated. He painted portraits in an admirable manner, also historical subjects. He died in 1715, aged 88.—Pilkington. D'Argenville.

MARINELLA (Lucretia), a Venetian lady in the 17th century, who wrote a curious book on the superiority of her sex, and some other works, as the Life of the Blessed Virgin, poems, &c.—Tiraboschi.

MARINI (John Ambrose), a native of Genoa, was the first Italian who delineated in prose romances the usages, manners, dangers, and exploits, of ancient chivalry. His romances are entitled, 1. Il Caloandre Fidelle, printed at Venice in 1641, 8vo. This work has been translated into French by Scudery, and M. Caylus; 2. Nuove Gare de' disperati, of which there have been ten editions, and also a French translation.—Ibid.

MARINO (John Baptist), an Italian poet, was born at Naples in 1569. His father having discarded him for refusing to study the law, he became secretary to the grand admiral of Naples, after which he went to Rome, where he was patronized by cardinal Aldobrandino, nephew to Clement VIII. He died at Naples in 1625. His principal performance is entitled Adone, dedicated to Louis XIII. at the time when Marino was at Paris, whither he had been invited by queen Mary de Medicis. His other works are, de Strage de gli Innocenti; Rime, 3 parts; La Sampagna; La Murtoleide, a satirical poem on Murtola, a poet at Turin, who was so enraged that he wounded Marino with a pistol.—Ibid.

MARIO NUZZI, better known by the name of Mario di Fiori, because he excelled in painting flowers, was born in the kingdom of Naples in 1603, and died at Rome in 1673. His pictures are very valuable.—D'Argenville.

MARIOTTE (Edme), a French ecclesiastic and mathematician, was born at Dijon, and admitted a member of the academy of sciences at Paris in 1666. He died in 1684. He distinguished himself by his hydraulic experiments, and his principal works are; 1. A Treatise on Philosophy; 2. On the Motion of Waters; 3. On the Movement of Pendulums; 4. Experiments on Colours; 5. Treatise on Levels. The whole were published together at Leyden in 1717, 2 vols. 4to.—Morari.

MARIVAUD (Peter Carlet de Chamblain de), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1688. His comedies and romances are excellent, and distinguished by their moral tendency. Those of the latter description are; 1. The Poor Philosopher, 2 vols. 12mo. 2. Marianne, 4 vols. 12mo. The conclusion of this excellent novel is by another hand. 3. Le Payfan parvenu, 3 vols. 12mo; 4. Pharlamen, 2 vols. He also wrote a work entitled, The French Spectator, 2 vols. Marivaux died in 1763.—Novo. Diß. Hift.

MARIUS (Caius), a celebrated Roman, who was seven times consul. He was of obscure origin, and in his youth was a husbandman, which employment he quitted for the army, and became a lieutenant under Scipio and Metellus. He ended the war with Jugurtha, whom he conducted in triumph to Rome. After this he served against the Cimbri and other barbarous nations who had invaded Italy. With a very inferior force he completely routed them, for which a pyramid was erected to his honour. But he tarnished the glory of his victories by the basest cruelties to the vanquished, especially the women. Plutarch reports that, having experienced some disadvantages in contending with the Cimbri, he was warned in a dream to avert the wrath of the gods by sacrificing his daughter Calpurnia, which inhuman direction he obeyed. In his sixth consulate he had Sylla for his rival, who marched to Rome with his army, and obliged Marius to quit the city. After wandering some time he was recalled to Rome by Cinna, with whom he was again chosen consul, B.C. 86, in which year he died of excessive drinking. His son MARIUS the younger had all the ferocious character of his father. He usurped the consular dignity B.C. 82, but was defeated by Sylla, and slew himself at Præneste.—Plutarch.

MARIUS (Marcus Aurelius), a smith and common soldier in the reign of Gallienus, who raised himself to a supreme command in the army, and on the death of Victorinus ascended the imperial throne by the interest of Victorina, mother of that emperor; but was slain shortly after by a soldier. He is said to have been a man of prodigious strength, and to have stopped a chariot running full speed with one of his fingers.—Univ. Hift.

MARK (St.), the Evangelist, was the disciple of St. Peter, who employed him in writing the gospel which bears his name, and calls him his son in his first epistle. He is believed to have been the John, surnamed Mark, to whose mother's house St. Peter retired when released from prison, and who also accompanied St. Paul and Barnabas in their travels. He wrote his gospel for the use of the Roman christians, about A.D. 72. He is said to have founded the church of Alexandria.—Cave.

MARK, a pope and saint, succeeded Syl-vestier I in 336, and died the same year. There passes under his name, an epistle addressed to St. Athanasius.—Dupin.
U u

MARKHAM (Gervase), an English author in the 17th century, was born in Nottinghamshire. He was a captain in the army of Charles I. and distinguished himself by his valour. He wrote some dramatic pieces, and others on Husbandry, Horsemanship, Fowling, and Military Discipline.—Gen. B. D.

MARKLAND (Jeremiah), a learned critic, was the son of the reverend Ralph Markland, author of the Art of Shooting flying, and was born in 1693. He received his education at Christ's hospital, from whence he removed to Peter-house, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and was elected fellow. In 1723 he distinguished himself by his Epistola Critica, after which he published Remarks on the Epistles of Cicero to Brutus, and of Brutus to Cicero; with a Dissertation on four Orations ascribed to Cicero. In 1761 appeared his tract, entitled, De Græcorum quintâ Declinatione imparisyllabicâ et inde formatâ Latinorum tertia, quæstio Grammatica, 4to. He wrote several other small pieces, and assisted many learned men in their labours. He died at Dorking in Surrey, in 1776.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

MARLOE (Christopher), an English dramatic writer, was born in the reign of Edward VI. and educated at Cambridge. Wood says that he was an atheist, and kept a girl, but being jealous that she was partial to his footman, Marloe aimed a dagger at the fellow, which he wrenched out of his hand, and stabbed his master about 1593. His plays are now little known.—Wood, d. O.

MARLORAT (Augustin), a learned divine, was born in Lorraine in 1506. He was entered of the order of Augustines, which he quitted on embracing the protestant religion. He appeared with advantage at the conference between the catholics and protestants at Poissy in 1561. When Rouen was taken by the king in 1562, Marlorat, who was a minister there, was basely put to death. His Commentaries on the Bible are justly esteemed, as also is his work entitled, Thesaurus locorum communium sanctæ Scripturæ, London 1574, fol. and Geneva 1624.—Moreri.

MARMION (Shakerley), a dramatic writer, was born in Northamptonshire in 1602, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford. He squandered away a good estate, on which he commenced author. His pieces are, 1. Holland's Leaguer; 2. A Fine Companion; 3. The Antiquary; 4. The Crafty Merchant, or the Soldier'd Citizen; all comedies. He died in 1639.—Biog. Dram.

MARMOL (Louis), a Spanish writer of the 16th century, was a native of Grenada. He was taken at the siege of Tunis, and was eight years a prisoner in Africa. His principal work is a General Description of Africa, printed at Grenada in 1573, in 3 vols. folio.—Moreri.

MARMONTEL (John Francis), a celebrated French writer, was born at Bort, in the Limousin, in 1719. He was educated at Toulouse, where he obtained an academical prize, and for sometime wore the habit of an abbé. In 1745 he went to Paris, and obtained the friendship of Voltaire. His talents and virtues procured him a pension, and the place of historiographer of the royal buildings, and also the management of a journal called the Mercury. But having written a satire upon some powerful noblemen, he was sent to the Bastille. He commenced his literary career by tragedies, and an opera. But his fame rests principally, if not wholly, upon his Moral Tales, a work universally known and esteemed. The French academy appointed him perpetual secretary in 1789. During the revolution he led a retired life, and remained secure, though reduced to low circumstances, amidst all the violent scenes of that event. In 1797 he was chosen deputy of the council of ancients by the department of Eure; but died the year following at Abbeville of an apoplectic stroke. Besides his dramatic pieces and Moral Tales he wrote the romance of Belisarius; the Literary Observer; the Charms of Study, an epistle; a French translation of Lucan's Pharsalia; Poétique Française, 3 vols. 8vo.; the Incas, or the Destruction of the Empire of Peru, 2 vols.; Essay on the Revolutions of Music, 8vo.; Elements of Literature, 6 vols.; several articles in the French Encyclopædie, &c.—Novo. Did. Hist.

MARNEZIA (N. de Lezai), a French writer, was born at Befançon. He was for some time in the army, and at the commencement of the revolution became a member of the national assembly, but disapproving the violent measures that were pursued, he retired to America. He returned again in 1793, and was confined in prison several months. On the fall of Robespierre he gained his liberty, but never recovered his health. He died in 1797. His works are, 1. De la Nature champêtre, a poem; 2. Essay on the Mineralogy of Orgelet in Franche Comte; 3. Le Bonheur dans les Campagnes; 4. Plan of Education for a Young Lady; 5. The Virtuous Family, a romance; &c.—Novo. Did. Hist.

MAROLLES (Michael de), a French writer and ecclesiastic, was born in 1600, and died in 1681. He wrote Memoirs of his own Life, published in 1775, 3 vols. 12mo. He translated several of the ancient authors into French, and wrote a curious work, entitled, Tableaux du Temple des Muses, folio. His epigrams and poems are very indifferent.—Moreri.

MAROT (John), a French poet, was born at Mattheu in Normandy in 1463. He was patronized by Anne of Bretagne, queen of France, and was afterwards in the service of Francis I. He died in 1523. His poems are appended to the works of his son, the subject of the next article.

MAROT (Clement), was born in 1495. He was valet de chambre to Francis I. but was obliged to leave France, on embracing the reformed religion. He resided some time at Geneva, and died at Turin in 1544. He translated some of David's psalms into French, which were printed in 1543 at Geneva, with a preface by Calvin. His other poems are epigrams, elegies, sonnets, and ballads. His son Michael was also a poet, but not equal either to John or Clement. The works of the three were printed together at the Hague in 1731, 6 vols. 12mo.—Moreri. Bayle.

MAROT (Francis), a painter, was the pupil of La Fosse, and an associate and professor of the French academy of painting. He died at Paris in 1719, aged 52. He is not to be confounded with an architect of that name, whose designs have been engraved in quarto.—D'Argenville.

MARQUET (Francis Nicholas), a French physician and botanist, was born at Nancy in 1687, and died in 1759. He published, 1. An Account of Plants which grow in Lorraine, 10 vols. 8vo.; 2. Methode pour apprendre par les notes de la musique a connoître le poulx, 12mo.; 3. Observations on the Cure of several Diseases, 2 vols. 12mo.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

MARSAIS (Casar Chefsneau du), a French grammarian, was born at Marseilles in 1676. He was for some time a member of the congregation of the oratory, which he soon quitted, and went to Paris, where he applied to the law; but left that profession also, and became a schoolmaster. He wrote some articles in the Encyclopedie, and died in 1756. His principal works are, 1. An Explanation of the Doctrine of the Gallican Church, with respect to the pretences of the court of Rome, 12mo.; 2. A Rational Method of Learning the Latin Language, 12mo.; 3. MARSH (Narcissus), a learned prelate, was born in Wiltshire in 1638, and educated at Magdalen-hall, Oxford. In 1678 he was appointed provost of Trinity college, Dublin, and in 1682 promoted to the bishopric of Leighlin and Ferns, and in 1703 translated to the archbishopric of Armagh. He repaired several decayed churches, and built an alms-house for clergymen's widows. He died in 1713. His works are, 1. Institutiones Logice in usum Juventutis Academicæ, Dublin 1681. 2. An Introduction to the Doctrine of Sounds, containing some Proposals for the Improvement of Acoustics, &c.—Wood. Biog. Brit.

MARSHAL (Walter), a nonconformist minister, was educated at New College, Oxford, of which he became fellow, as he also was of that at Winchester. He was ejected from the living of Hurley in Hampshire in 1682; after which he officiated to a dissenting congregation at Gosport. He died about 1690. His book entitled the Gospel Mystery of Sanctification, printed first in 1692, 8vo. was reprinted with a commendatory preface by the rev. Mr. Hervey, author of Meditations, 12mo.—Calamy.

MARSHALL (Thomas), an English divine, was born in Leicestershire, about 1621, and bred at Lincoln college, Oxford; but when the university fell into the hands of the presbyterians he went to Rotterdam. He returned at the restoration, became fellow of his college, and took his doctor's degree. He was afterwards rector of Lincoln college, and preferred to the deanry of Gloucester. He died in 1685. His works are, 1. Observations in Evangeliorum Versiones per antiquas duas, scilicet Gothicas & Anglo Saxonicas; 2. An Explanation of the Catechism; 3. Epistle prefixed to Dr. Hyde's translation into the Malayan language of the four Gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles.—Wood.

MARSHALL (Nathanael), an English divine of the 18th century, who was chaplain to George II. and published, 1. The Works of St. Cyprian, fol. 1717; 2. A Defence of our Constitution in Church and State, 1717, 8vo. His Sermons were published by his widow in 1730, in 3 vols. 8vo.—Anecd. of Bouvier.

MARSHAM (sir John), a learned writer, was born in London in 1602, and educated first at Westminster school, and next at St. John's college, Oxford. He afterwards studied the law, and became one of the six clerks in chancery. In the civil wars he adhered to the royal cause, and in 1660 was chosen member of parliament for Rochester. Charles II. conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1685. He is distinguished for his Diatriba Chronologica, or a Chronological Dissertation, wherein he examines the principal difficulties which occur in the chronology of the Old Testament, 1649, 4to. He afterwards enlarged this work under the following title, Canon Chronicus, Ægyptiacus, Ebraicus, Græcus, & Disquisitiones, London 1672, fol.; and Leipfic 1676, 4to. His son sir John Marsham made large collections for a History of England, but never published. He also wrote a History of all the English Boroughs. His brother Robert was created a baronet by queen Anne, and was succeeded by her son Robert, created Lord Romney in 1716.—Biog. Brit.

MARSIGLI (Louis Ferdinand), an Italian writer, was born in 1658, of a noble family, at Bologna. He served with great reputation in the imperial army, and in 1683 was taken prisoner by the Tartars, who sold him to the Turks. The year following he was ransomed, and obtained a colonel's commission. He was afterwards advanced to the rank of marshal; but when the count d'Arco was condemned, for giving up the fortrefs of Brifac to the duke of Burgundy, Marfigli, who commanded under him, was also disgraced, and dismissed the service. He then retired to Bologna, where he formed a museum, and erected a printing-house; the first he bequeathed to the senate, and the last to the dominicans. He also founded the academy of arts and sciences at that place. He died in 1730. Count Marfigli was a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, and of the royal society of London. His works are, 1. a Philosophical Essay on the Sea, translated into French by Le Clerc, and published at Amsterdam in 1725, fol.; 2. a Description of the Danube, 6 vols. fol.; 3. MARTIONAC (Stephen Algai sieur de), a French writer, who translated Terence, Horace, Juvenal, Persius, Virgil, and Ovid into prose, and wrote the Lives of the Bishops of Paris of the 17th century, quarto. He died in 1698, aged 70.—Ibid.

MARTIN (St.), was born in 916 at Sabaria in Pannonia, now Hungary, of heathen parents. He served in the army some years; but being converted to christanity at Amiens, he embraced a religious life, and was the means of converting his mother. In 374 he was made bishop of Tours, but still retained all the simplicity and austerity of the recluse. He erected the monastery of Marmontier, and is considered as the apostle of the Gauls. He died in 397. There remains under his name a Confession of Faith with regard to the Doctrine of the Trinity.—Baillet Vies des Saintes.

MARTIN I. pope and saint, succeeded Theodore in 649. He held a council at Rome, in which the heresy of the Monothelites was condemned. Constantius caused him to be sent to Constantinople, from whence he was removed to the Crimea, where he died in consequence of ill usage in 655.—Dupin. Boissier.

MARTIN II. succeeded John VIII. in 882. He condemned Photius patriarch of Constantinople, and died in 884.—Ibid.

MARTIN III. a Roman, succeeded Stephen VIII. in 942, and died in 946, after founding many churches and charitable institutions.—Ibid.

MARTIN IV. a Frenchman of noble birth, succeeded Nicholas III. in 1281. He excommunicated the emperor Michael Palæologus and Peter III. king of Arragon, and gave the kingdom of the latter to Charles de Valois, son of Philip the Hardy, king of France. The pope died in 1285.—Ibid.

MARTIN V. (Otto Colonna), was born at Rome of an illustrious family, and was elected pope in 1417, after the abdication of Gregory XII. His inauguration was very pompous, and he was attended, in a submissive manner, by the emperor and the elector palatine. He persecuted the followers of John Huss in Bohemia, and presided at the council of Constance in 1418. He died in 1431, aged 63.—Ibid.

MARTIN (David), a French protestant divine, was born at Revel, in the diocese of Lavaur in 1639. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to Holland, and became pastor of a church at Utrecht, where he died in 1721. He wrote, 1. A History of the Old and New Testament, 2 vols. fol.; 2. Sermons, 1 vol. 8vo.; 3. Notes on the Bible; 4. A Treatise on Revealed Religion, 2 vols. 8vo.; 5. Two Dissertations, one on the Disputed Passage of 1 John v. 7. and the second on the Testimony of Josephus to our Saviour. These have been translated into English, 8vo. The author also communicated some valuable additions to the second edition of the Dictionary of the French Academy.—Moreri.

MARTIN (James), a benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born in Languedoc in 1694, and died in 1751. He wrote, 1. A Treatise on the Religion of the Ancient Gauls, 2 vols.; 2. History of the Gauls, 2 vols.; 3. Explication of difficult Texts of Scripture, 2 vols.; 4. Explanation of Ancient Monuments, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MARTIN (Raymond), a Spanish monk of the Dominican order, was employed in 1264 by James I. king of Arragon to examine the Talmud, and sent in 1268 to Tunis to labour for the conversion of the Moors. He died in 1286. Martin wrote an excellent Treatise against the Jews, printed at Paris in 1651, with the title of Pugio fidei Christianæ. The best edition is that of Leipzig, 1687.—Moreri.

MARTIN (Thomas), an English antiquary, was born at Thetford in Suffolk, in 1697, and died in 1771. He wrote Monumenta Anglicana, a History of his Native Town in 4to. and contributed to the Fate of Le Neve.—Life by Sir F. Cullum.

MARTIN (Benjamin), an English mathematician, was born in 1704. He was the son of a farmer, and became a schoolmaster at Chichester, where he wrote some good books on mathematics. He afterwards procured a valuable apparatus of instruments, and travelled about the kingdom as a lecturer in experimental philosophy. He finally settled in Fleet-street, London, as an optician, and made several improvements on mathematical and philosophical instruments; but being reduced to poverty by domestic troubles, he attempted his own life. Though the wound was not immediately mortal, it produced a disorder of which he died in 1782. Mr. Martin was a very ingenious and industrious writer. He wrote a Philosophical Grammar, which went through several editions; Young Gentleman and Lady's Philosophy, 2 vols. 8vo.; Philosophia Britannica, 3 vols. 8vo.; a Treatise on Decimal Arithmetic, 8vo.; a Treatise on Trigonometry, 2 vols. 8vo.; Treatise on Optics, 1 vol.; Mathematical Institutes, 2 vols.; Philological Library of Arts and Sciences, 1 vol.; Natural History of England, 2 vols.; Biographia Philosophica, 1 vol.; and several Miscellaneous Tracts. He conducted for some years a Magazine of Arts and Sciences, which seems to have dropped for want of encouragement.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MARTIN (Claude), an ingenious officer in the English service in India, was born at Lyons in 1732 of mean parents. However, he received a good mathematical education at a public school, and at the age of 20 entered into the army with one of his brothers. His regiment was sent to India with general Lally, and in the war of 1756 he behaved with great gallantry, but, being ill-treated, he went into the English service, in which he rose to the rank of colonel. Being employed to make a map of the estates of the nabob of Oude, he recommended himself thereby to his patronage. The nabob loved the European arts, in which he was assisted by Martin, who opened a profitable bank, and other commercial institutions, under his protection, and thereby gained prodigious wealth. Having settled at Lucknow, he built there a magnificent but curious work, in a style of his own, and in which he could enjoy all the mildness and coolness of an European climate with the fervour of the Asiatic. He also erected another on the banks of the Ganges, which was fortified in the European manner. He formed a large museum of natural history; constructed an immense garden stocked with a prodigious variety of plants; and built an observatory, which he furnished with the best astronomical instruments. He died in 1799. His great wealth he distributed principally in charity.—Europ. Mag. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MARTINDALE (Adam), a mathematician, who was deprived of the living of Rothorn in Cheshire for non-conformity in 1662, after which he lived as chaplain in the family of Lord Delamere. He died about 1700. Mr. Martindale wrote a useful little book on surveying, called the Land Meter's Vade Mecum, 12mo.; also twelve Problems about Interest; and two Almanacks, called Country Almanacks. He kept a mathematical school at Warrington in Lancashire, and afterwards at Dunham in Cheshire. In theology he was the author of Divinity Knots Unloosed, 1649, 8vo.; and Truth and Peace promoted, 12mo. 1682.—Calamy.

MARTINI (Martin), a jesuit, who resided many years in China, of which country he wrote some curious memoirs. He returned to Europe in 1651, but is said to have again visited China, where he died at the age of 74. He wrote, 1. Sinicz Historiz decas prima à gentis origine ad Christum natum, 4to.; 2. China illustrata, Amsterdam, folio; 3. a History in Latin of the Wars of the Tartars against China, 8vo.; 4. Relation of the Number and Quality of Chinese Christians.—Moreri.

MARTINIUS (Matthias), a protestant divine, was born in the county of Waldeck in 1572. He was the disciple of Piscator, after which he taught with reputation at Paderborn and Bremen. He distinguished himself at the synod of Dort, and died in 1630. His principal work is a Lexicon philologicum, 2 vols. fol.—Moreri.

MARTINUSIUS (George), or Ptisinovitch, cardinal, was born in 1482 in Croatia, of mean parentage, but he raised himself by his talents to the favour of John Zapol, king of Hungary, who made him minister of state, and on his death in 1540, confided to him the tuition of his son John Sigismund. He had before been made bishop of Great Waradin. He incurred the displeasure of Isabella, mother of his pupil, on which he attached himself to the emperor Ferdinand I. who obtained for him the cardinalship. But being suspected of entering into a treacherous negotiation with the Turks, he was assassinated in his castle of Vints in 1551.—Moreri. De Thou.

MARTIRELLI, a landscape painter, was born at Naples in 1670, and died in 1730.

His pictures are very beautiful.—Pilling-ton.

MARTYN (John), an eminent botanist, was born in London in 1699, and was intended for trade, but his love of learning and science overruled that design. He had from his youth an attachment to botany, in which he was encouraged by Dr. Sherard. In 1720 he translated Tournesort's History of the Plants growing about Paris, which induced him to make a like catalogue of plants about London. He co-operated with Dillenius in forming a society of botanists, which continued till 1726. About this time he read botanical lectures in London, and on the death of Bradley he was chosen professor of botany at Cambridge. In 1727 Dr. Martyn was admitted a member of the royal society, and he was so active in the committee for regulating the library and museum, that his bond for annual payment was cancelled by order of council. He practised physic in the city, and afterwards at Chelsea, but in 1752 he retired to Streatham. In 1761 he resigned his professorship, and died at Chelsea in 1768. His other works are, Tabulæ Synopticæ plantarum officinalium ad methodum Rasionum dispositæ, folio; Methodus plantarum circa Cantabrigiam nascentium, 12mo.; Historia plantarum rariorum decades quinque, fol.; the first Lecture of a Course of Botany, being an introduction to the rest, 8vo.; a Translation of the Georgics and Bucolics of Virgil, with curious notes, two volumes 8vo.; Dissertations on the Æneids of Virgil, 12mo.; an Abridgment of the Philosophical Transactions; Translations of Boerhaave's Treatise on the Powers of Medicine; Harris on the Diseases of Infants; and an Abridgment of Philosophical Papers from the Memoirs of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris, 5 vols. 8vo. He also wrote several papers in the Philosophical Transactions; and some articles in the General Dictionary. He was succeeded in the professorship by his son, the rev. Thomas Martyn, B. D.—Life prefixed to his Dissertations on the Æneid.

MARTYR (Peter), of Anghiera, in the Milanese, was born in 1455. He distinguished himself as an able negotiator, and Ferdinand V. king of Castile and Arragon employed him in the education of his children. He also obtained some ecclesiastical benefices, and died in 1525. He wrote a History of the Discovery of America in Latin, under the title of, De navigatione et Terris de nova repertis, 1587; also a curious relation of his embassy to Egypt in 1509, fol.; and a collection of letters relating to the History of Spain, printed at Amsterdam in 1670, fol.—Moreri.

MARTYR (Peter), a celebrated protestant divine, was born at Florence in 1500. His family name was Vermilini, but his parents gave him that of Martyr, from one Peter, a martyr, whose church stood near their house. After receiving a private education he entered into an Augustine monastery at Fiesoli. He became a distinguished preacher, and had a situation in the cathedral of Naples, which he relinquished after carefully reading the writings of Luther and other reformers. This change in his religious sentiments rendered it expedient for him to quit Italy, and he accordingly went to Strasburg, where he married a nun, who for the same principles had left her convent. On the invitation of Edward VI. Peter Martyr came to England, and was made professor of divinity at Oxford, and canon of Christ church. In the succeeding reign he was obliged to leave the kingdom. He then went to Switzerland, and died at Zurich in 1562. His wife died at Oxford, and in the reign of Mary her remains were taken out of the consecrated ground, and buried beneath a dunghill; but when queen Elizabeth came to the throne, they were again taken up and honourably interred in Christ church. Peter Martyr wrote some pieces against the errors of the church of Rome, and explications of the Scripture.—Rel's Hist. Reform. Wood, A. O.

MARUCELLI (John Stephen), an Italian historical painter, was born in 1646, and died in 1706. One of his principal performances was a representation of Abraham entertaining the angels.—Pillington.

MARVEL (Andrew), a political writer, was the son of a clergyman at Hull in Yorkshire, where he was born in 1620. At the age of 13 he was sent to Trinity college, Cambridge, and in 1657 he became assistant to Milton, as Latin secretary. In the parliament which met at the restoration, he was chosen to represent his native town. He distinguished himself by his integrity as a senator, and by his wit as a writer against the corruptions of the court. Charles II. however delighted in his conversation, but could never prevail with him to support his measures. To effect this he one day sent Lord Danby to Marvel's lodgings, which were very mean, in an obscure court in the Strand. Marvel was much surprised at this visit, but was told by the earl, that his majesty wished to know in what way he could serve him, to which the other replied, "that it was not in the king's power to serve him." His lordship, after some more discourse, offered him from the king any place at court that he should chuse. Marvel answered, "that he could not accept the offer without being ungrateful either to the country, by betraying its interests, or to the king, by voting against him." Danby in conclusion then told him, that "his majesty had sent him one thousand pounds, as a mark of his private esteem." This also he resolutely refused, though when his lordship was gone, he was obliged to borrow a guinea from a friend. He died in 1678. He wrote some keen pieces against Parker, bishop of Oxford, and several miscellaneous poems, and tracts; all of which have been collected and published in 3 vols. 4to. A poetical piece of his in recommendation of Paradise Lost, is usually prefixed to that great work.—Biog. Brit.

MARULLUS (TACIUS), a poet of Calabria in the 5th century, who wrote a panegyric on Attila king of the Huns, which the barbarian requited by causing the poet and his poem to be burnt together.—Voss. de Poet. Lat.

MARULLUS (Michael), a learned Greek, who went to Italy on the taking of Constantinople. He was a poet and soldier; but an atheist in principle, and extravagantly fond of Lucretius. He was drowned in crossing the river Cezina in 1500. His epigrams and other poetical pieces in Greek and Latin were printed at Florence in 4to. in 1497, and at Paris in 1561. They are very licentious.—Moreri.

MARY, the mother of Jesus Christ, was of the tribe of Judah, and of the royal house of David. She espoused Joseph, but when betrothed she miraculously conceived by the Holy Ghost, agreeable to the declaration of the angel Gabriel. When delivered she went into Egypt with the child, and afterwards settled at Nazareth. Little is said of her in the Gospels, and nothing after the ascension of our Saviour; but that she resided with St. John the Evangelist, to whose care she was entrusted by our Lord. The Roman church pretends that she was immaculate, and ascended to heaven without passing through death, whence it has the feast called the assumption of the Virgin. Mary, the wife of Cleophas, is called the sister of the Virgin. She was the mother of St. James the Less, St. Simon, and St. Jude, all of them apostles. She accompanied our Lord to his crucifixion, and was one of the pious women to whom his resurrection was announced by the angels.—Cuvier.

MARY, queen of England, was the daughter of Henry VIII. by Catherine of Aragon, and born in 1517. Her education was liberal, and she acquired to great a knowledge of the Latin language as to undertake a translation of Erasmus's paraphrase on St. John's gospel, which, however, she did not complete. During the life of her father she experienced many marks of his brutal temper, and her inflexible opposition to his will made him sometimes form a resolution of putting her to death, from which he was diverted by the remonstrances and entreaties of archbishop Crammer. The treatment which her mother had experienced, contributed much towards increasing her dislike to Henry, and also to the alterations which he introduced into the church. During the short reign of Edward she lived privately, but could not by any means be prevailed with to join in communion with the protestant divines. On this account that amiable prince was prevailed with, by the artifices of the duke of Northumberland, to set aside his sisters from the succession, and to declare lady Jane Gray his heir. At his death in 1553 that lady was proclaimed queen; but her reign lasted only a few days. The partisans of Mary became numerous, and she was received into London without opposition. In putting to death lady Jane and her husband lord Dudley he betrayed that sanguinary and vengeful temper which was soon afterwards displayed in a violent persecution of the protestants. Even the meek and pious Cranmer, to whom she was indebted for her life, could not escape her bigotry and malice. In 1554 she married Philip of Spain, eldest son of Charles V. with whom she lived on indifferent terms. A disappointment occasioned by a supposed miscarriage, and aggravated by the loss of Calais, produced a fever, of which she died in 1558, and with her ended the domination of the papal power in England.—Rapin. Hume.

MARY II. queen of England, the wife of William III. was the daughter of James II. by Ann Hyde, daughter of the earl of Clarendon. At the age of 15 she was married to William prince of Orange, whom she followed to England in 1689. The same year parliament having declared the crown vacant by the abdication of James, conferred it upon William and Mary. She was of a meek disposition, and did not interfere in matters of government, except when her husband was absent. She died of the small pox in 1694, aged 32, without ever having any issue.—Hume. Fenn. Sermon by Burnet.

MARY STUART, the daughter of James V. king of Scotland, by Maria of Lorraine, was born in 1542. She was only eight days old when her father died, on which she became heiress to the throne. Henry VIII. of England endeavoured to unite the two kingdoms by a marriage between his son Edward and the infant queen of Scots, but his offer being rejected, he sent his troops into Scotland, where they took and plundered Edinburgh, but were soon obliged to re-embark. In 1548 Mary was contracted to Francis dauphin of France, at which court she acquired those accomplishments which rendered her an object of universal admiration, and there at the same time she imbibed those prejudices which proved the source of her misfortunes. In 1558 the marriage was celebrated, and by the direction of their father-in-law Mary and her husband assumed the title of king and queen of England, on the supposed ground of the illegitimacy of Elizabeth, an act of ridiculous ambition, which was afterwards fatal to Mary. In 1559 Henry II. died, and Francis became king of France, but in less than two years he left Mary a widow, on which she returned to her native country, and was received by her subjects with joyful acclamations. Scotland was at this time a prey to fanatical zeal. The presbyterian party carried reformation to shocking lengths, by destroying abbeys, cathedrals, libraries, and even the monuments of the dead. Such was the state of the kingdom at the landing of Mary, who, on the first Sunday after her arrival, ordered mass to be said in the chapel of the palace. This gave great offence to the people, and it was with difficulty they granted to their sovereign that liberty of conscience which they claimed for themselves. Mary shewed a different temper, for she caused it to be proclaimed, that any attempt towards a change or subversion of the reformed church, should be treated as a capital offence. Notwithstanding this liberality on her part, the people in every pageant and spectacle, delighted to insult the queen by ridiculing her religion. Even the royal chapel was assaulted by the mob, who were encouraged by Knox the reformer. Several high officers of marriage were made to Mary, who rejected them all, and bestowed her hand on Henry lord Darnley, son of the earl of Lennox, a young nobleman of prepossessing appearance, but weak and impetuous in his mind and temper, and mean and intemperate in his habits. This inauspicious marriage soon ended in disgust, and the enemies of both took the advantage of widening the breach. They persuaded Darnley that David Rizzio, an old Italian musician, whom the queen had appointed her foreign secretary, had supplanted him in her affections. A conspiracy was formed, and one night, while the queen was at supper with the countess of Argyle, Henry conducted his confederates to the royal apartment, where Rizzio was murdered in the presence of Mary, who was then far advanced in her pregnancy. James Hepburn, earl Bothwell, became now a favourite in the court of Scotland; a man of considerable intrigue, but of unprincipled conduct. By his arts he gained an ascendancy over the mind of Mary, who appointed him lieutenant of the marches. In 1566 she was delivered of a son, afterwards James VI. of Scotland, and the first of England. Darnley, in the mean time seeing himself deprived of power, and generally despised, retired to his country house, which was blown up one night, and the body of the king found in a garden adjoining, without any marks of violence. This deed of darkness occasioned universal horror, and as it left no doubt that Bothwell was the principal cause, so it drew on Mary suspicions which were never effaced till our own days. After a mock trial Bothwell was acquitted, and he was strengthened in the power he had acquired. He now laid aside the mask, and on the 24th of April, 1567, seized the queen, and carried her to the castle of Dunbar, where by entreaties and force he prevailed on her to marry him. This is the great stain on the character of this ill-fated woman, which has called forth the utmost exertions of her enemies and her advocates. The conduct of Bothwell towards her even after this, in keeping her a prisoner under a strong guard, does certainly carry strong presumption that she was forced into this union against her own inclination. A confederacy of the most powerful lords in the kingdom was formed against Bothwell, who finding himself unable to oppose them, escaped from the kingdom, and died miserably in Denmark. Mary was committed to the charge of her greatest enemy, the mother of the earl of Murray, who had assumed the title of regent, and the lords of the confederacy forced the unhappy queen to sign a renunciation of her crown in favour of her son, and he was accordingly crowned at Stirling. After this, the enemies of Mary, who had suffered Bothwell to quit the kingdom, caused different persons to be executed for being concerned in the king's murder. All these solemnly acquitted Mary of being privy to that transaction. Notwithstanding this, the council, for the purpose of rendering her odious, and colouring their own tyranny, produced letters, purporting to be written by her, which, if true, would clearly establish the fact. But they have been incontestibly proved forgeries. Mary having escaped from her prison in the island of Lochleven, hastened to Hamilton, where she found many friends. But the regent Murray marching against them the royal party was defeated. On this Mary fled into England, where she implored the protection of her cousin Elizabeth, who acted with great duplicity for some time, and at length declared that no assistance could be afforded her unless she submitted to a legal trial. After some difficulties this was agreed to, and the cause was to be determined at York by a commission, which finally removed to London, where it was declared, that "nothing had been produced whereby the queen of England could conceive or take any evil opinion of the queen, her good sister, for any thing yet seen." This is a sufficient vindication of Mary's innocence, and yet she was still kept in close confinement. The duke of Norfolk formed the design of marrying Mary, in which he was encouraged by several of the English nobility, and also by the regent Murray. This being discovered by Elizabeth, the duke was sent to the Tower, from whence he was not released till he had promised to renounce all farther correspondence with the queen of Scotland:—but afterwards renewing his ambitious project, he was tried and executed. After a long and rigorous confinement at Coventry, Mary was removed to Fotheringay castle, where she was to undergo the mock formality of a trial on the charge of fomenting conspiracies against Elizabeth. When brought before the commissioners she disclaimed their authority, and asserted her innocence. The commissioners, after hearing her defence, removed the matter to Westminster, and, though not the shadow of a proof was ever produced of the charges alleged, she was declared guilty of conspiring the death of Elizabeth. Mary received the news with exultation, wearied as she was by her unparalleled persecutions. Many foreign powers interested themselves in her behalf, and her son James endeavoured to save her life, but in vain. A warrant was sent down, and read to the royal captive, who only entreated that she might be permitted the consolations of her own religion. This favour was inhumanly refused. She was beheaded within the castle of Fotheringay, Feb. 8, 1587, after praying to God to forgive all who had thirsted without cause for her blood. Thus fell Mary Stuart, a princess of uncommon beauty and accomplishments as well as misfortune. Her remains were interred in Peterborough cathedral, from whence they were removed by order of her son, and deposited in Westminster abbey. The memory of this unfortunate queen has been successfully vindicated by the learned Whitaker and other writers.—Robertson's Hist. Scotland. Stuart's Life of Mary. Hume.

MARY DE MEDICIS, daughter of Francis II. grand duke of Tuscany, and wife of Henry IV. king of France, was born at Florence in 1573. On the death of her husband in 1610 she was named regent of the kingdom. She was a woman of great political intrigue, and of an unbounded ambition. Differences arose between her and Louis, which were compromised by means of Richelieu, whom she introduced to the favour of that monarch. But afterwards a violent breach occurred between her and the cardinal, who was supported by the king. Mary was exiled to Brussels, and all her favourites, and even her physician, were either banished or sent to the Bastille. She died in poverty at Cologne, in 1642. Mary built the elegant palace called the Luxembourg at Paris, and adorned that city with aqueducts and other ornaments.—Hennault. Nov. Diet. Hist.

MARY, queen of Hungary, was sister to the emperor Charles V. and married in 1521 to Louis king of Hungary, who soon after was killed at the battle of Mohatz. His widow was appointed governess of the Low Countries in 1531, and in that station behaved with great courage and prudence. She headed the troops herself in several actions, and was so fond of hunting as to be called Diana and the huntress. She favoured the protestants, and had a taste for literature. Between her and Henry II. king of France there was a great animosity, and she committed considerable ravages in the French provinces. Henry on his part invaded Flanders, and destroyed the palace of Mary, who in return carried devastation into Picardy. The Spanish soldiers called her the mother of the camp. She resigned the government in 1555, and died in Spain in 1558.—Bayle.

MARY, an Anglo-Norman poetess in the 15th century, was born in France, but resided chiefly in England. There are several of her poems on the adventures of chivalry, in the British Museum. M. le Grand has published her fables in French prose. Another work of hers is a tale in French verse of St. Patrick's Purgatory.—Archæologia, vol. xiii.

MASACCIO (Thomas), a celebrated Italian painter, was born in 1417. He was accounted the principal artist of the second age of modern painting, from its revival under Cimabue. He died in 1443.—De Pile. Pitt.

MASCARDI (Augustin), a learned Italian, was born in the republic of Genoa in 1591. Pope Urban VIII. founded for him a professorship of rhetoric in the college of Sapienza; but being of a licentious turn he died in poverty in 1640. He wrote Latin and Italian poems; a History of the Conspiracy of the Count Fiesco; and a curious work entitled, Dell'Arte Istoria, 4to.—Tiraboschi.

MASCARON (Julius), a French bishop, was born at Marseilles in 1634. His reputation as a preacher procured him the bishopric of Tulle, from whence he was translated to that of Agen. He died in 1703. His funeral orations are much esteemed.—Moreri.

MASCHERONI (Laurent), an ingenious mathematician, was born at Bergamo, in the Venetian States, in 1750. He published some notes on the Integral calculus of Euler, and had a share in the experiments performed by the institute of Bologna with a view of proving the figure of the earth by the descent of bodies. The invention, however, which has rendered his name conspicuous, was his celebrated Geometria del compasso, "the compass Geometry." Mascheroni died at Paris in 1800.

MASCLER (Francis), a French divine, who was deprived of a canonry in the cathedral of Amiens for being a jansenist. He died in 1728, aged 66. His works are, 1. A Hebrew Grammar, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Ecclesiastical Conferences of the Diocese of Amiens; 3. The Catechism of Amiens.—Ibid.

MASCIER (John Baptist de), a French writer, was born at Caen in 1697, and died at Paris in 1760. He published, 1. A Description of Egypt, 4to.; 2. An Idea of the ancient and modern Government of Egypt, 12mo.; 3. Christian Reflections on the great Truths of Faith; and some other works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MASENIUS (James), a jesuit, was born at Dalen in the duchy of Juliers in 1606. He was professor of eloquence at Cologne, and died in 1681. He wrote, 1. Palæstra Eloquentiæ ligatæ, 4 vols. 12mo.; 2. Palæstra styli Romani; 3. Anima Historia, seu Vita Caroli V. et Ferdinandi, 4to.; 4. Notes, &c. to the Annals of Treves, fol.; 5. Epitome Annalium Trivenium, 8vo.; 6. Latin Poems, particularly one on the Fall of Man, which Lauder falsely charged Milton with having stolen from when writing his Paradise Lost.—Moreri.

MASHAM (Damaris lady), an ingenious lady, was the daughter of Dr. Ralph Cudworth, and the wife of sir Francis Masham, of Oates in Essex, by whom she had a son. She was the intimate friend of the great Mr. Locke, who died at her house. Lady Masham wrote a discourse concerning the Love of God, 8vo.; and Occasional Thoughts in reference to a virtuous and christian Life, 8vo. She died in 1708, aged 50, and was buried in the abbey church at Bath.—Ballard's Brit. Ladies.

MASIUS (Andrew), a learned man of the 16th century. He was born at Linnich near Brussels, and became counsellor to the duke of Cleves. He died in 1573, aged 57. Masius was uncommonly well versed in antient history and geography. His principal works are; a Syriac Lexicon and Grammar, folio; a Commentary on the Book of Joshua, fol.; and Disputatio de cæna domini, 1575.—Moreri.

MASO (Thomas), or Finiguerra, a goldsmith of Florence in the 15th century, who is said to have invented the art of engraving on copper. He flourished about 1480.—Moreri.

MASON (Francis), a learned divine, was born in the county of Durham about 1566, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Merton college. In 1599 he was presented to the rectory of Oxford in Suffolk. He was afterwards appointed chaplain to James I. and made archdeacon of Norfolk. He died at Oxford in 1621. His learned work, entitled Vindiciæ Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, has been translated and published in English with a preface and notes by the Rev. John Lindsay.—Wood, A. O.

MASON (John), a dissenting divine of considerable merit, who was a master of arts of one of the Scotch universities. He wrote an excellent little volume of ethics, entitled, "Self-Knowledge," of which there have been several editions; he was also the author of fifty-two Practical Discourses for the use of Families, 2 vols. 8vo.; An Essay on Elocution, 8vo.; two Essays on the Power of Poetical and Prosaic Numbers, 8vo.; a Plain and Modest Plea for Christianity, 8vo.; the Student and Pastor, or Directions how to attain to eminence and usefulness in those respective characters, 12mo. He died about 1760. He is not to be mistaken for John Mason of Water Stratford, near Buckingham, who by being bewildered in the doctrines of Calvinism persuaded himself and others that he was the Elias appointed to proclaim the approach of Christ, and the glorious state of the millennium. He died in 1695.—Granger.

MASON (William), an English poet and divine, was the son of a clergyman in Yorkshire, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge. In 1749 he was elected fellow of Pembroke hall through the interest of his friend Mr. Gray. In 1748 he published a poem entitled, Isis, which being considered as an attack on the university of Oxford, was answered by Mr. Warton in another, called, the Triumphs of Isis. In 1754 he entered into orders and was appointed chaplain to the king, and presented to the valuable living of Aston in Yorkshire. He afterwards obtained the precentorship of York cathedral, which leading his mind to church music, he composed a book on that subject. Mr. Gray the poet, appointed him one of his executors, and Mason wrote the life and published the letters of his friend. He also composed the epitaph on Gray's monument in Westminster-abbey. In the American war Mr. Mason shewed himself zealous on the side of those who were called the patriotic party; for which he was struck out of the list of royal chaplains. The disorders of the French revolution, however, allayed his political fervour, and he renounced the whig notions for which he was once so zealous. In getting out of his carriage he slipped and bruised his leg, which being neglected occasioned a gangrene, of which he died, April 5, 1797. His Elfrida and Caracacus, two dramas on the Greek model, are esteemed the best of his performances. He also wrote a poem, entitled, The English Garden; and translated into English verse Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting, to which sir Joshua Reynolds added valuable notes.—Monthly Mag. Gent. Mag.

MASON (sir John), an eminent statesman, was born at Abingdon in Berkshire, and educated at All Souls college, Oxford. Becoming a favourite with Henry VIII. he employed him in several embassies, and made him a member of his privy council. He afterwards served Edward VI.; and also contrived to hold his places under Mary. Queen Elizabeth made him treasurer of her chamber, and he was chosen chancellor of the university of Oxford. He died in 1566. His favourite maxim was, "do, and say nothing."—Biog. Brit.

MASQUE DE FER, or the "Iron Mask," the name of a person unknown who was conveyed in the most secret manner to the castle of Pignerol, from whence he was transferred to the isles St. Margaret. He was a man taller than ordinary, and extremely well made. His accomplishments were evidently great, and he had a fine taste for music. He always wore a mask with steel springs, which was so constructed as to allow him free liberty to eat and drink. His keepers treated him with the greatest respect. At Pignerol he was entrusted to the charge of an officer named St. Mars, on whose appointment as lieutenant of the isles this unknown personage accompanied him, as he finally did to the Bastille, where he died in 1703, and was buried under the name of Marchiali. Two gentlemen who were prisoners in the room over him contrived to hold some conversation with him by means of the chimney, and found that he was a man of general learning; but he informed them that a discovery of his name and rank would be death both to him and them. Numerous conjectures have been formed, and dissertations written on this historical subject, which for all that has been said still remains impenetrable obscurity. What is remarkable is that no person of distinction was missing at the time of his being consigned to the custody of St. Mars.—Nouv. Dict. Hist. Voltaire's Age of Louis XIV.

MASSAC (Raymond), a physician of Orleans in the 16th century. He wrote, 1. Pæan Aurelianus, 4to.; 2. Pugez, live de lymphis pugiatis, lib. ii. 1599.—Moreri.

MASSANIELLO, or ANELLO (Thomas), a fisherman at Naples, who caused a revolt in that city on account of taxes, and gathered a rabble of near 50,000 persons, by which means he usurped the sovereign power and ruled the city with great terror about ten days, and was then killed and his body cast into a ditch, A. D. 1646.—Moreri.

MASSARI (Lucio), an historical painter, was born at Bologna in 1569. He studied under Ludovico Caracci, and improved himself at Rome. He died in 1633.—D'Argenville.

MASSARIA (Alexander), a celebrated physician, was born at Vicenza. He died at Padua in 1598, at an advanced age. His works are, 1. De Peste, 4to.; 2. Disputationes duæ, quarum prima de scopis mittendi sanguinem in febris, altera de purgatione in morborum principio, 4to.; 3. Practica Medica, folio.—Moreri.

MASSE (John Baptiste), miniature painter to the French king, was born at Paris in 1687, and died in 1767. He copied the great pictures of Le Brun at Versailles, from which some fine engravings were published in 1758.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MASSEVILLE (Louis le Vavasseur de), a French topographical writer, was born at Montebourg, and died at Valogne in 1733, aged 66. He wrote the History and Geography of Normandy, 8 vols. 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MASSIEU (William), a French writer, was born at Caen in 1665. He was a jesuit, but afterwards quitted the order, and became tutor to the children of M. de Sacy. He was pensionary of the academy of inscriptions, and a member of the French academy. He died in 1722. He published an edition of the Greek Testament; a Translation of Pindar; History of French Poetry; a Latin Poem on Coffee, and several dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions.—Moreri.

MASSILLON (John Baptiste), a famous French prelate, was born at Hieres in Provence in 1663. At the age of 18 he entered into the congregation of the oratory. He acquired a superiority over all the preachers of his time, and Louis XIV. once said to him, "Father, when I hear other preachers I go away much pleased with them, but when I hear you I go away much displeased with myself." In 1717 he was appointed bishop of Clermont, and in 1719 admitted a member of the French academy. He died in 1742. His works have been printed in 14 vols. 12mo.—New. Dict. Hist.

MASSINGER (Philip), a dramatic writer, was born at Salisbury in 1585, and educated at Oxford, but he left the university without taking a degree. He published 14 plays of his own, and some in which he was assisted by others. His works have been reprinted in 1761, in 4 vols. 8vo. and again in 1779. He died in 1639.—Langbaine. Wood.

MASSINISSA, king of a small country in Africa, who took part with the Carthaginians against Rome; but his nephew being taken prisoner by Scipio, he sent him back to his uncle with presents, which so affected Massinissa that he became the ally of the Romans, who were indebted to him for many victories. At his death he made Scipio Æmilianus guardian of his kingdom. He died B. C. 149.

MASSOLINO (da Panicale), a painter, was born at Florence in 1413. His greatest performance was a large picture of the history of St. Peter. He died in 1450.—Pilkington.

MASSON (Papirius), a French writer, was born in 1544. He was at first a jesuit, and afterwards a lawyer. He died in 1611. His Annals were printed in 1598, 4 books, 4to. He wrote some other works.—Moreri.

MASSON (John), a French protestant divine, who died in Holland about 1750. He wrote a Critical History of the Republic of Letters, 15 vols. 12mo.; Lives of Horace, Ovid, and Pliny the Younger, 3 vols. 8vo.; History of Peter Bayle and his Works, 12mo.—New. Dict. Hist.

MASSON (Anthony), a French engraver who excelled in portraits; his plates of the disciples at Emmaus, viscount Turenne, and the duke d'Harcourt, are most esteemed. He died at Paris in 1702, aged 66.—Ibid.

MASSON (Innocent le), a Carthusian and general of his order, was born in 1628. He rebuilt the Grande Chartreuse after it had been burnt down. He died in 1703. Masson collected the statutes of his order with learned notes, printed at Paris in 1703, folio. Anthony Masson, a religious of the order of Minims, who died at Vincennes in 1700, wrote a History of Noah and the Deluge, 12mo.; History of Abraham, and other works.—Moreri.

MASSON DES GRANGES (Daniel), a French priest, who died in 1760, aged 60. He wrote an excellent work entitled, The Modern Philosopher, or the Unbeliever Condemned at the Tribunal of Reason, 1765, 12mo.—New. Dict. Hist.

MASSUET (Renatus), a learned benedictine, of the congregation of St. Maur, was born in 1663, and died in 1716. He published an edition of Irenæus, 1710, folio; also a fifth volume of the Acts of Saints of the Order of St. Benedict, and other works.—Moreri.

MASTELLETA (John Andrew), a painter, was born at Bologna in 1577. He was instructed in the school of the Caracci, and afterwards studied the works of Parmesan. Employing black more than other colour, he thereby lessened the value of his works. Being of a melancholy turn he entered into a monastery, where he died.—De Piles.

MATANI (Anthony), a physician, was born at Pistoia in Italy in 1730. He became medical professor at Pisa, and died at his native place in 1769. His principal works are, 1. De Aneurismatibus Præcordiorum morbis Animadversiones; 2. Heliodori Lariciæ capita optico-rum & græco latinè conversâ; 3. Account of the natural Productions of the Territory of Pistoia; 4. De Nosocomiorum Regimini; 5. De Remediis Tractatus.—New. Dict. Hist.

MATERNUS DE CILANO (George Christian), a learned German, was born at Preburg, and died at Altena in Lower Saxony in 1773. His works are, 1. De Terræ concussione; 2. De causis Lucis Borealis; 3. De motu humorum progressivo veteribus non ignoto; 4. De Saturnalium origine et celebrandi ritu apud Romanos, &c.—New. Dict. Hist.

MATHER ('Increase, D.D.), a puritan divine, was born in New England. In the time of Cromwell he had a church at Gloucester, but on the approach of the restoration he returned to America. He died in 1723, aged 84. He wrote a Brief History of the Wars with the Indians in New England, 1676; Divine Right of Infant Baptism; Discourse to the Person of Christ, 8vo.; Diatribæ de signo Filii Hominis, et de secundo Messie adventu, 8vo.; De successu Evangelii apud Indos in Nova Angliâ, 8vo.; Discourse concerning Comets, 8vo.; and several other pieces.—Lift by his son.

MATHER (Cotton), an eminent divine, was the son of the last-mentioned, and born at Boston in 1663. In 1684 he became assistant to his father, and distinguished himself by his piety and learning. In 1710 the university of Glasgow conferred on him the degree of D. D. and in 1714 he was chosen a member of the royal society of London. He died in 1728. He wrote a number of books, among which are an Ecclesiastical History of New England, folio; the Chris- tian Philosopher, 8vo.; the Wonders of the Invisible World, being an Account of the Trials of several Witches, lately executed in New England, &c. In this last work he shewed an astonishing degree of credulity.—Biog. Brit.

MATHIAS (St.), one of the twelve apostles, and elected after the death of Judas. He is said to have preached the gospel in Ethiopia, where he suffered martyrdom. The ancient heretics had a gospel which they pretended was written by this apostle.—Cave.

MATHIAS, emperor of Germany, was the son of Maximilian II. and succeeded his brother Rodolph II. in 1612. The empire was then at war with the Turks, with whom Mathias concluded a peace in 1615, but the war was renewed in 1618, and continued thirty years. Mathias died at Vienna in 1619, aged 62.—Univ. Hist.

MATHIAS CORVINUS, called the great, king of Hungary and Bohemia, was the son of John Huniades. The enemies of his father confined him in prison in Bohemia, but on regaining his liberty he was elected king of Hungary in 1458. His election, however, was opposed by many of the Hungarian lords, who offered the crown to Frederick III. The Turks profiting by these divisions invaded the country, but were expelled by Mathias, who compelled Frederick to yield to him the crown of St. Stephen, of which he had obtained possession. The war was afterwards renewed, and Mathias overrunning Austria took Vienna and Neustadt, on which the emperor was obliged to make a dishonourable peace in 1487. Mathias reformed many abuses, particularly with respect to duels and law-suits, and was preparing an expedition against the Turks when he died of an apoplexy in 1490.—Ibid.

MATHIAS (Christian), a Lutheran divine, was born at Meldorp in Holstein in 1584. He became successively professor of philosophy and divinity in several universities, and died at Utrecht in 1655. His principal works are, Historia Patriarcharum, quarto; and Theatrum Historicum, 4to.—Moreri.

MATHON DE LA COÛR (James), a mathematician, was born at Lyons in 1712, and died in that city in 1770. He was a member of the academy in his native place, and published a memoir on the best mode of supplying the action of wind upon large vessels; Elements of Dynamics and Mechanics, 3 vols. 12mo.; Essay on Calculating the Movements of Machines by the Reaction of Water. His son Charles Joseph was born at Lyons in 1738, and put to death by the revolutionary tribunal in 1793. He wrote Letters on the Public Pictures exhibited in 1763, 1765, and 1767; A Dissertation on the Alteration of the Laws of Sparta, by Lycurgus, a Prize Essay, 1771; Idylls in Prose; and several other ingenious pieces.—New. Dict. Hist.

MATILDA or MAUD, the daughter of Henry I. king of England, and wife of Henry IV. emperor of Germany, was nominated in 1135 successor to the English throne by her father; but in her absence Stephen usurped the title. Arriving in England with a large army in 1139 she defeated Stephen, and was acknowledged as queen in a general assembly or parliament held in 1141. Stephen afterwards defeated the empress in his turn, on which the national synod again declared for him, and Matilda was obliged to leave the kingdom. On the death of the emperor she married Geoffrey Plantagenet, earl of Anjou, by whom she had a son, afterwards Henry II. king of England. Matilda died in 1167, aged 67.—Rapin. Hume.

MATIGNON (James de), prince of Montagne, and count of Thorigni, a famous general of France, was born in 1526. He displayed great courage when young in several battles, and in 1572 commanded the royal army in Normandy. In 1579 he was made a marshal of France, and assisted as constable at the coronation of Henry IV. He died in 1597.—Moreri.

MATTEI (Paolo da), an historical painter, was born at Naples in 1661. He was the disciple of Luca Giordano, and distinguished himself by the exactness with which he copied the works of the greatest masters. He died in 1728.—Pilkington.

MATYS (Quintin), an historical and portrait painter, was born at Antwerp in 1460. He was brought up a blacksmith, which trade he abandoned, and became an excellent artist. A descent from the cross, in the cathedral of Antwerp, is his master-piece. He died in 1529. His son, John Matys, was a good painter, but not equal to his father.—De Piles. D'Argenville.

MATTHEW, or LEVI, the son of Alphaeus, an apostle of Jesus Christ, before which he had been a publican, i. e. a tax-gatherer or receiver of tribute. His gospel is supposed to have been written A.D. 64. Some critics think that Matthew wrote it originally in Hebrew or Syriac, whence it was translated into Greek, but this is mere conjecture. Matthew is said to have been put to death in Parthia, where, and in Persia, he had propagated christianity with zeal and success.—Cave. Dupin. Percy's Key to the N. T.

MATTHEW CANTACUZENUS, the son of John emperor of the East, and his associate in the empire in 1354. John abdicated the throne some time after, on which Matthew remained emperor with John Palæologus. These princes at length disagreed, and had recourse to arms. A battle was fought between them in Thrace, and Matthew being taken prisoner, was compelled to renounce the throne to his rival. He is said to have then retired to the monastery of Mount Athos, where he composed Commentaries on the Song of Solomon.—Univ. Hist. Moreri.

MATTHEW of Westminster, an English monk and historian of the 14th century. He wrote a chronicle entitled, Flores Historiarum, præcipue de Rebus Britannicis ab exordio Mundi, usque ad ann. 1307, published at London in 1567, and at Frankfort in 1601, folio. The author was faithful but superstitious.—Nicholson's Hist. Lib.

MATTHEWS (Tobias), archbishop of York in the reign of James I. was a great ornament to the university of Oxford, and an eloquent and frequent preacher. He was translated from Durham to York in 1606. He died in 1628, aged 82. The only piece of his in print is a Latin Sermon against Campian. His son Tobias was educated at Christ church, Oxford, after which he turned Catholic and entered among the jesuits. He was a man of considerable political intrigue, and acted as a spy for the court of Rome. He died in 1655.—Biog. Brit. Wood.

MATTHEWS (Thomas), an English admiral, was a native of Glamorganshire. He commanded in the Mediterranean in 1744, and fought an obstinate but indecisive battle off Toulon with the combined fleets, in which the brave captain Cornwall fell. Owing to his not being supported by Lestock, his second in command, admiral Matthews failed in gaining a complete victory; and yet for this he was dismissed the service, and Lestock acquitted. Matthews retired to his estate in Glamorganshire, and died there in 1751.

MATTHIEU (Peter), a French historian, was born in 1583. He was a zealous partisan of the league, and attended Louis XIII. to the siege of Montauban. He died at Toulouse in 1621. He wrote, 1. A History of memorable Events in the Reign of Henry the Great; 2. The History of the Death of that Monarch; 3. The History of St. Louis; 4. The History of France from Francis I. to Louis XIII. 2 vols. folio, &c.—Moreri.

MATTHIOLUS (Peter Andrew), an eminent physician, was born at Siena in Italy about 1500, and died of the plague at Trent in 1577. He published Commentaries on Dioscorides, in Italian, 1548, 4to. They were afterwards translated into Latin, and published by Desmoulins at Lyons in 1572, folio. This is a work of great value. All his writings were collected and printed at Basse in 1598, folio, with the notes of Gaspard Bartholin. He is not to be confounded with another physician of the same name, who was professor at Padua, where he died in 1498. He wrote a scarce book, entitled, Ars Memorativa, 4to.—Halleri Bibl. Bot. Moreri.

MATTI (Emanuel), a Spanish poet, was born in 1663 at Oropesa, in New Castile. Pope Innocent XII. appointed him dean of Alicant, where he died in 1737. His poems were published in 1682, and his letters and latin poetry at Madrid in 1735, in 2 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

MATURINO, an historical painter, was born at Florence in 1490. He was the disciple of Raphael, who employed him in executing several of his designs. He afterwards assisted Polidoro de Carravaggio, and his works are equal to those of that master. Maturino died in 1527. De Pict. D'Argenville.

MATY (Matthew), an eminent physician, was born in Holland in 1718. He took his doctor's degree at Leyden, and in 1740 settled in England. In 1750 he commenced a periodical work, which was printed at the Hague, called Le Journal Britannique, giving an account of the principal productions of the English press. In 1758 he was chosen fellow of the royal society, to which, in 1765, he became secretary. He was also librarian of the British museum, and died in 1776. He wrote the Memoirs of the Earl of Chesterfield, prefixed to that nobleman's works, in 2 vols. 4to.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

MATY (Paul Henry), son of the preceding, was born in 1745, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1774 he became chaplain to lord Stormont, ambassador at Paris. His advancement in the church was hindered by some scruples he entertained respecting the doctrine of the Trinity. He was appointed one of the librarians of the British museum, and in 1778 a secretary of the royal society. In 1782 he began a literary Review, which he continued till 1786. In 1784, when there were great divisions in the royal society, occasioned by the abrupt dismissal of Dr. Hutton from the post of foreign secretary, Mr. Maty resigned his place in disgust. He died in 1787. The year following was published a volume of his sermons, in which, by mistake, were inserted some that he translated from archbishop Secker's works.

MAUCHARD (Burchard David), a learned physician, was born at Marbach in 1696. He became physician to the duke of Wirtemberg, and professor of physic and anatomy at Tübingen, where he died in 1751. He wrote several theses on medical subjects.—Novo. Diß. Hist.

MAUCROIX (Francis de), a French ecclesiastic, and canon of the cathedral of Rheims, where he died in 1703, aged 90. He translated the Philippics of Demosthenes; the Euthydemæ and Hippiæ of Plato; some of the Orations of Cicero; and other works, into French. He also wrote some pieces in conjunction with La Fontaine; and in 1726 appeared his Miscellaneous Works, including Poems.—Ibid.

MAUDUIT (Michael), a priest of the oratory, was born at Viré in Normandy, and died at Paris in 1709, aged 75. He published, 1. A Treatise on Religion against the Sceptics; 2. A Translation of the Psalms into French Verse; 3. Analyses of most of the Books of the New Testament, 8 vols. 12mo.

—Novo. Diſt. Hiſt.

MAUDUIT (Iſrael), an Engliſh political writer, was born at Exeter in 1708, and educated at the academy of Mr. Hallet, with a view to the miniſtry among the diſſenters. After officiating in that capacity ſome time he quitted it, and became partner with his brother, who was a merchant in London. He greatly diſtinguiſhed himſelf as a political writer, and his Conſiderations on the German War, printed in 1760, made much noiſe, and had a great effect on the public mind. He was appointed agent for the province of Maſſachuſetts, and in 1769 he publiſhed a ſhort View of the Hiſtory of the New England Colonies. In 1774 he printed a pamphlet entitled, The Caſe of the Diſſenting Miniſters. He alſo wrote ſeveral pamphlets during the American war againſt adminiſtration. Mr. Mauduit died in 1787.
—Europ. Mag.

MAUGIN (John), a French writer of the 16th century, was a native of Anjou, whence he is called the Angevin. He wrote a work entitled, The New Iſtlan, Prince of Leonnois, printed at Paris in 1554. He alſo tranſlated Machiavel's Diſcourſes upon Livy into French.—Moreri.

MAUPERTUIS (Peter Louis Moreau de), a celebrated philoſopher, was born at St. Malo in 1698. He was ſome time in the military ſervice, which he quitted and devoted himſelf to ſcientific purſuits. In 1723 he became a member of the French academy, and about five years after was choſen a fellow of the royal ſociety of London. In 1736 he was ſent with other academicians to the North, to determine the figure of the earth, which ſervice they performed with reputation. At the invitation of the prince of Pruſſia, afterwards Frederick the Great, he went to Berlin in 1740, and was appointed preſident and director of the academy. He accompanied that king in his campaigns againſt the Auſtrians, but expoſing himſelf too much at the battle of Molwitz, he was made priſoner and ſent to Vienna, where he was well received by the emperor. He was ſoon permitted to return to Berlin, after receiving ſeveral marks of the Imperial bounty. He was of an irritable temper, and had a diſpute with Koenig, profeſſor of philoſophy at Franeker, and another with Voltaire, who exerted his ſatirical talents againſt him. This, however, was not much to the credit of the poet, who had before paid the higheſt compliments to Maupertuis, and from whom he had received no injury to juſtify his wanton attacks. Maupertuis died at Baſil on a viſit to the Bernouillis in 1759. His works are, 1. The Figure of the Earth determined; 2. The Meaſurement of a Degree of Meridian; 3. Diſcourſe on the Figure of the Stars; 4. Elements of Geography; 5. Nautical Astronomy; 6. Elements of Astronomy; 7. Physical Diſſertation on a White Negro; 8. Essay on Coſmography; 9. Reflections on the Origin of Languages; 10. Eſſay of Moral Philoſophy; and ſeveral miſcellaneous papers and elogies in the Memoirs of the Academy of Berlin.—Novo. Diſt. Hiſt. Hutton.

MAUPERTUY (John Baptiſte Drouet de), a French eccleſiaſtic and miſcellaneous writer, was born at Paris in 1650. He was for ſome time at the bar, and had a place under government, but afterwards he entered into orders and obtained a canonry. He died in 1736. He wrote the Sentiments of a Chriſtian on the True Love of God; the Hiſtory of the Holy Church of Vienne; on the Veneration due to Relics; of the Dangerous Commerce between the Sexes; and ſeveral tranſlations into French.—Novo. Diſt. Hiſt.

MAUR (St.), a diſciple of St. Benediſt, and abbot of Glaufeuil in Anjou. He died about 584. At the beginning of the 17th century was founded a famous congregation of benedictines of St. Maur, which has produced many learned men.—Dupin. Mereri.

MAUR (Don Charles le), brigadier in the Spaniſh army and director-general of the engineers. He was an excellent mathematician and mechanic; and conſtructed ſeveral canals and other great works. His Treatiſe on Dynamics and his Elements of Mathematics are eſteemed. He died in 1785.—Novo. Diſt. Hiſt.

MAUREPAS (John Frederic Philippeaux, count de), a French ſtateſman, was born in 1701, and in 1715 was appointed ſecretary of ſtate; which, conſidering his youth, muſt have been a mere ſinecure. So early as 1723 he was made ſuperintendent of the marine, and in 1738 miniſter of ſtate. By the intrigues of madame Pompadour he was exiled to Bourges in 1749. He was not recalled till 1774, when Louis XVI. entruſted the public affairs to his management. He attended greatly to the marine department, and was a liberal encourager of the ſciences; but the part he took in aſſiſting America againſt England is a reflection on his political prudence. He died in 1781. His memoirs, written by himſelf, are curious but careleſſly written; they were printed at Paris in 1792, 2 vols. 8vo.—Novo. Diſt. Hiſt.

MAURICE, of Naſſau, prince of Orange, was the ſon of William, after whoſe death in 1584 he governed the Low Countries, being then only eighteen years old. He evinced, however, great courage and talents; and being named captain-general of the United Provinces, eſtabliſhed that liberty which his father had begun. He made himſelf maſter of Breda in 1590, and this was followed by the capture of Zutphen, Deventer, Hulſt, Nimeguen, and Gertruydenburg. He defeated the troops of the archduke Albert in 1597, and compell'd the Spaniards to abandon the Low Countries the ſame year. In 1630 he was forced to raise the siege of Dunkirk, but he soon after gained a great victory over Albert near Nieupoort. This was followed by numerous conquests. Maurice now aimed at the sovereignty of Holland, in which design he was opposed by the virtuous Barneveldt, who lost his life for resisting the ambition of the prince, who died in 1625, aged 55.—Hist. of the Princes of Nassau.

MAURICEAU (Francis), a surgeon of Paris, who distinguished himself chiefly in midwifery, and the diseases of women. His works are, 1. a Treatise on the Disorders of Pregnant Women; 2. Observations on Midwifery, the Diseases of Mothers and of New-born Children. The author died in 1707.—Moreri.

MAURITIUS (Tiberius), a Roman emperor, was born in Cappadocia in 539. He was of a distinguished family, which originally came from Rome. After filling several places in the court of Tiberius Constantine, he obtained the command of the army against the Persians, and distinguished himself so well as to obtain the emperor's daughter in marriage. In 582 he was crowned emperor. He re-established Chosroes II. on the throne of Persia; and was engaged in a war with the Arabs, who had ravaged his territories, when his general, Phocas, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, and having taken Mauritius prisoner at Chalcedon, put him to death with his five sons, A.D. 602, and the 63d of his age.—Crevier. Univ. Hist.

MAUROLICO (Francis), a mathematician, was born at Messina in 1494. He was abbe of Santa Maria del Porto in Sicily, and taught mathematics with great reputation. He died in 1575. His works are, 1. An edition of the Spherics of Theodosius; 2. Emendatio et restitutio Conicorum Apollonii Pergæi; 3. Archimedis Monumenta omnia; 4. Euclidis Phænomena, &c.—Tiraboschi.

MAURUS (Terentianus), a Latin poet and grammarian, who flourished under Trajan. He wrote a poem, de Literis, Syllabis, Pedibus, & Metris, which is in the Corpus Poetarum of Maittaire. under the title of de Arte Metrica.—Vossius de Poet. Lat.

MAUSSAC (Philip James), a counsellor in the parliament of Toulouse, and president of the court of aids at Montpellier, died in 1650, aged 70. He wrote notes on Harpocration, Paris 1614, 4to. and some miscellaneous tracts, which shew his critical abilities to advantage.—Moreri.

MAUTOUR (Philibert Bernard Moreau de), auditor of the chamber of accounts at Paris, and member of the academy of inscriptions. He was born at Beaune in 1654, and died in 1737. He wrote some learned papers in the Memoirs of the academy of belles lettres, and poems. He was also the editor of an abridgment of Petavius's Chronology, 4 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

MAXENTIUS (Marcus Aurelius Valerius),

Roman emperor, was the son of Maximianus Hercules, and declared himself Augustus in 306. He was opposed by Galerius Maximianus, who was defeated, and slew himself. Maxentius then marched into Africa, where he became odious by his cruelties. Constantine afterwards defeated him in Italy, and he was drowned in crossing the Tiber in 312.—Univ. Hist. Crevier.

MAXIMILIAN I. archduke of Austria, was the son of Frederic IV. created king of the Romans in 1486, and elected emperor on the death of his father in 1493. He had several wars with France, which were mostly successful. He formed the design of making himself pope, for which purpose he assumed the ancient title of the Roman emperors of Pontifex Maximus, and he endeavoured to prevail on Julius II. to admit him as coadjutor. Maximilian united with England against France, and served under the orders of Henry VIII. in 1513. He was, however, a man of science, and wrote Memoirs of his own life, and some poems. He died in 1519.—Moreri.

MAXIMILIAN II. emperor of Germany, was the son of the emperor Ferdinand I. and elected king of the Romans in 1562. He was chosen king of Hungary and Bohemia, and succeeded his father in 1564. He died at Ratibon in 1576, aged 50.—Ibid.

MAXIMILIAN, duke of Bavaria in the 17th century, was called, on account of his courage and success, the defender of Germany; and, for his singular prudence, he acquired the name of Solomon. He zealously opposed the protestants, and was considered as one of the principal supporters of the catholic religion. In 1620 he gained the battle of Prague against Frederic prince Palatine, who had been elected king of Bohemia. For these services Maximilian was named an elector of the empire. He died in 1651, aged 70.—Moreri.

MAXIMILIAN-EMMANUEL, elector of Bavaria, rendered great service to the emperor Leopold. He signalized himself at the siege of Neuheusel in 1685; at that of Buda in 1686; and the year following in the battle of Mohatz. He commanded about this time the army of Hungary, and took Belgrade sword in hand Sept. 6, 1689. He was afterwards governor of the Low Countries; but taking the part of France in the war about the Spanish succession, he was put to the ban of the empire, and deprived of his estates in 1706, but was restored at the general peace. He died at Munich in 1726.—Ibid.

MAXIMIANUS (Marcus Aurelius Valerius Hercules), a Roman emperor, who from being a common soldier, was associated in the government by Diocletian. He distinguished himself by his military skill and bravery against the barbarians, and defeated Aurelius Julius, who had assumed the imperial title in Africa. When Diocletian abdicated the crown in 304, he compelled Maximianus, much against his will, to do the same; but about a year afterwards he resumed the dignity, and opposed his son Maxentius. The troops, however, mutinied against Maximianus, who fled into Gaul, where he was put to death by order of his son-in-law Constantine, A.D. 310, aged 60.—Cressier. Moreri.

MAXIMIANUS (Galerius Valerius), emperor of the East, was originally a shepherd in Dacia, afterwards a soldier, and raised to the imperial dignity by Diocletian, who also gave him his daughter in marriage. He conquered the Goths and Dalmatians, but was defeated by the Persians, over whom he afterwards gained a complete victory. In 305 he compelled Diocletian to abdicate the throne; but his cruelty soon rendered him odious to the Romans, who raised Maxentius to the throne. Maximianus died wretchedly, A.D. 311. He was a bitter persecutor of the christians, whose God he implored for relief in his last illness, after vainly seeking aid from the heathen deities.—Ibid.

MAXIMINUS (Caius Julius Verus), emperor of Rome, was the son of a peasant in Thrace, and having displayed great courage in the Roman armies, he rose to command. On the death of Alexander Severus, he caused himself to be proclaimed emperor A.D. 235. He was a great persecutor; and put to death above four thousand persons, on a mere suspicion of their being concerned in a conspiracy against him. His soldiers assassinated him near Aquileia, A.D. 256. His stature and strength were very extraordinary, and his disposition proportionably brutal. Forty pounds of meat and eighteen bottles of wine, were his ordinary allowance for a day. His strength was such that he is said to have stopped a chariot in full speed with one of his fingers.—Ibid.

MAXIMUS (Magnus), a Spaniard, was general of the Roman army in Britain when he proclaimed himself emperor A.D. 383. Gratian marched against him, but was defeated, and assassinated shortly after. Maximus, having made himself master of Gaul, Britain, and Spain, fixed the seat of his empire at Treves. He next marched into Italy, where he committed dreadful cruelties, but was at last besieged in Aquileia, by the emperor Theodosius. The soldiers of Maximus delivered him up to Theodosius, who caused him to be beheaded in 388.—Ibid.

MAXIMUS of Tyre, a platonic philosopher, who visited Rome in 146, but died in his own country in the reign of Commodus. There are forty-one of his discourses extant, the best edition of which is that of Reiske, 8vo. 1774. They have been translated into French by Formey.—Stanley. Fabricius.

MAXIMUS the cynic, and tutor of Julian the apostate, was a native of Ephesus. He professed magic, and assured Julian of success in his Persian expedition. He also flattered that prince by saying, that the soul of Alexander had passed into him. Maximus was put to death by order of the emperor Valens in 366.—Ibid.

MAY (Thomas), an English poet and historian, was born in Suffex in 1594, and educated at Cambridge; after which he entered of Gray's-inn, where he wrote some plays and translated several Latin authors, particularly Lucan. Charles I. employed him in writing two historical poems; one on the life of Henry II. and the other on the reign of Edward III. But in the civil war, May joined the parliament, and was appointed their secretary and historiographer. He published the History of the Parliament which began Nov. 3, 1640, folio; and a Breviary of the History of the Parliament of England, 1650, 8vo. He died in 1650.—Biog. Brit. Biog. Dram.

MAY (Louis du), a French historian, was a protestant, and spent the greatest part of his life in Germany. He died in 1681. He wrote, 1. State of the Empire, or an Abridgment of the Public Law of Germany; 2. Science des Princes; 3. The Prudent Traveller, 12mo.—Moreri.

MAYENNE (Charles of Lorraine, duke of), second son of Francis of Lorraine, duke of Guise, was born in 1554. He displayed great courage at the sieges of Poitiers and Rochelle, and at the battle of Montcontour. He also defeated the protestants in Guienne, Dauphiny, and Saintonge. When his brothers were killed at the meeting of the states at Blois, he declared himself head of the league, and assumed the title of lieutenant-general of France. He proclaimed the cardinal of Bourbon king, by the name of Charles X.; but was defeated by Henry IV. at the battle of Arques, and again at Ivry. In 1599 he was reconciled to the king, who made him governor of the Isle of France. He died in 1611.—Moreri. Henault.

MAYER (John Frederic), a lutheran divine, was born at Leipzig in 1650. He became superintendent of the churches of Pomerania, and professor at Stettin. He died in 1712. His greatest work is the Bibliotheca Biblica, printed at Rostock in 1713, 4to. Besides this he wrote a Treatise on the Method of Studying the Holy Scripture; Dissertations on particular Parts of the Bible; and a piece entitled, Tractatus de Officulis Pedum Pontificis Romani, 4to.—Moreri.

MAYER (Tobias), a celebrated astronomer, was born at Maripack, in the duchy of Wirtemberg, in 1723. He was self-taught, and by his own application acquired a knowledge of the Latin language. In 1750 the university of Gottingen appointed him mathematical professor. He died there in 1762. Mayer made several discoveries in geometry and astronomy, and published some excellent works, the chief of which are, his Table of Refractions, Theory of the Moon, and Astronomical Tables and Precepts, for which last the English board of longitude gave his widow 3000*l*. There was another astronomer of this name, who was a native of Moravia, and a jesuit. In 1719 he became professor of philosophy at Heidelberg, and the elector palatine built for him an observatory at Mannheim. He died in 1783. His works are, Basis Palatina; De transitu Veneris; De novis in Cælo sideris phænomenis.—Nouv. Dict. Hist. Hutton.

MAYERNE (sir Theodore), a celebrated physician, was born at Geneva in 1572, and had for his godfather Theodore Beza. He took his doctor's degree at Montpellier, after which he was appointed physician to Henry IV. of France, who made him great offers provided he would change his religion, which Mayerne refused, though the famous cardinal Perron laboured much for his conversion. About 1616 he visited England, and became physician to James I. He enjoyed the highest reputation in his profession, and died in 1655 at Chelsea, leaving a large fortune to an only daughter, who married the marquis de Montpouillan. His works were printed together in 1 vol. folio, in 1700.—Hutchinson's Biog. Med.

MAYNARD (Francis), a poet, and one of the forty members of the French academy, was born at Toulouse in 1582. He was secretary to queen Margaret, and died in 1646. He wrote songs, odes, epigrams, &c.—Moreri.

MAYNARD (sir John), an eminent English lawyer, who distinguished himself by his patriotism, as well as his knowledge of jurisprudence and integrity in his profession. When the prince of Orange was declared king after the abdication of James II. sir John waited upon the new monarch with an address; and William having observed to him that from his age he must have outlived most of the judges and eminent lawyers of his standing, he replied, "and I should have outlived the low too had it not been for the arrival of your majesty." He died in 1690, aged 88.—Biog. Brit.

MAYNE (Jasper), an English divine and poet, was born at Hatherleigh in Devonshire, in 1604, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford, of which he became student. In 1646 he was created D. D. and two years afterwards was deprived of his studentship for his loyalty. At the restoration he was promoted to a canonry of Christ church. He died in 1672. Mayne was a man of great wit and humour, which he often carried to a low excess, particularly in his will, where he left his servant man, who was fond of tippling, an old trunk, in which (says he) there is something that will make him drink. The man eagerly sought for his legacy, and on opening the trunk found a red herring. Dr. Mayne wrote some poems now obsolete, sermons and a play called The City Match.—Biog. Brit. Wood.

MAYNWARING (Arthur), an ingenious gentleman, was born in Shropshire in 1668. He received his education at Christ church, Oxford, after which he entered on public life, and became a commissioner of the customs. At the beginning of the reign of queen Anne he was made auditor of the imposts, and sat in parliament for Preston in Lancashire. He died in 1712, leaving Mrs. Oldfield, the actress, his executrix, by whom he had a son. Maynwaring published several pieces in prose and verse.—Biog. Brit.

MAYO (Richard), a non-conformist divine, who was ejected from Kingston in Surrey by the Bartholomew act, for enforcing conformity, in 1662. He died in 1695. His works are, a Life of Dr. Staunton; two Conferences, one between a Papist and a Jew, the other between a Protestant and a Jew; Comment on the Epistle to the Romans, in Pool's Annotations; and Sermons.—Calamy.

MAYOW (John), a learned physician, was born in Cornwall in 1645. He was fellow of All Souls college, Oxford, and took his degrees in civil law, but practised physic. He died in London in 1679. Dr. Mayow, though little known in his own age, was one of the greatest chemists this country has produced; and Dr. Beddoes has proved, that most of the modern discoveries in chemistry were known to him. His works were collected and published at Oxford in 8vo. 1674.—Wood.

MAZARIN (Julius), a Roman cardinal and minister of state, was born at Piscina in Italy, in 1602. Being appointed nuncio extraordinary to France, he acquired the friendship of Richelieu and the confidence of Louis XIII. In 1641, pope Urban VIII. made him cardinal; and on the death of Richelieu, Louis appointed him minister of state. He was also nominated one of the executors of that king's will, and had the principal management of affairs during the minority of Louis XIV.; but at length the murmurs of the people rose so much against him, that he found it expedient to quit the kingdom, after which a price was set on his head. He afterwards recovered his power, and continued to render the state the most important services, the principal of which was the restoring peace between France and Spain in 1659. His perpetual application to business produced a disease, of which he died in 1661. His letters have been published in 2 vols. His niece, Hortensia Mancini, duchess of Mazarin, was celebrated for her wit and beauty. She married in 1661 Armand Charles de la Porte de la Meillraie, from whom she separated, and went to England, where she greatly patronized St. Evremond. She died in London in 1699.—Moreri.

MAZEAS (John Mathurin), a mathematician, was born at Landernau in Brittany in 1713, and died in 1802. He wrote Elements of Arithmetic, Algebra, and Geometry, with an Introduction to Conic Sections; he was also the author of Institutiones Philosophicæ, 3 vols, 12mo. He was an ecclesiastic, and held a canonry in the church of Notre Dame at Paris, before the revolution.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MAZELINE (Peter), a sculptor of Rouen, and a member of the French academy of painting and sculpture, died in 1708, aged 76. His principal works are in the gardens of Versailles.—D'Argenville.

MAZUCHI (Alexis Symmachus), an Italian antiquary, was born near Capua in 1684. He was theological professor at Naples, where he died in 1771. He wrote some ingenious works, the chief of which is the Antiquities of Campagna.—Novo. Dict. Hist.

MAZZUCHELLI (John Marie), a Venetian nobleman, who wrote some biographical works of eminent Italians, and died in 1765.

MAZZUCHELLI (Peter Francis), a painter, was born at Rome in 1571. There are several grand altar-pieces of his painting at Milan. Charles Emanuel duke of Savoy conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1626.—Pilkington.

MAZZUOLI (Francis), commonly called Parmesiano, a famous painter, was born at Parma in 1504. He has been called the inventor of the art of etching. He had an admirable genius; his invention was ready; and he had a peculiar talent in giving grace and sweetness to his figures. He died in 1540. There was another of the name of Mazzuoli in the 16th century, who was the cousin of Parmigiano. He excelled in historical painting.—Ibid.

MEAD (Matthew), an eminent dissenting divine, who held the living of Great Brickhill in Buckinghamshire, and afterwards the large and valuable one of Stepney, from whence he was ejected for non-conformity, in 1662. He was in some trouble about what was termed the Rye-House Plot, and was forced to attend the council board on that charge, but dismissed. He officiated to a large congregation of dissenters in Stepney to his death, which happened in 1699. He wrote, the Almost Christian Tried and Cast, 8vo., a good practical book; the Good of Early Obedience, 8vo.; Sermon upon Ezekiel's Wheels, &c.—Calamy.

MEAD (Richard), a celebrated physician, was the son of the above, and born at Stepney in 1673. In 1689 he was sent to Utrecht, where he studied under the learned Grævius, after which he removed to Leyden, and contracted a close intimacy with Boerhaave. On completing his studies in that celebrated school of physic, he went to Italy, and took his doctor's degree at Padua. In 1696 he returned to his native country, and commenced the practice of physic at Stepney, where he resided seven years. In 1702 he published his treatise on Poisons, which procured him considerable reputation. In 1704 he was admitted a member of the royal society, of which, in 1707, he became vice-president. In 1717 the university of Oxford conferred on him his doctor's degree by diploma. In 1727 he was appointed physician to George II. Dr. Mead died in 1754, and was interred in the Temple church, near the remains of his brother, who was a counsellor. The other works of Dr. Mead are, a Discourse concerning the Plague; a treatise De Imperio Solis ac Lunæ; De Morbis Biblicis; and Monita Medica; all of which were collected into one volume, 4to. 1762. He was a very liberal man, and the greatest patron of literature in his day. His library, which was one of the finest in Europe, was sold by auction after his death. He was twice married, and left three children; two daughters, married to Drs. Wilmot and Nichols, and a son, named Richard, who inherited his fortune.—Biog. Brit.

MEADOWCOURT (Richard), an English divine, was born in 1697, and educated at Merton college, Oxford. He became canon of Worcester cathedral, where he died in 1769. He published in 1792 a Critical Dissertation, with notes, upon Milton's Paradise Regained.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

MEDE (Joseph), a learned divine, was born in 1586, at Berden in Essex, and in 1602 entered of Christ's college, Cambridge, where he studied with intense application, was chosen fellow, and proceeded to his degree of bachelor in divinity. He refused several preferments, particularly the provostship of Trinity college, Cambridge, which was repeatedly offered to him by archbishop Usher. He died in 1638. His works have been collected into one volume folio. The principal is his Commentary on the Apocalypse, in explaining which mysterious book his plan has been followed by bishop Newton, and a number of other great divines.—Biog. Brit.

MEDIA was probably conquered by Pul, the founder of the Assyrian empire. In 711 B. C. it revolted, and became independent. Some time after this the Medes became possessed of Persia; but Cyrus having defeated Darius in 536 B. C., Media was attached to the Persian empire, and underwent the same revolutions.—Anc. Univ. Hist.

MEDICI (Cosmo), called the elder, the founder of an illustrious family at Florence, was a merchant, and born in 1399. He acquired great wealth, which he appropriated to the noble purposes of advancing learning, and supporting learned men. He collected a noble library, which he enriched with inestimable manuscripts. The envy excited against him by his riches, raised him many enemies, by whose intrigues he was obliged to quit his native country. He then retired to Venice, where he was received as a prince. His fellow citizens, seeing their error, recalled him, and he bore a principal share in the government of their republic thirty-four years. He died in 1464. On his tomb was engraved this memorable inscription: The Father of his People, and the Deliverer of his Country.—Moreri.

MEDICIS (Lorenzo de), surnamed the Great, and Father of Letters, was the son of Peter, grandson of Cosmo, and brother of Julian de Medicis. These two brothers, who enjoyed almost an absolute power in Florence, were viewed with a jealous eye by Ferdinand IV. king of Naples, and pope Sixtus IV. At their instigation the potent family of Pazzi formed a conspiracy against the Medicis in 1478, and Julian was assassinated as he was attending mass. Lorenzo was also wounded, but escaped with his life, and was conducted to his palace by the people with loud acclamations of joy. Having inherited the great qualities of his grandfather, Cosmo, he was accounted the Mæcenas of his age. It was a singular but noble spectacle to observe the citizen engaged in commerce on the one hand and managing public affairs on the other; now entertaining merchants, and next receiving ambassadors; giving public shows to the people, and erecting asylums for the sick and unfortunate; ornamenting his country with magnificent buildings, and sending learned men into the East in search of valuable Greek manuscripts. Yet such a man was Lorenzo, whom the grateful Florentines declared, for all these benefits, chief of their republic. He drew to his court a great number of learned men; and sent John Lascaris into Greece to purchase literary treasures to enrich his library. Lorenzo himself cultivated letters, particularly poetry, and his compositions have been several times printed. He was so universally esteemed that the princes of Europe were glad to nominate him to arbitrate their differences. This illustrious man died in 1492. His glory was somewhat tarnished by his passion for women; and he has been accused of irreligion, but the last may have been owing to the continual feuds between him and Sixtus IV. above mentioned. He had two sons, Peter who succeeded him, and John who became pope by the name of Leo X.—Life by Roscoe.

MEDICIS (Peter de), an historical painter, was descended from the family of that name at Florence, where he was born in 1586. He was a disciple of Cigoli, and had a pleasing manner of colouring, a correctness of outline, and an expression that was very natural.—Pilkington.

MEDINA (John Baptiste), an eminent painter, was born at Brussels in 1660. He studied the works of Rubens with such success, that his pictures were considered as little inferior to those of that artist. He resided in Great Britain many years, and was the last person knighted in Scotland by the high commissioner. He died in 1711.—Ibid.

MEGASTHENES, an ancient Greek historian, who lived under Seleucus Nicanor about 292 B.C. He wrote a History of Judea, quoted by many authors, but now lost.—Voss. de Hist. Græc.

MEHEGAN (William Alexander), a French historian, but of Irish extraction, was born at Salle, in the Cevennes, in 1721. He wrote, 1. The Origin of the Guebres; 2. Considerations on the Revolutions of Arts; 3. The Origin and Progress of Idolatry; 4. A Picture of Modern History, which has been translated into English, and is the best of his works.—He died in 1766.—Newsp. Diæ. Hist.

MEIBOMIUS (Henry), a physician of Helmstadt, who died in 1625. To a great knowledge of his profession he added profound erudition and great critical talents; as appears by some of his works, in the collection entitled, Rerum Germanicarum Scriptores, 4to.—Moreri.

MEIBOMIUS (John Henry), professor of medicine at Helmstadt, and afterwards first physician at Lubeck, died in 1653, aged 65. His chief works are, 1. Mæcenas, sive de C. Clinii Mæcænatis vita, 4to.; 2. De Cerevisiis, 4to.; 3. Tractatus de Ufu Flagrorum in re Medica et Venerea, 4to. and 8vo. To the last edition Thomas Bartholin subjoined notes.—Ibid.

MEIBOMIUS (Henry), son of the last-mentioned, was born at Lubeck in 1638. He professed medicine, history, and poetry, at Helmstadt, where he died in 1700. His works are, 1. Scriptores rerum Germanicarum, 3 vols. folio; 2. Ad Saxoniam inferioris Historiam introductio, quarto; 3. Valentini Henrici Vogleri Introductio Universalis in Notitiam cujuscumque generis bonorum Scriptorum, 4to.; 4. Chronicon Bergense; 5. De Vasis Palpebrarum novis, quarto.—Ibid.

MEIBOMIUS (Mark), of the same family as the preceding, was a learned critic, and died in 1711. He published, 1. An Edition of the Greek Mythologists; 2. De Fabrica Trirremium, quarto; 3. A Translation of ancient Greek Authors, who wrote on Music; 4. Corrections for an Edition of the Bible in Hebrew.—Ibid.

MEIER (George Frederick), a German writer, was born in Saxony in 1718. His principal works are, 1. Instructions how one may become a modern Philosopher; 2. Introduction to the elegant Arts and Sciences; both in German. He died in 1777.—Gen. Biog. Diæ.

MEISNER (Balthasar), a Lutheran divine and professor of theology at Wirtemberg, born in 1587, and died in 1628. He wrote, 1. Anthropologia, 2 volumes, quarto; 2. Moderate Philosophy, 3 volumes, quarto.—Moreri.

MEISSONIER (Justus Aurelius), an artist, was born at Turin in 1695, and died at Paris in 1750. He was a painter, sculptor, architect, and goldsmith, and his talents procured him the appointment of designer and goldsmith to the French king. His performances in the latter department are very beautiful.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MELA (Pomponius), a Latin geographical writer, was a native of Spain, and flourished A. D. 45. His valuable work, entitled, De Situ Orbis, was published by Isaac Vossius in 1658, quarto. James Gronovius also gave an edition in the same year, 12mo.—Voss. de Scrip. Lat.

MELANCTHON (Philip), a famous reformer, was born in 1497 at Bretten, in the palatinate of the Rhine. The family name was Schwarzhof, or Black-earth, which Reuchlin, the friend of Philip, altered to the correspondent Greek word Melancthon. He made a rapid progress in his studies at the university of Heidelberg, from whence he removed to Tübingen, where he continued six years. In 1518 he obtained the Greek professorship at Wittenberg, where he formed a close friendship with Luther, whose opinions he defended both in his public lectures and by his writings. In 1527 the elector of Saxony appointed him to visit the churches in his territories; but his greatest labour was in drawing up the confession of faith, called the Augsburg Confession. His learning and moderation spread his fame throughout Europe, and the kings of France and England invited him to their kingdoms, with flattering offers, which he declined. In the progress of the reformation he exhibited a different temper from Luther, being more cautious and timid, on which account he was often reproved by him in severe terms. The prudence of Melancthon, however, was of important service, and tended considerably to the propagation of the protestant doctrines, by guarding them from the abuses of intemperate zeal. In 1539 Melancthon assisted in the conferences at Spire, and in his journey thither visited his mother, a pious woman, who asked him what she should believe, and how she should pray amid these religious disputes, at the same time repeating her simple creed and form of devotion. "Continue," said her son, "to believe and to pray as you do at present, and do not trouble yourself about controversies." He afterwards distinguished himself in the conferences held at Ratibon in 1541 and 1548. He wrote a Censure of the Interim, and all the papers presented at those conferences. This learned and amiable man died at Wittenberg in 1560. His works were printed at Wittenberg, in four vols. folio, 1601.—Camerarii vit. Melancthon.

MELANIPIDES. There were two Greek poets of this name: The one lived B. C. 520; the other, who was the grandson of the former, flourished 60 years after, and died at the court of Perdiccas II. king of

MELCHISEDECK, king of Salem, and priest of the most high God, who met Abraham after his victory over Chederlaomer, king of Sodom, and presented to him bread and wine with his benediction. St. Paul having said in his epistle to the Hebrews that Melchisedeck was without father and without mother, led some ancient heretics to assert that he was a celestial being, superior to angels, and even to Jesus Christ. They were called Melchisedecians.—Cave. Dupin. Musbeim.

MELCHAL (Arnold de), one of the founders of the Swiss liberties. With Tell, Furst, and others, he shook off the Austrian yoke in 1307.

MELEAGER, a Greek poet, was born at Gadara, in Syria, and flourished about 186 B. C. His epigrams are in the collection of Greek poetry called the Anthologia. A separate edition was printed in 1789 by Brunck, with notes, at Leipzig.—Vossius de Poet. Gr.

MELIETIUS, bishop of Lycopolis, in Egypt, was deposed in a synod by Peter, bishop of Alexandria, for having sacrificed to idols in the time of a persecution. He afterwards formed a sect under his name, and joined the Arians against Athanasius. He died about 326.—Dupin.

MELISSUS of Samos, a philosopher, was the disciple of Parmenides, of Elea, where he was appointed to command a fleet. He pretended that the universe is infinite & immoveable, and that there can be no knowledge of a Deity. This is in fact the system of Spinoza. Melissus lived about 444 B. C.—Stanley. Bayle.

MELITO (St.), bishop of Sardis, in Asia. He composed several works, of which only a few fragments remain in Eusebius. He flourished about A. D. 170.—Ibid.

MELITUS, a Greek orator and poet, and the principal accuser of Socrates. The Athenians afterwards, out of compunction for their unjust treatment of that great man, put Melitus to death, B. C. 400.—Moreri.

MELLAN (Claude), a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1601, and died in 1688. His engravings are capital, and mostly from his own designs.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MELMOTH (William), an excellent writer, was born in 1666. He was a benchor of Lincoln's-inn, and, in conjunction with Mr. Peere Williams, edited Vernon's Reports. He was the author of The Great Importance of a Religious Life; a valuable little book which has gone through many editions. He died in 1743, and was buried in the cloister of Lincoln's-inn chapel.—Life by his son.

MELMOTH (William), son of the preceding, was born in 1710. He published translations of Pliny's and Cicero's Epistles, well executed. He was also the author of the Letters which bear the name of sir Thomas Fitzosborne; some poems in Dodley's Collection, and Memoirs of his father. He died in 1799.—Monthly Mag. Gent. Mag.

MELLOT (John Baptist), a learned Frenchman, was born at Dijon in 1697, and died at Paris in 1760. He was librarian to the king, and wrote some papers in the memoirs of the academy of inscriptions, of which he was a member. He also edited Joinville's Life of St. Louis, with a glossary.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MELVIL (sir James), a Scotch writer, was the son of lord Keith, and born in 1530. He became page to Mary queen of Scots, whom he attended in her last moments; afterwards he entered into the service of the duke of Montmorency. On his return to Scotland in 1561, he was appointed privy counsellor, and gentleman of the bed-chamber. He died in 1606. His Memoirs of Affairs of State, in 1 vol. folio, were printed in 1683.—Great Hist. Dict.

MEMMI (Simon), a painter, was born at Sienna, and died in 1345, aged 60. His principal talent was in portrait; and he painted that of Laura, mistress of Petrarch, whom Memmi greatly esteemed.—De Piles.

MEMNON, of the isle of Rhodes, an able general of Darius, king of Persia, whom he advised to desolate his country in order to impede the progress of Alexander the Great, and then to attack Macedon; but this counsel was over-ruled by the other generals. After the battle of the Granicus Memnon defended Miletus with vigour, took the isles of Chios and Lesbos, carried terror into Greece, and was near putting a stop to the conquests of Alexander when he was taken off by death. His wife was taken prisoner with the family of Darius, and became the mistress of Alexander.—Q. Curtius. Moreri.

MENAGE (Giles), a learned Frenchman, was born at Angers in 1613. He became an eminent pleader, but quitted that profession and entered into orders. He obtained some preferment, and died in 1692. His principal works are, two books on the Origin and Nature of the French Language; Miscellanies; Latin Poems; on the Italian Language; an edition of Diogenes Laertius; Histoire de Sable, folio; Juris civilis Amœnitates, &c.—Moreri.

MENANDER, a Greek poet, was born at Athens about 342 B.C. He was called the prince of new comedy, and preferred to Aristophanes. All his plays are lost; but the six comedies of Terence were borrowed from him, from which we may form some judgment of his excellence. Some of his fragments have been collected by Stephens and Le Clerc. The last edition was printed in Holland in 1709, in 8vo.—Vossius de Poet. Græc. Moreri.

MENANDRINO (Marfilio), or Marfilius of Padua, a lawyer of the 14th century, who wrote an apology for the emperor Louis of Bavaria, entitled, Defensor Pacis, in which he maintained, that the imperial was superior to the papal power. For this he was excommunicated by the pope. He wrote some other works.—Trabeschi.

MENARD (Claude), a French antiquary and magistrate of Angers, where he died in 1652, aged 72. He published, 1. Joinville's History of St. Louis, with notes; 2. Researches concerning the Body of St. James the Great, which was said to have been buried in the church of Angers; 3. The two Books of Augustin against Julian; 4. History of Bertrand du Guesclin.—Moreri.

MENARD (Nicholas Hugh), a benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, who died in 1644, aged 57. He wrote a Martyrology of the Benedictines, and some other works.—Ibid.

MENARD (Leo), a counsellor of Nismes, who wrote, 1. The History of the City of Nismes, 7 vols. 4to.; 2. Manners and Customs of the Greeks, 12mo.; 3. The Amours of Callisthenes and Aristoclis, 12mo. He died in 1767, aged 61.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MENASSEH-BEN-ISRAEL, a celebrated rabbi, was born in Portugal in 1604. His father was a rich merchant, whom he accompanied to Holland, where Menasseh succeeded the rabbi, Isaac Urie, in the synagogue of Amsterdam. He afterwards went to Basil, and next to London, where he had a negotiation with Cromwell for a toleration of the Jews, which was opposed by the presbyterians. Menasseh then retired to Middleburg, where he died about 1660. He was of the sect of the pharisees. His works are, 1. An edition of the Hebrew Bible, without points, 2 vols. quarto, Amst. 1635, with a Latin preface; 2. The Talmud corrected with notes, 8vo.; 3. El Conciliador, quarto; 4. De Fragilitate Humana ex lapsu Adami, deque divino auxilio; 5. Spes Israëlis, 12mo.; 6. The Breath of Life, in Hebrew, 12mo.; 7. The End of Life, 12mo. The last was translated into English by Pocock, with the life of Menasseh prefixed.

MENCKE (Lewis Otto), a learned German, was born at Oldenburg, in Westphalia, in 1644. He became professor of morality at Leipzig, and rector of that university, where he died in 1707. He was the first author of the Acta Eruditorum, or Literary Journal of Leipzig, and wrote besides, 1. Micropolita seu Republica in microcosmo conspicua, quarto; 2. Jus Majestatis circa Venationem, quarto.—Moreri.

MENCKE (John Burchard), son of the preceding, was born at Leipzig in 1674. In 1699 he was appointed professor of history, and gained great reputation by his lectures. He was also historiographer and Aulic counsellor to Frederick Augustus of Saxony, king of Poland, a member of the academy of Berlin, and of the royal society of London. He died in 1732. His works are numerous, the chief of which is entitled, De Charlataneria eruditorum declamationes duæ, 1715, 8vo. He continued the Acta Eruditorum, and published, 1. Scriptores rerum Germanicarum, speciatim Saxonicarum, 3 vols. fol.; 2. Two Discourses in Latin upon the Empiricism of learned Men, 12mo. The title page promises more than the reader will find in the book.—Moreri.

MENDEZ (Moses), an English poet and dramatic writer, who died in 1758. He was of Jewish extraction, and wrote several poems in Doddsley's Collection. The university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of M. A.—Europ. Mag.

MENDELSSOHN (Moses), which signifies Moses the son of Mendel, a Jew of Berlin, was born of an honest but poor family at Dessau in 1729. He was bred to merchandize, but devoted himself to literature, in which he attained a distinguished reputation. In 1755 he published his first piece, entitled, Jerusalem; in which he pretended that the principle of the Jewish religion is deism. His next work was Phædon, or a Discourse on the Spirituality and Immateriality of the Soul, 8vo. This is an excellent treatise, in which that important principle of the Immateriality of the Soul is acutely maintained. On account of this book the author gained the appellation of the Socrates of the Jews. He died in 1785. Besides the above he wrote, 1. Philosophical Works, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Letter to Lavater, 8vo.; 3. Commentary upon Ecclesiastes; 4. Translation of the first Book of the Old Testament; 5. Letters on Sensations; 6. Treatise on the Sublime, &c.—Novu. Diss. Hist.

MENDOZA (Peter Gonzalez de), a Spanish cardinal, and archbishop of Toledo, was born in 1428. He became an eminent statesman, and Sixtus IV. made him cardinal. He died in 1495. He is said to have translated the Iliad and Æneid, also Sallust, into Spanish.—Moreri.

MENDOZA (John Gonzalez de), an Augustine friar, who was sent by the king of Spain as ambassador to the emperor of China in 1584. After obtaining several preferments he was appointed in 1608 bishop of Popayan in the West Indies. He wrote a History of China in Spanish, 1589, 8vo.—Ibid.

MENECEATES, a physician of Syracuse, who rendered himself famous by his foolish vanity. He habited his attendants, who were persons that he had cured, in the dress attributed to the minor deities, while he himself assumed that of Jupiter. He carried his extravagance, so far as to write a letter to Philip, father of Alexander the Great, thus inscribed: "Menecrates-Jupiter to king Philip, saluting." That prince returned this answer, "Philip to Menecrates, health and good sense." He wrote a book on Remedies, which is lost.—Ibid.

MENEDEMUS, a Greek philosopher of the Cyrenaic sect, was born in the island of Eubœa. He bore arms in the defence of his country, and exercised some important employments; but being treated with ingratitude, he became a philosopher. He died in the reign of Alexander the Great.—Diog. Laert. Vit. Phil.

MENEDEMUS, a cynic, who lived at a later period than the preceding. He wore a black gown, a scarlet girdle, a cap on his head whereon were represented the signs of the zodiac. This madman, falsely called a philosopher, pretended to have been sent from hell to observe the actions of men, that he might report the same to the infernal deities.—Ibid.

MENESES (Alexis de), a Portuguese prelate, was born at Lisbon of a noble family. He entered into a convent of Augustine monks, but was called from thence and sent to Goa as archbishop. He there held a synod, in which were passed the acts published under the title of Synodus Diamperensis. On his return to Portugal he was made archbishop of Braga and viceroy of the kingdom, by Philip II. of Spain. He died at Madrid in 1617. He wrote the history of his order in Portugal.—Moreri.

MENESTRIER (John Baptist le), a learned antiquary, was a native of Dijon, and died in 1634, aged 70. His works are, 1. Medals, Coins, and ancient Monuments of the Roman Emperors; 2. Illustrious Medals of the ancient Emperors and Empresses of Rome.—Ibid.

MENESTRIER (Claude Francis), a jesuit, was born at Lyons in 1633, and died in 1705. His principal works are, 1. History of Louis the Great, by Medals, Emblems, Devices, &c.; 2. Consular History of the City of Lyons; 3. The Art of Heraldry. He is not to be confounded with Claude le Menestrier, a native of Dijon, who wrote Symbolica Dianæ Ephesiæ Statua Expofita, quarto. He died about 1657.—Moreri. Nicéron.

MENGOLI (Peter), professor of mechanics at Bologna in the 17th century, distinguished himself by the excellence of his lectures and his writings. The latter are, 1. Geometria Speciosa, quarto; 2. Arithmetica rationalis; 3. Treatise on the Circle; 4. Musica Speculativa, &c. He died about 1690.—Tiraboschi.

MENGIS (Anthony Raphael), a celebrated painter, was born at Aussig in Bohemia in 1726. He studied under his father, who was painter to Augustus III. king of Poland, after which he greatly improved himself at Rome. Charles III. of Spain became his patron, and provided for his family after his death, which happened in 1779. Mengis formed his style after Raphael, Correggio, and Titian. To his excellence as an artist he added a literary taste, and wrote several pieces in Italian, as the Life of Correggio; Reflections on Beauty and Taste in Painting;

On the Principal Pictures at Madrid, &c. They have been translated into English with his life prefixed, in 2 vols. 8vo.

MENINSKI or MENIN (Francis de Megnien), a learned orientalist, was born in Lorraine in 1623. He was counsellor of war to the emperor, and principal interpreter. He died at Vienna in 1698. His work entitled, Theſaurus Linguarum Orientalium, Vienna, 5 vols. folio, 1687, is of inestimable value.—Moreri.

MENNO SIMONIS, chief of a sect of Anabaptists who were called after his name, was originally a minister in Friseland, but left his parish and was rebaptized by Ubbo Philippi. He gathered a number of disciples in Germany, Holland, and Flanders. He maintained the necessity of rebaptism in adults; and denied that Jesus Christ received a human body from the Virgin. A price was set upon the head of this fanatic, who, however, died a natural death at Oldeslo near Hamburg, in 1565. His works were published together at Amsterdam in 1681. The Mennonites continue still to be a considerable sect in the Low Countries.—Brandt's Hist. Ref.

MENOCIUS (James), an eminent civilian of Pavia who was called the Baldus and Bartolus of his age. After being professor in several universities he became president of the council at Milan, where he died in 1607, aged 75. His works are, 1. De recuperanda possessione, de adipiscenda possessione, 8vo.; 2. De presumptionibus, 1670, 2 vols. fol.; 3. De Arbitrariis Judicium questionibus, et causis Conciliorum, fol. His son John Stephen became a jesuit, and died in 1656, aged 80. He wrote Political and Economical Institutions; a learned Treatise on the Hebrew Republic; a Commentary on the Holy Scripture, 2 vols. folio.—Moreri. Tiraboschi.

MENIPPUS, a cynic philosopher, and the disciple of Menedemus, was born at Gadara in Palestine. He wrote some scurrilous satires, for which reason, writings of that stamp have been sometimes called Menippean. There was an orator of the same name who gave lessons to Cicero.—Diog. Laert.

MENTEL (John), a printer of Strasburg, to whom some have attributed, but not on sufficient grounds, the invention of printing. He was originally a writer and an illuminator of manuscripts, after which he exercised his ingenuity in printing, and was the first who introduced that art at Strasburg, where he finished a Bible in 1466, 2 vols. folio. He afterwards printed several other works. He died in 1478.—Novo. Diet. Hist.

MENTZEL (Christian), a physician and botanist, was born at Furstenwal in Germany. He made great researches, and travelled through several countries for improvement. His works are; 1. Index nomina plantarum, 1696, fol., and reprinted in 1715 with addition; 2. A Chronology of China, 4to;

3. Natural History of Brazil, 4 vols. fol.; 4. On the Flowers and Plants of Japan, 2 vols. folio. He died in 1701, aged 79.—Haller's Bibl. Botan.

MENZIKOFF (Alexander), a prince of the Russian empire, was the son of a peasant, and the servant of a pastry-cook who employed him to cry pies about the streets. His appearance pleasing Peter the Great, he took him into his service. Menzikoff soon insinuated himself into the confidence of his sovereign, who made him governor of Ingria, with the rank of major-general, and at length conferred on him the title of prince. In 1713 he was accused of peculation, and condemned to pay a heavy fine, which the czar remitted and restored him to favour in 1719. Under the czarina Catharine he had still more power, and his daughter was married to Peter II. who made Menzikoff duke of Cozel, and grand master of the imperial hotel. But by the intrigues of Dolgoroucki, mistress of the czar, he fell into disgrace, and was banished to his estate; where he lived in such magnificence that Peter was persuaded to send him, for his own safety, into Siberia, where he died in a poor hut in 1729.—Hist. Russa by Tooke. Novo. Diet. Hist.

MENZINI (Benedict), an Italian poet, was born at Florence in 1646, and died at Rome, where he was professor in the college da Sapienza, in 1704. He wrote a book entitled, Costruzione irregolare della Lingua Toscana; and another, De Arte Poetica. His Satires are esteemed; they were printed at Amsterdam in 1718, 4to. Besides these he was the author of the Art of Poetry, Elegies; Hymns, &c.; all of which were collected into 2 vols. 4to., Florence 1731.—Tiraboschi.

MERCADO (Michael de), a learned physician, was born in Tuscany, and became first physician to Clement VIII. and other popes; also keeper of the botanical garden of the Vatican, where he formed a fine cabinet of metals and fossils, the description of which appeared at Rome in 1717, folio, and an Appendix in 1719. Mercado died in 1593, aged 53. He was raised to the rank of nobility by Ferdinand, grand duke of Tuscany. He wrote a treatise, De gli Obelischii di Roma, 4to.; and other works.—Ibid.

MERCATOR (Marius), an ecclesiastical author, and the friend and pupil of St. Augustine. He wrote against the Nestorians and Pelagians, and died about 451. His works were published at Paris in 1684, 8vo.—Dupin.

MERCATOR (Gerard), a geographer, was born at Kuremonde in 1512. He composed a Chronology, a Greater and Lesser Atlas, and some Geographical Tables; also Harmonia Evangelistarum, 4to.; a Treatise on the Creation, &c. He was so exact as to engrave and colour his own maps.—Moreri. Martin's Biog. Phil.

MERCATOR (Nicholas), an eminent mathematician, was born in Holltein. He settled in England, where he became fellow of the royal society, and died about 1690. His works are: 1. Cosmographia; 2. Rationes Mathematicæ; 3. De emendatione annua diatribæ duæ, &c.; 4. Hypothesis Astronomica, &c.; 5. Logarithmotechnia; 6. Institutionum Astronomicarum, &c.—Moreri. Martin's Biog. Phil.

MERCIER (John), a learned writer, was a native of Languedoc. He succeeded Varrallus in 1547 as professor of Hebrew in the royal college of Paris, and died at his native place in 1562. His works are; 1. Lectures on Genesis and the Prophets, Geneva, 1598; 2. Commentaries on Job, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Canticles, 2 vols. fol.; 3. Tabulæ in Grammaticam Chaldaicam, 4to. Mercier was inclined to Calvinism. His son Jesús was a man of learning, and died in 1626. He published, 1. an excellent edition of Nonius Marcellus, 4to.; 2. Notes on Ancient Authors.—Moreri.

MERCIER (Bartholomew), known under the name of the abbé St. Leger, was born at Lyons in 1734, and entered when young into the religious society of St. Genevieve, of which he became librarian. In 1764 Louis XV. gave him the abbey of St. Leger of Soissons, of which he was deprived and reduced to indigence in the revolution. He died in 1799. Mercier was a man of profound erudition, and one of the first bibliographers in Europe. His works are, 1. Letters on the Bibliography of Debure, 8vo.; 2. Letters on the True Author of the Political Testament of Cardinal Richelieu; 3. Supplement to Marchand's History of Printing, 4to.; 4. Letter concerning the Maid of Orleans; 5. Dissertation on the Author of the Book on the Imitation of Jesus Christ [Kempis]; 6. Notice of a rare Book entitled, Pedis Admirandæ, by J. d'Artis; 7. On the Letters attributed to pope Ganganeli; 8. Letters on different rare Editions of the 15th century, 8vo.; 9. Library of Romances, translated from the Greek, 2 vols. &c. He was concerned in the Journal de Trevoux, and the Magazine Encyclopedique.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

MERCURIALIS (Jerome), an Italian physician, was born at Forli in 1530. He was so highly esteemed by his countrymen that they sent him ambassador to pope Pius IV. and erected a statue to his honour. He obtained several professorships, and died at Forli in 1606. His principal works are; 1. De Arte Gymnastica; 2. De Morbis Mulierum; 3. De Morbis Puerorum; 4. Consultationes et responsa Medicinalia; 5. Medicina Practica. They were all collected in folio at Venice, 1644. Mercurialis was also the editor of Hippocrates's works with notes, 1588.—Haller's Bibl. Anat. Tiraboschi.

MERDDIN, the son of Mervyn, a celebrated Welsh poet who flourished about A. D.

560. He ranked with Merddin Emrys, and Taliesin, as the three principal Christian bards of Britain. Merddin is said to have slain in battle his nephew; on which account he secluded himself from society in a wood, whence he is called Merddin the Wild.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

MERE (George Broffin, chevalier de), a French writer, who died at his seat in Poitou, in 1690. His works are, 1. Discourses on Wit and Conversation; 2. The Elegances of Discourse; 3. Treatises on Politeness, Eloquence, and Speech; 4. Letters, &c.—Moreri.

MERIAN (Maria Sibylla), an ingenious lady, was the daughter of an engraver, and born at Frankfurt in 1647. She painted flowers and insects after nature with a most scrupulous exactness; and undertook a voyage to Surinam on purpose to draw the insects and reptiles peculiar to that country, and of which, on her return, she published a description with beautiful coloured plates, in 2 vols. 4to. Her daughter, who accompanied her to Surinam, added a third volume to this work. The mother also published another valuable performance on the Generation and Transformations of the Insects of Surinam, 1705, 4to. These works are in German. She died in 1717, at Amsterdam. Her father published the Topography of the Universe, 31 vols. folio, and a Florilegium, 2 vols. fol.—Moreri.

MERLIN (Ambrose), a British writer, who lived about the year 480. He was regarded in his time as a magician and prophet. The idle tales are told of him by some ancient writers, such as that he was engendered of an incubus, and that he conveyed by enchantment the stupendous stones on Salisbury plain from Ireland. There also pass under his name some extravagant predictions, which were printed at Paris in 1530, in folio. There is near Caermarthen a mount called Merlin's Hill, beneath which tradition relates that he was buried.—Gen. Hist. Lit.

MEROVÆUS, king of France, succeeded Clodius in 448, and defeated Attila in 451. He is said to have extended the bounds of his kingdom from the banks of the Somme to Treves, which city he took and plundered. He died in 456. He began the race of kings called Merovingian.—Mezeray.

MERRET (Christopher), a physician, was born at Winchcombe in Gloucestershire in 1614. He took his degrees at Oxford, after which he settled in London, where he became fellow of the college of physicians, and of the royal society. He died in 1695. Dr. Merret published, 1. Pinax Rerum Naturalium Britannicarum, continens Vegetabilia, Animalia, et Fossilia, in hac Insula reperta, 8vo.; 2. A Collection of Acts, Charters, &c., relative to the College of Physicians, 4to.; 3. A Short View of the Frauds and Abuses practised by Apo- theories, 4to.; 4. The Art of Glass; or how to colour Glass, &c., translated from Neri's treatise on that subject, with notes; 5. Several papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

MERRICK (James), an ingenious divine and poet, was born about 1718, and educated at Trinity college, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and was elected fellow. He died at Reading in 1769. He published a translation of Tryphiodorus; and poems on sacred subjects; but his principal performance is a version of the Psalms, with annotations.—Gen. Biog. Diß.

MERRY (Robert), an English poet, was the son of a tradesman in London, and educated at Harrow school, from whence he removed to Christ church, Oxford. He afterwards purchased a commission in the guards, and distinguished himself as a man of fashion and a wit. He wrote many trifling pieces in the papers, under the signature of Della Crucia; and a tragedy called Lorenzo, which was performed at Covent-Garden. Mr. Merry married Miss Brunton, an actress, with whom he went to America, where he died in 1798.—Monthly Mag.

MERSENNUS (Marinus), a learned mathematician, was born in the province of Le Maine in 1588, and studied at La Fleche with Des Cartes, for whom he ever retained the greatest affection. Merseus entered into the religious order of minims, and distinguished himself equally as a mathematician and a divine. He discovered the curve called a cycloid, and to which was also given the name of Roulette. This discovery excited the attention and admiration of the greatest geometers in Europe. Father Merseus died at Paris in 1648. His principal works are; 1. Quæstiones in Geometria, 1623, fol.; 2. Universal Harmony, concerning the Theory and Practice of Music, 2 vols. fol.; 3. De Sonorum Natura; 4. Cogitata Physico-mathematica, 4to.; 5. The Truth of Sciences; 6. Recreations of the Learned; 7. An edition of the Spherics of Menelaus; 8. The Impiety of Deists and Libertines refuted, 2 vols. 8vo.—Moreri.

MERVILLE (Michael Guyot de), a French writer, was born at Versailles in 1696. After travelling through various countries, he settled as a bookseller at the Hague, where he published a literary journal. His affairs becoming embarrassed, he went to Switzerland, and drowned himself in the lake of Geneva in 1765. He wrote, 1. Voyage Historique, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. several Comedies, &c., published at Paris, 3 vols. 12mo.—Nov. Diß. Hist.

MERULA (George), a learned critic, was born in 1420. He taught Latin and Greek at Venice and Milan, and died in the latter city in 1494. His principal works are, 1. Antiquitatis Vicecomitum Mediolanen- sum, fol.; 2. Description of Mount Vêlius, and Montferrat; 3. Commentaries of Martial, Statius, Juvenal, Varro, and Columella; 4. Epistles, &c. Erasmus and other learned men have greatly praised him.—Moreri.

MERULA (Paul), an able writer, was born at Dordt in 1358. He became professor of history at Leyden, and died there in 1607. He was the author and editor of several esteemed works, as, 1. Q. Ennii Annalium, 1595, 4to.; 2. Urbis Romæ delineatio, 1599; 3. Vita D. Erasmi; 4. Cosmographiæ generalia, 1605, 4to.; 5. Opera Posthuma, 4to.—Ibid.

MÉRY (John), a celebrated French surgeon, was born at Vatan in Berry in 1645. He was appointed principal surgeon of the hospital of invalids at Paris, and chosen a member of the academy of sciences. He died in 1700. His works are, 1. many Dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy; 2. Observations on the Method of Operating for the Stone, of Brother James; 3. Physical Problems upon the Fœtus.—Moreri.

MESSENGUY (Francis Philip), a French divine, was born at Beauvais in 1677, and died in 1769. He wrote, 1. Exposition of the Christian Doctrine, 6 vols. 12mo. [condemned by pope Clement XIII.]; 2. Abridgement of the History of the Old and New Testament, 10 vols. 12mo.; 3. An edition of the New Testament, with notes, 3 vols.; 4. The Constitution Unigenitus, with remarks; 5. Discourses on Religion.—Ibid.

MESNAGER (Nicholas), an able negotiator, was born at Rouen in 1658, of a rich commercial family. He was sent by Louis XIV. to Spain on some important missions relative to the commerce of the Indies; and afterwards to Holland; on which occasions he gave so much satisfaction as to be created a chevalier of the order of St. Michael, with patents of nobility. In 1711 he signed the preliminary treaty of peace between France and England at London, and he was next employed with the abbé Polignac as plenipotentiary at Utrecht. He died at Paris in 1714. His memoirs have been printed.—Moreri.

MESNARDIERE (Hippolytus Julius Filet de la), a French poet, was born at Loudun in 1610, and died in 1663. He was a member of the French academy, and patronized by cardinal Richelieu. His works are, 1. A treatise on Melancholy, 8vo.; 2. Poétique, 4to.; 3. The tragedies of Alinde and La Pucelle de Orleans; 4. A Collection of Poems, &c.; 5. Relations of War, &c.—Ibid.

MESALINA (Valeria), daughter of Messala Barbatus, and wife of the emperor Claudian. She was of a most libidinous character, and committed adultery with all the officers of her court. She also compelled her ladies to prostitute themselves, and that in the presence of their husbands. Having been repudiated by Claudian she espoused her favourite Silius, who was put to death with her by order of the emperor, A. D. 46. There was another of this name, who was the third wife of Nero after her first husband Atticus had been put to death by that tyrant. On the death of Nero she devoted the remainder of her days to study, and acquired a great reputation.—Lives of the Roman Emperresses.

MESSENIUS (John), a Swede, celebrated by his learning and his misfortunes. Gustavus Adolphus appointed him professor of law at Upsal, in which office he distinguished himself with such credit as to eclipse the other professors, by whose envious machinations he was accused of holding a secret correspondence with the enemies of Sweden, on which he was thrown into prison in 1615, and died in confinement in 1636. He wrote a great work in prison, entitled, Scandia illustrata, 14 vols. fol. Stockholm 1714. His son Arnold Messenius was historiographer of Sweden, but was beheaded in 1648 together with his son, who was only seventeen years old, for writing some satires on the royal family. Arnold wrote a History of the Nobility of Sweden, folio, 1616.—Moreri.

MESTON (William), a Scotch poet, was born in Aberdeenshire in 1688. In 1714 he was appointed professor of philosophy in the marischal college of Aberdeen; but taking part in the rebellion, he lost his place, and was obliged to keep himself concealed till the act of indemnity was passed. He died in 1745. His poems were published in 1 volume 12mo. at Edinburgh, in 1765, and possess considerable merit. They are chiefly satirical.—Gen. Biog. DiA.

METASTASIO (the abbé Peter Bonaventura), an Italian poet, was born at Asigli in 1698. He shewed at an early age a genius for poetry, and wrote verses at the age of six years; and he was only fourteen when he composed his tragedy, Il Giustino. Gravina was his instructor, who formed the greatest expectations of him, and made him his heir when he died in 1717. In 1724 Metastasio produced his play of Dido, acted at Naples, with the music of Sarro. The success of this piece stimulated him to proceed in that career; and in 1729 the emperor Charles VI. called him to Vienna, where he gave him a considerable pension. The empress Maria Theresa bestowed upon him magnificent presents, as also did Ferdinand VI. king of Spain. The emperor offered him the titles of nobility, and the empress tendered him the order of St. Stephen, but he declined them. This ingenious man died of a fever in 1782. He wrote a great number of operas and other dramatic pieces, which are highly admired, and have gone through numerous editions, and have been translated into French in 12 vols. 12mo.—New. DiA. Hist.

METELLI (Augustin), a painter, was born at Bologna in 1609. He excelled in painting perspective and architecture; and in conjunction with Michael Angelo Colonna he produced several great works. They were both employed by Philip IV. of Spain. Metelli died at Madrid in 1660.—D'Argenville. Fdibien.

METELLUS (Q. Cæcilius), an illustrious Roman, who distinguished himself against Jugurtha the Numidian, and from thence acquired the name of Numidicus. He had for his lieutenant in this expedition the famous Marius, who raised himself to power by defaming the character of Metellus; in consequence of which the latter was recalled. But he so well vindicated himself, that he was acquitted of the charges brought against him. There were several Romans of the same name.—Sallust.

METHOCHITUS (Theodore), an historian, who held several employments under the emperor Andronicus the elder at Constantinople, and died in 1332. He wrote, 1. a Roman History from Cæsar to Constantine, 4to.; 2. Sacred History; 3. History of Constantinople.—Moreri.

METHODIUS, bishop of Olympus or Patara, in Lycia, and afterwards of Tyre, suffered martyrdom at Chalcis about the year 311. He wrote some works, of which only fragments remain, printed at Paris by Combetis in 1644, 4to. with notes.—Dupin.

METIUS (James), a native of Alcaer in Holland, who invented telescopes about 1609. His brother, Adrian, was professor of mathematics and medicine at Franeker, where he died in 1636. He wrote, 1. Doctrina sphaerica; 2. Astronomia universæ institutio, 8vo.; 3. Arithmetica et Geometrica practica, 4to.; 4. De gemino usu utriusque Globi, 4to.; 5. Geometrices per usum Circini nova praxis, 8vo.—Moreri.

METON, an Athenian mathematician, who invented what is called in chronology, the golden number. He flourished B. C. 432.—Voss. de Mathem.

METRODORUS, a disciple of Democritus, and the master of Anaxarchus and Hippocrates. He was a physician of Chios, and maintained that the matter of the universe is eternal.—Stanley. Diog. Laertius.

METRODORUS, a famous painter and philosopher, flourished B. C. 171. He was sent by the Athenians to Paulus Æmilius, who, after the defeat of Perseus, had demanded a painter and philosopher; the former to paint his temples, and the latter to instruct his children. Metrodorus gave him satisfaction in both capacities.—Ibid.

METTRIZ (Julien Offray de la), a French physician, was born at St. Maloes in 1709. He wrote the Natural History of the Soul, in which he denied its immateriality. This book occasioned much noise, and the author some trouble. He afterwards wrote against the faculty with such virulence, that he was obliged to retire to Leyden, where he wrote an atheistical book, called Man a Machine, which was publicly burnt, on which the author went to Berlin, where he was patronized by Frederick the Great, who was as sceptical as himself. He died in 1751. His works were published at Berlin in 1 vol. 4to. and 2 vols. 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MEZU (Gabriel), a Dutch painter, was born at Leyden in 1615. His subjects were women selling fish, fowls, or game; physicians attending the sick; chemical shops; painted in an excellent style. He died in 1658.—Houbraten.

MEURSIUS (John), a learned critic, was born at Utrecht in 1579. He received his academical education at Leyden, where he wrote, at the age of sixteen, a Commentary on Lycophron. In 1610 he was appointed professor of history, and afterwards of Greek. He was also chosen historiographer of the United States. Meursius suffered much persecution in consequence of his connection with Barneveldt; on which he went to Denmark, where he died in 1639. He was profoundly versed in the Greek language, and antiquities. His chief works are, 1. De populis Atticæ; 2. Atticarum lectionum lib. iv.; 3. Archontes Athenienses; 4. Fortuna Attica, de Athenarum origine; 5. De Festis Græcorum; 6. Historia Danica; 7. Athenæ Batavæ, [this is a history of the university of Leyden]; 8. Glossarium Græco-Barbarum; 9. Rerum Belgicarum. All his works have been printed in 12 vols. folio, Florence, 1741. His son, John Meursius, who died in Denmark in the flower of his age, wrote 1. Arborentum Sacrum, five de Arborum conservatione, 1642, 8vo.; 2. De Tibiis veterum.—Moreri.

MEUSNIER (Philip), a painter, was born at Paris in 1635, and died there in 1734. He was a member of the French academy, and patronized by Louis XIV. and XV. His subjects were architecture and views in perspective, painted in a fine manner.—D'Argenville.

MEYER (James), a Flemish historian, was born in 1491, near Bailleur, whence he is sometimes called Balthasianus. He was rector of Blankenberg, and died in 1552. His works are, 1. Annales Rerum Flandricarum, folio; 2. Flandricarum Rerum Decas, 4to.—Moreri.

MEYER (Felix), a German painter, was born in 1653. He painted some fine views after nature in Italy and Switzerland, and died in 1713.—Ibid.

MEZRAI (Francis Eudes de), a French historian, was born in Lower Normandy in 1610, and educated at the university of Caen; on leaving which he obtained a military employment, and served two or three campaigns in Flanders. Having abandoned the army, he projected the History of France, in writing which he was liberally encouraged by cardinal Richelieu, and on its completion in 1651 obtained a pension from the king. He was also admitted a member of the French academy, and had a principal concern in the compilation of their dictionary. He died in 1683. Besides his History of France, 3 vols. fol.; and an Abridgement in 3 vols. 4to; he wrote a Treatise on the Origin of the French; a Continuation of the History of the Turks; several satires against the ministry; History of a Mother and Son, 2 vols. 12mo.—List. by La Roque.

MEZIRIAC (Claude Gaspard Bachet de), a French writer, was born at Bresse, of a noble family. He became a jesuit, and at the age of twenty was appointed professor of rhetoric at Milan. He was also a member of the French academy, and died in 1638, aged 60. He wrote a Life of Æsop; a Translation of Diophantus in Latin, with a Commentary; Poems, Latin and French; &c.—Moreri.

MICAH, the sixth of the lesser prophets, lived in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. He prophesied the captivity of the tribes, and their deliverance by Cyrus, also of the coming of the Messiah.—Gray's Key O. T.

MICHAEL I. emperor of the East, succeeded to the throne in 811. He was a great prince and the father of this people; but was deposed by Leo the Armenian, his general, in 813. He then retired to a monastery, where he spent the remainder of his days in devotion.—Univ. Hist.

MICHAEL II. was born in Upper Phrygia of an obscure family, but ennobled by Leo the Armenian. That monarch soon afterwards sent him to prison, and condemned him to death; but the night previous to his intended execution Leo was assassinated, and Michael placed on the throne, A. D. 820. He endeavoured to force his subjects to celebrate the Jewish sabbath and the passover, and was guilty of great cruelties; on which his general Euphemius revolted, and proclaimed himself emperor, but was slain near Syracuse in Sicily. Michael died in 829.—Ibid.

MICHAEL III. succeeded Theophilus his father in 842, under the regency of his mother Theodora; a princess of great virtue and talent, whom he compelled to enter a monastery with her daughters. He had at first for an associate in the empire Bardas, brother of Theodora; and at his instigation sent St. Ignatius, patriarch of Constantinople, into exile. Michael afterwards put Bardas to death, and elevated Basil the Macedonian to the title of Cæsar, by whom he was assassinated in 867.—Ibid.

MICHAEL IV. or the Paphlagonian, from the country where he was born of obscure parentage. He obtained the imperial throne in 1034, by the influence of the empress Zoe; who, being enamoured of his person, murdered her husband Romanus Argyrus to obtain her wishes. Michael made war with success against the Saracens and Bulgarians; and afterwards retired to a monastery, where he died in 1041.—Ibid.

MICHAEL V. succeeded his uncle the preceding emperor in 1041, after having been adopted by the empress Zoe, whom he exiled a few months afterwards, which so irritated the people that they deprived him of his eyes, and sent him to a monastery. Zoe and her sister Theodora then reigned in conjunction.

MICHAEL VI. or the Warrior, reigned after the empress Theodora in 1056; but the year following he was compelled to relinquish the sceptre to Isaac Comnenus, on which Michael retired to a monastery.

MICHAEL VII. emperor of the East, was the eldest son of Constantine Ducas and of Eudocia. That prince, a few months after the death of her husband, married Diogenes a Roman, whom she caused to be proclaimed emperor; but in 1071 the usurper was taken prisoner by the Turks, and Michael regained the throne. In 1078 Nicephorus took Constantinople by the help of the Turks, and Michael was obliged to retire to a monastery. He afterwards took orders, and became archbishop of Ephesus.

MICHAEL VIII. Palæologus, regent of the empire during the minority of John Lascaris, whom he deprived of his throne and his eyes in 1260. The year following he retook Constantinople. He signed an act for the purpose of effecting a union between the Greek and Latin churches, which however did not succeed. Pope Martin IV. believing him not to be sincere in his professions, excommunicated him, as the supporter of heresy and schism. Michael died in 1282. He is not to be confounded with Michael Palæologus, who was crowned emperor in 1214, governed the empire under his father Andronicus the elder, and died in 1220.—Univ. Hist. Moreri.

MICHAEL (Fedorowitz), czar of Russia, was elected in 1613, in times of great difficulty. He was descended from the czar John Basilowitz; and distinguished himself by his pacific spirit and generosity. He died in 1645.—Univ. Hist.

MICHAEL ANGELO of Battles, a painter, was born at Rome in 1602, and died in that city in 1660. His real name was Cerynozzi, and he assumed the other from the subjects which exercised his pencil, and which he represented in a forcible manner.—Felicien des Peintres.

MICHAELIS (John David), professor of divinity in the university of Göttingen, who died in 1791, aged 75. His works are numerous, and chiefly designed to explain the difficulties attending the study of the sacred writings. That by which he is best known in this country is his Introduction to the New Testament, a translation of which into English appeared first in 1761. The learned author afterwards greatly enlarged and enriched this valuable performance, which has been translated by Mr. Marsh in 2 vols. 8vo. There are, however, some hypothetical opinions in it which ought to be attended to with caution.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MICHELÌ (Peter Anthony), an eminent botanist, was born at Florence in 1679. His parentage was very mean, and he became errand-boy to a bookfeller. Being fond of fishing, and told of a plant (the tithymalus chavica) which had the quality of stupifying fishes, he had a great curiosity to discover and examine it. Some monks of the abbey of Vallombrosa, perceiving his genius, took him under their instruction; and he profited by their lessons in such a manner as to gain the admiration and esteem of several learned men, particularly of Tournefort and Sherard, when they travelled into Italy. Micheli became associate with Tilly in the superintendence of the botanic garden at Pisa, director of that at Florence, and botanist to the grand duke, by whose order he made several journeys into Italy, Greece, and Ægypt, for the purpose of discovering plants. He died in 1737. The principal of his numerous works are, Novæ Plantarum Genera, printed at Florence 1729; and Catalogus Plantarum Horti Cæsarei Florentini, 1748, fol.—Haller's Bibl. Botan.

MICHELÌ (James-Bartholomew), an able mathematician, was born of an ancient family at Geneva in 1692. He entered into the French military service, and became a captain. In 1738 he retired to his native country, where he applied chiefly to mathematical and philosophical studies. He constructed a great number of charts, invented a new thermometer, and composed several Memoirs, printed at Basle. These are on Meteorology and the Temperature of the Globe; Light; the Comet of 1680; the Universal Deluge, &c. He surveyed the Glaciers of Switzerland, of which he took several views, which have been engraved. In the troubles which agitated his country he was a sharer, and was imprisoned a long time in a citadel, by order of the government of Berne. He died in 1766.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

MICKLE (William Julius), a poet, was born at Langholm, in the shire of Dumfries, in 1734, and educated at Edinburgh; after which he was apprenticed to a weaver, but abandoned that business and went to England, where he became corrector of the Clarendon press at Oxford. During his residence in that city he printed some poems, and a pamphlet against Harwood's Liberal Translation of the New Testament. But his greatest work was a translation of the Lusad from the Portuguese of Camoens. Of this poem there were two editions published in Mr. Mickle's life-time, and one since. It is a very accurate and elegant version, and was approved of by Dr. Johnson. In 1779 Mr. Mickle went out as secretary to his friend commodore Johnstone, and at Lisbon was appointed by him agent of the prizes. While there he wrote a pleasing poem called Almida Hill. On his return to England he settled at Wheatley in Oxford.

shire, where he died in 1788. Besides the above works he wrote a pamphlet in quarto on the affairs of the East India Company.—Europ. Mag.

MICKELIUS (John), a Lutheran divine, and professor of divinity at Stettin, was born in Pomerania in 1597, and died in 1658. His principal works are, 1. Lexicon philosophicum, 4to.; 2. Syntagma historiarum mundi et ecclesie, 8vo.; 3. Ethnophronium contra Gentiles de principiis religionis Christiane, 4to.; 4. Tractatus de copia verborum; 5. Archæologia; 6. Historia Ecclesiastica, 2 vols. 4to.; 7. Orthodoxia Lutherana contra Bergium.—Moreri.

MIDDLETON (Richard de), an English scholastic called the profund, and abundant, was a monk of the order of Cordeliers, and distinguished himself at Oxford and Paris. He wrote Commentaries on Peter Lombard, and other works. He died in 1304.—Pitt. Bul.

MIDDLETON (sir Hugh), a public-spirited gentleman, was a native of Denbigh, and a citizen of London; to which city he rendered the most important services in supplying it with water, by uniting two streams in Hertfordshire and Middlesex, and conveying the same through various soils for a course of sixty miles. This junction, called the New River, was begun in 1606, and completed in 1613. The projector encountered great difficulties in his undertaking, but his persevering spirit and ingenuity overcame them all. King James I. who held some shares in the concern, conferred on Middleton, first the honour of knighthood, and afterwards the title of baronet. He also incorporated the proprietors by the name of the New River Company. Sir Hugh, who greatly injured his circumstances by this scheme, gave one share to the Goldsmiths' Company, for the benefit of poor members of their body. He died about 1636.—Biog. Brit.

MIDDLETON (William), a Welsh poet, was born at Gwynnog, in Denbighshire, and died about 1600. He served in the armies of queen Elizabeth, and afterwards commanded a ship of war: and when at sea turned the book of Psalms into Welsh verse. This work was finished in the West Indies in 1595. He was also the author of a Grammar and Art of Poetry, published in 1593.—Owen's Cambr. Biog.

MIDDLETON (Conyers), a celebrated divine and critic, was the son of a clergyman, and born at York in 1683. He received his academical education at Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow in 1706. In 1717 he was created D. D. by mandamus, on which occasion he resisted the claim of Dr. Bentley as regius professor to exorbitant fees. This occasioned a law suit, in which Middleton triumphed. A personal enmity was the consequence of this affair; and when Bentley printed his proposals for a new edition of the Greek Testament, Middleton attacked them with such force that the design was abandoned. In 1734 Dr. Middleton was in Italy, and having a near observation of the ecclesiastical pomp and ceremonies, he wrote his famous letter from Rome, to shew that the religious rites of the Roman church were drawn from the heathens. An attack on Dr. Waterland's Vindication of the Scripture in 1730, drew upon Middleton the charge of infidelity, and he narrowly escaped academical censure. The year following he was appointed Woodwardian professor, but resigned that place in 1734. In 1741 appeared his Life of Cicero, in 2 vols. 4to.; afterwards reprinted in 3 vols. 8vo. This is a very curious and valuable work, and highly necessary towards forming a just idea of the character and writings of that great man, as well as exhibiting an exact picture of the Roman republic in his time. In 1743 Dr. Middleton published the Epistles of Cicero to Brutus, and those of Brutus to Cicero, in Latin and English, with a vindication of their authenticity. In 1747 appeared his Discourse on the Miraculous Powers supposed to have subsisted in the Christian Church from the earliest ages, 4to. This performance gave great alarm to the clergy, and numerous answers were written against it. Middleton died in 1750; and in 1752 appeared all his works, with the exception of the Life of Cicero, in 4 vols. 4to. His style is admirable, and his learning was profound and multifarious; but from his letters to lord Hervey it is evident that he was sceptical in his religious opinions.—Biog. Brit.

MIDDLETON (Thomas), a dramatic writer, who wrote in conjunction with Jonson, Fletcher, and Massinger. He died about 1630.—Langbaine. Biog. Dram.

MIEL (Jan), a Flemish painter, was born near Antwerp in 1599. His pictures of huntings are greatly admired. He died at Turin in 1664. Many engravings have been made from his pictures.—D'Argenville.

MIERIS (Francis), the Elder, was born at Leyden in 1635, and died in 1681. He was the disciple of Gerard Douw, whose manner he imitated. His pictures are very valuable. He had a son, William Mieris, called the Younger, who was a good landscape painter, and a modeller in clay and wax. He died in 1747. His son Francis was also an artist in the same line.—Ibid.

MIGNARD (Nicholas), a French historical and portrait painter of eminence, was born at Troyes about 1608. He became rector of the academy of painting at Paris, and died in 1668.—Ibid.

MIGNARD (Peter), called the Roman from his long residence at Rome, was the brother of the preceding, and born in 1610. He was ennobled by Louis XIV. and died in 1695.—D'Argenville.

MIGNON (Abraham), a painter, was born at Frankfort in 1640. He painted flowers, insects, and fruit, after nature, with wonderful exactness. He died in 1679.—Ibid.

MILBOURN (Luke), an English divine, was the son of Mr. Luke Milbourn, a non-conformist minister, who was ejected from the living of Wroxhall in Warwickshire in 1662, and died at Newington in 1687. His son received a good education, became master of arts, and obtained the rectory of St. Ethelburgh in London. He published sermons, and theological tracts, 2 vols. 8vo.; a poetical version of the Psalms; and several poems, for which Pope gives him a place in the Dunciad. He died in 1720.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MILDMAY (sir Walter), the founder of Emanuel college, Cambridge, was surveyor of the court of augmentations in the reign of Henry VIII. and privy counsellor, chancellor, and under treasurer of the exchequer, in that of Elizabeth. He is celebrated for his uncommon merits in his private and public character. Sir Walter died in 1589.—Lloyd's State Worthies.

MILL (John), a learned English divine, was born at Shap in Westmoreland about 1645. He was first servitor, and afterwards fellow, of Queen's college, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of doctor in divinity. In 1681 he was appointed chaplain to the king, and in 1685 elected principal of Edmund hall. His inestimable edition of the Greek Testament, with various readings, was published about a fortnight before his death, in 1707.—Biog. Brit.

MILL (Henry), principal engineer to the New River company, was born in London about 1690, and educated at one of the universities. His skill in mechanics recommended him to the New River company, in whose service he was for many years before his death in 1780. He was employed in various other works, particularly in supplying the town of Northampton with water, for which he received the freedom of that corporation.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MILLAR (John), professor of law at Glasgow, was bred to the Scotch bar, and filled the chair in the university with great reputation near forty years. His lectures were generally attended and greatly admired. He died in 1801. Mr. Millar published a good work entitled, the Origin of Distinction of Ranks in Society, 1 vol. 8vo.; and an Historical View of the English Government, 4to.—Monthly M. g.

MILLER (James), a divine and dramatic writer, was born in Dorsetshire in 1703. He received his education at Wadham college, Oxford, and while there he wrote a comedy called, The Humours of Oxford, performed in 1729. He was the author of several other pieces, the last of which was Mahomet a tragedy, during the run of which the author died in 1744. He also published a volume of sermons, and some poems.—Biog. Dram.

MILLER (Philip), a celebrated gardener, was born in Scotland in 1691. His father was gardener to the apothecaries' company at Chelsea, and his son succeeded him in 1782. He was a fellow of the royal society, and of the botanical academy at Florence. He corresponded with Linnæus, who said of his dictionary of gardening, non erit Lexicon Hortulanorum, sed Botanicorum, and by foreigners he was emphatically called Hortulanorum princeps. On account of his infirmities he resigned his office in the garden some time before his death, which happened in 1771. He left a large Herbarium of exotics in MS. Besides his Gardener's Dictionary folio, he published the Gardener's Calendar, 8vo.; Catalogus Plantarum Officialium quæ in horto botanico-Chelseiano aluntur, 8vo.; and some papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

MILLER (lady), an accomplished woman, of some literary talents, who published Letters from Italy, 3 vols. 8vo. She resided at Bath Easton near Bath; where she entertained several ingenious persons, who composed a collection of poems, which was afterwards published. She died in 1781.—Gent. Mag.

MILLER (Jeremiah), a learned divine and antiquary, was born at High Cleer, in Hampshire, of which place his father was minister, in 1713. He succeeded Dr. Lyttelton as dean of Exeter, and also as president of the society of antiquaries, to whose Archæologia he was a great contributor. Dr. Miller was a zealous champion for the genuineness of the Rowley poems, of which he printed an edition in 4to. with glossarial annotations. This work laid him open to the attacks of the critics, who were sceptical on these supposed relics of antiquity. The dean died in 1784.—Ibid.

MILLETIERE (Theophilus Brachet sieur de la), a protestant advocate, who instigated the reformed at Rochelle to take up arms in defence of their religion. In 1628 he was arrested at Toulouse, and kept in prison four years. On regaining his liberty he turned catholic, and wrote against the Calvinists. He died in 1685, despised by both parties.—Moreri.

MILLOT (Claude Francis Xavier), a French historian, was born at Befançon in 1726. He was for some time a member of the society of jesuits, which order he was permitted to quit, after officiating as a preacher at Versailles and Luneville. The government of Parma having founded a professorship of history in that place, the abbé Millot was appointed to fill the chair, which he did with great reputation several years. On his return to France he became tutor to the duke D'Enghien. Millot died in 1785. His works are, Elements of the History of France, 3 vols. 12mo.; Elements of the History of England, 3 vols.; Elements of Universal History, 9 vols.; History of the Troubadours, 3 vols.; Memoirs for a History of Louis XIV. and XV. 6 vols.; Translation of Orations from the Latin Historians.—Novv. Dict. Hist.

MILTO, a famous athlete of Crotona in Italy, who is said to have carried on his shoulders a bullock above forty yards, and then killed it with one blow of his fist, after which he made a meal of it in one day. He received the prize seven times at the Pythian games, and six at Olympia. Many other marvellous things are related of his enormous strength. He was devoured by wild beasts about 500 B.C.—Moreri.

MILIO (Titus Annius), a Roman, who made several parties for the purpose of obtaining the consulate. He was opposed by Clodius, and supported by some of the first members of the senate. In a quarrel between Clodius and Milo on the Appian way, the former was slain by some of the domestics of the latter. Cicero undertook the cause of Milo; but the rostrum being surrounded by soldiers, and a crowd of people, who expressed their disapprobation, he was so dismayed as to be unable to proceed. Milo was exiled to Marseilles, whither the orator sent him his discourse, on which he said: "Oh Cicero! if thou hadst spoken this, Milo would not have been now at Marseilles."—Cicero. Orat. Life of Cicero.

MILTIADES, an Athenian general, who founded a colony in the Chersonesus, after conquering the people who opposed his establishment. The Persians, having declared war against Athens, advanced with a prodigious army towards Marathon. The Athenians, under Miltiades, were very few; yet by his superior skill the Persians were defeated with great slaughter, and part of their fleet destroyed, B.C. 490. After this he had the command of a naval squadron, with which he took several islands; but being obliged to raise the siege of Paros, and also dangerously wounded, he returned to Athens, where he was accused of holding intelligence with the Persians, and condemned to death, which sentence was altered to imprisonment. He died shortly after of his wound, B.C. 489.—Plutarch. Stanger's Hist. Greece.

MILTON (John), an illustrious poet, was the son of a scrivener in London, and born in Bread-street in 1608. From St. Paul's school he went to Christ's college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, being designed for the church; but not having an inclination to that calling, he returned to his father, who had retired from business with a good fortune, and settled at Horton in Buckinghamshire. Here our poet wrote his Comus, L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, and Lycidas, poems of such exquisite merit as would alone have immortalized his name. In 1638 he travelled into France and Italy, where he was greatly esteemed and caressed by people of the highest rank and talents. On his return to England he settled in London, and undertook the tuition of some youths, for which profession he appears by his Traçuate on Education to have been well calculated. The troubles breaking out between the king and parliament,

Milton engaged as a political writer on the popular side; and having a great animosity to the hierarchy, he published some virulent and intolerant pamphlets against the bishops. In 1643 he married the daughter of a justice of peace in Oxfordshire; but his wife having been brought up with different sentiments from her husband, and disapproving of his zeal, eloped from him and returned to her friends. The impetuosity of Milton's temper carried him into an opinion that this furnished him with a sufficient reason for taking another wife. He accordingly published some tracts on divorce, to vindicate this notion; which he was about to carry into effect, when his wife's friends brought about a reconciliation. He continued an ardent champion for the rebellious party, even after the murder of Charles I., which sanguinary deed he defended with his pen against Salmasius; but he was not wholly disinterested in this, for the parliament rewarded him with one thousand pounds. He also wrote with great asperity and force against the king's book of prayers and meditations, entitled, the Icon Basilike. About this time he was wholly deprived of his sight, which appears to have been owing to a natural weakness, aggravated by intense application to his studies. In 1652 he lost his wife, and soon afterwards took another. Although he was a determined republican, and wrote with great energy and intemperance against monarchical government, "the very trappings of which," he said, "would support a commonwealth," yet he readily submitted to the usurpation of Cromwell, to whom he became Latin secretary. Milton endeavoured to prevent the restoration; which event he had undoubted cause to dread, considering the active part taken by him in the rebellion. And when the ancient constitution was re-established, he was excepted out of the act of indemnity, on which he kept himself concealed for some time. By the kindness, however, of sir William Davenant, and others, he obtained his pardon; soon after which he lost his second wife, and was not long without another. In the time of the great plague he removed with his family to Chalfont, in Buckinghamshire, where he completed his Paradise Lost, which was printed first in 1667. For this immortal work he had only fifteen pounds, and that by instalments. For the idea of it he is said to have been indebted to an Italian drama on the Fall of Man; and it is certain that he had himself an intention at first of writing only a tragedy on the same subject. As the work grew under his hand, his soaring genius gave it the form and consistency, the variety and elegance, of an epic poem. After this he engaged in another called Paradise Regained; the occasion of which was as follows: John Elwood, the quaker, who was his amanuensis, calling upon him at Chalfont, and the conversation turning upon Milton's great work, Elwood observed, "Thou hast said much upon Paradise Lost, but what hast thou to say upon Paradise Found?" Milton paused, and the next time they met he shewed Elwood the latter poem, saying, "This is owing to you." The Paradise Regained, though possessing many beauties, is in all respects inferior to the Paradise Lost; yet it is remarkable that the author gave it the preference. Milton died at his house in Bunhill-row in 1674, and lies interred in the parish church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, where a monument has been erected to his memory, and there is another in Westminster-abbey, set up by auditor Benson. But his best monument is Paradise Lost. This poem was unknown in the poet's lifetime, and many years after. It was not till Mr. Addison gave his admirable critique upon it in the Spectator, that the beauties of it became generally understood, and the whole merits of the poem to be admired. Mr. Dryden, indeed, had given his approbation of the work and his opinion of the author in an excellent epigram, which is usually prefixed to the Paradise Lost, or subjoined to the portrait of the author. Besides this and the other poems mentioned above, Milton wrote a drama on the Greek model, entitled, Samson Agonistes, which possesses uncommon beauties, though not adapted to theatrical representation. His Comus has been several times performed, and the first time was for the benefit of the author's grand-daughter, Mrs. Clarke, a widow in reduced circumstances. On that occasion Dr. Samuel Johnson wrote a prologue. The best edition of Milton's poetical works is that of Mr. Todd, in 6 vols. 8vo. The late Mr. Thomas Warton published his smaller poems in one volume, 8vo. enriched with very curious notes. Bishop Newton and Mr. Hayley have written the life of Milton, the first as a biographer and the latter as a poet. Among the prose works of Milton we shall only mention his History of England, 1 vol. 4to. which comes down only to the conquest; and his Areopagitica, in which he pleaded the cause of a free press with great force. The whole of his political works have been printed in 3 vols. folio, and also in quarto and octavo. Of the religion of Milton it is difficult to speak. In his youth he was a calvinist, but afterwards he became inclined to arminianism. From being a presbyterian he turned independent, and lastly he seems to have joined no particular communion. He was, however, a firm believer in the truths of revelation. When at Cambridge he was so handsome as to be called the Lady of Christ's college; and he retained his comeliness to the last. He died in good circumstances. By his first wife he had three daughters, two of whom used to read to him in eight languages, though they understood only their own, it being a usual saying with him that "one tongue was enough for a woman."—Bishop Newton's Life of Milton. Biog. Brit.

MIMNERMUS, a Greek poet and musician, was a native of Colophon, and flourished in the time of Solon. He excelled in elegiac poetry, the invention of which has been ascribed to him. Some fragments of his are in the collections of Stobæus, 1568, octavo.—Vossius de Poet. Græc.

MINOS I. the son of Jupiter and Europa, reigned in Crete B. C. 1432. He founded several cities, and reformed his subjects by his excellent laws and customs. The laws of Minos were in force even in the time of Plato, above a thousand years after the death of the legislator. His grandson Minos II. exercised justice with so much strictness as to be made by the fabulists one of the judges of the infernal regions.

MINOS III. of the same family as the preceding, reigned B. C. 1300. He imitated the severity of his ancestors in the administration of justice, and made several new laws, which he pretended to have received from Jupiter. He defeated the Athenians and Megarians, against whom he declared war, to avenge the death of his son Androsus. He took Megara, and reduced Athens to such extremity that the people were obliged to make peace on condition of delivering to him yearly seven youths of each sex, whence arose the fable of the Minotaur.—Stanyan. Moreri.

MINOT (Lawrence), an English poet, who is supposed to have died about 1352. Mr. Tyrwhit first discovered his MSS. in the Cottonian library, and they were published in 8vo. in 1795.

MINELLIUS (John), a Dutch critic, was born at Rotterdam about 1625, and died in 1683. He published editions of several of the Latin classics with curious notes.—Moreri.

MINUTIUS-FELIX, a famous Roman orator in the 3d century. He wrote a dialogue under the title of Octavius, in which he introduces a pagan and a christian disputing. It is a production of considerable merit, and written with eloquence in favour of christianity. The best editions are that of Davis at Cambridge in 1707, and that of Leyden 1709, both in 8vo.—Dupin.

MIRABAUD (John Baptiste), perpetual secretary to the French academy, who died in 1760, aged 86. He was at first a member of the congregation of the oratory, and afterwards in the army. His works are, Translations of Tasso's Jerusalem, and Ariosto's Orlando into French; Alphabet de la Fee Gracieuse, 1734. In 1770 was published under his name, but falsely, an atheistical book, entitled, the System of Nature, two vols. This stupid attack on religious truth has been translated into English.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MIRABEAU (Victor Riquetti, marquis de), was born of an ancient family in Provence, but originally of Naples, and died in 1790.

He was one of the principal institutors of a political sect called Economists. For his Théorie de l'Impôt, a tract in which he made some free remarks on the finances and government, he was sent to the Bastille for some time. His principal work, however, was that entitled, L'Ami des Hommes (the Friend of Mankind), 8 vols. 12mo. 1755, and afterwards published in 8 vols. In this performance the author displayed a considerable knowledge of rural and political economy, and threw out some judicious hints for the good of society. He also wrote Hommes à saler, 2 vols. 8vo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MIRABEAU (Honore Gabriel Riquetti, count de), one of the leaders in the French revolution, was born in 1749. After serving some time in the army he espoused a rich heiress of Aix, but he soon squandered away the fortune he had received, and plunged himself in debt. He was confined in different prisons, and on obtaining his liberty he eloped to Holland with the daughter of the president of the parliament of Besançon. For this he was afterwards imprisoned in the castle of Vincennes, and remained there a considerable time. In 1780 he regained his liberty, and his first act was to reclaim his wife, who refused to live with him. He had the audacity to plead his cause before the parliament of Aix, but without success. The French revolution offered Mirabeau an ample element for his activity. Imbibing the delusive doctrine of equality, he opened a shop, over the door of which was inscribed Mirabeau, dealer in dropery. He was elected deputy of the third estate of Aix, and the courtiers termed him the plebeian count. In the national assembly he displayed great powers as an orator, but was extremely violent and vindictive. He died in the midst of his political career, as it is supposed of poison, April 2, 1791, and his obsequies were celebrated with great revolutionary pomp. Mirabeau wrote, 1. A Comparison between the great Condé and Scipio Africanus; 2. History of Prussia under Frederick the Great, 8 vols. 4to.; 3. Collection of his Labours in the National Assembly, 5 vols. 8vo.; Original Letters, containing an Account of his Life and Amours, 4 vols. 8vo.; 4. Secret History of the Court of Berlin, 2 vols. 8vo. This book was burnt by the hands of the common executioner; 5. On Letters de Cachet, 8vo.; 6. Several political pamphlets.—Ibid.

MIRABELLA (Vincent), an Italian historian, who died in Sicily in 1674. He is known by a curious but scarce History of the Ancient Syracuse, printed at Naples in 1713, folio, under the title of Dichiarazione della Pianta dell' Antiche Syracuse.—Tiraboschi.

MIRANDULA (John Picus, lord of), a celebrated genius, was born in 1463. In his youth he gave astonishing proofs of his genius, and when little more than twenty he set up in all the universities of Italy a number of difficult problems in the sciences, which he engaged publicly to defend. Pope Innocent VII. however, condemned some of these as heretical, and Picus was prohibited from lecturing upon them. In 1491 he renounced all other learning, and devoted himself to the study of divinity. This promising young man died in 1494. Though his life was short he composed several works, which were printed together at Bologna in 1496.—Life by J. J. p.

MIRANDULA (John Francis Picus, prince of), nephew of the preceding, was born about 1469. In 1499 he succeeded to his paternal estates, but his two brothers combining against him, with the assistance of the emperor Maximilian I. and the duke of Ferrara, they drove him from his principality in 1502. He was restored by Pope Julius II. in 1511, but again expelled by the French the year following. In 1515 he recovered his territories, and continued in the quiet possession of them till 1533, when Galeotti Picus, his nephew, entered his castle in the night, and assassinated him with his eldest son. He was a lover of learning, and wrote several books.—Tiraboschi.

MIRE, or Mirau (Aubert), a learned divine, was born at Brussels in 1578. He was almoner and librarian to Albert duke of Austria, and died at Antwerp in 1640. He wrote Opera Historica et Diplomatica, 2 vols. folio; Elogia illustrium Belgii Scriptorum, 4to.; Vita Justi Lipsii, 8vo.; Origines Benedictinæ; Origines Carthusianorum, 8vo.; Bibliotheca Ecclesiastica, 2 vols. folio; &c.—Moreri.

MIREVELT (Michael Janson), a Dutch painter, was born at Delft in 1588, and died there in 1641. He painted portraits and historical subjects.—Houbraken.

MISSION (Maximilian), an eminent lawyer, who distinguished himself by his pleadings before the parliament of Paris in behalf of the protestants. He retired to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and afterwards travelled as tutor to an English nobleman. He died at London in 1721. He published, 1. A Voyage to Italy, 3 vols. 12mo.; 2. La Theatre sacra des Cevennes. This is a superstitious book, in which the author betrayed his credulity by espousing the cause of the French prophets; 3. Memoirs of a Traveller in England, 12mo.—Moreri.

MITCHELL (Joseph), a dramatic writer, was born in Scotland in 1684. He was patronized by sir Robert Walpole, but died poor, owing to his extravagance, in 1738. He wrote, 1. The Fatal Extravagance, a tragedy; 2. The Highland Fair, a ballad opera, 8vo.; 3. Poems, 2 vols. 8vo.—Eng. Dram.

MITHRIDATES king of Pontus, surnamed the Great, succeeded his father at the age of 11 years, B. C. 123. He murdered his mother, who had been left co-heiress of the kingdom; and also his two nephews. His treachery provoked, the Roman senate to declare war against him, and in revenge he ordered all the Romans in his dominions to be massacred. He then marched with a powerful army against Aquilius, whom he defeated; but Sylla, after some victories, forced Mithridates to make peace B.C. 84. He afterwards renewed the war in alliance with Tigranes king of Armenia. After conquering Bithynia, Mithridates laid siege to Cyzicum, in the Propontis; but the consul Lucullus having marched to its relief besieged Mithridates in his camp. The king of Pontus defeated the Romans in two combats, but was completely vanquished in a third. Glabrio being sent to supersede Lucullus in the command, this change was advantageous to Mithridates, who recovered the best part of his kingdom. Pompey, however, obtained a great victory over him near the Euphrates, B.C. 65. Mithridates fought an asylum with Tigranes, who refused him. He then sent ambassadors to Pompey to sue for peace, but the Romans insisted upon having the person of the king. The people of Pontus in the mean time proclaimed Pharnaces in the room of his father Mithridates, who put an end to his life in despair B.C. 64.—Plutarch. Stryan.

MOAVIA, general of the caliph Othman, whose death he avenged, after which he obtained the sovereignty about A. D. 643. He took Rhodes, where he destroyed the famous Colossus in 653. He afterwards ravaged Sicily, and razed Syracuse. But he was very unsuccessful in his attempts upon Constantinople, which he besieged seven years, and being defeated purchased a peace by paying a yearly tribute to the emperor of the east. It was at this famous siege that the Greek fire was discovered and made use of by the besieged to annoy their assailants. The caliph died in 680.—Mod. Un. Hist. Knowles's Hist. Turks.

MOCENIGO (Lewis), a noble Venetian whose family gave several doges to that republic, and he obtained that dignity himself in 1570. He joined with the pope and Spain against the Turks, who had taken the isle of Cyprus. Sebastian Veneri commanded the Venetian galleys; Marc Antony Colonna those of the pope; and Don John of Austria the Spanish. This allied force gained the famous battle of Lepanto, Oct. 7, 1571. The doge died in 1576. One of the same family, Andrew Mocenigo, who lived in 1522, was employed in several public trusts by the republic, and wrote two historical works, 1. De Bello Turcarum; 2. La Guerra di Cambray.—Moreri.

MODREVIUS (Andrew Fricius), secretary to Sigismund Augustus king of Poland. He wrote several works, of which the best is the treatise De Republica Emendanda, printed in 1554. Modrevius was very unsettled in his opinions, being at one time a Lutheran, and another Socinian. His Treatise on Original Sin is in favour of the latter sect.—Moreri.

MORBIUS (Godfrey), professor of medicine at Jena, was born in Thuringia in 1611, and died at Halle in Saxony in 1664. His works are; 1. Physiological Principles of Medicine, 4to.; 2. Abridgment of the Elements of Medicine, folio; 3. Anatomy of Camphire, 4to.; all in Latin. His son Godfrey was also a physician, and published Synopsis Medicinæ Practicæ, fol. 1667.—Ibid.

MOEBIUS (George), a Lutheran divine, was born at Laucha in Thuringia in 1616. He was professor of theology at Leipzig, and died there in 1697. Moebius wrote a learned and able work on the Origin, Propagation, and Continuance of the Pagan Oracles, against Vandale, 12mo.—Ibid.

MOINE (Stephen le), a protestant divine, was born at Caen in 1624. He became professor of divinity at Leyden, where he died in 1689. He wrote Varia Sacra, 2 vols. 4to.; and other works.—Ibid.

MOINE (Peter le), a French poet, was born at Chaumont in Bassigny in 1602. He was a jesuit, and wrote an epic poem on St. Louis, and some other pieces, both in prose and verse. He died in 1672.—Ibid.

MOINE (Francis le), a French painter, was born at Paris in 1688. He painted the apotheosis of Hercules in the saloon at Versailles, for which he was appointed first painter to the king. He stabbed himself in a fit of lunacy in 1737.—D'Argenville.

MOINE (Abraham le), was born in France at the end of the seventeenth century. On account of his religion he came to London, where he officiated to a congregation of French protestants, and died in 1760. He translated into French, bishop Gibson's Pastoral Letters; bishop Sherlock on the Witnesses of the Resurrection; and the same prelate's Use and End of Prophecy, 8vo. To these translations he prefixed curious and learned dissertations.—Novo. Diss. Hist.

MOIVRE (Abraham de), an able mathematician, was born at Vitry in Champagne in 1661. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he visited London, where he perfected his studies in the mathematics, and was chosen a fellow of the royal society. He also became a member of the academy of sciences at Paris. His merit was so well known in the first learned body, that he was appointed to decide in the famous dispute between Newton and Leibnitz on the differential calculus. De Moivre wrote an excellent Treatise on Chances, 8vo. This is a standard book on the subject. He was also the author of another on Life Annuities, and of several valuable papers in the Philosophical Transactions. He died in 1754. To his other excellent qualities he added that of being a sincere christian; and when a person once said to him, by way of compliment, that all mathematicians denied religion, De Moivre answered, "I will prove that I am a christian by pardoning the foolish insult you have committed."—Hutton. Novv. Dict. Hist.

MOLA (Peter Francis), a painter, was born in the Milanese in 1621. He was the disciple of d'Arpino, and of Albano; but by studying the works of other masters, he acquired a style of his own. He painted history and landscape, and died in 1666.—Ibid.

MOLA (John Baptist), a painter, was born about 1620. He studied at Paris under Vouet, and afterwards attended Albano at Bologna. He excelled in landscape painting, and the foliage of his trees is admirable.—Ibid.

MOLAMIS or VERMEULIN (John), professor of theology at Louvaine, was born at Lille in 1533, and died in 1585. His works are; 1. An edition of Ufuard's Martyrology, with an appendix and notes, 8vo.; 2. Natales Sanctorum Belgii, 12mo.; 3. Historia SS. Maginum et Picturatum, 8vo.; 4. De Canonicis, 1670. This is a curious and learned book. 5. De Fide Hereticis servanda; 6. De Piis Testamentatis; 7. Theologiæ practicæ Compendium; 8. Militia sacraducum Brabantæ Rerum Lovenensium. He is not to be confounded with Gerard Walter Molamis, a lutheran divine who died in 1722. He held a correspondence with Bossuet concerning a union between the Lutherans and catholics.—Ibid.

MOLAY (James de), the last grand-master of the order of Templars. The prodigious wealth of the knights having excited the envy and hatred of the great, particularly of Philip the Fair, king of France, it was resolved to suppress the order. Accordingly a violent persecution broke out against the knights on charges the most absurd and abominable. Molay was tried, condemned, and burnt alive near Paris, March 11, 1314. He endured his sufferings with the greatest fortitude, and vindicated the innocence of his order to the last.—Verot's Hist. of the Knights of Malta.

MOLESWORTH (Robert, lord), an ingenious nobleman, was the son of a merchant at Dublin, and born there in 1656. He contributed so effectually to the revolution that king William admitted him of the privy council, and sent him as ambassador to the court of Denmark. Having given some cause of offence at Copenhagen he was dismissed, and on his return to England he wrote an account of Denmark, which is supposed to be somewhat partial though well written, and was once very popular. George I. appointed him a commissioner of trade and plantations, and advanced him to the Irish peerage in 1716. He died in 1725.—Brit. Brit.

MOLIERE (John Baptiste), a French comic writer, whose real name was Pocquelin, was born at Paris in 1620. His father, who was a tapestry maker, intended him for the same business; but young Pocquelin being in the frequent habit of visiting the theatre, conceived a violent inclination for the stage. At the age of fourteen he commenced his studies under the jesuits, and made a rapid progress in the belles lettres. His father becoming infirm and reduced, the youth associated himself with some other persons of his own age, who had a like attachment to dramatic representation. It was in consequence of this connection that he took the name of Moliere; and it is rather remarkable that this custom of changing their names has been common to other actors in France and England. He now joined a company of comedians who acted at Lyons, and in 1653 he produced in the same party his first comedy, called L'Etourdi, or the Blunderer. This piece was received with great applause, and procured him the friendship of the prince de Conti, who had known the author at college. That prince offered to make him his secretary, which honourable station Moliere declined, saying, that, "though he was a passable author, he should make but a bad secretary." After performing at various places; the company of Moliere visited Paris, where they performed several of his plays before Louis XIV. who took the company into his own service, and gave their leader a pension. His last piece, the Hypochondriac, or le Malade Imaginaire, occasioned his death, for by his exertions in performing the principal character he was seized with a convulsion, of which he died Feb. 17, 1673. The archbishop of Paris refused to allow his remains to be interred in consecrated ground on account of his profession, till he was compelled to it by the king himself. Moliere left a widow, who married a comedian named Guerin, and died in 1728, aged 92. The works of Moliere have been often printed; the best edition is that of Paris in 1772, in 6 vols. 8vo. They have been translated into English; and several of his comedies have been adapted to our stage with success. Moliere is justly called the French Aristophanes.—Moreri.

MOLIERES (Joseph Privat de), a French philosopher, was born at Tarascon of a noble family in 1677. He received his education in the congregation of the oratory, after which he went to Paris to converse with Malebranche, of whose works he was passionately fond. The academy of sciences admitted him a member in 1721, and two years afterwards he obtained the chair of philosophy in the royal college. He died in 1742. His works are; 1. Mathematical Lessons necessary for understanding the Principles of Philosophy, 12mo.; 2. Lessons of Philosophy, or the Elements of Physics, determined solely by the laws of mechanics, explained in the royal college, 3 vols. 8vo. In this work he endeavoured to improve upon the systems of Des Cartes and Newton. 3. Elements of Geometry, 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MOLINA (Louis), a celebrated jesuit, was born at Cuenca in New Castille, of a noble family, in 1535. He completed his studies at Coimbra, after which he was professor of divinity at Eborac twenty years. He died at Madrid in 1600. Molina wrote Commentaries on the Summa of Aquinas; a treatise de Justitia et Jure; another de Concordia Gratiae et Liberi arbitrii, 4to. This last is a work of merit, and occasioned great disputes afterwards between the jesuits and dominicans, the latter order accusing Molina of reviving pelagianism. There was a Spanish lawyer of this name who wrote a learned work on the hereditary estates of the nobles of Spain.—Moreri.

MOLINET (John), librarian and almoner to Margaret of Austria, and canon of Valenciennes, wrote several works, the most known of which is a curious one, entitled, Les Dits et Faits de Molinet, 8vo. He also wrote a Commentary on the Romance of the Rose. The author died in 1607.—Moreri.

MOLINET (Claude du), canon-regular and procurer-general of the congregation of St. Genevieve, was born at Chalons in 1620, and died in 1687. He published, 1. An edition of the Epistles of Stephen, bishop of Tournay; with notes; 2. The History of the Popes from Medals, fol. Latin; 3. Reflections on the Origin and Antiquity of the Canons, Regular and Secular; 4. On the Mitre of the Antients; 5. The Cabinet of Saint Genevieve, fol.—Ibid.

MOLINETTI (Anthony), an Italian physician, was a native of Venice, and practised medicine at Padua with great reputation. He died at Venice in 1675. The work by which he is best known is a Treatise on the Organs of Sense, in Latin, printed at Padua in 1669, 4to.—Ibid.

MOLINOS (Michael), a Spanish divine, was born at Saragossa in 1627. He published a book called the Spiritual Guide, in which he maintained that man must annihilate himself, or reduce his mind to an absolute quiescence, in order to enjoy God. For this he was sent to the prison of the inquisition, where he died in 1696. The religious opinions of Molinos occasioned great disputes in France, where they were known by the name of quietism, on account of the passive disposition of mind which they inculcate. Fenelon and Madame Guyon were the great advocates and improvers of this system.—Ibid.

MOLL (Herman), an English geographer, whose maps were once held in considerable esteem. He died in 1732.

MOLLER (Henry), a protestant divine who distinguished himself as hebrew professor at Wirtemberg. He died at Hamburg, of which place he was a native, in 1589, aged 59. He wrote Commentaries on Isaiah and the Palms; and some Latin poems.—Misch. Adam. vit. Germ. Theol.

MOLLER (Daniel William), a native of Prefsburg. He travelled through the greatest part of Europe, and became professor of history and metaphysics, also librarian in the university of Altorf. He died in 1712, aged 70. His works are: 1. Meditatio de Hungaricis quibusdam Insectis Prodigiosis ex ære una cum nive in agro delapsis, 12mo.; 2. Opuscula Ethica et Problematico-critica, 12mo.; 3. Opuscula Medico historico-philologica; 4. Mensa Poetica; 5. Indiculus Philologorum ex Germania oriundorum, 4to.—Moreri.

MOLLER (John), a learned writer, was born at Fleinburg in the duchy of Sleswick, in 1661, and died in 1725. His works are: 1. Introductio ad Historiam Ducatum Sleswicensis et Holstiaci, 8vo.; 2. Cimbria Litterata, 3 vols. fol.; 3. Ilogoge ad Historiam Chersonesi Cimbricæ, 8vo.; 4. De Cornutis et Hermaphroditis, 4to.—Ibid.

MOLLOY (Charles), a dramatic writer, was a native of Dublin, and educated in the college of that city. He afterwards became a student of the Middle Temple, and was the editor of a periodical paper, called Common Sense. He died in 1767. His plays are, The Perplexed Couple; The Coquet; The Half-pay Officers; comedies.—Biog. Dram.

MOLO, a rhetorician who went to Rome B. C. 87. He taught rhetoric with great reputation, and had Cicero for an auditor, who followed him to Rhodes to profit by his instructions. Some years afterwards Molo was sent ambassador by his countrymen to the Roman senate, and was received with great honour.

MOLSA (Francis Maria), an Italian poet of the 16th century. He was a native of Modena, and a man of learning, but his manners were licentious. He died in 1544. He wrote some poems in Latin and Italian of great merit. The former are in the Deliciae Poetarum Italorum, and the latter were printed separately in 1750, 2 vols. 8vo.—Tir. lofski.

MOLSA (Tarquinia), grand-daughter of the preceding, was one of the most accomplished women of her time. She understood Latin, Greek, and Hebrew; and was an extraordinary proficient in music. The Roman senate bestowed the rights of citizenship upon her and her family in 1600. She translated several pieces from the Greek and Latin.—Ibid.

MOLYNEUX (Sir William), a gallant knight in the reign of Henry VIII. who displayed great bravery at the battle of Flodden-field. On his death-bed he gave this advice to his son; "Let the underwood grow; the tenants are the support of a family, and the commonalty are the strength of a kingdom. Improve this fairly; but force not violently, either your bounds or rents, above your forefathers."—Gen. Biog. Diâ.

MOLYNEUX (William), an ingenious mathematician, was born at Dublin in 1656, and educated at Trinity college in that city, after which he entered as a student of the Middle Temple, London. The philosophical society, established at Dublin in 1683, owed its origin to his endeavours, and he became the first secretary. Soon after he was appointed surveyor-general of the works, and chief engineer. In 1685 he was chosen a member of the royal society, and in 1689 he settled with his family at Chester, where he employed himself in finishing his Treatise on Dioptrics, which was published in 1692. In this year he returned to Dublin, and was chosen one of the representatives for that city. He died in 1698. Besides the above he wrote Sciothericum Telescopium, or a description of a Telescopic Dial invented by him; also the Case of Ireland stated, in Relation to its being bound by Acts of Parliament in England; some papers in the Philosophical Transactions; and several letters between him and Mr. Locke. His son Samuel was born at Chester in 1689. He became secretary to George II. when prince of Wales; and was distinguished by his skill in astronomy. He greatly improved the method of making telescopes, one of which of his own construction he presented to the king of Portugal. But being appointed a commissioner of the admiralty, a stop was put to his enquiries. He gave his papers on the subject to Dr. Smith, professor of astronomy at Cambridge, who printed them in his Treatise on Optics.—Biog. Brit.

MOMBRIUS (Boninus), a writer of Milan, whose curious work, entitled The Lives of the Saints, 2 vols. folio, is very scarce, and much sought for. It was printed about 1479. There are also poems by this author.—Moreri.

MONALDESCHI (Lewis), a gentleman of Orvietta, was born in 1326. He lived at Rome, where he wrote in Italian, Roman Annals from 1228 to 1340. He died about 1380.—Tiraboschi.

MONALDESCHI (John), equerry to queen Christina of Sweden, who having written an account of his mistress's intrigues, was put to death by her orders at Fontainebleau, Oct. 10, 1657. This bold and sanguinary deed, in a country where she was only a guest, gave great and just displeasure to the French government.—Moreri.

MONAMY (Peter), a painter of sea-pieces, was born at Jersey. There is a large picture painted by him in painters' hall. He died in Westminster in 1749.—Vertue. Pilkington.

MONANIEUL (Henry de), professor of mathematics at Paris in 1577. He was also dean of the faculty of physic at that university, and published there a Latin translation of Aristotle's Mechanics, with a Commentary.—Moreri.

MONARDES (Nicolas), a Spanish physician, was born at Seville. His work on the Drugs of the Indies procured him a great reputation. He was also the author of some other medical performances, and died in 1577.—Ibid.

MONCEAUX (François de), a native of Arras, who was sent ambassador to Henry IV. by Alexander Farnese. He wrote, 1. Eucolica Sacra, 8vo, Paris, 1589; 2. Aaron purgatus sive de Vitulo aureo, lib. ii. 8vo.; 3. L' Histoire des Apparitions divine faites a Moyse, Arras, 1524, 4to.; 4. Templum Justitiae, a poem, 8vo.; 5. Lucubrationes in Cantici Cantoricum, 4to.—Ibid.

MONCONYS (Balthazar de), the author of Travels to the East, in 3 vols. 4to. was a native of Lyons, where he died in 1665.—Ibid.

MONCRIF (Francis Augustin Paradis de), a member of the French academy, was born at Paris in 1687. He wrote An Essay on the Necessity and Means of Pleasing; The Friendly Rivals, a romance; the Abderites, a comedy; Poems and small pieces, the whole collected into 4 vols. 12mo. He died in 1770.—Novv. Diâ. Hist.

MONDONVILLE (John Joseph Cassanea de), a celebrated musician, was born at Narbonne in 1715, and died at Belleville near Paris in 1772. He excelled upon the violin, and his sonatas, symphonies, and operas, shew great taste and judgment. He also composed some religious pieces in a fine style, as, Magnus Dominus, the Jubilate, and Dominus regnavit.—Novv. Diâ. Hist.

MONGAULT (Nicholas Hubert de), a learned ecclesiastic, was born at Paris in 1674, and educated in the congregation of the oratory. He became a member of the academy of inscriptions, and tutor to the duke de Chartres. The abbey of Charteux was the reward of his services, after which he obtained that of Villeneuve. He died in 1746. His works are; a French translation of Herodian, and another of Tully's Lectures to Atticus; and two dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions.—Moreri.

MONIN (John Edward du), a modern Latin poet, was born at Gy in the province of Burgundy, and published in the reign of Henry III. of France, a great number of poems, both Latin and French, which have been highly celebrated. The author was assassinated in 1586, aged twenty-nine.—Moreri.

MONK (George), duke of Albemarle, was born of an antient family at Potheridge, near Torrington in Devonshire, in 1608. Being a younger son, he entered as a volunteer under his relation sir Richard Grenville. On the breaking out of the war between Charles I. and the Scotch in 1639, he obtained a colonel's commission, and attended his majesty in both his expeditions to the north. When the Irish rebellion began in 1641, he was sent thither, and did such service that the lords justices appointed him governor of Dublin. On his return to England he was sent to relieve Nantwich, where he was taken prisoner by the army belonging to the parliament, by whom he was sent to the Tower, where he remained till 1646, when the royal cause being ruined, he obtained his liberty on condition of taking a command in Ireland, where he concluded a peace with the rebels, which displeased the parliament, who passed a vote of censure upon him for it. Cromwell, who thought very highly of his military talents, made him lieutenant-general, and gave him the chief command in Scotland. But the sagacious usurper had strong suspicions of Monk's sincerity and intentions, and not long before his death wrote him a letter, to which he added this postscript: "There be that tell me that there is a certain cunning fellow in Scotland, called George Monk, who is said to lie in wait there to introduce Charles Stuart: I pray you use your diligence to apprehend him and send him up to me." Monk acted with great caution and circumspection after the protector's death, and though he marched into England with a powerful army, no party could guess to which side he inclined. The republican faction courted him, and the royalists were afraid that he intended to set up for himself. Moderate men pressed him to call a free parliament, to which measure he acceded, as the one most favourable to his own views. This assembly voted the restoration of the king, with whom the general had carried on a secret correspondence. Thus was this great event brought about by his prudence without bloodshed. Honours were deservedly heaped upon him, and he was equally esteemed both by the king and people. He was created duke of Albemarle with a pension of seven thousand pounds a year. In 1664 he was appointed admiral of the fleet in conjunction with prince Rupert, and obtained a great victory over the Dutch. During the plague in London he continued in the city to the great comfort of the inhabitants, who looked up to him in that awful visitation as their tutelary angel. This great man, whose private virtues were equal to his valour and political talents, died of a dropsy in 1670. His corpse, after lying in state several weeks, was interred in the chapel of Henry VII. in Westminster abbey. He wrote an excellent book, entitled, Observations on Military and Political Affairs, 1671, folio; and a Collection of his Letters was printed in 1715. Though the general was never afraid of a cannon shot, it is said that he stood in fear of his wife, who was the daughter of a blacksmith, and was bred a milliner. She was a bitter enemy of lord Clarendon, and a great mistress of abusive language. She was at first the mistress of Monk, when he was a prisoner in the Tower; and had by him a son, Christopher duke of Albemarle, who died governor of Jamaica in 1688.—Skinner's Life of Monk. Biog. Brit. Granger.

MONK (Nicholas), an English prelate, was the brother of the above, and educated at Wadham college, Oxford. He became rector of Kilhampton, in Cornwall, and assisted his brother in the restoration of the king, by whom he was made provost of Eton, and bishop of Hereford. He died in 1661.—Ibid.

MONK (the honourable Mrs.), was daughter of lord Moleworth, and wife of George Monk, esq. She was skilled in the Latin, Italian, and Spanish languages, and had a fine turn for poetry. She died in 1715. Her poems were published the year following, under the title of Mariada, 8vo.—Jacob's Lives of the Poets.

MONMOUTH (James duke of), a natural son of Charles II. was born at Rotterdam in 1649. At the restoration of his father, he was created earl of Orkney; and afterwards duke of Monmouth and knight of the garter. He was some time in the service of France with an English regiment, and signalized himself against the Dutch, for which he was made lieutenant-general. On his return to England he was sent to quell an insurrection in Scotland. After this he joined the disaffected party, who were for excluding the duke of York from the throne. He was also concerned in a plot against his father, for which he was pardoned, and then went to Holland, from whence he returned at the accession of James II. and having landed in Dorsetshire obtained several followers, who were defeated at Sedgemoor in Somersetshire. The duke was taken in a corn-field and sent to London, where he was tried and beheaded on Tower-hill in 1685.—Rapin. Hume.

MONNIER (Peter le), professor of philosophy in the college of Harcourt at Paris, and a member of the academy of sciences, died in 1757, aged 82. He wrote Curfus philosophicus, 6 vols. 12mo. His son Charles le MONNIER was professor of philosophy in the royal college. He was one of the mathematicians sent in 1736 to measure a meridian near the pole. He was a member of the academy of sciences, and died in 1799.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MONNOYE (Bernard de la), an ingenious writer, was born at Dijon in 1641. In 1671 he gained the prize of poetry founded by the French academy, and again in 1675 and 1677. He also wrote some excellent pieces in prose, as Remarks on the Meniagiana; a Dissertation on the famous book De Tribus Impostoribus; a Dissertation on Pomponius Latius, &c. His poems were printed in 1716, and in 1721, 8vo. He died in 1728.—Moreri.

MONRO (Alexander), a celebrated physcian, was born in Scotland in 1697. He studied at Leyden, and contracted an intimate friendship with Boerhaave. In 1719 he returned to Edinburgh, where he read lectures on anatomy. He died in 1767, after publishing some valuable works; as, 1. Osteology; 2. Anatomy of the Nerves: 3. Several papers in the Medical Essays of Edinburgh; 4. On the Success of Inoculation in Edinburgh. They were collected and published together in 1781, in one volume 4to.—Hutchinson's Biog. Med.

MONRO (John), an eminent physician, was born at Greenwich in Kent, in 1715, and educated at Merchant Taylors' school, London, from whence he removed to St. John's college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. While he was abroad the university conferred on him his doctor's degree. In 1757 he was appointed joint physician to Bridewell and Bethlem hospitals. He published an answer to Dr. Battie's treatise on Madness. He died in 1791.—Ibid.

MONRO (Alexander), an episcopal divine, was born in the shire of Ross in 1648, and educated at King's college, Aberdeen, where he was chosen professor of philosophy. In 1686 he was appointed principal of Edinburgh, and died in 1713. He wrote several pieces against the presbyterians.—Gen. Biog. Diel.

MONSEY (Messenger), an English physician, was a man of great originality of manners, and of considerable talents. He was for many years physician of Chelsea hospital, and died in 1788, at the age of 96. He ordered by will that his body should be anatomized, and the skeleton preserved in Chelsea hospital, having a great aversion to interment in churches and church-yards.—Europ. Mag.

MONSIGNORI (Francesco), an Italian painter, was born at Verona in 1455. He was the disciple of Andrea Mantegna, and painted historical subjects, and portraits. He died in 1519.—Pilkington.

MONSON (Sir William), a gallant admiral, was born in Lincolnshire in 1569. He served in several expeditions in the reign of queen Elizabeth. In 1604 he was appointed admiral in the North sea, and honourably supported the English flag. In 1616 he fell into disgrace, and was imprisoned in the Tower, from whence he was soon after released. He died in 1643. His Naval Tracts were printed in 1682 in one volume folio.—Campbell.

MONT (Deodate del), a painter, was born at St. Tron in 1581. He was the disciple of Rubens, with whom he travelled to Italy. His style resembled that of his master. He died in 1634.—D'Argenville.

MONTAGU (lady Mary Wortley), was the eldest daughter of Evelyn Pierrepont, earl and afterwards duke of Kingston. She was born at Thoresby in Nottinghamshire, about 1690. She received a very liberal education, and was taught the elements of the Greek and Latin languages, under the same tutors as her brother lord Newark. In 1712 she married Edward Wortley Montagu, esq. grandson of the gallant earl of Sandwich above-mentioned. This gentleman distinguished himself as an able and upright senator in parliament, and was the intimate friend and correspondent of Addison. In 1716 he was appointed ambassador to the court of Constantinople, whither he was accompanied by his lady. During this embassy she wrote a very elegant and interesting description of Constantinople in letters to her friends. Of these a surreptitious edition appeared in 1763, in 3 vols. 12mo. to which was afterwards added a fourth volume. The editor was the well known Cleland. So well were these letters received as to pass through several impressions, and to be translated into many languages. A genuine edition of these, and lady Mary's other works was published under the authority of her son, the marquis of Bute, in 1803, 5 vols. 8vo. While at Constantinople she obtained information of a practice among the villagers of engrafting or inoculating for the small-pox. This method she caused to be applied to her son, and by this means was the instrument of introducing inoculation into this part of Europe. At the end of 1718 lady Mary returned with her husband to England, and soon after settled at Twickenham, where she maintained an intimacy with Mr. Pope; but the friendship was afterwards broken, and the poet scrupled not to write the basest satires against her talents and reputation, which satires, when charged with, he was mean enough to deny. In 1739, on account of her health, she went abroad, and settled at Brescia in the Venetian territories, where she remained till 1761, when, at the request of her daughter, lady Bute, she visited England. She died in August 1762, aged 73. Lady Mary was a woman of brilliant genius and great judgment, and had a fine taste for poetry.—Life by Dalloway prefixed to her Works.

MONTAGU (Edward Wortley), son of the above, was born at Warncliffe-lodge in Yorkshire about 1714. In 1716 his father going on an embassy to Constantinople, Lady Mary caused her son to be inoculated there with the small-pox. He received his education at Westminster school, from whence he eloped, and entered into the service of a chimney-sweeper. His family had given him up as lost, when a gentleman recognized him in the street, and took him home to his father. He escaped a second time, and engaged with the master of a fishing smack; after which he shipped himself on board a vessel bound to Spain, where he attached himself to a muleteer. In this situation he was discovered and conveyed home to his friends, who placed him under a tutor, with whom he travelled abroad. His father being rather scanty in his remittances, owing probably to the son's extravagance, the tutor is said to have committed a curious fraud in order to obtain a supply. This was the printing of a book entitled, "Observations on the Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire, by Edward Wortley Montagu, Esq." This work, whether the production of the son or not, gave great pleasure to the old gentleman, who acknowledged it in a handsome manner. Edward was for some time in parliament, and conducted himself in a manner becoming his rank. Afterwards he went to the Levant, where he adopted the dress and manners of the Turks. Out of pique against his family he caused an advertisement to be inserted in the English papers, for a wife without fortune, that by having an heir he might disappoint his relations. The expedient however failed; and this singular man died in Italy in 1776. He wrote Observations on Earthquakes; an Account of the Written Mountains in Arabia; and other curious papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—Gent. Mag. Gen. Biog. Diā.

MONTAGUE (Richard), a learned prelate, was born in Buckinghamshire about 1577, and educated at King's college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1616 he was made dean of Hereford; and in 1621 he published a learned answer to Selden's History of Tithes. He was afterwards engaged in a controversy with the papists, on which occasion he wrote his Appello Cæsarem, for which he was ordered to appear at the bar of the house of commons in the first parliament of Charles I. on the charge of maintaining arminian and popish errors. By the interest of archbishop Laud he was made bishop of Chichester in 1628, from whence he was translated to Norwich in 1638. He died in 1641. His greatest work is an Ecclesiastical History in Latin, in which his learning appears to vast advantage.—Biog. Brit.

MONTAGUE (Charles), earl of Halifax, was born of an ancient family in Northamptonshire in 1661. He received his education at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Trinity college, Cambridge. In 1687 he wrote, in conjunction with Prior, a piece called, the Country Mouse and City Mouse, by way of ridiculing Dryden's poem in favour of the church of Rome, entitled, the Hind and Panther. The satire was happy, and had so good an effect, that, at the revolution, Mr. Halifax received a pension. In 1691 he was made one of the commissioners of the treasury, and three years after chancellor of the exchequer. In 1698 he was appointed first commissioner of the treasury, and in 1700 was advanced to the peerage, by the title of baron Halifax. He was, however, twice impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors by the commons, but the accusations were resisted by the house of lords. At the accession of George I. he was created earl of Halifax, and intitled knight of the garter. His lordship died in 1715. He was the patron of Addison, and intimate with Swift, Pope, and the most eminent writers and wits of his day. He wrote some poems and other works.—Biog. Brit.

MONTAGUE (Edward lord), earl of Sandwich, a gallant English admiral, served under Cromwell, and afterwards concurred heartily in the restoration of Charles II. by whom he was created an earl. In the battle of Southwold bay, after he had by his conduct rescued a great part of the fleet from the most imminent danger, and given astonishing proofs of his bravery, his ship caught fire, on which he leaped into the sea and was drowned, May 28. 1672. He amused himself in engraving. He also translated from the Spanish a book on the Art of Metals, 8vo.; and his Letters and Negotiations have been printed in 2 vols.—Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors Campbell's Admirals.

MONTAIGNE (Michael de), a celebrated French writer, was born at a feat of that name in Perigord in 1533. He was intended for the bar, but disliking that profession he quitted it, and travelled into different countries, making his observations rather on human nature than places and curiosities. At Rome he was honoured with the citizenship. In 1581 he was chosen mayor of Bourdeaux, in which post he succeeded the marshal Biron. He gave such satisfaction in this situation as to be elected for four years successively. He appeared with applause at the meeting of the states of Blois in 1588, at which time he was honoured by Charles IX. with the order of St. Michael. After an active life he retired to his seat of Montaigne, where he devoted himself to philosophical studies, and died as a christian in 1592. The Essays of Montaigne shew great knowledge of the human mind, and contain many valuable lessons of instruction. Cardinal Du Perron, emphatically called them the breviary of honest men. The best edition is that of Coste, with notes, in 1725, or 1739, 3 vols. 4to. The Travels of Montaigne were printed in 1772, 3 vols. 12mo.—Moreri.

MONTALBANI (Ovidio), professor of physics and astronomy at Bologna, was born about 1602, and died in 1672. He wrote Index Plantarum, 4to.; Bibliotheca botanica, under the name of Bumaldi, 4to.; Epistolæ de rebus in Bononiensi tractu indigenis; Cœnotaphia clarorum doctorum Bononiensium; Arboretum libri duo, folio.—Halleri. Bibl. Botan.

MONTALEMBERT (Mark-Rene), a French general, and a member of the academy of sciences, was born of an antient family at Angouleme in 1714. He displayed great military talent in the French, Russian, and Swedish service; but is best known by his works, which are, 1. Perpendicular Fortification, or the Art Defensive superior to the Offensive, by a New Manner of Employing the Artillery, 1776, 11 vols. 4to.; 2. Correspondence with Ministers and Generals, 3 vols.; 3. Comedies and Poems. In 1794 this man divorced his wife, and at the age of 80 married another, by whom he had a daughter. He died in 1799.—L'Ecu. Diâ. Hist.

MONTAMY (Didier Francis d'Arclais, siegneur de), was born at a place of the same name in Normandy. He was in the service of the duke of Orleans, and made chevalier of the order of St. Lazarus. His works are, 1. La Lithogénésie, translated from the German of Pott, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Traité on Colours for Painting in Enamel and upon Porcelaine, 12mo. He died in 1765.—Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

MONTANUS, an heresiarch of the second century, was born at Ardabun in Mysia. He pretended that the Holy Spirit had descended into him, and two female followers of his, Priscilla and Maximilla, women of considerable property. Montanus denied the doctrine of the Trinity, condemned second marriages as adulterous, and asserted the necessity of immediate inspiration. His followers, who were numerous, affected extraordinary agitations of body as the effect of the spirit, and pretended to revelations. Among others who were seduced by this strange sect was the learned Tertullian, who, however, at last separated from them.—Dupin. Mosheim. Eusebius.

MONTANUS (Benedict Arias), a learned Spanish divine, was born about 1528. Philip II. employed him in editing a Polyglot Bible, after the Complutensian edition, which work he executed with such reputation that the king offered him a bishopric, which he refused, and accepted only a pension. He died about 1600.—Moreri.

MONTANUS (John Baptist), an Italian physician, was born at Verona in 1488. He studied at Padua, where he obtained a professorship. He died in 1551. He wrote, 1. Medicina universa; 2. Opuscula varia medica; 3. De gradibus et facultatibus medicamentorum; 4. Lectiones in Galenum & Avicennam.—Moreri.

MONTARANI (Geminiano), an astronomer of Modena, who taught mathematics at Bologna with reputation, and died at the close of the 17th century. He wrote a Dissertation on Comets; on the Fixed Stars, and on Astronomical Observations.—Moreri.

MONTARROYO MASCARENHAS (Freyre de), a native of Lisbon, who wrote, 1. A Natural, Astrological, and Political History of the World; 2. An Account of Oudenarde and Peterwaradin; and other works. He died in 1730, aged 60.

MONTAUSIER (Charles de Sainte-Marie duke of), a peer of France, and governor of Louis the dauphin, was born of an ancient family in Touraine. He was a man of inflexible integrity, and austere virtue. When the plague broke out in Normandy, of which province he was governor, he resolved to go thither, which occasioned some of his family to remonstrate with him on his imprudence; "for me," answered the duke, "I believe that governors are obliged to residence as well as bishops, and if at other times, certainly in those of public calamity." He inculcated upon the mind of the dauphin the purest sentiments, and always discouraged flattery. One day he took him into a miserable cottage, and said to him, "See, my prince, in this cottage, in this miserable retreat, lodge the father, and the mother, and the children who labour incessantly to pay the gold which ornaments your palace, and provide the luxuries for your table." When his office as governor ceased, he said to his pupil, "If you are an honest man, you will love me; but if otherwise you will hate me, and I shall console myself." This virtuous nobleman died in 1690, aged 80. His duchess was Julia-Lucia d'Argennes, of the noble family of RAMBOUILLET. She was a woman of high talent, and great virtue. She died in 1671, aged 64.—Moreri. Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

MONTBELLIARD (Philibert Gueneau de), a French naturalist, was born in 1730, and died in 1785. He assisted Buffon in his history of birds, and also in an account of insects. Montbelliard was likewise the editor of the Collection Academique, which contained the most interesting memoirs, extracted from the publications of the different learned societies in Europe.—Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

MONTCALM (Louis Joseph de St. Veran, marquis de), a celebrated French general, was born of a noble family at Candiac in 1712. He entered early into the army, and distinguished himself gallantly in many battles, particularly that of Placenza in 1746. In 1756 he became a field marshal, and was appointed to command the French army in Canada, where he opposed lord Loudoun with considerable skill and success. He afterwards defeated Abercromby, the successor of his lordship; but in the battle fought under the walls of Quebec, in 1759, Montcalm received a mortal wound, as did likewise the brave English general Wolfe.—Nouv. Diâ. Hist.

MONTZUCULI (count Sebastian), an Italian gentleman, who was introduced at the French court, and became cup-bearer to the dauphin Francis, son of Francis I. He was accused of having poisoned the young prince at Valence, and being put to the torture, confessed that he was hired to do it by the partisans of Charles the fifth. The friends of the emperor, however, fully refused the abominable charge; and threw it back upon Catherine de Medicis, wife of Henry II. brother to the dauphin. This happened in 1536.—Moreri.

MONTZUCULI (Raymond de), a famous general, was born at Modena in 1608. He entered early into the army under his uncle Ernest Montecuculi, who commanded the artillery of the emperor. The first action in which the nephew distinguished himself was in 1644, when at the head of 2000 men he surprised ten thousand Swedes, whom he forced to abandon their baggage and artillery. General Bannier being informed of this disaster, marched against young Montecuculi, and took him prisoner. He did not regain his liberty till two years after, but he employed that time to great advantage in study. On entering again into the exercise of his profession he defeated the Swedes in Bohemia. After the peace of Westphalia he travelled in different countries. In 1657 he was appointed field marshal, and sent to the relief of John Casimir, king of Poland, who was attacked by Sweden, and the prince of Transylvania. After defeating the latter, he took Cracow from the Swedes, and gained several splendid actions, which produced a peace. He next served against the Turks, and drove them out of Transylvania; which they had invaded, for which he was made president of the imperial council. In 1673 he was sent against the French, and had to oppose the great Turenne, who fell in the contest, and Montecuculi, in his letter to the emperor, regrets the loss of a man who was an honour to humanity. He afterwards acted with great courage and skill against the prince de Condé. He died in 1680.—Ibid.

MONTÉ-MAYER (George de), a poet of Caffile, who flourished in the reign of Philip II. and died about 1560. His poems, under the title of Cancionero, were printed in 2 vols. 8vo. 1554.—Moreri.

MONTENAU (Charles Philip), a French writer, was born at Paris. He wrote, The History of the Kings of the Two Sicilies, of the House of France, in 4 vols. 12mo. He also conducted many years the Journal de Verdun; and translated into prose the Latin poem of Quillet, entitled, Callipædia. He died in 1749.—Moreri.

MONTESPAN (madame de), a celebrated French lady, who was wife of the marquis of that title, and mistress of Louis XIV. over whom she gained a complete ascendancy, which she maintained till that monarch became attached to madame de Maintenon. Madame de Montespan had children by the king, one of whom became duke of Maine, and two daughters, who were nobly married. She died in 1717.—Moreri.

MONTESQUIEU (Charles de Secondat, baron of), an eminent writer, was born of a noble family near Bourdeaux in 1689. His first literary performance, entitled, Persian Letters, published in 1721, gave proofs of a fine genius, and a solid judgement. The year following he pleaded with so much eloquence against the imposition of a new duty that it was suppressed. In 1728 he was admitted a member of the French academy, though not without having been opposed by cardinal Fleury, who conceived there were some things dangerous to religion in his Persian Letters. Montesquieu having formed the design of his great work on the Spirit of Laws, travelled into Germany and Holland, and lastly to England, where he resided two years, calling this the country for thinking, and France for living. On his return home he published his Treatise on the Causes of the Greatness and Declension of the Romans. In 1748 appeared his Spirit of Laws, 2 vols. 4to.; which ought rather to have been termed the Spirit of Nations. In it the author has distinguished three sorts of government, the republican, the monarchical, and the despotic, all of which he has examined with so much clearness as to have rendered his work the code of the Law of Nations; and he has himself been called the legislator of the human race. Montesquieu succeeded his uncle as president of the parliament of Bourdeaux, and died in a manner becoming a christian and philosopher in 1755. His Familiar Letters were printed in 1767, in 1 vol. 12mo. His son John Baptiste de Secondat, counsellor of the parliament of Bourdeaux, and a member of the academy of that city, and of the royal society of London, died in 1796, aged 79. He wrote, Observations on the Mineral Waters of the Pyrenées; Considerations on the Commerce and Navigation of Great Britain; Considerations on the Military Marine of France.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MONTÉZUMA, the last emperor of Mexico, was a prince of noble qualities. He opposed the invaders of his country with firmness; but at last was seized by Cortes, who forced him to acknowledge himself a vassal of Spain. The Mexicans having assembled in great numbers against the Spaniards, and Cortes apprehensive that he was not sufficiently strong to resist them, forced his royal captive to appear in his robes, in order to appease his subjects. The insurgents, however, discharged their arrows while he was speaking, and wounded him mortally in 1520. Montezuma left two sons and three daughters, who embraced the christian religion. The eldest received an estate and the title of count from Charles V. He died in 1608.—Ibid.

MONTAUCON (Bernard de), a learned benedictine, was born in Langucdoc in 1655. In his youth he served as a cadet in the army, but the death of his parents made such an impression on his mind that he entered into the congregation of St. Maur in 1675. He studied with intense application, and acquired a prodigious knowledge in languages, theology, history, and literature in general. In 1698 he went to Italy to consult the public libraries there, and was received with great distinction by the cardinals and pope Innocent XII. On his return to Paris in 1701 he published a curious relation of his journey, under the title of Diarium Italicum, 4to. This learned and industrious writer died in 1741. His principal works are, 1. Analeſta Græca, 4to. 2. an edition of the works of St. Athanaſius, Greek and Latin, with notes, 3 vols. folio; 3. a Collection of Antient Greek Writers, 2 vols. folio; 4. a French Tranſlation of Philo's Contemplative Life, with notes; 5. Palæographia Græca, folio; 6. Antiquities explained, in French and Latin, 10 vols. folio, and a Supplement to the ſame of 5 vols. This is a work of immenſe erudition and value; 7. Monuments of the French Monarchy, 5 vols. fol.; 8. an edition of the Works of Chryſoſtom, 13 vols. folio; 9. Diſſertation on the Hiſtory of Judith.—Moreri.

MONTFLEURY (Zachary), whose family name was Jac b, a French actor and dramatic writer, was born in Anjou. He became page to the duke of Guise, but a passion for the stage induced him to join a company of strolling players in Burgundy. He was one of the first performers in the Cid in 1637. He was the author of a tragedy, entitled, the Death of Afrubal; and he had the honour of instructing the celebrated Baron. Montfleury died in 1667. His son, Anthony Jacob, was designed by his father for the bar, but being disgusted with the study of the law, he also became an actor and writer. He died in 1685. He wrote some trifling comedies.—Moreri.

MONTFORT (Simon, count de), a famous French general, who in 1209 conducted the croiſade againſt the Albigenſes, on which occaſion he tarniſhed his reputation by his cruelties. In 1213 he gained a complete victory over Peter king of Arragon. He was killed at the ſiege of Toulouſe in 1218. His younger ſon came to England, and was created earl of Leicester.—Moreri.

MONTGAILLARD (Bernard de), called the Petit Feuillante of the league, was a mendicant friar, and a famous preacher. He bore a diſtinguiſhed part in the atrocities committed by the leaguers, and is ſaid to have ſuborned an aſſaſſin to murder Henry IV. He died abbe of Orval in 1628.—Ibid.

MONTGERON (Louis Baſile Carre de), a French fanatic, who pretended to be converted from infidelity by the miracles wrought at the tomb of the deacon Paris, in 1731, and of which he wrote an account in a large volume. For this he was ſent to the Baſtile, and afterwards to the ciſtel of Valence, where he died in 1754, aged 68.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

MONTGOLFIER (James Stephen), was born at Annonay in France. He became celebrated by his paper manufacture, and he was the firſt who fabricated the vellum paper, ſo remarkable for its ſmoothneſs and colour. In 1783 he invented air-balloons, for which he was admitted a member of the academy of ſciences, created chevalier of the order of St. Michael, and rewarded with a penſion of two thouſand livres. He died in 1799.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

MONTGOMERY (Gabriel de, count of), a celebrated French nobleman, was born of an antient Scotch family. In 1559 he had the miſfortune to kill Henry II. by accidentally wounding him in the eye as they were tilting at a tournament given by that monarch, on occaſion of the marriage between his daughter Elizabeth and the king of Spain. After this unfortunate diſaſter Montgomery went to Italy and other countries till the civil wars recalled him to France, where he attached himſelf to the proteſtants, and became one of their principal chiefs. He defended Rouen in 1563 againſt the royal army, and when the city was taken by aſſault he eſcaped in a galley, and got to Havre. In 1569 he raiſed the ſiege of Bearne in Navarre, then cloſely preſſed by the catholics; after which he followed the beſiegers to Orthes, which he took by aſſault. Montgomery was at Paris at the time of the maſſacre of the proteſtants in 1572, but eſcaped though cloſely purſued. With his family he retired to Jerſey, and from thence to England. In 1573 he returned to Normandy, where he was joined by ſome of the proteſtant nobility at St. Lo, at which place he was beſieged by Matignon, lieutenant-general in Lower Normandy. But Montgomery eſcaped from thence and went to Domfront, whither he was followed by Matignon, who after a long combat made him priſoner. This gallant nobleman was then ſent to Paris, where he was put to the torture, and afterwards beheaded June 26, 1574.—Moreri.

MONTGON (Charles Alexander), a French writer, was born at Verfailles in 1690. He was an eccleſiaſtic, and became confeſſor to Philip V. of Spain, where he acted as the ſpy of the duke of Bourbon, but being neglected by cardinal Fleury, who ſucceeded that nobleman as prime miniſter, he publiſhed his Memoirs in 8 vols. 8vo. in which he is very ſevere on the cardinal's adminiſtration. Montgon died about 1770.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

MONTI (Joſeph), profeſſor of botany and natural hiſtory at Bologna, where he died about 1750. He wrote, 1. Prodromus Catalogi Plantarum agri Bononiensis, 1719, 4to.; 2. Plantarum Varii Indices, 1724, 4to.; 3. Exoticorum ſimplicium Medicamentorum Varii Indices, 1724, 4to. His ſon Cajetan tranſlated from the Italian into Latin, Zannoni's Hiſtory of rare Plants, printed at Bologna in 1742, folio.—Nouv. Diſt. Hiſt.

MONTICELLI (Andrew), an Italian painter, was born at Bologna in 1641. He painted fruit, vaſes, carpets, flowers, and landſcapes, in an excellent taſte. He died in 1716. There was another artiſt of this name who excelled in painting landſcapes and battles.—Pitt. kington.

MONTIGNI (Stephen Mignol de), was born at Paris in 1714. He was an able mechanic, and a member of the academy of sciences. France was indebted to him for introducing the manufacture of different kinds of stuffs from England, also for an improvement in the art of printing cottons, and making carpets. He printed a Memoir on the Mathematics, and in the memoirs of the academy are several of his observations on mechanical subjects. He died in 1782.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MONTJOSIEU (Louis de), in Latin Montjofius, a gentleman of Rouergue, who taught mathematics to some of the French princes, and accompanied the duke de Joyeuse to Rome in 1583. He wrote a curious book, entitled, Gallus Romæ hospes, printed at Rome in 1585, 4to. In this work he treated of the painting and sculpture of the antients. It was reprinted in an edition of Vitruvius at Amsterdam in 1649.—Moreri.

MONTLUC (Blaise de), a celebrated French general, was born in 1500, of a noble family, near Coudom. He rose through the different ranks in the army to that of marshal of France. His first services were in Italy, and at the battle of Pavia in 1525 he was taken prisoner. In the wars of Piedmont he served with great reputation; and in 1546 he recovered Boulogne from the English. The city of Sienna in Tuscany having driven out the imperial garrison, and solicited the protection of France, Montluc was appointed to command the forces sent thither in 1554. He sustained in that place a siege of eight months against the imperial army, commanded by the marquis de Marignan, who was obliged, after several attacks, to convert the siege into a blockade. It was not till the garrison and inhabitants had endured the utmost extremity of a famine that the place capitulated, when Montluc and his troops marched out with the honours of war. He commanded in Guienne during the wars which ravaged France on account of religion, and defeated the calvinists in several actions. But he was guilty of great cruelties to the vanquished. At the siege of Rabastens in 1570 he was so severely wounded in the face as to be obliged always to wear a mask to hide his deformity. He died on his estate in 1577. At the age of 75 he wrote the History of his own Life, which was printed first at Bourdeaux in 1592, folio, and several times since.—Moreri.

MONTMAUR (Peter de), professor of Greek at Paris in the reign of Louis XIII. He was bred a jesuit, but quitted that order, and became successively an empiric, a druggist, an advocate, and lastly Greek professor. He wrote a great number of trifling poems, and satires in verse; and being of a very bad character himself, several writers attacked him, particularly Menage. Montmaur endured the storm with great address, and died in 1648, aged 74. Sal-lengre published a collection of the satires written against him in 1715, under the title of the History of Montmaur.—Moreri.

MONTMORENCY (Matthew de), called the Great, a distinguished general, who signalized his valour at the battle of Pont-a-Bouvines in 1214, and the year following was employed against the Albigenes in Languedoc, for which services he received the sword of constable of France, and was made general of the army. He afterwards took several places from the English. Louis VIII. committed his son to the care of the constable, who by his prudence dissolved a formidable league which had been formed against the queen mother during the minority of Louis IX. This great man died in 1230.—Ibid.

MONTMORENCY (Anne de), a descendant of the above, displayed great military talents at an early age, and was at the battle of Marignon in 1515. In 1521 he defended the city of Mezieres against the army of the emperor Charles V. and compelled the count of Nassau to raise the siege. He accompanied Francis I. into Italy, as marshal of France, and was taken with him at the battle of Pavia. The important services he had rendered to the state were rewarded with the sword of constable in 1538; but some years afterwards he fell under the displeasure of Francis. In the reign of Henry II. he was taken into favour at court and employed in military service, but was again disgraced by the intrigues of Catherine de Medici. Charles IX. recalled him, and he served against the calvinists, but was taken prisoner by them at the battle of Dreux in 1562. Having obtained his liberty the year following, he took Havre from the English. He was killed at the battle of St. Dennis in 1567, after performing prodigies of valour. His grandson became duke de Montmorency, and was extremely beloved by the people of France for his bravery, generosity, and other great qualities. But having joined Gaston of Orleans against cardinal Richelieu, Montmorency took up arms in the province of Languedoc, of which he was governor. The king sent against him the marshals de la Force and Schomberg, and a battle ensued at Castelnaudary, where the duke was made prisoner, and, notwithstanding the earnest and general solicitations for his pardon, he was beheaded at Toulouse Oct. 30, 1632.—Moreri.

MONTPENSIER (Anne-Marie Louisa, duchess de), the daughter of Gaston, duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIII. She was generally known by the name of Mademoiselle, and took the part of Condé in the civil wars. She caused the cannon of the Bastille to be fired on the French troops, and threw on many occasions a most impetuous spirit. After trying in vain to espouse several sovereign princes, among the rest Charles II. of England, she secretly married the count de Lauzun, who used her with great insolence. She died in 1699. Mademoiselle wrote her Memoirs, which are curious and full of anecdote, 8 vols. 12mo.; she was also the author of two books of devotion.—Moreri.

MONTFERIT (Arnaud Vincient), was born at Maçon in 1713, and educated at Dijon. He was bred to the law, but quitted that profession, and applied to the study of mechanics and painting. He invented a plough to be used by two men without oxen; also some curious horological machines. In 1759 he discovered a mode of painting, called eludoric, which consists of supporting a design in water colours with a coat of oil: on this subject he wrote a Memoir. He painted several portraits after this manner, particularly of Louis XV. He also discovered a white paint preferable to white lead. In 1753 he began to make machines for the more easy manufacture of wheels for watches; he also made improvements on steam engines, and in 1779 presented to the academy of sciences his observations on iron bridges. In 1783 he laid before the king the plan of one to consist of a single arch of 400 feet span. He died at Paris in 1800.—L'Esuy Diâ. Hist.

MONTROSE (James Graham, marquis of), a brave and loyal nobleman in the reign of Charles I. He raised a considerable force at his own charge, and in a little time had nearly reduced Scotland to obedience, when he received the royal command to disband his army. He then went to Germany, where he served with such reputation as to be created a marshal of the empire. Charles II. having landed in Scotland, recalled the marquis, who made himself master of the Orkneys, but on entering Scotland he was defeated, and escaped in disguise. Being betrayed by a farmer, he was conveyed to Edinburgh, where he was hung and quartered in a most inhuman manner in 1650.—Life by Wyburth.

MONTUCLA (Joseph de), an associate of the national institute, and a member of the academy of Berlin, was born at Lyons in 1725. He accompanied Turgot to Cayenne as secretary of the government and royal astronomer. On his return to France he was appointed first commissioner of public buildings. He died at Versailles in 1800. His principal works are, Recherches on the Quadrature of the Circle, 12mo.; Collection of Pieces upon Inoculation, 12mo.; History of the Mathematics, 4 vols. 4to.; This last is valuable, and has been translated into English.—L'Esuy Hist. Diâ.

MOORE (Sir Jonas), an eminent mathematician, was born about 1620 at Whitby in Lancashire. His skill in mathematical learning recommended him to Charles II. by whom he was employed in several works, and made surveyor general of the ordnance. He was also one of the governors of Christ's hospital, and was the principal means of the above monarch's endowing a mathematical school in that noble seminary. Sir Jonas compiled for the use of that institution a General System of Mathematics, in 2 vols. 4to. which was published after the author's death in 1681.—Martin's Biog. Phil.

MOORE (John), an English prelate, was born in Leicestershire, and educated at Clare-hall, Cambridge, where he took his degree of D.D. in 1681. He was consecrated bishop of Norwich in 1691; and translated to Ely in 1707. He died in 1714. His sermons were published by his chaplain, Dr. Samuel Clarke, in one vol. 8vo. and his library was purchased by George II. who gave it to the university of Cambridge.—Gen. Biog. Diâ.

MOORE (Philip), rector of Kirkbridge and Douglas in the Isle of Man, was the intimate friend of the pious Dr. Wilson, bishop of that see, whose funeral sermon he preached. He revised the translation of the Bible into the Manks language: and died universally esteemed in 1783.—Gen. Biog. Diâ.

MOORE (Edward), an English poet, who died in 1757. He wrote Fables for the Female Sex; the Gamester, a tragedy; Gilblas, a comedy, and other pieces. He is not to be taken for James Moore, also the author of some plays, and honoured by Pope with a place in the Dunciad. He died in 1734.—Biog. Dram.

MOORE (Francis), an ingenious mechanic, who contrived and brought to effect some admirable machines, which have been of great service in assisting the manufactures of England. He died in 1787.—Gen. Mag.

MOORE (John), a physician and miscellaneous writer, was the son of a clergyman and born at Stirling, in Scotland, in 1730. He received his education at Glasgow, where he applied to the study of medicine and surgery. In 1747 he became surgeon's mate in the army then serving in Flanders, where he remained till the general peace. After the war he resumed his medical studies at London and at Paris; at the latter place he was appointed surgeon to the household of lord Albemarle, the English ambassador. On his return to Scotland he became partner with Dr. Gordon, an eminent practitioner at Glasgow; but in 1773 he accepted an invitation to France with the young duke of Hamilton, who was in a declining state of health. After spending five years abroad Dr. Moore settled in London with his family, and in 1779 published the fruits of his travels in "A View of Society and Manners in France, Switzerland, and Germany," 2 vols. 8vo. This work was so well received that in 1781 he added two volumes more, entitled, "A View of Society and Manners in Italy." In 1785 he published "Medical Sketches," in one vol. 8vo.; which work is said to have given offence to his brethren, by betraying some secrets in the profession.

His next performance was a novel of a very superior character entitled, Zeluco, 2 vols. which abounds with incident, though the principal character is so atrocious as rather to excite horror than to afford instruction. In 1792 Dr. Moore accompanied Lord Lauderdale to Paris, and witnessed there some of the principal scenes in the revolution, of which he published an interesting and candid account in 1793, in 2 vols. 8vo. The year following appeared his novel, entitled, "Edward," intended as a contrast to Zeluco, but inferior to it. In 1800 he gave to the world "Mordaunt," being Sketches of Life, Characters, and Manners in various Countries, 2 vols. This work is neither a romance, novel, nor travels, but it contains many lively and instructive observations. Dr. Moore died in London in 1802. His son, general Moore, distinguished himself in Egypt, and on other occasions, in the late war.—Monthly Mag. Europ. Mag.

MOORE (John), archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of a grazier at Gloucester, and educated at the grammar-school of that city, after which he went to Pembroke college, Oxford. Being taken into the family of the duke of Marlborough as tutor to one of his sons, he obtained by that interest a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Durham; in 1771 the deanery of Canterbury, and in 1795 the bishopric of Bangor; from whence, in 1783, he was raised to the metropolitical chair. Dr. Moore was an amiable prelate, very liberal in his patronage, and of respectable talents. He died in 1804. The archbishop married Miss Eden, sister to lord Auckland, by whom he had several children.—Gent. Mag.

MORABIN (James), a French writer, who was secretary to the lieutenant general of police at Paris, and died in that city in 1762. He wrote, a History of Cicero, 2 vols. 4to.; Nomenclator Ciceronianus, 12mo. He also translated some of that author's works into French, and the Consolations of Boethius.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MORALES (Ambrose), a Spanish divine, historiographer to Philip II. and professor in the university of Alcalá. He was author of a Spanish Chronicle, 2 vols. folio, and other works. He died in 1590.—Moreti.

MORAND (Sauveur Francis), a celebrated surgeon, was born at Paris in 1697. He went to England in 1729 to avail himself of the instructions of the famous Cheselden, who always had a great esteem for him. On his return to his own country he became surgeon major of the French guards, and director of the academy of surgeons. He was also made chevalier of the order of St. Michael, and admitted a member of the academy of sciences and of the royal society of London. He died in 1773. He wrote, a Treatise on the High Operation for the Stone; an Eloge on Marechal; Discourse on the Necessity that a Surgeon should be Learned; Experiments and Observations on the Stone; Miscellaneous Works, 2 vols. 4to. &c. His son, John Francis, became physician to Stanislaus, king of Poland, and died in 1784, aged 58. He wrote some medical and chemical works.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MORANDI (John Maria), an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1625. He was greatly patronized by the imperial family at Vienna, and painted the portraits of most of the German princes. He was also excellent in historical subjects. He died in 1715.—Pilkington.

MORANT (Philip), an ingenious antiquary and divine, was born in the island of Jersey, and educated at Pembroke college, Oxford. He became rector of Aldham, in Essex, and was appointed by the house of peers to prepare the votes of parliament for the press. He was employed in this work at the time of his death, which happened in 1770. He edited several works, and wrote a History of Colchester; the History of Essex; and those Lives in the Biographia Britannica which are marked C.—Anecd. of Buxey.

MORATA (Olympia Fulvia), an Italian lady, was born at Ferrara in 1526. Her father was a learned professor, and gave her an excellent education. She became tutress to the princefs of Ferrara, and claimed publicly in Latin and Greek. Olympia married Grunthler, professor of medicine at Heidelberg, where she died in 1555. Her works, consisting of orations, letters, dialogues, and translations, were printed at Basle in 1562, 8vo.—Tiraboschi.

MORDAUNT (Charles), earl of Peterborough, was born about 1658, and succeeded his father, John lord Mordaunt, in 1673. He entered into the navy, and distinguished himself at Tangier when it was besieged by the Moors. In the reign of James II. he went to Holland, and accompanied the prince of Orange on his expedition to England in 1688. The year following he was created earl of Monmouth, and appointed first commissioner of the treasury, from which post he was removed in 1690. In 1697, on the death of his uncle the earl of Peterborough, he succeeded to that title. In the reign of queen Anne he displayed great bravery and skill as commander of the English forces in Spain, where he took Barcelona and brought several provinces to acknowledge Charles III. as their king. He was afterwards employed in several embassies, and in 1714 appointed governor of Minorca. He died in 1735. Some of his familiar letters are in the works of Pope, with whom he was very intimate.—English Peerage. Gen. Biog. Dict.

MORE (sir Thomas), chancellor of England, was the son of sir John More, judge of the King's-bench, and born in London in 1480. He received his education at Oxford, where he made great proficiency in learning; and afterwards became a student at Lincoln's-inn. As soon as he came of age he obtained a seat in parliament, where he opposed a subsidy demanded by Henry VII. with such force that it was refused by the house. At the accession of Henry VIII. he was called to the bar, and in 1508 appointed judge of the sheriff's court, in London, which was then a considerable post. By the interest of Wolsey he obtained the honour of knighthood, and a place in the privy council. In 1520 he was made treasurer of the exchequer, and in 1523 chosen speaker of the house of commons, where he resisted a motion for an oppressive subsidy, which gave great offence to cardinal Wolsey. Sir Thomas was made chancellor in 1530, and by his indefatigable application in that office there was in a short time not a cause left undetermined. To all his high qualities, great learning, wit, and liberality, he joined a bigoted adherence to the roman catholic religion, and the papal authority. This led him to oppose the king's supremacy, and also his divorce from Catharine of Arragon, for which he was sent to the Tower, brought to trial, and condemned to lose his head, which sentence he endured with firmness and pleasantry July 5, 1535. Sir Thomas wrote several pieces against the reformation, and epistles to Erasmus and other learned men. The best of his works is a kind of political romance, entitled, Utopia, which has been translated into English by bishop Burnet. Sir Thomas had four children. His eldest daughter, Margaret, married a gentleman of the name of Roper, and died in 1544. She was an accomplished woman, and well read in the Greek and Latin languages. She wrote a Treatise on the four last Things. A grandson of sir Thomas became a priest, and died at Rome in 1625. He wrote the life of his grandfather.—Biog. Brit. Lives of the Lord Chancellors.

MORE (Henry), a pious divine, was born at Grantham in Lincolnshire in 1614, and educated at Eton school, from whence he was sent to Christ's college, Cambridge, where he applied himself to the study of the platonists. He was of a very modest temper, and frequently refused the highest dignities in the church, being contented with only a prebend in the cathedral of Gloucester. Dr. More died in 1687, and was buried in the chapel of Christ's college. His philosophical and theological works, which were once very popular, have been collected into two volumes, folio.—Biog. Brit.

MORE or MORUS (Alexander), a protestant divine, was born at Castres in Languedoc, where his father, a native of Scotland, was president of the college. After finishing his studies at Geneva the son became a minister at Middleburg, from whence he removed to Amsterdam, and lastly to Paris, where he was chosen pastor of the reformed church. He died in 1670. He wrote some treatises of controversy on the Subject of Grace, and a Reply to Milton's second Defence of the People of England.—Morri. Bayle.

MORZ (sir Francis), a learned English lawyer, was a member of the Middle Temple, and died in 1621. His works are, 1. Cases collected and reported, Lond. 1693, folio; 2. Readings upon 4 Jac. I. in the Middle Temple, folio, 1676.—Gen. Biog. Diet.

MORZ (sir Anthony), a celebrated painter, was a native of Utrecht, and a disciple of John Schorel. He painted the portraits of several sovereign princes, particularly of Mary queen of England. He died at Antwerp in 1597, aged 56.—Pilkington. Walpole.

MORZ (Henry), a dissenting minister, was a native of Devonshire, and became pastor of a congregation at Lifkeard in Cornwall, where he died in 1802. His poems, which evince considerable ingenuity, have been published since the author's death, in one volume, quarto, with a short account of Mr. More, by Dr. Aikin.

MOREAU (James), a French physician, was born at Chalons in 1647. He was the disciple and intimate friend of Guy Patin. Moreau attracted the envy of the other physicians by opposing their errors in his public theses. He died in 1729. His works are, Consultations upon Rheumatism; a Treatise on the Knowledge of Continual Fevers; and a Dissertation on Dropsy.—Morri.

MOREAU (Jacob Nicholas), counsellor of the court of aids, historiographer of France, librarian to the queen, and censor royal, was born at St. Florentine in 1717. He wrote several works, the chief of which are, 1. Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire des Cacouacas, 12mo.; 2. Memoires pour servir à l'Hist. de notre tems, 2 vols. 12mo.; 3. Observateur Hollandois; 4. Principes de Morale, de Politique et de droit Publicque, ou Discours sur l'Hist. de France, 21 vols. 8vo. He was guillotined March 27, 1794.—L'Ecy Diet. Hist.

MOREELSE (Paul), a famous painter, was born at Utrecht in 1575. He was a pupil of Michael Mirevelt, and died in 1638. Some wood-cuts by him in chiaro-scuro are held in great esteem.—Pilkington.

MOREL, the name of several learned printers in France. William Morel was royal professor of Greek, and director of the king's printing-house at Paris, where he died in 1564. Frederick, who was interpreter of the Greek and Latin tongues, and also printer to the king, died in 1583. His son, Frederick Morel, was also a very learned man, and died in 1630, after having printed a number of valuable authors.—Morri.

MOREL (Andrew), a famous antiquary, was a native of Bern in Switzerland. He excelled in the science of medals, and was the author of a work of great value which he never completed, entitled, Specimen universæ rei nummarie antiquæ, 2 vols. 8vo. He was offered the place of keeper of the royal cabinet of medals at Paris, on condition of renouncing the protestant religion, which he refused. He was after this confined some time in the Bastille, and on gaining his liberty he went to Armstadt, in Germany, where he died in 1703. In 1734 was published, in 2 vols. folio, Thesaurus Morellianus, five Familiarum Romanorum Numismata omnia, et disposita ab Andrea Morellio cum commentariis Havercampi.—Moreri.

MORZELL (Thomas), a learned English divine and lexicographer, was born in 1701, and died in 1784. He published valuable editions of Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary, and Hedericus's Greek Lexicon; Dr. Morell was also the author of Annotations on Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding; he also assisted Hogarth in writing his Analysis of Beauty, and selected the passages of Scripture for Handel's Oratorios. —Anecd. of Botter.

MORELY (lord), an ingenious nobleman, was the son of sir Thomas Parker, in the county of Essex, and a great favourite with Henry VIII. who raised him to the peerage. He contrived to secure that monarch's favour by concurring in his divorce from Catharine, and his marriage with Anne Boleyn. He died in 1547. Lord Morely wrote several Latin poems.—Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors.

MORERI (Louis), a French divine and historiographer, was born in Provence in 1643. He published in 1673, in one volume, folio, the Historical Dictionary which bears his name. His intense application in preparing a second edition of this great undertaking, produced a disorder of which he died in 1680. The first volume of this edition came out a little before his death, and the second some months afterwards. This dictionary has been several times revised and augmented. The best editions are that of 1749, &c. 10 vols. folio; and 1759, 10 vols.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MORES (Edward Rowe), an English antiquary, was born in 1730 at Tunstall in Kent, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he removed to Queen's college, Oxford, where he published an ancient fragment, entitled, Nomina et Insignia Gentilitia Nobilium Equitumque sub Edwardo primo Rege Militantium, 4to. In 1752 he was chosen a fellow of the society of antiquaries; and he projected the equitable society for insurance on lives and survivorship by annuities. He was the author of the History and Antiquities of Tunstall in Kent, and a Dissertation on Founders and Founderies. He died in 1778.—Prof. to Hist. of Tunstall.

MORETT, an ingenious artist in the reign of Henry VIII. He was a goldsmith, and executed several curious works after the designs of Holbein.—Granger.

MORUAGNI (John Baptist), a celebrated anatomist, was born at Forli, in Italy, in 1682.

He became professor of medicine at Bologna, from whence he removed to Padua on being elected to the chair of anatomy. He died in 1771. His works are, 1. Adversaria Anatomica; 2. Nova Institutionum Medicarum Idea; 3. De Sedibus et Causis Morborum per anatomem indagatis; 4. Epistolæ Anatomicae. A complete collection of his works appeared in 1765, in 5 vols.—Nouv. Dict.

MORGAN (William), an eminent Welsh prelate, was educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, after which he obtained the vicarage of Welfpool, and in 1595 was made bishop of Landaff, from whence he was translated to St. Asaph in 1601. He died in 1604. Bishop Morgan had a principal concern in the translation of the Bible into Welsh, printed first in 1588.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

MORGAN MWTYNVAWR, or Morgan the courteous, a Welsh prince, who was a lover of peace, though a consummate warrior. He was the friend of Edgar; the great king of England, and died in 1001, aged 129.—Ibid.

MORGAN, the son of Cadwgan, prince of Powys, a ferocious character; who, in his latter days, repented and went on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, but died at Cyprus on his return, A. D. 1126.—Ibid.

MORGAN (George Cadogan), a dissenting minister, was born at Bridgend, in Glamorganshire. He was the nephew and pupil of the celebrated Dr. Price; and became teacher of a congregation at Norwich. He died in 1798. His works are Lectures on Electricity; Observations and Experiments upon the Light of Bodies in a state of Combustion.—Genl. Mag. Monthly Mag.

MORQUES (Matthew de), fleur de St. Germain, preacher to Louis XIII. and almoner to Mary de Medicis, was born in Languedoc in 1582. He wrote several severe pieces against cardinal Richelieu, on which account he was obliged to quit the kingdom, but after the death of that minister he returned to Paris, where he died in 1670. He wrote Sermons and some other works.—Moreri.

MORHOFF (Daniel George), a learned writer, was born in the duchy of Mecklenburg in 1639. In 1660 he was chosen professor of poetry at Rostock, from whence he removed to Kiel, where he discharged the same office, but afterwards became professor of history and librarian. He died in 1691. His principal works are, 1. Polyhistor. five de Notitia Auctorum et Rerum, 2 vols. 4to.; 2. Princeps Medicus, 4to. This is a curious dissertation on the pretensions of the kings of France and England to the power of curing the scrofula or king's evil; 3. Dissertationes, 4to.; 4. Orationes.—Moreri.

MORICK (sir William), an English gentleman, memorable for the share which he had in bringing about the restoration of Charles II. He was the kinsman of general Monk, who procured him the place of secretary of state, which he resigned in 1668, and died in 1676. He wrote a book called, The Common Right of the Lord's Supper asserted, printed in 4to. in 1651, and in folio, 1660.—Grainger.

MORILLO (Bartholomew), a Spanish painter, was born at Seville in 1613. He studied in Italy, where he was greatly admired, and compared to Paul Veronese. On his return to Spain he was offered the post of first painter to the king, which honour he declined from extreme modesty. He died in 1685.—D'Argenville.

MORIN (Peter), a learned French critic, was born at Paris in 1531. He spent several years in the printing office of Paul Manutius at Venice; and afterwards taught greek and geography at Vicenza, from whence he was invited to Ferrara. Cardinal Borromeo being apprized of his merit called him to Rome, where he was employed on the edition of the Septuagint, on the Vulgate, and lastly on the great edition of the Bible, translated from the Greek version. He died in 1608. Morin published a collection of General Councils, and other works.—Mor.

MORIN (John Baptist), an astrologer, was born at Ville Franche in 1583. He studied physic at Avignon, and took his doctor's degree in that faculty. His pretended skill in astrology, and the fame acquired by the casual fulfilment of some of his predictions, recommended him to the cardinals Richelieu and Mazarine, the latter of whom procured him the place of mathematical professor in the royal college, with a handsome pension. Morin died in 1636. He wrote a work entitled, Astrologia Gallica, folio; and a curious little book against the Præadamites.—Moreri.

MORIN (John), a learned Frenchman, was born at Blois in 1591, and brought up in the protestant religion, which he abjured in consequence of the arguments of cardinal du Perron, or from other motives. He then entered into the congregation of the oratory, and published many learned works, particularly Exercitationes upon the Samaritan Pentateuch, and an edition of the Septuagint. He died in 1659.—Ibid.

MORIN (Simon), a French fanatic, was born at Richemont. In 1647 he published a strange book, in which he called himself Jesus Christ, and the second Messiah. Notwithstanding his extreme ignorance and madness he obtained numerous followers. Morin was burnt alive at Paris in 1663.—Ibid.

MORIN (Stephen), a protestant divine, was born at Caen in 1625. He studied divinity under the learned du Moulin, and afterwards became minister at his native place, but on the revocation of the edict of Nantes he retired to Holland, and was chosen professor of the oriental languages at Amsterdam. He died in 1700. He wrote dissertations in Latin on several subjects of antiquity, which are very curious and erudite.

The edition of Dordt, 1700, 8vo. is the best. Morin also wrote the Life of Samuel Bochart. His son Henry was a learned man. He became a catholic, having been a protestant minister, and died in 1728. He wrote Dissertations in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions, of which he was a member.—Ibid.

MORIN (Louis), a French physician, was born at Mans in 1635, and died in 1715. He was a member of the academy of sciences, and made a valuable index to the works of Hippocrates, in Greek and Latin.—Ibid.

MORIN (John), professor of philosophy at Chartres, was the author of a piece entitled, Mechanisme Universel, and a Treatise on Electricity. He died in 1764, aged 59.—New. Dict. Hist.

MORINIERE (Adrian Claude le Fort de la), a French writer, was born at Paris in 1696, and died in 1768. His principal works are, 1. Choix des Poésies Morales; 2. Bibliothèque Poétique; 3. Passe-temps Poétiques, Historiques, et Critiques, &c.—Ibid.

MORISON (Robert), a physician and professor of botany at Oxford, was born at Aberdeen in 1620. He studied in the university of his native place till interrupted by civil wars, in which he displayed great zeal and courage in behalf of royalty, particularly on the bridge of Aberdeen, in a battle between the inhabitants and the republican party. In that combat he received a wound in the head. After this he went to France, where he completed his medical studies, took his doctor's degree, and was appointed director of the royal garden at Blois. In 1660 he returned to England, where he was nominated physician to Charles II. and regius professor of botany at Oxford. Dr. Morison died in 1683. He used to read botanical lectures in the garden at Oxford. His works are, Preludia Botanica, 2 vols. 8vo.; Plantarum umbelliferarum distributio, folio; and Historia Plantarum, folio. He finished only the second part of this last, which is a performance that does him immortal honour. It was continued by Jacob Bohart.—Pulteney's Sketches of Botany.

MORISOT (Claude Bartholomew), a French writer, was born at Dijon in 1592, and died in 1661. He wrote Peruviana, or the Secret History of Cardinal Richelieu, Mary of Medicis, and the Duke of Orleans, 4to. 1645. He was also the author of some other works.—Moreri.

MORLAND (Sir Samuel), an English statesman was born in Berkshire. He was under secretary to Thurlow, and employed by Cromwell in several embassies. The services he rendered to Charles I. gained him the title of baronet. He wrote a book in 8vo. entitled, Urim of Conscience. His son was master of mechanics to Charles II. and invented the speaking trumpet, also a fire engine, and a capstan for heaving up anchors, &c.—Grainger.

MORLAND (George), a celebrated painter, was the son of an artist in London, who employed him constantly in making drawings for sale. By this means young Morland acquired a wonderful facility of invention and rapidity of execution; but owing to the narrow and illiberal manner in which his talents were used by his father, he also contracted low habits, and formed bad connections. His pictures, however, soon became objects of estimation and inquiry; and the persons who administered to his intemperance profited by his weakness to get into their possession pieces of inestimable value. Hence he was always at work, and at the same time always poor. Many of his best pictures were painted in spunging-houses, to clear him from arrest, or in ale-houses to discharge his reckoning. He died in one of the former description in 1804, aged 40, and his wife only survived him two days. The pictures of this incomparable artist are faithful representations of rural nature and human life. In the description of farm yards, rural landscapes, cattle, fishermen and smugglers on the sea-coast, none ever excelled him.—Monthly Mag.

MORLEY (George), an English prelate, was born in London in 1597, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford. He was appointed by Charles I. canon of Christ church, and was one of the divines who assisted him at the treaty of Newport. In 1649 he went abroad, and did not return till the restoration, when he was made dean of Christ church, and soon afterwards bishop of Worcester. In 1662 he was translated to Winchester, to which see he was a great benefactor. He died in 1684. He was a very munificent prelate, and gave many large benefactions to several institutions. He wrote some tracts and sermons. Bishop Morley published several religious treatises in one vol. 4to.—Biog. Brit.

MORNAE (Anthony), a French advocate and poet, who was respected for his learning and his probity. He wrote a collection of verses under the title of Periz Forentes, 8vo.; also several works on Jurisprudence, in 4 vols. folio. He died in 1619.—Moreri.

MORNAY (Philip de), lord of Pleffis Marlay, a celebrated French nobleman, was born in 1549, of a noble family. He was bred up in the protestant persuasion, and studied at several universities. In 1576 he went to the court of the king of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV. who made him a member of his council. In 1578 he published a Treatise on the Church; and in the year following began his work on the Truth of the Christian Religion. In 1598 he published his book on the Eucharist, which occasioned a conference between him and Du Perron; the result of which was such that Mornay obtained the appellation of the Protestant Pope. In 1607 he printed a famous book entitled, The Mystery of Iniquity, or the History of the Papacy. He died at his seat in Poitou in 1625. Besides the above he wrote several other works.—Bayle.

MOROSONI (Francis), a brave commander, was born at Venice in 1618. He shewed great bravery in several naval actions, and defended Candia against the Turks with uncommon valour. The besiegers lost 120,000 men, and the Venetians about a fourth of the number. The grand vizier endeavoured to bribe him, and offered to make him prince of Wallachia and Moldavia, but Morosoni was not to be corrupted. When the place surrendered in 1669 he was treated with great honour by the victors; but on his return to Venice he was arrested by order of the senate. However, he soon recovered his liberty, and was made procurator of St. Mark. The war being renewed he resumed the command, and took several places from the Turks, and gained a great naval victory near the Dardanelles. In 1688 he was elected doge. He died in 1694.—Moreri.

MORRIS (Lewis), a Welsh antiquary and poet, was born in the Isle of Anglesey in 1702, and died in 1765 at Penbryn in Cardiganshire. He surveyed the coast of Wales in 1737, by order of the admiralty board, and his work was published in 1748. Some of his poetical pieces in the Welsh language have been printed, and he left above 80 volumes of MSS. of antiquity now deposited in the Welsh charity school, London.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

MORRIS (Richard), brother of the above, was also a poet and critic in his native language. He was clerk in the navy pay office, and superintended the printing of two valuable editions of the Welsh Bible. He died in 1779. William Morris, another brother, was a great collector of Welsh MSS. and died comptroller of the customs at Holyhead in 1764.—Ibid.

MORTIMER (John Hamilton), an English painter, was born at East Bourne, in Sussex, in 1739. He received his first instructions from his uncle, who was an eminent painter; but afterwards he became a pupil of Hudson, at the same time with Sir Joshua Reynolds. Mortimer obtained one of the first prizes for an historical picture from the society for the encouragement of the arts. His subject was the conversion of the Britons. In 1779 he was appointed by his majesty a royal academician, without any solicitation; but he died the same year.—Monthly Mag. Vol. I. Pilkington.

MORTIMER (John), an English agricultural writer, who is known by a good practical Treatise on Husbandry. He died in 1736.—Mortimer's Student's Dict.

MORTON (Thomas), a learned bishop, was born at York in 1564, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow. In 1603 he attended Lord

Pure, ambassador to the emperor of Germany, as his chaplain; after which he was advanced to the bishopric of Chester, from whence he was translated to Lichfield and Coventry in 1618, and in 1632 to Durham. He suffered many hardships in the great rebellion from the republican party, notwithstanding his great moderation and piety, which were acknowledged and esteemed by all. He died in 1659. He wrote some practical books in divinity.—Life by Dr. J. Barwick.

MORTON (James earl of), regent of Scotland, was born at Dalkeith in 1530, and educated under the famous Buchanan at Paris. He returned to Scotland in 1554, and greatly promoted the reformation; but being accused of a concern in the murder of lord Darnley he fled to England. He was afterwards made chancellor of Scotland, and in 1574 succeeded the earl of Mar as regent, which office he resigned in 1579. He was condemned for high treason in 1581, and what is remarkable was beheaded by a machine the model of which he had seen in England. It was called the Maiden, and resembled the guillotine, since so much used in France. Morton was the first and last who suffered by it in Scotland.—Robertson's Hist. Scotland.

MORTON (John), an English prelate and statesman, was a native of Dorchester, and became so eminent for his skill in jurisprudence as to become privy counsellor to both Henry VI. and Edward IV. He was also made bishop of Ely, from whence he was translated to Canterbury. He was in great favour with Henry VII. who appointed him chancellor of England, and obtained for him a cardinalship. He died in 1500.—Lives of Chancellors. Biog. Brit.

MOSCHOPULUS (Emanuel), a Greek grammarian of the 14th century. He was a native of Crete, and wrote a Treatise on Grammar, printed first in 1545, 4to. His nephew Emanuel was a good mathematician and antiquary. He composed a Greek Lexicon. 1545.—Moreri.

MOSCHUS and ION, two Greek poets of antiquity, who were contemporaries, and whose works are usually printed together in the Poetae Minores. They lived in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus.—Vossius de Poet. Græc.

MOSES, the celebrated Jewish legislator, was born in Egypt of Hebrew parents, 1571 B.C. and bred up in the court of Pharaoh, but having slain an Egyptian, he fled into Midian, where he received the divine commission to deliver his captive countrymen. He then returned to Egypt, and after performing a number of miracles before Pharaoh, conducted the Israelites through the Red Sea, and gave them laws and ordinances during their journey through the wilderness. He died at the age of 120.—Gray's Key O. T.

MOSES (Micofti), a Spanish rabbi of the 14th century, who published at Venice a folio volume entitled, The Great Book of Precepts, which is explanatory of the Jewish law.—Buxtorf.

MOSHEIM (John Lawrence), a learned German divine, was born in 1695 of a noble family at Lubeck. He became professor of divinity at Helmstadt, and was afterwards chancellor of the university of Göttingen, where he died in 1755. He translated Cadworth's Intellectual System of the Universe into Latin, with learned notes; but his greatest work is an ecclesiastical history, written in Latin, and translated into English by Dr. Maclaine. He was also the author of Dissertationes Sacrae, Leipzig, 4to. and Sermons.—Novo. Diæ. Hist.

MOSS (Robert), an English divine and dean of Norwich, was born at Gillingham, in Norfolk, in 1666. He took his degree at Cambridge, and became chaplain to queen Anne, and a popular preacher. Dr. Moss died in 1729. His sermons have been printed in 8 vols. 8vo.—Gen. Biog. Diæ.

MOTHE LE VAYER (Francis de la), counsellor of state, and preceptor to the duke of Anjou, was born at Paris in 1588. He was one of the first members of the French academy, and obtained several advantageous posts. He died in 1672. His works consist of 15 volumes in 12mo.—Moreri.

MOTHE LE VAYER DE BOUTIGNI (Francis de la), master of requests, and of the same family with the preceding, died in 1685. He wrote a popular romance called, Tharls et Zélie, and other works.—Ibid.

MOTHEBY (George), an English physician, who compiled a Medical Dictionary, in one vol. folio, a work of great merit. He died in 1793, at the age of 62.—Hutchinson's Biog. Med.

MOTTE (Antony Houdart de la), an ingenious French writer, was born at Paris in 1672. At the age of 20 he produced a play, called, Les Originaux, which met with a bad reception. His succeeding pieces had better success. His Discourse upon Homer is a masterly production, but it was attacked by madame Dacier. He died in 1731. His works were published together in 11 vols. 8vo. in 1754.—Novo. Diæ. Hist.

MOTTEUX (Peter Antony), a French writer, was born in Normandy in 1660. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes, he visited England, and turned merchant. He translated Don Quixote into English, and wrote several pieces. He died in 1716.—Gen. Biog. Diæ.

MOTTEVILLE (Frances Bertrand, dame de), a French lady, was born in Normandy about 1615. She became an attendant on Ann of Austria, whose history she wrote, in 5 vols. which has been frequently printed. She died in 1689.—Moreri.

MOTTLEY (John), an English gentleman, was born in London in 1692. He wrote

Sve dramatic pieces, and the Life of the czar Peter the Great. He died in 1750.—Biog. Dram.

MOUCHERON (Isaac), a landscape painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1670. He sketched a number of fine views in Italy after nature. He died at Amsterdam in 1744.—Pilgrimage.

MOUFET (Thomas), an English medical writer, and the first who introduced chemical remedies into this country. He took his doctor's degree abroad, and settled at Ipswich, but spent the latter part of his life near Wilton, in Wiltshire. He died about 1600. His principal work is entitled, Theatrum Insectorum, 1634, folio.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MOULIN (Charles du), a French advocate, who on account of an impediment in his speech quitted the bar and applied to the composition of several works on jurisprudence, which procured him the title of the Papiinian of France. Being a protestant the people of Paris pillaged his house in 1552, on which Du Moulin went to Basle, from whence he removed to several other places. After his return to Paris in 1564 he was sent to the prison of Conciergerie, on account of some reflections made by him on the council of Trent. At the solicitation of Jane de Albret, queen of Navarre, he obtained his liberty. At the close of his life he left the protestant communion, and died a roman catholic in 1566, aged 66. His works were printed in 1681, in 5 vols. folio.—Bayle. Moreti.

MOULIN (Peter du), a protestant divine, was born at the castle of Buhny, in the Vexin, in 1568. After studying at Leyden he became minister at Charenton, and in 1615 visited England, where James I. gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Canterbury. He afterwards went to Sedan, and became professor of divinity, and had the principal management of the concerns of the protestants in France. He died in 1658. His principal works are, the Anatomy of Arminianism, in Latin, folio; Treatise on the Keys of the Church; the Capuchin, or the History of the Monks; the Novelty of Popery; a Defence of the Reformed Churches.—Bayle.

MOULIN (Peter du), son of the above, was chaplain to Charles II. and prebendary of Canterbury, where he died in 1634, aged 84. He wrote, 1. the Peace of the Soul, 12mo.; 2. Clamor Regii Sanguinis, which being anonymous was attributed by Milton to Alexander Morus; 3. a Defence of the Protestant Religion in English. Levis du Moulin, his brother, became a violent Independent, and wrote, 1. Parænesis ad edificatores Imperii, dedicated to Oliver Cromwell; 2. Patronus Bonæ Fidei, a fierce invective against the church of England. He died in 1680, aged 77.—Graet Hist. Dict. Bayle.

MOULIN (Gabriel), a Romish ecclesiastic, who had the benefice of Maneval in the diocese of Lisieux in France. He wrote a History of Normandy under the Dukes, 1631, folio; History of the Conquests of the Normans in Naples and Sicily, 1658, folio.—Moreti.

MOUNTFORT (William), an English actor and dramatic writer, was born in Staffordshire in 1659. Cibber describes him as an excellent performer in the comic line. He was murdered by captain Hill and lord Mohun in Norfolk-street, in the Strand, in the winter of 1692. Hill made his escape, and lord Mohun, for want of sufficient evidence, was acquitted. Mr. Mountfort wrote six dramatic pieces.—Biog. Dram.

MOUÏET (John Joseph), a French musician, was born at Avignon in 1682. He composed several elegant works, and died in 1738.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MOURGUZ (Michael), a French jesuit, who wrote a treatise on French Poetry, another on Geometry, and other works. He died in 1713.—Moreti.

MOUVANS (Paul Richard), surnamed the Brave, a protestant officer, who greatly distinguished himself in the civil wars of France in the 16th century, and died in battle in 1568.—Ibid.

MOXON (Joseph), hydrographer to Charles II. and a mathematical writer, was born at Wakefield, near Yorkshire, in 1627, and died about 1700. He taught mathematics, and made maps and globes, in Warwick-lane, London. Besides his book on Navigation, Astronomy, &c. he published one on Mechanic Exercises, or the Doctrines of Handy-Work. It is now very scarce.—Granger.

MOYLE (Walter), an ingenious writer, was born in Cornwall in 1672. He received his academical education at Oxford, and removed from thence to the Temple, where he studied the law with great application. He was for some years a member of parliament, and resided in London. But on quitting his seat he retired to his country estate, where he devoted himself to study, the fruits of which appeared in several ingenious pieces, the principal of which is a Dissertation on the Miracle of the Thundering Legion. Mr. Moyle died in 1721. His works have been published in 2 vols. 8vo.—Biog. Brit.

MOYSZ (Henry), a Scotch gentleman, who was page to king James I. and one of the gentlemen of his privy-chamber. He wrote a diary of what passed at court in his time, which was printed in 1753. He died in 1630, aged 57.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MOZART (Wolfgang), a famous musician, was born at Salzburg in Germany in 1756. He received his instructions from his father, who was master of the chapel at Salzburg, and his proficiency was so great, that when a child he played before the emperor, who called him the "little forcerer." In 1763, he accompanied his father and sister to London, where he performed before the king, and published six sonatas for the harpsichord. In 1766 this musical family returned to Salzburg. Three years afterwards young Mozart went to Italy, where his talents excited great admiration, and the pope conferred on him the order of the golden spur. In his twenty-fifth year he settled at Vienna, and was greatly esteemed by the emperor Joseph II. This ingenious man died in 1791. His works are highly admired by the best judges.—Monthly Mag.

MUDGE (John), an English physician, and an excellent mechanic, was the son of Mr. Zachary Mudge, vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth, and well known by a volume of excellent Sermons, and an ingenious essay or a new version of the Psalms. Dr. John Mudge settled as a physician at Plymouth, where he wrote a Treatise on the Catarrhus Cough, 12mo. He improved the construction of reflecting telescopes, and died in 1793. His brother Thomas was an excellent watchmaker, and made great improvements in time-keepers, on which he wrote a treatise.—Gent. Mag.

MUNO (Hernandez), a Spanish painter, who was both deaf and dumb. He was the disciple of Titian, and was employed by Philip II. king of Spain in ornamenting the Escorial.—Cumberland's Account of Spanish Painters.

MURZ (Peter le), an architect, was born at Dijon in 1591. He superintended the fortifications of several towns in Picardy, and was employed by Anne of Austria in building the church of Val de Grace at Paris. He wrote some treatises on architecture, and died in 1669.—D'Argenville, vies des Architectes.

MUGGERON (Lodowick), an English taylor and fanatic, who wrote several books full of absurdity and blasphemy, which were burnt by the hangman, and the author pilloried; however, he obtained some followers, and his sect is not quite extinct to this day. He died in 1697, aged 90.—Gen. Dict. Hist.

MUIS (Simeon de), professor of Hebrew in the royal college at Paris, died in 1664, aged 57. He was well versed in the oriental languages, and wrote an esteemed Commentary on the Psalms, in Latin, 2 vols. 4to.—Moreri.

MULLER (John), a celebrated engraver of Holland, who flourished about the year 1600. He was brought up under Goltzius, whose manner he imitated with success.—Moreri.

MUMMIUS (Lucius), a Roman consul, who, for his victories over the Achæans, was called Achaicus. He destroyed Corinth, Thebes, and Chalcis, and sent the works of the ancient artists which he found to Rome, A. D. 146. He was afterwards disgraced, and sent an exile to Delos, where he died.—Strabo. Liby.

MUNCER (Thomas), a furious German anabaptist, was born at Zwickaw in Misnia. He united with one Storck, and soon gained a great number of followers, who were re-baptized naked, and lived in common. These enthusiasts committed shocking outrages, and pretended to prophecy and divine visions. Muncer preached against Luther as well as against the pope. At Mulhausen he established a senate, and assumed the title of king. The landgrave of Hesse, and other princes, marched against Muncer, whose army was defeated notwithstanding his promise of victory. He then fled to Franchaufen, where he was discovered and sent back to Mulhausen, and executed in 1625.—Plaqet, Diss. des Hérétiques.

MUNCER (Thomas), a learned German, who published, 1. Mythographi Latini; 2. An edition of Hyginus, with notes. He died in 1680.—Moreri.

MUNDINUS, a celebrated anatomist, was born at Florence, and died at Bologna in 1318. His treatise on anatomy was printed at Paris in 1478, folio.—Ibid.

MUNICK (Burchard Christopher), a marshal in the service of Russia, was a native of Oldenburgh. He served with great glory against the Turks in 1737; but in 1741, by order of the empress Elizabeth, he was sent to Siberia, where he remained twenty years. At the accession of Peter III. he was recalled, and appeared at court in the sheep-skin dress which he used to wear in his exile. The emperor restored him to his former rank, and he enjoyed the favour of Peter and Catherine till his death, which happened at Riga in 1767.—Tonks's Hist. Russia.

MUNNICKS (John), professor of anatomy, botany, and physic, at Utrecht, died in 1711, aged 59. He wrote, 1. Dissertatio de Urinis earumdemque inspectione; 2. Chirurgia ad praxim hodiernam adornata; 3. De Re Anatomica, &c.—Moreri.

MUNSTER (Sebastian), a learned divine, was born at Ingelheim in 1489. He entered among the cordeliers, but afterwards became a protestant. He died of the plague at Basil in 1552. Munster was called the Esdra and Strabo of Germany. He wrote a Hebrew Grammar and Dictionary; and published a Cosmography in folio; and a Latin version of the Old Testament, with other learned works.—Melch. Adam. in vit. Germ. Theol.

MUNTING (Abraham), a learned botanist, was born at Groningen in 1626, and died in 1683. His principal works are; 1. Phytographia Curiosa, folio; De Herba Britannica, 4to.; 3. Aloes Historia, 4to.—Halleri Bibl. Botan.

MURALT (Bent-Louis de), was born at Berne. He wrote Letters upon the French and English, 2 vols. 12mo.; and Fables, 1753, 8vo. Muralt died in 1760.—Narr. Diss. Hist.

MURATORI (Louis-Anthony), a learned writer, was born at Vignola in the duchy of Modena, in 1672. At the age of 22 he was invited to Milan by the count Charles Borromeo, who employed him as librarian of the Ambrosian college. The duke of Modena in 1700 recalled him to his own country, and made him his librarian, and keeper of the public archives. Muratori was admitted a member of the royal society of London, and of several other learned bodies. This learned and amiable man was exposed to the calumnies and persecutions of some bigots of his church, who accused him of holding heretical notions, and even accused him to the pope Benedict XIV. That pontiff, however, had too much liberality to attend to the charge, and wrote a flattering letter, in which he did ample justice to the character of Muratori, who died in 1750. His works have been printed in 46 vols. folio. The principal are; 1. Anecdota quæ ex Ambrosianæ Bibliothecæ codicibus nunc primum prout, notis et disquisitionibus, &c.; 2. Anecdota Græca, quæ ex MSS. codicibus nunc primum erunt; 3. Rerum Italicarum Scriptores; 4. Antiquitates Italicæ mediæ ævi; 5. Novus Thesaurus veterum Inscriptionum; 6. Annali d'Italia; 7. Della perfetta Poetica Italiana.—Life written by his nephew J. F. S. Muratori.

MURET (Marc Anthony), a learned French critic, was born near Limoges, in 1526. At the age of eighteen he read lectures upon Cicero and Terence in the college of Auch; from whence he proceeded to the capital, where he taught with great reputation. But the vivacity of his character raised him enemies, and he was accused of an abominable crime, which obliged him to quit Paris. He then went to Toulouse, where he was again charged with the same offence, and to avoid capital punishment he escaped to Italy. At Rome he was well received; admitted to orders, and obtained some rich benefices. He died there in 1585. His works consist of valuable notes on the Latin Classics; poems, orations, &c. The whole were published together at Verona, in 5 vols. 8vo.; but badly printed, and on vile paper.—Bayle. Moreri.

MURILLO (Bartholomew), a Spanish painter, was born near Seville, in 1610, and died at Madrid in 1685. He painted historical pieces and landscapes in a beautiful style, and has been reckoned equal to Paul Veronese. The king of Spain gave him a patent of nobility.—Cumberland's Account of Spanish Painters.

MURRAY (Arthur), a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, was born at Cork in 1727, and educated at St. Omer's college. At the age of eighteen he returned to Ireland, and was placed under a merchant who was his relation. But not liking that profession he came to London, and having a great inclination to the stage he made an effort in the character of Othello, but without success. He then commenced writer, and produced the Orphan of China, a tragedy, which was well received. He also wrote a weekly paper, called the Gray's Inn Journal; and two others in defence of government, entitled, the Test and Auditor. Having studied the law he was called to the bar by the society of Lincoln's Inn, but never had much practice. His plays of the Grecian Daughter; All in the Wrong; the Way to Keep Him, and the Citizen, experienced great success, and produced to the author wealth as well as fame. Mr. Murphy also acquired considerable reputation by his Lives of Fielding and Johnson; and above all by his translation of Tacitus. He was for some years a commissioner of bankrupts, and for the last two years of his life had a pension of 200l. a year from the king. His last literary performance was the Life of Garrick, which is by no means equal to his former works. He died at Brompton in June, 1805. Mr. Murphy was the intimate friend of Dr. Johnson, Burke, Garrick, Foote, and other eminent men of letters.—Public Characters, vol. I. Monthly Mag.

MURRAY (James earl of), the natural son of James V. king of Scotland, by the daughter of the earl of Mar, was born in 1529. He was created earl of Murray by queen Mary, whom he treated in the most ungrateful manner. In 1567 he assumed the regency of Scotland, during the minority of James VI. He was shot at Linlithgow, in 1571, by a man named Hamilton, whose wife he had debauched.—Robertson.

MURRAY (William, earl of Mansfield), an illustrious lawyer, was the fourth son of David earl of Stormont, and born at Perth in 1705. He received his education at Westminster school, from whence he was elected student of Christ church, Oxford, in 1723. After taking his degrees in arts he went on his travels, and at his return entered of Lincoln's Inn, where he applied to the study of the law and was called to the bar. His eloquence gained him numerous admirers, and when he pleaded, the court was crowded. Pope, with whom he was intimate, complimented him with the appellation of 'silver-tongued Murray.' In 1742 he became solicitor-general, and was elected member of parliament. In 1754 he was made attorney-general, and in 1756 chief justice of the king's bench, soon after which he was created baron Mansfield. The year following he accepted the office of chancellor of the exchequer, which was done merely to effect a coalition of parties; and thereby an administration was formed, which carried the British arms to the highest pitch of glory. In 1776 his lordship was created an earl, with remainder to Louisa viscountess Stormont, and her heirs male. In 1780, when the metropolis was a scene of lawless riot, his lordship's house in Bloomsbury-square was burnt down by the mob, who threatened his life. By that disaster he lost a prodigious number of valuable manuscripts and books; yet when the house of commons voted him a compensation for the injury he had sustained, he refused to accept it. After filling his high office with great dignity many years, he resigned it on account of his infirmities in 1788. His lordship died with the reputation of a great lawyer, an upright man, an elegant scholar, and a sincere christian, at his seat of Caen Wood, in 1793. His remains were interred in Westminster abbey. The title descended to his nephew lord Stormont.—Life by Holiday.

MURRAY (Thomas), a portrait painter, was born in Scotland about 1666. He was employed by the royal family and several of the nobility, and died in 1724.—Pilk.

MURRAY (William), a dissenting minister, was a native of Scotland, and settled as pastor of a congregation at Birmingham, where he died in 1753, aged 62. He wrote a book entitled, Closet Devotions, 12mo.

MURRAY (James), a Scotch divine, was born at Dunkeld, and educated at Aberdeen, where he took his degree of M. A. After refusing a living in his own country, he came to London, where he officiated to a congregation in Swallow-street. He wrote a work, entitled, Aletheia, or a System of Moral Truths, 4 vols. 12mo. He died in 1758, aged 55. There was another dissenting minister of this name who wrote a History of the American War, 4 vols. 8vo.; Sermons to Asses, 12mo.; and a History of the Churches of England and Scotland, 3 vols. He died in 1782.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MURTOLA (Gaspard), an Italian poet, was born at Genoa, and died at Rome in 1624. He wrote a poem entitled, Della Creazione del Mondo, which was criticised by Marini in a poem called the Murtoloide; and Murtola was so exasperated that he fired a pistol at Marini, and wounded him. Besides the above, Murtola wrote several other poems of indifferent merit.—Tiraboschi.

MUSA (Antonius), a Greek physician, who cured Augustus of a dangerous fit of illness by bathing. He was the first who advised the use of the cold bath. The Romans erected a statue to his honour. Two tracts, De Herba Botanica, and De tuenda vaetudine, are attributed to him. They were printed at Venice with the other remains of ancient physicians, in 1547, folio.—Moreri.

MUSEUS, an ancient Greek poet, who flourished before Homer, about 1180 B. C. All his works are lost; but there passes under his name a piece, entitled, The Loves of Hero and Leander, in the Corpus Poetarum Græcorum.—Vossius de Poet. Græc.

MUSCULUS (Wolfgangus), a learned protestant divine, was born at Dieuze in Lorraine in 1497. He entered among the benedictines, and became an eminent preacher;

but on embracing the doctrines of Luther he went to Strasburg, where he was reduced to work for his bread. Bucer being apprized of his merit took him into his house. He afterwards became minister in the principal church of Strasburg, from whence he removed to Augsburg; but when that place was taken by Charles V. he retired to Switzerland, and in 1549 was appointed professor of divinity at Bern, where he died in 1563. He was a man of great learning, and translated several works of the Greek fathers into Latin. He also published Commentaries on the Scriptures. There was another Lutheran divine of this name who wrote some controversial books. He was professor of divinity at Frankfort, and died in 1580.—Miscb. Adam. Vit. Theol.

MUSORAVE (William), an English physician and antiquary, was born at Charlton in Somersetshire, in 1657. He was fellow of New college, Oxford, and in 1684 was chosen secretary to the royal society. He took his doctor's degree in 1689, after which he settled at Exeter, where he died in 1721. He wrote, 1. Geta Britannicus, 8vo.; 2. Belgium Britannicum, 8vo.; 3. Dé Aquilis Romanis; 4. De Legionibus, &c. His son became an eminent physician at Exeter; and wrote some critical pieces of merit. He distinguished himself by a charge which he brought against ministers of being bribed to make the peace of 1763; but he could prove nothing before a committee of the house of commons when examined. He died in 1777.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

MUSIUS (Cornelius), or Mys, professor of belles lettres and the languages at Louvain, or Ghent, was born at Delft in 1503. He afterwards became director of a convent in his native country, but was inhumanly put to death, on account of his religion, by William Lumei in 1572. He wrote several Latin poems of merit.—Moreri.

MUSSATI (Albertin), an historian and poet of Padua, and the minister of the emperor Henry VII. died in 1329. He wrote, 1. De Gestis Henrici VII. Imp.; 2. De Gestis Italarum post Henricum. His works were collected at Venice in 1636, folio.—Tiraboschi.

MUSCHENBROECK (Peter de), an eminent natural philosopher and mathematician, was born at Leyden in 1692. He became professor of mathematics and natural philosophy at his native place; and he was also a member of the royal society of London, and of the academy of sciences at Paris. He died in 1761. His Course of Natural and Experimental Philosophy is a very valuable work, and has been translated into English by Colson, in 2 vols. 8vo. Muschenbroeck was also the author of Tentamina Experimentorum, 4to.; Institutiones Physicæ, 4to., and Compendium Physicæ Experimentalis, 12mo.—Novæ. Dict.

MUSO (Cornelius), an Italian prelate, was born at Placenza in 1511. Pope Paul

IV. made him a bishop, and sent him to assist at the council of Trent. He died in 1574, aged 63. His sermons are a curious mixture of mythological allusions and scriptural quotations. The author cites Homer and Virgil as of equal authority with the Scriptures and Fathers.—Tiraboschi.

MUSTAPHA I. emperor of the Turks, succeeded his brother Achmet in 1617; but the same year he was deposed by the Janissaries, and thrown into prison. He was afterwards released, and placed upon the throne, but deposed again by the Janissaries, and strangled in 1623.—Univ. Hist.

MUSTAPHA II. son of Mahomet IV. succeeded Achmet II. his uncle, in 1695. He defeated the imperialists at Temeswar, and made war, with success, against the Venetians, Poles, and the Russians; but, at length, his fortune turned, and he was forced to make peace. He was deposed by his subjects, and died in 1703.—Ibid.

MUSTAPHA III. the son of Achmet III. ascended the throne in 1757. He was a weak prince, and by trusting to his favourites greatly exhausted the public treasury. He died in 1774.—Ibid.

MUSURUS (Marcus), a native of Candia, who taught Greek at Venice, and afterwards at Rome, with great reputation. Pope Leo X. made him archbishop of Malvasia in the Morea, but he died of a dropy shortly after, in 1517. He published editions of Aristophanes and Athenæus, and his Etymologicon Magnum Græcorum is a valuable work. It appeared at Venice in 1499, folio, and again at Heidelberg in 1594.—Fabricius de Script. Græc.

MUTIANO (Jerome), an eminent painter, was born at Brescia in 1528, and died at Rome in 1590. He studied after Titian, and painted landscapes in an excellent style. He also painted historical subjects.—D'Argenville.

MUTIUS (Cælius), first named Codrus, and afterwards Scævola, an illustrious Roman, who distinguished himself greatly in the war against Porsenna. When that prince besieged Rome, Mutius entered his camp to assassinate him, and, by mistake, stabbed one of his attendants. Being seized and brought before Porsenna, he said that he was one of 300 who had engaged, by oath, to slay him, and added, "This hand, which has missed its purpose, ought to suffer." On saying this he thrust it into the coals which were burning on the altar, and suffered it to be consumed. Porsenna, struck with his intrepidity, made peace with the Romans. The name of Scævola, or left-handed, was in consequence given as a mark of distinction to Mutius and his family.

MURIUS (Ulric), professor at Basil, who published a History of Germany in 1539, folio.—Moreri.

MUYS (William), a physician, was born at Sleenwick in Overijssel, and became successively professor of medicine, chemistry, and lastly of botany, at Franeker, where he died in 1744. He wrote Elements of Natural Philosophy, 4to.; Investigatio fabricæ quæ in partibus musculos componen-tibus extat, 4to.; de Virtute Seminali, quæ plantæ et animalia generi suo propagando sufficiunt, and several orations and other pieces of considerable merit.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

MUZZIO (Jerome), or Mutius, a learned Italian, was born at Padua in 1466. He took the surname of Guistinopolitano, on account of his family's being settled at Cape de Istria. His principal works are; 1. Delle Vergeriane, lib. iv. 1559, 8vo.; 2. Lettere Catoliche; 3. Di fesa della Messa, de Santi, del Papato; 4. Le Mentite Ochiniane; this was against Ochinus; 5. Il Duello, et la Faustina. Muzzio wrote very severely against the protestants, and died in 1576.—Tiraboschi.

MYDORGE (Claude), a learned mathematician, was born at Paris in 1585, and died in 1677. He wrote four books of Conic Sections, and other works.—Moreri.

MYN (Herbert van der), a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1684. He excelled in painting fruits and flowers, but afterwards applied himself to history and portrait. He died in 1741.—Pilkington.

MYRÆPUS (Nicholas), a physician of Alexandria, who published a Pharmacopœia collected from the Greek and Arabian writers about the close of the thirteenth century. It has been often printed.—Friend's Hist. Physic.

MYSON, one of the seven wise men of Greece. Anacharsis the Scythian having inquired of Apollo, who was the wisest man in Greece, was answered, "He who is now plowing his fields." This was Myson.—Diog. Laërt.

MYTENS (Arnold), a painter, was born at Brussels in 1541. He painted several capital pictures for churches in Italy. He died in 1602.—Pilkington.

MYTENS (Martin), a Swedish painter, was born at Stockholm in 1695, and died in 1755. He painted the portraits of several princes, particularly of Peter the Great, who pressed him to settle at Petersburg; which he declined from an inclination to visit Italy. He afterwards fixed his residence at Vienna, where he was held in great esteem by the emperor Charles VI.—Ibid.

NABI EFFENDI, a Turkish poet of the 17th century. He was a man of considerable learning, and versed in the Latin writers. His poems are much esteemed by his countrymen.—D'Herbelot.

NABIS, tyrant of Lacedemon, whom Philip king of Macedon appointed governor of Argos. He was guilty of the greatest cruelties, and had a statue constructed habited as a female, which, by springs, would embrace any one that touched it, and then pierce him through the body with sharp spikes. This machine Nabis devised as a means of extorting money from his people, and when any of them refused he threatened to introduce them to his wife. He was slain B.C. 194.—Plutarch.

NABONASSAR king of Babylon. He is celebrated by the famous epoch which bears his name, and which commenced in the year 747 B.C. He is supposed to be the same with Baladan, the father of Merodach, mentioned in Scripture.—Usher.

NABOPOLASSAR, prince of Babylon, united with Astyages against Syria, which country they conquered, and having divided between them, founded two kingdoms, that of the Medes under Astyages, and that of the Chaldeans under Nabopolassar, B.C. 626. Necho, king of Egypt, jealous of the power of the latter, declared war against him and defeated him. Nabopolassar died after a reign of 21 years.—Ibid.

NAEVIUS (Cneius), a Latin poet who wrote several comedies, one of which was so displeasing to Metellus, the consul, that he expelled him from Rome. Naevus retired to Utica, where he died 230 B.C. Some fragments of his are extant. He served with reputation in the first punic war.—Possius de Poet. Lat.

NANUM, one of the 12 minor prophets, was a native of Galilee, and prophesied in the reign of Hezekiah. He prophesied with great force against Nineveh. His language is vehement and his descriptions glowing.—Cray's Key O. T.

NAIRON (Faustus), a learned Maronite and professor of the Syriac language in the college la Sapienza at Rome, was born on Mount Libanus, and the nephew of Ecchelenfis. He died at Rome, aged 80, in 1711. His works are; Euophia fidei Catholicæ ex Syrorum monumentis Adversus ævi nostri innovatores, 1694; Dissertatio de origine, nomine ac religione Maronitarum, 1679. In these books he endeavours to prove that the Maronites were orthodox, and did not take their name from Maro, a Monothelite, but from St. Maro, a celebrated anchorite in the 4th century.—Moreri.

NALSON (Valentine), a divine of the church of England, was born at Malton in Yorkshire, in 1611. He received his education at St. John's college, Cambridge, after which he obtained a prebend in York cathedral, and the living of St. Martin in that city. He died in 1724. Mr. Nalson published a volume of Sermons.—Gen. Bing. Dict.

NALTON (James), a nonconformist divine, was ejected from the living of St. Leonard's, Foster-lane, by the Bartholomew act in 1662; after which he lived privately. He had been concerned in what was called Love's plot, on which account he fled to Holland, from whence he returned soon after. He died in 1663. Mr. Nalton was a pious man, and has some Sermons in print.—Calamy. Palmer.

NANCEL (Nicholas de), a French physician, was born at a village of the same name near Soissons. After being a professor at different places he became physician in the abbey of Fontevrault, where he died in 1610. He wrote, 1. Stichologia Græca, Latineque, informanda et reformanda, 8vo.; 2. The Life of Peter Ramus; 3. De Immortalitate Animæ, 8vo.—Moreri.

NANI (John Baptist), a noble Venetian, was born in 1616. In 1641 he was admitted of the college of senators, and shortly after sent ambassador to France. He returned to Venice in 1648, having obtained from Louis XIII. considerable succours for carrying on the war against the Turks. In 1654 he was sent ambassador to Germany, where he rendered considerable services to the republic. He continued to serve his country on many great occasions, and was appointed procurator of St. Mark. He died in 1678. Nani was employed by the senate to write the History of Venice; the best edition of which is that of 1679, 2 vols. 4to.—Tiraboschi.

NANNIUS (Peter), a learned writer, and professor at Louvain, was born at Alcmæer in Holland, in 1500, and died in 1557. His works are; Notes on classic Authors; Miscellaneorum decas, cum actuario et retractationibus, 8vo.; Dialogues of Heronius 4to. [This is reckoned his best performance.] A translation of the Psalms into Latin verse; in Cantica Canticorum paraphrases et Scholia, 4to.—Moreri.

NANTEUIL (Robert), a celebrated miniature painter and engraver, was born at Rheims in 1630. He drew the portrait of Louis XIV. in crayons, with such elegance, that the king appointed him designer and engraver to his cabinet, with a considerable salary. He died at Paris in 1678. His engravings of portraits are highly valued.—D'Argenville.

NANTONI (Louis Chazot de), a French writer, was born in 1690, and died at Paris in 1755. His works are; 1. Historical Genealogies of Kings, Emperors, and of all the Sovereign Houses in Europe, 4 vols. 4to.; 2. Geographical Tables, 12mo.; 3. Historical, Genealogical, and Chronological Tables, 9 vols.; 4. the Genealogies in the Supplement to Moreri, 1749.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NAAGEORGE (Thomas), a Lutheran divine, was born at Slaubing in Bavaria in 1511, his real name being Kirchmayer, which he altered according to the pedantic custom of that age. He wrote many satirical poems against the romish church, the principal of which is entitled, Regnum Papisticum, 1559, 8vo. This author died in 1578.—Meib. Adam. Vit. Germ. Theol.

NARES (James), doctor of music, was born at Stanwell, in Middlesex, in 1715. He was one of the children in the royal chapel, and studied under Dr. Pepusch, after which he became organist of York cathedral. In 1755 he succeeded Dr. Green as organist and composer to the king; and was created doctor of music at Cambridge. In 1757 he was appointed master of the choristers, which place he resigned in 1780. He died in 1783. Dr. Nares left several compositions of merit.—Europ. Mag.

NARSES, king of Persia, succeeded his father Varanes in 294. He conquered Mesopotamia and Armenia. Maximianus-Galerius, sent against him by Diocletian, was repulsed, but afterwards defeated the Persians, whom he laid under tribute. Narses died in 303.—Univ. Hist.

NARSES, a Persian eunuch, and one of the greatest generals of his time, commanded the Roman army against the Goths, whom he defeated in two battles in 552, and put to death their king Totila. There was another of this name who revolted against Phocas, and was put to death at the end of the sixth century. Baronius makes them to be one and the same, but without any just ground.—Ibid.

NASH (Thomas), an English writer, was born in Suffolk, and educated at Cambridge. He entered into orders, but never obtained any preferment, on account of his profligacy. He wrote many satires against the puritans, and a humorous poem, entitled, Pierce Pennylesis. He died about 1600.—Theatrum Picturum. Gen. Biog. Dict.

NASH (Richard), a singular character, was born at Swansea in Wales in 1674, and received his education at Caermarthen, from whence he was sent to Jesus college, Oxford, where he remained but a short time. He afterwards had a pair of colours, but soon quitted the army, and entered of the Temple, but never followed the law. A love of pleasure and gaming drew him in 1704 to Bath, which place of amusement he contrived by his excellent management to render a place of fashionable resort. He was chosen master of the ceremonies; and was so much esteemed as to be called King of Bath, but commonly he was termed, from the peculiarity of his dress, beau

Nash. Though much given to gambling, he was very liberal, and numerous instances are recorded of his benevolence. He died in 1761.—Life of Nash, 8vo.

NASINI (Joseph Nicolas), an historical painter, was born near Siena in 1660. He was the disciple of Ciro Ferri, at whose recommendation he was employed by the grand duke of Tuscany. He died in 1736.—Pilkington.

NATALIS (Michael), an eminent engraver, was born at Liege in 1609. He studied the art under his father, after which he went to Rome, where he profited by the instructions of Joachim Sandraart, and engraved representations of some of the statues in the Justinian gallery, after Titian, Rubens, &c. He died in 1670.—Moreri.

NATHAN, a prophet who lived in the reign of David. At the divine command he denounced judgment on that monarch for his guilt in the murder of Uriah, and adultery with Bathsheba. On that occasion he brought the monarch to repentance by the relation of a beautiful parable of the poor man's lamb.—Bible.

NATHAN (Isaac, or Mordecai), a rabbi, was the first who compiled a Hebrew Concordance, which he began in 1438, and finished in 1448. It was printed at Venice in 1523, and afterwards, by the care of Buxtorf, at Basle in 1632, folio.—Buxtorf.

NATTIER (John Mark), a French painter, was born at Paris in 1685, and died in 1766. He was professor in the academy of painting at Paris, and was patronized by Louis XIV. The czar Peter the Great, when in France, solicited Nattier to accompany him to Russia, which he declined. His designs of the Luxemburg gallery were engraved in 1 vol. folio, 1710. There was another artist of this name who was an engraver of intaglios, and died at Petersburgh in 1763. He published a book of antique gems.—D'Argenville.

NAUCLERUS (John), professor of law at Tubingen, and provost of the cathedral church at that place, was born of a noble family in Suabia named Vergeau, which, according to the custom of his age, he altered to Nauclerus. He lived about 1501. His Chronicle from the beginning of the world to 1500 possesses merit, and has been continued by different writers. The best edition is that of Cologne in 1570, folio.—Moreri.

NAUDÉ (Gabriel), or Naudens, a learned writer, was born at Paris in 1600. After studying at his native place he went to Padua, where he took his degrees in physic, after which he became librarian to cardinal Bagni at Rome, and on his death was patronized by cardinal Barberini. On being recalled to France he was made librarian to cardinal Mazarine, who conferred on him several benefices. Christina queen of Sweden invited him to her court, but he soon returned. This learned man died at Abbeville in 1653. His prinprincipal works are, 1. An Apology for Great Men who have been accused of Magic, 12mo.; 2. Advice for Forming a Library; 3. Addition to the Life of Louis XI. 4. Bibliographia politica; 5. Syntagma de studio militari; 6. De Antiquitate Scholæ Medicæ Parisiensis; 7. Syntagma de studioli-berali; 8. A Discourse against Libels.—Moreri.

NAUDE (Philip), a mathematician, was born at Metz in 1654. Being a protestant he went to Berlin on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and became a member of the academy and professor of mathematics in that city, where he died in 1729. He wrote a Treatise on Geometry, in quarto. He was succeeded by his son, who was an able mathematician, and died in 1745.—Ibid.

NAVAGERO (Andrew), or Naugerius, a noble Venetian of the 16th century, who was employed in different embassies, and died in 1529, aged 44. He was appointed to write the History of Venice, the manuscript of which he burnt in his last illness. His poems are in the collection entitled, Carmina Illustrum Poetarum Italorum; and his other works were printed at Padua in 1718, 4to. A relation of his, Bernard NAVAGERO, became bishop of Verona and a cardinal. He assisted at the council of Trent, and died in 1565, aged 58. He wrote the Life of Pope Paul IV.—Tiraboschi.

NAVARETTE (Ferdinand), a Spanish dominican, who displayed his zeal and talents as a preacher, in China, and was chosen by the other missionaries to plead against the jesuits before the pope. Charles II. king of Spain afterwards appointed him archbishop of St. Domingo in the West Indies. He died in 1689. His Treatise, historical, political, and moral, of the Monarchy of China, was printed at Madrid in 1676, folio, in Spanish. There were two other volumes which the inquisition caused to be suppressed. Baltusar NAVARETTE, another Spanish dominican, who lived at the end of the 16th century, wrote, Controversiæ in Divi Thomæ ejusque Scholæ defensionem, 3 vols. fol.—Moreri.

NAVAREE (Peter), a famous soldier in the 16th century, was a biscayan of low extraction. He commenced his career as a seaman, after which he became a menial servant in the family of the cardinal du Aragon. He next entered among the Florentine troops, and after some time returned to the sea service, where he displayed great skill and courage. The reputation he acquired recommended him to Gonfalso de Cordova, who was employed in the war of Naples. In the taking of that city Navarre was principally concerned by the construction of a mine. The emperor recompensed him for this service by the grant of Alivio in that kingdom, whence he assumed the title of count Pedro de Navarre. Being appointed to the command of a naval expedition against the Moors, he took Oran, Tripoli, and several other places. On his return to Italy he served in the army, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Ravenna in 1512. After continuing in France two years in hopes of being ransomed, he entered into the French service, and signalized himself on several occasions; but being sent to the succour of Genoa in 1522, he was taken prisoner by the Imperialists, and conducted to Naples, where he was confined in the castle del' Oeuf. After the treaty of Madrid he regained his liberty, and in 1528 served under Lautrec at the siege of Naples, but in the unfortunate retreat of that general at Averfa he was again captured, and sent the second time to l'Oeuf. The prince of Orange, by command of the emperor, having ordered a number of prisoners to be beheaded, barbarously included Navarre in the direction; but the governor, possessing more humanity, passed him over, and he died there soon after. Some pretend, however, that he was strangled in that citadel.—Life by Paul Jovius.

NAVIER (Peter-Touffaint), a physician, was born at St. Dizier in France, and died at Chalons in 1779. He is known by the discovery of the nitrous-ether, and of the combination of mercury with iron. He was a skilful physician, and a man of great humanity. He wrote, a Dissertation on Popular Diseases; Observations on a Softness of the Bone; Reflections on the Danger of Hasty Burials, and the Abuses of Interments in Churches; on Arsenic; De Thermis Borboniensibus, &c.—Nova Diss. Hist.

NAVLER (James), a quaker, was born in Yorkshire about 1616. He was a soldier in the army of Cromwell, but on hearing George Fox, he quitted the military profession and turned preacher. His extravagance was so great that he was imprisoned at Exeter in 1656. On gaining his liberty he went to Bristol, which he entered surrounded with quakers, who cried aloud, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts; Hosanna in the highest." On this the magistrates caused Nayler to be apprehended, and sent him to London, where he was tried, and being convicted of blasphemy, was sentenced to stand in the pillory, to have his tongue bored with a hot iron, and to be branded in the forehead. After this he became more reasonable, and died on his way to his native place in 1660.—Swiss's Hist. of Quakers.

NEAL (Daniel), an English non-conformist divine, was born in London in 1678. After receiving a preparatory education at a dissenting academy, he was sent to Utrecht and Leyden. In 1706 he was chosen pastor of an independent congregation in Aldersgate-street, and afterwards in Jewin-street. He wrote, a History of New England, 2 vols. 8vo.; a History of the Puritans, 4 vols. 8vo. and some Sermons: He died in 1743.—Life prefixed to his Hist. of Puritans.

NEANDER (Michael), a protestant divine, was born in Silesia in 1513. He became rector of the university of Ilfeldt, and afterwards of Pforzheim. He died in 1595. His principal works are, 1. Erotemata Lingue Græcæ, 8vo.; 2. a Hebrew Grammar; 3. Pindarica Aristologia; 4. Gnomologia & Stobæo confecta, 8vo. He is to be distinguished from Michael Neander, a physician of Jena, who died in 1581. He wrote, Synopsis mensurarum et ponderum, 1555, 4to.—Meleeb. Adam. vit. Germ. Theol.

NEARCHUS, one of the captains of Alexander the Great, who sent him to explore the Indian seas. Nearchus made a voyage from the Indies to Harmusia, now called Ormus, of which expedition an account is extant equally curious and exact. It has been published in England, with very interesting notes and illustrations by the learned dean Vincent. Alexander rewarded Nearchus in a very liberal manner, and after the death of that prince he obtained the countries of Lybia and Pamphylia.—Arrian.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR I. or Nabuchadonosor, king of Nineveh and Babylon. He is supposed to be the same with Nabopolassar, governor of Babylon, who founded the kingdom of Niniveh. He sent Holophernes against Judæa, and who was slain by Judith. NEBUCHADNEZZAR II. king of Assyria and Babylon, is supposed to have been the son of the preceding. He invaded Judæa, took Jerusalem, and carried the treasures of the temple and a number of captives to Babylon. After this he set up a golden statue in the plain of Dura, which he commanded all his subjects to adore, on pain of being cast into a fiery furnace. Three young Jews, named Shadrac, Meshac, and Abednego, refused to commit this idolatry, and the sentence was executed upon them, but they were preserved amidst the flames unhurt. The scripture relates, that having lost his senses, he became an outcast from the society of men, and lived among wild beasts in the forest, but on recovering, his reason he again ascended the throne, and died B.C. 562, after reigning 43 years.—Ibid. Book of Daniel.

NECHO, king of Egypt, called in scripture Pharaoh Necho, succeeded his father, Psammetichus, B.C. 616. He undertook to make a canal from the Nile to the Arabian gulf, which prodigious undertaking he was forced to abandon, after losing a great number of men. The ships of Necho failed from the Red Sea round the coast of Africa into the Mediterranean, and returned to Egypt, after a voyage of three years. This monarch, jealous of the power of Assyria, invaded that empire, and on his march was attacked by Josiah, king of Judah, who was slain in the battle. The king of Egypt continued his march, but was defeated in his turn by Nebuchadnezzar, and obliged to return to his own country, where he died B.C. 600.—Herodotus. Bible.

NECK (John Van), a Dutch painter, was born at Naarden in 1635. He excelled in painting naked figures; but his best picture is one representing Simeon with the infant Jesus, in a church at Amsterdam. He died in 1714.—Pittington.

NECKER (Noel-Joseph), a physician and botanist, was born in Flanders in 1729. He applied in his youth to the study of botany, and acquired a great knowledge of plants. He died at Mannheim in 1793. His works are, 1. Delicæ gallobelgicæ sylvestres, 2 vols. 12mo.; 2. Methodus mucosorum, 8vo.; 3. Physiologia mucosorum, 8vo.; 4. Eclaircissement sur la propagation des filices, 8vo.; 5. Hist. nat. du Tussilage, &c. 8vo.; 6. Elementa Botanica, &c. 8vo.—L'Ecu. Diß. Hist.

NECKER (James), a celebrated financier, was born at Geneva in 1732. He commenced his political career by becoming a member of the council of two hundred in his native city. He was afterwards appointed minister of the republic of Geneva at Paris, where by degrees he rose to the highest employments. In 1765 he was appointed syndic of the East India company; in 1775 director of the royal treasury; and twice prime minister of France. But the revolution, which his hasty projects of finance and reform greatly assisted, obliged him to retire to Switzerland, and he died at Copet in April 1804. M. Necker wrote three volumes on the finances of France; an excellent book on the influence of religious opinions, and other works. He married the daughter of a protestant clergyman, by whom he had a daughter, madame de Stael Holstein, the wife of the Swedish ambassador of that name. Madame Necker, who died in 1794, wrote a piece against Hasty Interments; a Memoir on the Establishment of Hospitals; and Reflections on Divorce. The daughter has gained a sort of celebrity by a very indecent and irreligious novel entitled, Delphine.—Novo. Diß. Hist. Monthly Mag.

NECKHAM (Alexander), canon of Exeter, and abbot of St. Mary's, Cirencester. He was a good poet, and a man of considerable learning for his age, particularly in the sciences. He died in 1227. He wrote, Commentaries on the Psalms: a Treatise de nominibus utensilium, &c.—Pitt.

NECTARIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, was born at Iarusus, and elected to the patriarchate in 381. He was a man of piety, and died in 397.—Dupin. Tillemont.

NEEDHAM (Marchamont), an English writer, was born at Burford in Oxfordshire in 1620, and educated at All Souls college, Oxford. He afterwards became a lawyer's clerk in London, and at length turned physician. In the civil war he distinguished himself by his political writings, and against the parliament, and afterwards against the king; so that at the restoration he obtained his pardon with difficulty. He died in 1678. He conducted periodical journals somewhat in the manner of newspapers, the titles of which were, Mercurius Britannicus, Mercurius Pragmaticus, and Mercurius Politicus.—Wood.

NEEDHAM (John Tuberville), a roman catholic divine, was born in London in 1713, and educated at Douay, where he entered into orders. His superiors appointed him professor of philosophy in the English college at Lisbon. He afterwards became travelling tutor to a nobleman; and on his return settled in London, where he was chosen fellow of the royal society. He died rector of the academy of sciences at Brussels in 1781. Mr. Needham wrote some observations inserted in Buffon's Natural History; also, New Enquiries upon Microscopical Discoveries, and the Generation of Organized Bodies, 8vo. Paris; Observations on Spallanzani's Microscopical Discoveries: Enquiries concerning Nature and Religion.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NEEDLER (Benjamin), a nonconformist minister, was born at Lalam, in Middlesex, and educated at St. John's college, Oxford, of which he was chosen fellow. He was ejected from the living of St. Margaret Moses, London, in 1662, and died in 1682. He wrote an Exposition on the five first chapters of Genesis.—Calamy.

NEEDLER (Thomas), an English writer, had a place in the navy-office, and died in 1718, aged 28. His works in verse and prose were printed in 1 vol. 12mo. by Dr. Duncombe, in 1724.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

NEEFS (Peter), a Flemish painter, was the disciple of Steenwick, and excelled in painting perspective, particularly the inside view of churches. His son was also a good painter, but not equal to the father. —Piltington.

NEER (Arnold van der), a painter of landscapes and moonlight scenes, was born at Amsterdam in 1619, and died in 1693. His son Hendrick painted history, portrait, and landscape. He died in 1703.—Houbraken.

NEHEMIAH, a celebrated Jew, was the son of Hachaliah, and born in Babylon during the captivity. He became cupbearer to Artaxerxes Longomanus, who permitted him to return to his own country, and to rebuild Jerusalem. He achieved this work B.C. 454, though greatly opposed by the enemies of the Jewish nation. After governing that people with great wisdom and zeal, Nehemiah died at Jerusalem, B.C. 400.—Gray's Key O. T. Usher.

NELLER (George Christopher), an ecclesiastic of the cathedral church of Treves, and counsellor to the prince elector there, died in 1783, aged 74. He wrote, 1. Dissertatio de Decretis Basilensibus; 2. De Primatu Sanctæ Ecclesiæ Trevirensis; 3. Hermænis inauguralis in magni Balduini Trevi- rensis documentum anecdotum; 4. De genuina idea et signis parochialitatis primitivæ ejusque principio, incorporatione ex chartis Trevirensibus confecta; 5. De Juri-bus parochi primitivi; 6. De sacro electionis processu; 7. De Solido ficto; de solidio spæciei argenteæ, de moreta rotata; de glossæ Turonensi et Trevirensi, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NELSON (Robert), usually termed the pious Nelson, was born in London in 1656, and educated at Trinity college, Cambridge. In 1680 he was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and the same year went on his travels, accompanied by Dr. Halley. In 1682 he married lady Lucy, widow of sir Kingmill Lucy, and thereby added considerably to his fortune; but the lady was a zealous Roman catholic, and it is remarkable that though they published tracts in defence of their respective religious sentiments, the controversy did not lessen their affections for each other. After the revolution, Mr. Nelson, who could not transfer his allegiance from king James, joined in religious worship with the nonjurors, and continued so to do till 1709, when he returned to the church as established. His friendship, however, with men of opposite sentiments was not abated; and the great archbishop Tillotson died in his arms. Mr. Nelson himself died in 1714. His works are; 1. The Practice of True Devotion, 12mo.; 2. Transubstantiation contrary to Scripture, 4to.; 3. Companion for the Festivals and Fasts of the Church of England, 8vo.; [a very valuable work, of which there have been numerous editions.] 4. The Great Duty of frequenting the Christian Sacrifice, 8vo.; 5. The Life of Bishop Bull, 8vo.; 6. A Letter to Dr. Clarke on his Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, 8vo.; 7. A Letter on Church Government; 8. An Address to Persons of Quality and Estate, 8vo.; 9. The Whole Duty of a Christian, by way of Question and Answer, 12mo.—Biog. Brit.

NEMESIANUS (Aurelius Olympius), a Latin poet, was a native of Carthage, and lived about A.D. 281. It is supposed that he perished in the persecutions which disgraced the beginning of Diocletian's reign. His poem, entitled, Cynegetica, was discovered by Sannazarius at Tours, and published, with four eclogues, by Peter Manuzio, at Venice in 1588. They have been printed also in the collection, entitled, Poetæ rei Veneticæ, 1730, 2 vols. folio.—Fassius de Poet. Lat.

NEMESIUS, a Greek philosopher, who embraced the christian religion, and was made bishop of Emessa, in Phœnicia. He flourished in the 5th century. We have by him a piece, entitled, De Natura Hominis, an edition of which appeared at Oxford in 1671.—Dupin.

NEMOURS (Mary de Longueville, duchess of), was the daughter of the duke de Longueville, and the wife of the duke de Nemours. She died in 1707, aged 82. Her Memoirs of the Court of France during the Minority of Louis XIV. are written with life and fidelity. They are commonly united with those of Joly, but have also been printed separately.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NENNUS, a British writer of the 9th century, who wrote the History of Britain; a Latin MS. of which is among the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum.—Owen's Camb. Biog.

NEPER (John), or Napier, commonly called lord Neper, and baron of Merchiston, was defended of an ancient family near Edinburgh, and born in 1550. He received a very liberal education, and devoted himself principally to the cultivation of mathematical learning, and has immortalized his name by the discovery of logarithms, which he published in 1614. This invention he greatly extended and improved in 1619, when he published his Rabdologia. Neper also invented the five circular parts in trigonometry; and a mechanical mode of arithmetic, called Neper's Bones, or Rods. He was likewise deeply read in theology, and published a mysterious book on Antichrist and the Revelations. He died in 1622.—Life of Neper by lord Buchan.

NEPOS (Cornelius), a Latin historian in the reign of Augustus, whose patronage he enjoyed. Of all his works, we have only his lives of illustrious Greek and Roman generals; the best editions of which are, that of Leyden, 1778, and that of Glasgow, 12mo. 1761.—Vossius de Hist. Lat. Biog. Classica.

NEPOS (Flavius Julius), emperor of the west, was a native of Dalmatia, and having married a niece of Leo I. that monarch gave him the western empire. Nepos marched to Rome to secure his throne; after which he fixed the seat of government at Ravenna, but was obliged to quit that city by his general Orestes. He then retired to one of his estates in Dalmatia, where he was assassinated in 480.—Univ. Hist.

NERI (Philip de), an Italian writer, was born at Florence in 1485, of a noble family. In 1532 he was chosen by duke Alexander one of the magistrates, afterwards denominated senators. He died at Florence in 1556. His History of Florentine Affairs, from 1215 to 1537, was printed at Augsburg in 1728.—Trivulzbi.

NERI (St. Philip de), founder of the congregation of priests of the oratory in Italy, was born at Florence in 1515. He founded his celebrated congregation in 1550. Their engagements were to relieve poor strangers, and pilgrims, and to administer to the sick. Neri died in 1596, and was canonized in 1622 by Gregory XV.—Nouv. Dict.

NERI (Pompeio), a native of Florence, who became professor of law at Pisa, and was employed in state affairs of great importance by the duke of Lorraine and the empress Maria Theresa. He founded the academy of botany at Florence, and died there in 1776, aged 69. He wrote Observations on the ancient and present State of the Tuscan Nobility; Observations on the Imposts of Milan; on the Legal Value of Coin, and the difficulty of fixing and maintaining the same. There was also of this name and family Anthony Neri, who printed, at Florence in 1612, a curious book on the Art of Making Glass, 4to.—Ibid.

NERO (Claudius Domitius Caesar), a Roman emperor, was the son of Catus Domitianus, and of Agrippina, daughter of Germanicus. He was adopted by Claudius in A. D. 50, and four years after succeeded him on the throne. The commencement of his reign promised to be very advantageous to the Romans, who regarded him as a gift from Heaven. He was just, liberal, affable, polished, complaisant, and his heart seemed to possess every excellent quality. But all this was mere exterior, and a mask which hid the most depraved mind that ever disgraced a human being: he soon laid aside his artificial virtues, and released himself from the controul of his mother, whom he caused to be assassinated; and vindicated the unnatural act to the senate on a pretence that Agrippina had plotted against him. Many of the courtiers shared the same fate, and Rome was deluged with the blood of her best citizens. Nero plunged himself as deep in debauchery as in cruelty. He disguised himself in female attire, and was publicly married to one of his eunuchs. He turned actor, pretended to excel in music, and even appeared as a competitor in wrestling at the Olympic games, where, though he was defeated, the assessors and spectators, out of flattery, adjudged him the victor. After putting to death his wife Octavia, he sacrificed his tutor Seneca, Lucan the poet, Petronius, and a number of other eminent persons. He also commenced a horrible persecution of the Christians; and having read of the burning of Troy, he caused Rome to be set on fire in several places, and during the conflagration the inhuman monster beheld the dreadful scene from a high tower, where he amused himself by singing to his lyre. After this he built a magnificent palace, and said that he could now lodge like a man. His cruelties, extravagance, and debauchery, at length roused the public resentment. Piso formed a conspiracy against the tyrant, but it was discovered and defeated. That of Galba, however, proved more successful, and Nero being abandoned by all his flatterers, put an end to himself, A. D. 68.—Suetonius in vita Nera. Tacitus.

NERVA (Cocceius), a Roman emperor, who succeeded Domitian, A. D. 96, became the favourite of the Romans by his mildness and generosity. He would not allow any statues to be erected to his honour; but at the close of life his soldiers mutinied against him, on which occasion he behaved with calmness and intrepidity. He then appointed Trajan his successor amidst the acclamations of the people. Nerva died in 98, aged 72. Nerva was the first Roman emperor of foreign extraction, his father being a native of Crete.—Univ. Hist.

NESBIT (Thomas), a Scotch antiquary, was the son of the lord-president Nesbit, and born at Edinburgh in 1672. He wrote an excellent book on heraldry, and a vindication of Scottish antiquities, which is in MS. in the advocates' library at Edinburgh. He died in 1725.—Gen. B. D.

NESSÉ (Christopher), a non-conformist divine, was born in Yorkshire in 1621, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge. He became lecturer at Leeds, but was ejected in 1662; after which he preached privately and taught youth till 1672, when he opened a meeting-house. In 1675 he removed to London, where he preached to a congregation of dissenters till his death in 1705. He wrote, the Crown and Glory of a Christian, 12mo.; the Christian's Walk and Work on Earth, 8vo.; A Protestant Antidote against the Poison of Popery, 8vo.; a Church History from Adam; the History and Mystery of the Old and New Testament, 4 vols. fol.; a Divine Legacy, &c.—Calamy. Palmer.

NESTOR, a Russian monk, was born in 1056, and died about 1115. He wrote a description of Russia, and the annals of that country from 858 to about 1113; a German translation of which was published by Muller in 1732.—Newc. Dict.

NESTORIUS, a bishop of Constantinople, in 431. He was a native of Syria; and was deposed from his bishopric for denying the doctrine of the incarnation, or the two natures of Christ. His opinions spread widely over the East, and still have followers in those parts.—Bayle.

NETSCHER (Gaspard), an eminent portrait painter, was born at Prague in 1636, and died in Holland in 1684.—D'Argenville.

NEUBAUER (Ernest Frederick), a protestant divine, was born at Magdeburgh in 1705. He was professor of antiquities and afterwards of theology at Gießen, where he died in 1748. His works are, Academic Disertations; Explications of Passages of Scripture; Sermons; Lives of Professors of Divinity at Gießen.—Newc. Dict. Hist.

NEUBAUER (Francis), a musician, was born in Bohemia and educated at Prague and Vienna. He became music-master in the chapel of the prince of Nassau, and distinguished himself by some beautiful compositions; but he was excessively addicted to drinking. He died in 1795.—Necrology.

NEVE (Timothy), an English divine, was born in Shropshire, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge. He became prebendary of Lincoln, archdeacon of Huntington, and rector of Alwalton, in Huntingdonshire, where he died about 1740. He communicated to the Spalding Society an Essay on the Invention of Printing, and on our first Printers.—Biblioth. Topog. Brit.

NEVERs (Philip-Julien Mazarin Mancini, duke de), was the nephew of the cardinal Mazarin, and born at Rome in 1631. He distinguished himself as the patron of Pradon against Racine, which produced sharp controversies among the wits. The duke wrote some sonnets on that occasion, and other poems of little merit. He died in 1707.—Newc. Dict. Hist.

NEWCOMB (Thomas), an ingenious divine, was born in Herefordshire, and educated at Corpus Christi college, Oxford. In 1734 he became rector of Stopham, in Sussex, after which he kept a respectable school at Hackney. Mr. Newcomb wrote a number of excellent poems, and turned Hervey's Meditations into blank verse.—Gen. Bing. Dict.

NEWCOMB (William), successively bishop of Ossory and Waterford, and archbishop of Armagh, was a divine of profound learning and amiable manners. He was a member of the royal Irish academy, and died in 1800. His grace published a Harmony of the Gospels; a letter to Dr. Priestley on the Duration of our Lord's Ministry, 8vo.; Observations on our Lord's Conduct, 4to.; an improved Version of the twelve Minor Prophets, 4to.; another of Ezekiel; a Review of the chief Difficulties in the Gospel History relating to our Lord's Resurrection; an Historical Review of the English Biblical Translations. After his death was published his Version of the New Testament, 2 vols. 8vo.—Gent. Mag.

NEWCOMEN (Matthew), a non-conformist divine, who was ejected from the living of Dedham, in Essex, in 1662. He had been of St. John's college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. He was also a member of the Westminster assembly of divines, and had a concern in drawing up their catechism. Mr. Newcomen was one of the five who wrote Smectymnus, a piece against bishop Hall's Vindication of Episcopacy. That barbarous word, pretty well suited to the treatise itself, was made up of the initials of the author's names, viz. Stephen Marshall, Edmund Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, William Spurlow. After Newcomen was ejected for non-conformity he went to Leyden, where he died in 1669.—Calamy.

NEWHOFF (Theodore Baron), commonly called king of Corsica, was the son of Anthony, baron de Newhoff, and de Stein, in Westphalia; who, marrying the daughter of a merchant, thereby incurred the hatred of his relations, and was obliged to emigrate to France. By the interest of the dukes of Orleans he obtained a place at the court of Lorraine. Theodore-Steven, his son, was born at Metz about 1696. He was for some time in the suite of the famous baron de Gortz, the Swedish minister, but when that intriguing statesman was executed at Stockholm, Theodore entered into the Spanish service. Soon after this he married mademoiselle Kilmanseg, maid of honour to the queen, by whom he had a son, who was afterwards known in this country by the name of Colonel Frederick. Theodore next went to France, and had some concern with Law, the Scotch adventurer. From thence he passed into Holland and England, and in 1736 was at Leghorn. The Corsicans being at that time in a state of insurrection, Theodore went to that island, where he was esteemed by the inhabitants, who chose him for their king. The state of Genoa declared him and his adherents traitors, but Theodore having mustered an army of 25,000 men, was enabled to capture the city of Bastia. He greatly relied on some foreign powers for support, but England and France forbade their subjects from assisting the mal-contenta. However, he received large sums of money, and instituted a military order on the island, called the order of deliverance; but the failure in the expected succours soon changed the face of his affairs. He therefore resolved on quitting the island, but first appointed deputies to manage affairs in his absence. He went from thence in disguise, but was seized at Naples, and cast into the fortress of Cueta. On obtaining his liberty he visited England, where he was reduced to poverty, and thrown into the king's bench for debt. In 1756 he took the benefit of the act of insolvency, and registered his kingdom for the benefit of his creditors at Guildhall. He died at his tailor's in 1756, and was interred in the burying-ground of St. Anne's, Soho, where a marble monument was erected to his memory by Horace Walpole, afterwards earl of Orford—Neurology, 1798.

NEWLAND (Peter), the son of a carpenter at Dimmermeer, near Amsterdam, was born in 1764. In his childhood he evinced proofs of an extraordinary genius, and at the age of ten produced some pieces of poetry, and resolved problems in the mathematics without having had a master. The learned professors, Beret and Van Swinden, became his patrons and tutors, and he soon surpassed his masters. The Batavian government appointed him one of the commissioners of longitude; and he was successively professor of mathematics and philosophy at Utrecht and Amsterdam. He died in 1794. His works are, 1. Poems in Dutch; 2. On the Means of enlightening a People; 3. On the general Utility of the Mathematics; 4. Of the System of Lavoisier; 5. On the Form of the Globe; 6. On the Course of Comets, and of the Uncertainty of their Return; 7. On ascertaining the Latitude at Sea; 8. A Treatise on Navigation.—L'Ecuycr. Dict. Hist.

NEWTON (John), an English divine and mathematician, was born at Oundle, in Northamptonshire, in 1622, and educated at Edmund hall, Oxford. In 1661 he was created D. D., appointed king's chaplain, and rector of Rois, in Herefordshire, where he died in 1678. His works are, 1. Astronomia Britannica, 4to.; 2. Help to Calculation, with Tables of Declination, Ascension, &c.; 3. Trigonometria Britannica, folio; 4. Geometrical Trigonometry; 5. Mathematical Elements, &c.—Martin's Biog. Phil.

NEWTON (sir Isaac), justly called the prince of philosophers, was descended of an ancient family in Lincolnshire, and born at Woolstrop, in that county, on Christmas day in 1642. Losing his father in his childhood the care of him devolved on his mother; who gave him an excellent education, though he married a second time. In 1654 he was sent to Grantham school, and at the age of eighteen removed to Trinity college, Cambridge, where he had the learned Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Isaac Barrow for a tutor. Under that able mathematician Mr. Newton made a rapid progress. After going through Euclid's Elements, the most difficult problems in which were very easy and familiar to him, he proceeded to the study of Descartes's geometry, with Oughtred's Clavis, and Kepler's Optics, in all of which he made marginal notes as he went along; and this always continued to be his method of study. It was in this early course that he invented the method of series and fluxions, which he afterwards brought to perfection, though his claim to the discovery was unjustly contested by Leibnitz, who had obtained a knowledge of it in 1676 from the author himself. At the age of twenty-two Mr. Newton took his degree of bachelor of arts, and about the same time he applied to the grinding of optic glasses for telescopes; and having procured a glass prism in order to try the phenomena of colours lately discovered by Grimaldi, the result of his observations was his new theory of light and colours. On the breaking out of the plague in 1665 he retired to his country seat, where, secluded from conversation and books, his active and penetrating mind started that hint which gave rise to his celebrated system of the universe. He was sitting alone in his garden when some apples falling from a tree led his thoughts to the subject of gravity; and reflecting on the power of that principle, he began to consider that as it is not diminished at the remotest distance from the centre of the earth, it may be extended as far as the moon, and to all the planetary bodies. This subject he afterwards resumed on the occasion of the great comet in 1680, and in 1687 the important principle which forms the foundation of the Newtonian philosophy was first published under the title of Philosophiæ Naturalis principia Mathematica. On our author's return to the university, in 1667, he was chosen fellow of his college, and took his degree of master of arts. Two years afterwards he succeeded

Dr. Barrow in the mathematical professorship, on which occasion he read a course of optical lectures in Latin. He had not finished them in 1671, when he was chosen fellow of the royal society, to which learned body he communicated his theory of light and colours, which was followed by his account of a new telescope invented by him, and other interesting papers. When the privileges of the university of Cambridge were attacked by James II. Mr. Newton was appointed to appear as one of her delegates in the high-commission court, where he pleaded with so much strength that the king thought proper to stop his proceedings. He was next chosen a member of the convention parliament, in which he sat till it was dissolved. In 1696 he was made warden of the mint, and afterwards master of that office; which place he discharged with the greatest honour till his death. On his last promotion he nominated Mr. Whiston to fill his chair at Cambridge with all the profits of the place, and resigned it entirely to him in 1703. The same year our author was chosen president of the royal society, in which station he continued twenty-five years. He was also a member of the academy of sciences at Paris, having been chosen in 1699. In 1704 he published his treatise of the Reflections, Refractions, Inflections, and Colours of Light, which was afterwards translated into several languages, and went through many editions. The next year queen Anne conferred on him the honour of knighthood. In the succeeding reign he was very often at court, and the princes of Wales, afterwards queen Caroline, frequently conversed with him on philosophical subjects. About 1718 he communicated to her royal highness the outlines of his treatise on ancient chronology, with which she was so pleased that he never would part with it. A surreptitious copy of it was, however, obtained and carried to France by the abbe Conti, who translated and printed it with observations. On this Sir Isaac published a paper on the subject in the Philosophical Transactions, and the work at length in English, in quarto. After enjoying an uncommon share of health, owing to his activity and temperance, till he was fourscore years old, this great man began to be afflicted with an incontinence of urine, which was followed by a stone in the bladder. The last twenty days of his life were attended with much pain, yet amidst the severest agonies he never cried out or expressed the slightest impatience. He died March 20th, 1726, and after lying in state in the Jerusalem chamber the body was interred in Westminster abbey, the lord chancellor, the dukes of Montrose and Roxburgh, and three earls, bearing the pall. A stately monument has been erected over his remains at the entrance into the choir. Sir Isaac was of a middling stature, and his countenance was pleasing and venerable. He never made use of spectacles, and during his whole life lost but one tooth. He was of a very meek disposition, and a great lover of peace. To his other great qualities he added a serious and devout reverence for religion. His favourite study was the Bible; the prophecies of which he illustrated by his researches. He conformed to the church of England, but he lived in friendship with good men of all communions; and he was an enemy to every kind of persecution. Sir Isaac had a great abhorrence of infidelity, and never failed to reprove those who made free with revelation in his presence, of which the following is an instance: The learned Dr. Halley was sceptically inclined, and sometimes took the liberty of sporting with the scriptures. On one such occasion Sir Isaac said to him—"Dr. Halley, I am always glad to hear you when you speak about astronomy, or other parts of mathematics, because that is a subject which you have studied, and well understand; but you should not talk of christianity, for you have not studied it; I know, and know you know nothing of the matter." Sir Isaac was never married, and, perhaps, had never time to think of it, being constantly immersed in the profoundest studies, and not being willing to have them broken by domestic concerns. A complete and elegant edition of his works was published with illustrations by Dr. (now bishop) Horsley, in 1779, in five volumes, quarto.—Big. Brit.

NEWTON (Thomas), a divine and physician, was born at Prestbury, in Cheshire, and educated first at Oxford and next at Cambridge. He afterwards taught school at Macclesfield, and practised physic, after which he obtained the living of Ilford, in Essex, where he died in 1607. He wrote the History of the Saracens, &c.; Approved Medicines and cordial Receipts, 8vo.; Flustrina aliquot Anglorum encomia, &c.; A Direction for the Health of Magistrates and Students; Herbal of the Bible, 8vo. &c.—Wood.

NEWTON (Richard), an English divine, was born in Buckinghamshire, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Christ church, Oxford. In 1710 he was appointed principal of Hart-hall; which house was converted into a college by his means in 1740, under the name of Hertford college. Dr. Newton was also canon of Christ church, and died in 1753. He wrote a book against pluralities and non-residence; another on University Education; and he published an edition of Theophrastus with notes.—Gen. Bing. Dict.

NEWTON (Thomas), an eminent prelate, was born at Litchfield, in Staffordshire, in 1704. After finishing his education at Westminster school he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow. After entering into orders he became curate of St. George, Hanover-square, and assistant preacher to the rector, Dr. Trebeck, whose daughter he married. He was also reader and afternoon preacher at Grosvenor chapel. In 1744 he obtained the rectory of St. Mary le Bow, London, and the year following took his degree of doctor in divinity. In 1747 he was chosen lecturer of St. George, Hanover-square; and in 1749 he published an edition of the Paradise Lost, with numerous notes selected from various authors and many of his own. He also prefixed a very curious and well-written life of the author. In 1756 he was appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king; and afterwards obtained a prebendal stall in St. Peter's church, Westminster. Having lost his wife, he married in 1761 the widow of the rev. Mr. Hand, and daughter of John lord Lisburne. The same year he kissed the king's hand on being promoted to the bishopric of Bristol. He was offered the primacy of Ireland in 1764, but declined it. Four years afterwards he accepted the deanry of St. Paul's, London, which, with his bishopric, he held to his death in 1782. Bishop Newton was a man of considerable learning and piety, of much observation and liberality. His principal work is a course of Dissertations on the Prophecies, in two vols. 8vo. After his death were published his Miscellaneous Works, with his own Memoirs, written by himself.

NICAISE (Claude), a French antiquary and ecclesiastic, was born at Dijon. He resided many years at Rome; and died at Vellely, in his own country, in 1701, aged 78. He published, 1. De Nummo Pantheo; 2. A Discourse on the Form and Figure of the Syrens; 3. A Dissertation on two of Raphael's Pictures.—Moreri.

NICANDER of Colophon, a grammarian, poet, and physician, who flourished B. C. 140. Two poems of his are extant, entitled, Theriaca and Alexipharmaca, which have been printed in the Corpus Poetarum Græcorum, 2 vols. folio; and separately at Florence in 1764, 8vo.—Vestus de Poet. Græc.

NICAUSIS, or, according to the Arabians, BALKIS, queen of Sheba, who visited Solomon upon the report of his wisdom. Her country was probably that part of Arabia Felix which was inhabited by the Sabeans; but Josephus pretends that she reigned over Egypt and Ethiopia.—Moreri.

NICOLLS (Richard), an English poet, was born in 1684. He wrote additions to the Mirror for Magistrates; England's Eliza; and other poems.—Philipp's Theatrum Poetarum.

NICEPHORUS I. emperor of the east, was chancellor of the empire, but took the throne, in 802, from the empress Irene, whom he banished to the isle of Mitylene. The first part of his reign was auspicious; but afterwards he committed such cruelties that his subjects revolted, and proclaimed Bardanes, surnamed the Turk, emperor. Bardanes however was defeated, and sent to a monastery, where he was deprived of his eyes. The Bulgarians having invaded the empire, and ravaged Thrace, Nicepho-rus marched against them, but was vanquished and slain, A.D. 811.—Univ. Hist.

NICEPHORUS II. (Phocas), a nobleman of Constantinople, whose character was so popular, that he was raised to the imperial seat in 963. He married the widow of his predecessor, Romanus the Younger, and drove the Saracens out of a great part of Asia. He was assassinated by John Zimisces, and other conspirators, in 969.—Ibid.

NICEPHORUS III. was invested with the purple by the army which he commanded in 1077. He was deprived of this dignity in 1081, by his general, Alexis Comnenus, who sent him to a convent, where he died shortly after.—Ibid.

NICEPHORUS (Gregorius), a Greek historian of the 14th century, who compiled a history of the Eastern empire from 1204 to 1341; which was printed in France in 1702, in 2 vols. folio.—Moreri.

NICEPHORUS (Callistus), a Greek historian of the same age with the preceding. He wrote an ecclesiastical history from the birth of Christ to A.D. 610, the best edition of which is that of Paris in 1630.—Ibid.

NICEPHORUS (Blemmidas), a monk of Mount Athos, in the 13th century. He refused the patriarchate of Constantinople from his partiality to the Roman church. He wrote two treatises concerning the precession of the Holy Ghost, printed at Rome in 1659.—Ibid.

NICERON (John Francis), an ingenious divine and mathematician, was born at Paris in 1613. He distinguished himself by his skill in optics, on which subject he wrote some curious works, the best of which is that entitled, Thaumaturgus Opticus: five, Admiranda Optices, Catoptrices, et Dioptrices. He died in 1646.—Ibid.

NICERON (John Peter), an eminent biographer, was born at Paris in 1685. He entered into the religious order known by the name of the Barnabites, and became a celebrated preacher. He was also successively professor of philosophy and theology, and librarian to his society. He died in 1738. His works are, 1. Memoirs of Men illustrious in the Republic of Letters, with an Account of their Works, in 44 vols.; 2. a Translation of Dr. Hancock's book on the Virtues of Common Water, 2 vols. 12mo.; 3. the Conversion of England to Christianity, &c.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NICTAS (David), a Greek historian of the 9th century, who wrote the Life of St. Ignatius, patriarch of Constantinople, of which a Latin translation was printed at Ingolstadt in 1504.—Moreri.

NICTAS (surnamed Serron), bishop of Heraclea in the 11th century, who wrote Panegyrics on St. Gregory Nazianzen; Commentaries on the Scriptures; and other works.—Ibid.

NICTAS (Achinates), a Greek historian, who died at Nice in 1206. He wrote Annals from 1118 to 1205, of which a Latin version appeared at Basil in 1557, and at Geneva in 1593.—Moreri.

NICHOLAS (Abraham), an English penman, was born in London in 1692. He published Examples of Penmanship; the Penman's Assistant; and the Complete Writing-master. He died about 1744.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

NICHOLS (William), an English divine, was born in Buckinghamshire in 1664, and educated at Magdalen hall, Oxford, after which he became fellow of Merton college, and took his degree of D.D. in 1695; at which time he was rector of Selfey in Sussex. He died about 1712. Dr. Nicholls published several valuable works: the principal of which were, 1. A Conference with a Theist, 2 vols. 8vo.; 2. Defensio Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, 1707, 12mo; of this useful book he afterwards published an edition in English in octavo; 3. A Commentary on the Book of Common-prayer, folio and octavo.—Id.

NICHOLLS (Frank), an eminent English physician, was born at London in 1699. He was educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Oxford, where he took his degrees, and became reader of anatomy. On leaving the university he settled in London, and in 1743 married a daughter of Dr. Mead, by whom he had five children. He was eminent as a lecturer on anatomy and the practice of physic; but he was guilty of a very culpable custom in perverting the minds of his pupils to infidelity while teaching them the principles of medical science. He was physician to George II. an account of whose death he published in the Philosophical Transactions. He died in 1779. Dr. Nicholls was also the author of a tract De Anima Medica, and a dissertation De Motu Cordis et Sanguinis in Homine.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

NICIAS, an Athenian commander, who, by his merit, rose to the highest offices in his country. He signalized himself in the war of the Peloponnesus, which he had the honour of finishing. Afterwards he was appointed to command in conjunction with Eurymedon and Demosthenes against Sicily. These three generals laid siege to Syracuse for two years, but finding it impregnable they were about to retire, but were attacked by the Syracusans, and Nicias and Demosthenes, with a great part of their troops, made prisoners. Nicias was put to death by the Syracusans B. C. 413. There were two others of this name, the one a painter, mentioned by Pliny, and the other a grammarian, who was the friend of Pompey and Cicero.—Plut. Plin. Suet.

NICODEMUS, a Jewish senator, who visited our Saviour by night, and afterwards became his disciple, though secretly. But when Jesus Christ was crucified he avowed himself, and, together with Joseph of Arimathea, paid the last duties of regard to his master. The Jews, it is said, intended to have put him to death, but were hindered by his relation Gamaliel. They, however, depofed and excommunicated him. There is a pretended gospel under the name of Nicodemus; but it is full of errors, and was composed by the Manichees.—Dupin. Cave. Mosheim.

NICOLAÏ (John), a dominican, was born at Monza, in the diocese of Verdan, in 1594. He professed theology above twenty years with great reputation at Paris, and died in 1673. He published a complete edition of the works of Thomas Aquinas, in 19 vols. folio; also five learned dissertations on points of ecclesiastical discipline; a piece against Arnould, and other works.—Moreri.

NICOLAS, one of the seven deacons mentioned in the Acts. He was a proselyte of Antioch; but afterwards founded a sect which went by his name, and which allowed adultery, and to eat meats that had been offered to idols. Some writers, however, distinguish the author of this heresy from Nicolas the deacon.—Dupin. Cave.

NICOLAS I. pope, called the Great, was a native of Rome, and succeeded Benedict III. in 858. He had a warm contest with Photius, the intruding patriarch of Constantinople. Nicolas died in 867.—Dupin. Beauv.

NICOLAS II. was a native of Burgundy, and became archbishop of Florence, and was elected pope in 1058. He was opposed by a rival who called himself Benedict X. who was soon depofed. Nicolas died in 1061.—Ibid.

NICOLAS III. an Italian of noble family, obtained the tiara in 1277. He sent missionaries to convert heathen countries, and died in 1280.—Ibid.

NICOLAS IV. a native of Arcoli, was chosen pope in 1288. He endeavoured to excite a new croisade, but without success. This disappointment hastened his death, which happened in 1292. He composed some Commentaries on the Scriptures, and on the Sentences of Lombard.—Ibid.

NICOLAS V. cardinal bishop of Bologna, was elected pope after Eugenius IV. in 1447. He restored peace to the church and to Europe, and celebrated on that account a grand jubilee at Rome in 1450. The misfortunes experienced by the christians in the east oppressed him with grief, and he died in 1455.—Ibid.

NICOLAS DE LYRA, so named from the place of his birth, a town in Normandy. He is said to have been a Jew, but on turning christian; became a member of the order of friars minors in 1291. He afterwards read lectures in divinity with great reputation, and was admitted to the confidence of Jane, wife of Philip VI. which princefs named him one of the executors of her will. Nicolas died at Paris in 1340. His works are, Commentaries upon the Bible, Antwerp, 6 vols. folio; a Disputation against the Jews; another in defence of the New Testament, against a Rabbi.—Moreri.

NICOLAS of Munster, author of a sect which was called the family of love, about 1540. He pretended to inspiration, and that, as the divine spirit resided in him, he was greater than Jesus Christ. He wrote some books, as, the Gospel of the Kingdom; the Land of Peace, &c. His sect made their appearance in England in the reign of Elizabeth, and in the succeeding one they addressed a confession of their faith to James I.—Messheim. Neal's Puritans.

NICOLAS of Pisa, an architect and sculptor, who flourished in the 13th century. He built a magnificent church at Bologna, where also he constructed a superb monument for St. Dominic, the founder of the order of his name.—D'Argenville.

NICOLE (Claude), counsellor to the king of France, was born at Chartres in 1611, and died in 1685. A collection of his poems, of indifferent merit, was printed at Paris, 2 vols. 12mo. 1693.—Moreri.

NICOLE (Peter), a relation of the preceding, was born at Chartres in 1625. He became a member of the society of Port Royal, where he taught youth with great reputation, and assisted Arnauld in many of his best works. In 1677 he quitted France on account of the persecution which raged against the jansenists; but some time afterwards he obtained leave to return to Paris. In his latter years he espoused the cause of Bossuet against the quietists, and was engaged in some other controversies. He died in 1695. His moral essays are justly esteemed; as also is his treatise on preserving peace in society. His other works are chiefly polemical.—Niceron.

NICOLE (Francis), a mathematician, was born at Paris in 1683, and died in 1758. He became a member of the academy of sciences in 1706. Nicole was a profound geometrician, and gave to the academy several valuable papers, particularly one on lines of the third order.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NICOLO del Abbate, an eminent painter, was born at Modena in 1512. He obtained his surname from being patronized by Primatice, abbot of St. Martin, who took him to France in 1552; and employed him in several works. The style of Nicolo approached to that of Julio Romano, and of Parmesan.—De Piles.

NICOLSON (William), a learned prelate, was born at Orton in Cumberland, about 1655, and educated at Queen's college, Oxford, of which he became fellow. He was at first archdeacon, and afterwards bishop of Carlisle, from whence in 1717 he was translated to the bishopric of Derry in Ireland. He died in 1727, just as he was promoted to the archbishopric of Cashel. The bishop was a learned antiquary, and published several curious works, the chief of which is his English Historical Library, folio, 1714.—Biog. Brit.

NICOMEDES, an ancient mathematician, who is celebrated for his discovery of the curve called the conchoid. He flourished in the second century of the christian era.—V. Juss de Mathem.

NICOT (John), a French courtier, who was sent by Francis I. ambassador to Portugal, from whence he brought the plant named tobacco, but which in France has been, out of compliment to the importer, called nicotiana. He died in 1600. Nicot wrote a book on navigation; and the Treasury of French Language, a Dictionary, &c.—Moreri.

NIDHARD (John Everard), a German jesuit, who accompanied the archduchess Maria to Spain, when she married Philip IV. That monarch made him his confidant and minister, which occasioned many disputes between the jesuit and his rival the duke of Lerma, to whom Nidhard once said, "It is you that ought to respect me, as I have every day your God in my hand, and your queen at my feet." He was, however, a miserable minister, and brought the affairs of the nation to a very poor condition. He was in consequence disgraced, on which he retired to Rome, where he was made ambassador by the pope to the court of Spain, with the title of cardinal. He died in 1681. Nidhard wrote some books on the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary.—Moreri.

NIEUHOFF (John de), a Dutch voyager in the middle of the 17th century. He wrote a curious account of his embassy from the Dutch East India company to the emperor of China; to be seen in Churchill's Collection of Voyages and Travels.—Moreri.

NIEUWENTYT (Bernard), an eminent Dutch philosopher and mathematician, was born at Westraadvte, in North Holland, in 1654. He studied medicine, and became an eminent physician and magistrate at Purmerend, where he died in 1730. His works are, Considerations on the Analysis of Quantities infinitely small; Analysis of Curves by the Doctrine of Infinites; Considerations on the Principles of the Differential Calculus; Contemplations on the Universe; this has been translated into English, under the title of The Religious Philosopher, in 3 vols. 8vo.—Martin's Biog. Phil.

NIGER (C. Pescennius Justus), governor of Syria, and so distinguished by his valour and prudence, that the Roman soldiers proclaimed him emperor at Antioch A.D. 193. He had many virtues, but did not long enjoy his high dignity, being defeated and slain by Severus in 195.—Crevier. Univ. Hist.

NIGIDIUS FIGULUS (Publius), a learned Roman in the time of Cicero, whom he assisted in defeating the conspiracy of Cataline, but having taken part with Pompey against Caesar, he was exiled, and died in 45, B. C. He was greatly addicted to astrology; and some of his pieces are extant.

NIERNOLI (Jerome), a learned physician, who died at Ferrara in 1689, aged 69. He wrote, Progymnasmatum Medica, printed at Guastalla in 1665. His son Francis was also a physician, and a learned writer. He died in 1727, aged 79. He wrote some medical works; but it is uncertain which of these persons was the author of a curious book De charta veterum, ejusque usu.—Moreri.

NIKON, patriarch of Russia, was born of an obscure family in Novogorod. He was advanced to the patriarchate in 1652, and enjoyed the particular favour of the czar Alexiowitz. Nikon introduced into the Russian church the method of chanting, and called a council for restoring the sacred text according to the ancient versions. A new edition of the Bible was accordingly published at Moscow, under the sanction of the patriarch; but it gave great dissatisfaction to the priests. Nikon afterwards composed a Chronicle of Russian Affairs to the reign of Alexiowitz, which was printed at Peterburg in 1767, in 2 vols. 4to. By the intrigues of his enemies the patriarch was deprived of his dignity and sent to prison; but the emperor Feodor gave him his liberty. He died in 1681.—Hist. Russica. Moreri.

NINUS, the founder of the Assyrian empire, was the son of Belus. He built Nineveh, after which he conquered the Bactrians, as he had before a part of Egypt and India. Ninus married Semiramis, to whom he left his throne about 2164 B.C.—Univ. Hist.

NIPHUS (Augustin), an Italian writer of the 16th century, was born in Calabria. Pope Leo X. made him count palatin, and gave him other marks of his favour. He died about 1550. His principal works are, Commentaries on Aristotle and Averroes, 14 vols. folio; and treatises de Amore, and de falsa diluvii prognosticatione, 4to.—Tiraboschi.

NISBET (sir John), lord advocate of Scotland in the reign of Charles II. He distinguished himself by pleading against the standing militia in that country, and he was one of the commissioners appointed to treat with those of England, concerning the union of the two kingdoms.—Gen. Biog. Dict.

NIVELLE DE LA CHAUSSEE (Peter Claude), a French poet, was born of a wealthy family at Paris in 1692, and died there in 1754. He was a member of the French academy, and distinguished himself by some esteemed plays, as the School of Mothers; Melanides, and the Governant, comedies; and Maximian, and George Barnwell, tragedies. His works were printed at Paris in 1763, 5 vols. 12mo.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NIVERNOIS (Louis-Julius Mancini, duke de), minister of state, member of the French academy, and of that of belles-lettres, was born at Paris in 1716. After serving in the army some time he was sent ambassador to Rome, next to Berlin, and lastly to London, where he negotiated the peace of 1763. On his return to France he devoted himself chiefly to literary pursuits, and produced several poetical imitations of Virgil, Horace, Tibullus, Ovid, Ariosto, and Milton, which display a fine taste. He also wrote Letters on the Use of the Mind; Dialogues of the Dead; Reflections on the Genius of Horace, that of Boileau, and that of John Raptist Rousseau; the Life of Abbé Barthelemi; Reflections on Alexander and Charles XII.; Translation of Tacitus's Life of Agricola; another of Pope's Essay on Man; Collection of Fables, &c. The duke died in 1798.—Nouv. Dict. Hist.

NIZOLIVS (Marius), an Italian grammarian, who published in 1553 a treatise De veris Principiis et verâ Ratione Philosophandi contra pseudo-philosophos. He also compiled a Latin dictionary of the words and expressions which are in Cicero, folio.—Tiraboschi.

NOAH, the son of Lamech, was born 2978 B.C. The Almighty, designing to punish the wickedness of mankind, commanded Noah to build an ark to save himself and family; and when it was completed a deluge of waters overwhelmed the globe, and every living creature perished, except such as were in the ark. Seven months after the commencement of the flood, the ark rested on mount Ararat; and Noah offered a sacrifice to the Lord, who made a covenant with him. After this, Noah cultivated the land, and planted the vine; but having drank of the juice of the grape, he was discovered lying asleep by his son Ham, who, instead of being concerned at his father's weakness, called his brothers Shem and Japhet to witness the indecent spectacle. They, however, covered Noah with a mantle, and when he awoke and understood what had passed, he uttered a prophetic curse on the posterity of Ham. The patriarch died B. C. 2029. Almost all nations have retained traditional notions of the deluge, and vestiges of it are to be seen in various parts of the world. Noah evidently appears to be the same with the Saturn of the heathen mythology.—Bible. Univ. Hist.

NOAILLES (Adrian Maurice, duke de), a celebrated French general, was born of a noble family, and evinced early in life eminent talents for the military profession. He served with his father in Catalonia, and afterwards under Vendôme, both in Spain and Flanders. In 1708 he commanded in Roussillon, and gained several advantages over the enemy. In the winter of 1710 he made himself master of Gironne, one of the most important places in Catalonia, for which Philip V. created him a grandee of Spain, and Louis XIV. made him field marshal. In the succeeding reign he was appointed president of the council of finances; but when Dubois obtained the ascendancy in the ministry, Noailles was disgraced and exiled. On the death of that minister the duke was recalled and restored to his place in the state. In the war of 1733 he com-wounded at the siege of Philippsburg, and obliged the Germans to abandon Worms. He afterwards served with great reputation in Italy. The duke died in 1766.—Novo. Dis. Hist.

NOAILLES (Louis-Anthony, de), uncle of the preceding, was born in 1651. He devoted himself to the ecclesiastical state, and in 1676 was nominated bishop of Cahors, from whence he was removed to Chalons, and lastly to the see of Paris, in 1695. He made excellent rules for the conduct of his clergy; but his peace was disturbed by the jesuits in consequence of the approbation which he gave to father Quesnel's Reflections on the New Testament. In 1700 he was honoured with the dignity of cardinal, on which occasion Louis XIV. said to him, "I have more pleasure in procuring for you the cardinal's hat than you have in receiving it." Notwithstanding this the king was afterwards prejudiced against him by the means of father Tellier, the jesuit. Pope Clement XI. was also set against the archbishop, and issued his famous bull of Unigenitus, on occasion of Quesnel's book, which the latter had functioned. The cardinal was exiled; but after the death of Louis, Tellier was banished in his turn, and the archbishop recalled. He died in 1729. His brother Gaston succeeded him in the bishopric of Chalons, and died in 1720.—Moreri.

NOALX (Eustache de), a French writer, was born at Troyes in 1643. He became procurator-general in the parliament of Metz, but being accused of corruption in that office he was sent to the prison of the Chatelet, and condemned to be banished for nine years. From this sentence he appealed, and was then removed to the Conciergerie, where he contracted an intimacy with a female prisoner called Gabrielle Perreau, but generally known by the name of La Belle Epiciere. The consequence of this connection was three children. After leading a wandering and dissolute life he died in 1711. He wrote a History of the Republic of Holland; Relation of the State of Genoa; Dissertation on the Year of Christ's Nativity; Secret History of the Conspiracy of the Family of Pazzi against that of the Medici; and several romances and other works.—Novo. Dis. Hist.

NOGAROLA, the name of several ladies of Verona who were distinguished in the 16th century. Antoinette, celebrated for her beauty and learning, married Salvatico Bonacolti, a gentleman of Mantua. Her daughter Angela devoted herself to the study of the scriptures, and wrote an Explanation of the Prophecies. Isotta understood the languages, philosophy, and theology; and acquired so great a fame that cardinal Bessarion made a journey to Verona on purpose to converse with her. She died in 1468, aged 38. Her letters are highly esteemed. She also wrote a dissertation on this question, whether the sin of Adam or Eve was the greater? She took the part of the woman against Louis Foscaro, who defended Adam as the least culpable. Genevieve and Laura, sisters of Isotta, were also distinguished for their literary talents. Louis Nogarola, of the same family, published several translations from the Greek. He appeared with advantage at the council of Trent, and died at Verona in 1559.—Tiraboschi.

NOLDIUS (Christian), a Danish divine, was born in 1626. He became rector of the college of Landfroom, and afterwards professor of divinity at Copenhagen, where he died in 1683. His Concordantia particularum Hebræo-Chaldaicarum Veteris Testamenti is an excellent work. The best edition is that of Jena in 1734, 4to. Noldius was also the author of Historia Idu-mæa; Sacrarum Historiarum et Antiquitatum Synopsis; Logica, &c.—Moreri.

NOLLET (John Anthony), a French divine and philosophical writer, was born at Pimbre in the diocese of Noyon in 1700. He studied at Beauvais and Paris, and in 1734 visited London with Duhamel and Jussieu, and while here was admitted a member of the royal society. On his return to Paris he commenced a course of lectures in experimental philosophy, to which also he added illustrations of chemistry, anatomy, and natural history. In 1738 he was appointed, by the count de Maurepas, professor of experimental philosophy at Paris, and the year following he was admitted a member of the academy of sciences. About the same time he went to Turin on an invitation from the king of Sardinia, who appointed him professor of philosophy in that university; but he was recalled in 1744 to give lessons to the dauphin of France. In 1753 he was nominated first professor of experimental philosophy in the college of Navarre. He was also appointed philosophical tutor to the royal family. The abbé Nollet died in 1770. His Lectures in Experimental Philosophy were printed in 6 vols. 12mo. Besides these he wrote some excellent works on Electricity; the Art of making Experiments; and several papers in the Memoirs of the Academy.—Novo. Dis. Hist.

NOLLET (Dominick), a painter of history, landscape, and battles, was born at Bruges in 1640, and died in 1736.—Pilkington.

NOLLIKINS (Joseph Francis), a painter, was born at Antwerp, and settled in England. His subjects were landscapes, conversations, and children playing. He died in 1748.—Pilkington. Walpole.

NONIUS (Marcellus), a grammarian and peripatetic philosopher, whose treatise de Proprietate Sermonum was printed in 1471, and again at Paris in 1614, 8vo. with the notes of Josias Mercier. It is a work of value.—Moreri.

NONNIUS (Louis), a learned physician of Antwerp in the 17th century. He wrote a famous book, entitled, Dieteticon, five De Re Cibaria, full of learning and curious disquisition. He also printed a commentary on the Greek medals; a Description of Spain, in Latin; a Commentary on Greece; Ichthyophagia, and other works.—Moreri.

NONNIUS (Peter), or Nünnes, a Portuguese mathematician, was born in 1497 at Alcazar. He became professor of mathematics at Coimbra, and was preceptor to don Henry, son of king Emanuel. He died in 1577. Nonnius wrote a Treatise on Navigation, folio; De Crepusculis, 4to.; Opera Mathematica, folio. His book on Algebra is esteemed.—Moreri. Martin's Biog. Phil.

NONNUS, a Greek poet, who was a native of Panopolis in Egypt in the 5th century. He wrote an account of his embassy to Ethiopia and among the Saracens: also a work entitled, Diouyniaca, printed at Antwerp, in 1569; and a paraphrase in Greek verse, on the gospel of St. John, edited by Heinsius, 1627.—Moreri.

NOODT (Gerard), a famous civilian, was born in 1647 at Niméguen, where he was chosen professor of law in 1671. He afterwards accepted the professorship at Franeker, from whence he removed to Utrecht; but in 1686 he settled at Leyden, of which university he became rector. He died in 1725. He published a collection of his works in 1713, 4to.; they are wholly on subjects of jurisprudence, and are esteemed of high authority.—Niceron.

NORADIN, the son of Sanguin, or Ema-deddin, sultan of Aleppo and Nineveh. When his father was slain by his eunuchs at the siege of Calgembur in 1145, Noradin and his brother Seïfeddin divided his states between them. The former obtained the sovereignty of Aleppo, and by his prudence became one of the most potent princes in the east. He distinguished himself greatly against the christians in the time of the crusades, and defeated Joscelyn, count of Edessa, and Raymond, prince of Antioch, after which he made himself master of Egypt. He died in 1174. He was a brave and generous prince, and many instances are related of his liberality.—Maimbourg's Hist. of Crusades. D'Herbelot.

NORDBERG (J. A.), chaplain to Charles XII. of Sweden, whom he accompanied in all his campaigns, and whose history he wrote in Swedish. The author died about 1745.—Nov. Di. Hist.

NORDEN (Frederick Lewis), a Danish gentleman, was born at Gluckstadt in Holstein, in 1708. He entered into the sea service, and was a volunteer in the English fleet under sir John Norris in the Mediterranean. The king of Denmark sent him to Egypt to make drawings and observations of the ancient monuments of that country. These he executed with great fidelity, and his travels with plates have been splendidly printed in 2 volumes folio. Being elected a member of the royal society of London, he presented to that learned body his drawings of ruins and colossal statues at Thebes. Captain Norden died in 1742.—Gen. Biog. Di.

NORDEN (John), an old English writer, who is conjectured by Wood to have been a native of Wilts. He had his education at Oxford, and wrote some strange books in divinity with very whimsical titles, as the Sinful Man's Solace, 1583, 8vo.; Antithesis, or Contrariety between the Wicked and Godly set forth in a Pair of Gloves fit for every Man to wear, 1517. He was also the author of the Surveyor's Dialogue, 4to.; Labyrinth of Man's Life, a poem; and a Survey of the County of Middlesex, and another of Hertfordshire. He was surveyor of the king's lands, and died about 1625.—Wood, A. O.

NORDENLZICHT (Chederig Charlotte de), a Swedish lady, was born at Stockholm. She wrote several esteemed and elegant poems, particularly one on the Passage of the Belts, two straits in the Baltic which Charles Gustavus passed when frozen over in 1658. She is also known as the author of an ingenious piece, entitled, An Apology for Women. She died in 1793, aged 44.

NORDENSCHOLD, a Swede, who was governor of Finland, and knight of the order of the sword. He was distinguished for his knowledge of political economy. He died in 1764. Several of his Memoirs are in the collection of the academy of Stockholm, of which he was a member.—Nov. Di.

NORES (Jafon de), a native of Nicofia in the isle of Cyprus, on the taking of which place by the Turks he went to Padua, where he became teacher of moral philosophy. His Explication of Horace's Art of Poetry is very scarce. He died in 1500.—Moreri.

NORGATE (Edward), an English illuminator, who died in 1641. In the initial letters of an old patent done by him are the portraits of James I. sitting on his throne, delivering the patent to earl Stirling; and round the border, representations in miniature of huntings, fishings, &c.—Walpole.

NORIS (Henry), a celebrated cardinal, was born at Verona in 1631, and educated by his father, who was a native of Ireland. He afterwards entered into the monastic order of St. Augustine, and acquired great reputation on account of his learning. In 1673, he published the History of Pelagianism, which gave offence to several persons, who accused him to the pope as being heretically inclined, but Clement X. so little regarded the charge that he made Noris under-librarian of the Vatican. In 1695 he was honoured with the purple. He died in 1704. His works were published at Verona in 1730, in 5 vols. folio.—Moreri.

NORRIS (John), an English divine, was born at Collingbourne in Wiltshire, in 1657, and educated at Winchester school, from whence he removed to Exeter college, Oxford. In 1680 he was chosen fellow of All Souls college, where he took his degree of M.A. In 1689 he was presented to the rectory of Newton St. Loo in Somersetshire; and afterwards to that of Bemerton in Wiltshire. He died in 1711. Mr. Norris was a very pious, learned, and ingenious man; but strongly tinged with the Platonic mysticism. He wrote against Mr. Dodwell on the Immortality of the Soul; an Idea of Happiness, 8vo.; Poems and Discourses, 8vo.; the Theory and Regulation of Love, 8vo.; some pieces against the Quakers, the Calvinists, and Mr. Locke's Essay on Understanding. He was also the author of several volumes of Sermons written in a clear and pathetic style.—Biog. Brit.

NORRIS (John), an English gentleman, was born in Norfolk, and educated at Eton school, and King's college, Cambridge. On leaving the university he settled on his estate. He was twice married, and left a daughter when he died, which was in 1777, aged 43. Mr. Norris was of a serious disposition, but not enthusiastic. He left to the university of Cambridge an estate of 190l. a year for the purpose of establishing a theological professorship, and paying an annual prize on some subject of divinity.—Europ. Mag. vol. v.

NORTH (Francis), lord Guildford, keeper of the great seal in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. was the third son of Dudley lord North, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple. After being solicitor and attorney-general, he was made chief justice of the king's bench, and in 1683 he was appointed lord keeper with the title of lord Guildford. He died in 1685. His lordship wrote, 1. An Index of Verbs neuter, printed with Lilly's Grammar; 2. A paper on the Gravitation of Fluids in the Bladders of Fishes, printed in the Philosophical Transactions; 3. A philosophical Essay on Music; 4. Several Concertos, &c. &c.—Life of the Lord Keeper North, 4to.

NORTH (John), brother of the preceding, was born in 1645. He became successively fellow of Jesus college, Greek professor, clerk of the king's closet, prebendary of Westminster, and master of Trinity college, Cambridge. Dr. North died in 1583. He published some of the works of Plato.—Ibid.

NORTH (Frederic), earl of Guildford, an eminent English statesman, was born in 1732. He succeeded Mr. Charles Townshend as chancellor of the exchequer; and in 1770 was made first lord of the treasury, in which office he continued till the close of the American war. He was a man of strong powers, an excellent orator, and his private life very amiable. Before his death he became wholly blind. He died in 1792.—English Peerage. Gen. B. D.

NORTH (George), a learned divine, was born in London, and educated at St. Paul's school; from whence he removed to Bene't college, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He was a fellow of the society of antiquaries, and vicar of Codicote in Herefordshire. He died in 1772. He wrote a Table of English Silver Coins, from the conquest to the commonwealth.—Anecd. of Bowyer.

NORTON (Thomas), an English writer, was born in Bedfordshire, and is supposed by Wood to have been a barrister. He was a zealous calvinist, and wrote an Epistle to the Queen's poor deceived Subjects of the North Country, 1569; a Warning against the dangerous Practices of the Papists; and some other tracts against Popery. He also translated Calvin's Institutions into English, and the larger Catechism of Alexander Nowell. Norton translated twenty-seven of the Psalms of David, in the version of Sternhold and Hopkins; and he assisted Thomas Sackville in writing his tragedy of Ferrex and Porrex. He died about 1600.—Wood, A. O.

NORTON (lady Frances), was descended from the ancient family of the Frekes in Dorsetshire, and was born about the middle of the 17th century. She received a learned education, and was first married to sir George Norton of Somersetshire, by whom she had three children, one of whom was married to sir Richard Gethin [see GETHIN]. On the death of that amiable woman lady Norton wrote two books: one entitled the Applause of Virtue, 4to. 1705; the other Memento Mori, or Meditations on Death. After the death of sir George, she married colonel Ambrose Norton, and on his death she gave her hand to Mr. Jones. She died in 1720.—Bulke's British Ladies.

NORTON (John), a writer in the reign of Charles II. who published a curious book, called, The Scholar's Vade-mecum, in which he endeavoured to alter the orthography of the English language.—Granger.

NOSTRADAMUS (Michael), a French astrologer and physician, was born at St. Remi in Provence in 1503. He studied physic at Montpellier, where he took his doctor's degree. Having rendered some eminent service to the inhabitants of Aix when the city was visited by a contagion, he received a yearly pension many years. In 1555 he published his prophecies, which, though very obscure and absurd, soon gained the author a considerable reputation. These were followed by several others: the whole making one volume folio, in barbarous verse. Nostradamus was honoured with marks of distinction by persons of the highest rank, particularly Charles IX. king of France. He died in 1566.—Moreri.

NOUZE (Francis dela), surnamed the Arm of Iron, a French soldier, was born in Brittany in 1531. He distinguished himself in the wars of Italy, and on his return to France espoused the party of the protestants, then in arms against the catholics. He took Orleans in 1567. He had a principal share in the battle of Jarnac, in 1569, after which he made himself master of Fontenoy, on which occasion he lost his left arm, and had another constructed of iron, from whence he had his name. He was afterwards at the siege of Rochelle, and in 1578 entered into the service of the States General in the Low Countries, where he took the count Egmont prisoner, but he was himself a prisoner in 1580, and did not gain his liberty till five years afterwards. In the time of the league he served the king with great glory, and was killed by a musquet shot at the siege of Lamballe in 1591. He wrote a discourse political and military, printed in 1587, 4to. His son was also a brave officer and a writer. He died in 1618, leaving some religious poems printed at Geneva in 8vo.—Moreri.

NOUZE (Stanislaus-Louis de la), count de Vair, was of the same family as the preceding, and born in 1729. He distinguished himself as a gallant officer in the war of 1741, and again in that of 1756; but was slain in the action of Saxenhausen, in 1760. Louis XV. said, on hearing of his death, that "he had lost the Loudon of France." The count wrote New Military Constitutions, printed at Frankfurt in 1760, 8vo. with plates.—Novus, Dict., Hist.

NOUZE (John-Sauve de la), a French actor and dramatic writer, was born at Meaux in 1701. The duke of Orleans gave him the direction of his theatre at St. Cloud, and Voltaire wrote some pieces purposely for him. He died in 1761. His tragedies and comedies were published at Paris in 1765, 12mo.—Ibid.

NOVATIAN, a pagan philosopher, who embraced christianity, and was admitted to orders. Being of an ambitious turn, he was persuaded by Novatus to get himself ordained bishop, which was done in an irregular manner by three of that order in Italy. He then endeavoured to get possession of the see of Rome, after the death of pope Fabian, but was opposed by Cornelius. Novatian started the doctrine, that it was sinful to admit persons who had once lapsed to idolatry, to communion; a practice then universal in the church. This produced a schism, in which Novatian had many partisans, who called themselves Catharites, or pure. By others, however, they were named Novatians. To the above error they added many others, particularly those of the Montanists. There are several of the pieces of Novatian extant, published by Jackson at London in 1738, 4to.—Ibid.

NOVATUS, a priest of Carthage, who, being cited to appear before his superiors, for sacrilege, and other crimes, in the 3d century, started an opinion, that it was proper to admit persons who had fallen into idolatry again to communion, without penitence. He afterwards joined Novatian, spoken of in the article above, against St. Cyprian, and then he embraced an error opposite to his former. This union caused a great schism in the church.—Dupin. Cera. Mosheim.

NOWELL (Alexander), a learned divine, was born at Read in Lancashire. At the age of 19 he was entered of Brasenose college, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He was successively master of Westminster school, prebendary of Westminster, and dean of St. Paul's. In the reign of Elizabeth he was chosen member of parliament, but the election was set aside on account of his being in orders. He died in 1602. Dean Nowell is advantageously known by a catechism which he drew up for public use in Latin, printed first in 1572, and again in 1578. It was afterwards translated into Greek, and also into English. His brother, Laurence Nowell, was also a divine, of considerable abilities, and died dean of Litchfield in 1576. He left in MS. a Saxon-English Dictionary, which is in the Bodleian library, Oxford.—Faller's Worthies. Biog. Brit.

NOY (William), an eminent lawyer, was a native of Cornwall, and educated at Exeter college, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's inn. At the beginning of the reign of Charles I. he sat in parliament, and opposed the court; but being made attorney-general in 1631, he aided the most unpopular measures, particularly that of ship-money, which was wholly of his proposing. He died in 1634. He wrote a Treatise of the Grounds and Maxims of the Laws of England, 4to.—Wood.

NUCK (Anthony), a Dutch physician, and professor of anatomy at Leyden. His principal works are, Adenographia, Sedlographia, et operationes et experimenta Chirurgica, 5 vols. 1722.—Græ. Biog. Dict.

NUMA-POMPILIUS, successor of Romulus, king of the Romans, B.C. 714. He was of a philosophical turn, and introduced among his subjects religious festivals, and a code of laws. He died B.C. 672.—Livy.

NUMENIUS, a Greek philosopher of the second century, was a native of Apamea, in Syria, and followed the opinions of Pythagoras and Plato; but he charges the latter philosopher with having stolen, without acknowledgement, from the works of the jewish legislator, and calls him, "Moses speaking Greek." There are fragments of Numenius extant.—Moreri.

NUMERIANUS (Marcus Aurelius), son of the emperor Carus, by whom he was honoured with the title of Cæsar, and succeeded him with his brother Carinus in 284. He was murdered shortly after by his father-in-law Arrius Aper, who also fell a sacrifice to the irritated soldiers.—Ibid.

NYE (Philip), a non-conformist divine, was born in Suffex about 1596, and educated at Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, after which he entered into orders, and in 1620 became curate of St. Michael's, Cornhill; but turning puritan he went to Holland, and did not return till the civil wars, when he was chosen a member of the assembly of divines. He was a zealous champion for the solemn league and covenant. He died in 1672. He wrote several sermons and tracts. Butler whimsically alludes to this person in his Hudibras: 'Philip Nye's thanksgiving beard.'—Calamy.

NYE (Nathanael), an English mathematician in the reign of Charles II. and the master-gunner of Worcester. He wrote a Treatise called the Art of Gunnery, 1670, —Granger.

NYMANNUS (Gregory), professor of anatomy and botany at Wirtemberg, died there in 1638, aged 43. He wrote a Treatise on Apoplexy, 4to.; a Dissertation on the Life of the Fœtus, 12mo. This last is a curious work.—Moreri.

O.

OATES (Titus), a singular character, was born about 1619. He was originally of the baptist persuasion, but afterwards obtained orders in the church of England, and was appointed chaplain of a ship of war. Being dismissed the service on account of his immoral conduct, he became a lecturer in London; and, in conjunction with Dr. Tongue, invented a pretended plot, of which several persons were accused, on the testimony of Oates, and executed. For this discovery Oates received a considerable pension, but in the succeeding reign he was convicted of perjury, pilloried, and sentenced to be imprisoned for life. He obtained his release at the revolution, and died in 1705.—Collier's Hist. Diæ.

OBADIAH, the fourth of the minor prophets, by some supposed to have been contemporary with Hosea, but St. Jerome maintains that he is the same with the Obadiah who was a servant of Ahab, and the friend of Elijah.—Gray's Key O. T.

OBRECHT (Ulric), a learned German, was born at Strasburg in 1646. He became professor of law at his native place; but in 1684 he turned roman catholic, on which Louis XIV. made him president of the senate of Strasburg. He died in 1701. His works are, 1. Prodrômus rerum Alfatinarum, 4to.; 2. Excerpta historica de natura successionis in monarchia Hispaniæ, 3 toms. 4to.; 3. an edition of Quintilian, with notes, 2 vols. 4to.; 4. the Life of Pythagoras, from Jamblichus.—Moreri.

ORSEQUENS (Julius), a Latin writer, who flourished about A.D. 895. He wrote a Treatise De Prodigis, published by Aldus Manutius in 1508; but the best edition is that of Scheffer in 1679.—Moreri.

OCCAM, or OCCHAM (William), an English scholastic divine of the 14th century. He was the disciple of Duns Scotus, and obtained the name of invincible doctor. Occam was a member of the order of cordeliers, the general of which, Michael de Cezena, appointed him to write against pope John XXII. who excommunicated both. Occam afterwards made his submission, and was absolved. He died in 1347. His works were published at Paris in 2 vols. folio, 1476.—Pitt.

OCELLUS, a Greek philosopher of the school of Pythagoras, and called on account of his birth-place Lucanus. He wrote a piece on kings and kingdoms, of which only some fragments remain; but his work on the universe is extant. The best edition is that of Amsterdam, 1688, 8vo.—Moreri.

OCHIN (Bernardin), an Italian monk, was born at Sienna in 1487. He entered when young into the religious order of St. Francis, but quitted it and turned physician. He afterwards in a fit of repentance took the religious habit among the capuchins, and became general of that order. His eloquence was so much admired, that pope Paul III. made him his confessor. Ochin, however, on meeting with the works of Luther, turned protestant, and went first to Geneva, and next to England, where he obtained a prebend in Canterbury cathedral, but on the accession of Mary he retired to Strasburg, from whence he removed to Zurich, and became minister of the Italian church there; but was banished from that city in 1563 for writing his dialogues in defence of polygamy. He then went into Moravia, where he joined the socinians, but died of the plague the year following. His sermons in Italian, 5 vols. 8vo. are scarce. Some of them have been translated into English. He wrote several controversial books.—Bayle.

OCKLEY (Simon), a learned divine, was born at Exeter in 1678, and educated at Queen's college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.D. and in 1705 was presented to the vicarage of Swaveley, in Cambridgeshire. In 1711 he was chosen professor of Arabic, and died in poor circumstances in 1720. He published, 1. Introductio ad Linguas Orientales, 1706; 2. The History of the present Jews throughout the World, 12mo. 1707; 3. The Life of Hai Ebn Yokhdan, written by Abu Jaafar Ebn Tophail, 8vo. 1708; but his most considerable work is, 4. The History of the Saracens, 2 vols. 8vo.—Great Hist. Diet.

OCTAVIA, daughter of Caius Octavius, and sister to Augustus. She was first married to Claudius Marcellus, by whom she had two children before his death, which happened a little after the war of Persia, when she was pregnant of a third child. She then married Antony, to whom she behaved with the greatest respect; his conduct, however, was so base as greatly to inflame the people against him. But the loss of her son Marcellus, an accomplished youth, gave her the deepest concern. She died B.C. 11.—Tacitus.

OCTAVIA, daughter of Claudius and Messalina. She was betrothed to Lucius Silanus, but that marriage was broken off by the intrigues of Agrippina, and Octavia married Nero, who afterwards divorced her on the plea of sterility. That monster, at the instigation of Poppæa, sent her to a small island, where she was put to death at the age of twenty years.—Ibid.

ODAZZI (John), a celebrated painter and engraver, was born at Rome in 1663, and died in 1731. He was a member of the academy of St. Luke, and the pope conferred on him the order of knighthood.—D'Argenville.

ODELL (Thomas), a dramatic writer, was born in Buckinghamshire. He built a theatre in Goodman's-fields, which he afterwards sold to Mr. Gifford. In 1738 he was appointed deputy-master of the revels. He died in 1749. Odell was the author of four dramatic pieces of little merit.—Biog. Dram.

ODENATUS, king of Palmyra, who made war against Sapor, king of Persia, with great success. The emperor Gallienus associated Odenatus with him in the empire, and conferred the title of Augusta on his wife Zenobia. Odenatus was assassinated with his favourite son Herodian, by Meonius, a relation on whom they had conferred many favours, A.D. 267. Zenobia then assumed the government, under the title of queen of the East.—Mereri.

ODIN, a northern hero, who lived about 70 years B.C. in Denmark. He was monarch, priest, and a poet; and after his death was regarded by his countrymen as a god. The mythological work called the Edda, and a poem entitled, Havtnaal, are attributed to him.—Mallet's Hist. of Denmark.

ODO (St.), abbot of Clugni, in France, was born at Tours in 879. His piety greatly contributed to increase the congregation of Clugni, and his talents were respectable. He wrote several religious pieces, and died about 943.—Mereri.

ODO of Kent, a benedictine monk, abbot of the benedictines in his native country in the 12th century, who wrote a legend on the Miracles of Thomas à Becket.—Ibid.

ODORAN, a monk of Sens, who flourished about 1045.

He wrote a chronicle entitled, Chronica rerum in orbe gestarum, which ends in 1032.—Ibid.

OECOLAMPADIUS (John), a German divine, was born in Franconia in 1482. In 1522 he became professor of divinity, and principal preacher at Basle. Oecolampadius joined with Zuinglius against Luther on the sacrament, and wrote a smart book on the subject. In 1528 he married, on which Erasmus thus writes, "Oecolampadius hath taken to himself a wife, a pretty girl. He wants, I suppose, to mortify the flesh. Some call Lutheranism a tragedy, I call it a comedy, where distress usually ends in a wedding." Oecolampadius died in 1531. His works are numerous.—Melch. Adam.

OECUMENIUS, a Greek writer of the 10th century, whose works on the New Testament were printed at Paris, with those of Aretas, in 2 vols. folio.—Mereri.

OFFA, king of Mercia, succeeded Ethelbald in 755. He murdered Ethelbert, king of the East Angles, and took possession of his kingdom. To make atonement for his guilt he gave the tenth of his goods to the church, made a journey to Rome, instituted the tax called Peter-pence, and built the monastery at St. Alban's. He died in 794.—Rapin.

OGDEN (Samuel), an English divine, was born at Manchester in 1716, and educated at St. John's college, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1740. In 1744 he was appointed master of the free-school at Halifax in Yorkshire, but resigned that situation in 1753, and returned to the university, where he was chosen Woodwardian professor, and took his degree of doctor in divinity. In 1766 he was presented to the rectory of Lawford, in Essex, and to that of Stansfield, in Suffolk. Dr. Ogden died in 1778. His sermons in 2 vols. 8vo. are very ingenious, and written in an animated style. They were, however, animadverted on by Mr. Mainwaring, and defended by bishop Halifax.—Life prefixed to his Sermons.

OGILBY (John), a voluminous writer, was born near Edinburgh in 1600. He was originally a dancing-master, and was employed in the family of the great earl of Strafford, as teacher to his children. That nobleman appointed him deputy-master of the revels at Dublin, where Ogilby erected a theatre. On the breaking out of the Irish rebellion he returned to England, and settled at Cambridge, where he applied to the study of the learned languages. He was appointed to conduct the ceremonies at the king's coronation in 1661, and of which he published a very pompous account in large folio with plates. Ogilby translated Virgil and Homer into English verse, and published a magnificent Bible with prints, for which he was remunerated by the house of lords. He was appointed geographical printer to the king, and died in 1676. The other works of this industrious writer are, an Account of Japan, folio; an Atlas, folio; the Fables of Æsop in Verse, 2 vols. 8vo.; and a Book of Roads, 8vo. This last went through numerous editions, but has been superseded by Patter-son's.—Biog. Brit.

OISEL (James), professor of law at Groningen, was born at Dantzic in 1631, and died in 1686. His works are, Corrections and Notes on various Authors; a Treatise, entitled, Thesaurus selectorum Numismatum antiquorum ære expressorum, 4to.; and a Catalogue of his Library, which was very large and valuable.—Moreri.

OKOLSKI (Simon), provincial of the order of jacobins in Poland in 1649. He wrote a very curious history of his native country, under the title of Orbis Polonus, 3 vols. folio, printed at Cracow in 1641.—Moreri.

OLAF, king of Norway in the 10th century. He sent missionaries into Greenland to convert the inhabitants of that country to christianity.—Moreri.

OLAHUS (Nicholas), archbishop of Strigonia, in Hungary, and chancellor of that kingdom, was born at Hermanstadt in 1463, and died in 1568. He was a liberal prelate, and published a Chronicle of his own Times; a History of Attila; and a Description of Hungary.—Moreri.

OLAVIDES (the count de), was born in Spanish America, but had his education at Madrid, where, on account of his abilities, he became secretary to the count de Aranda, whom he accompanied in his embassy to France. On his return to Spain Charles III. created him a count, and appointed him superintendent of Seville. While there he undertook the great work of fertilizing the Sierra Morena, or the Black Mountain; a desert region barren to the very summit. By his perseverance, however, and the colonies of Germans which he brought there, the place soon assumed a new face. Notwithstanding the benefits which this worthy man had thus rendered his country, he fell into disgrace, and was sent to prison, from whence he effected his escape to Venice, where he died aged 65. There is attributed to him an excellent book, entitled, Et Evangelio in triumpho, the Triumph of the Gospel, 4 vols. 4to.—Novo. Di. Hist.

OLDCASTLE (sir John), lord Cobham, was born in the reign of Edward III. In the reign of Henry IV. he commanded the English army in France, where he compelled the duke of Orleans to raise the siege of Paris. He was an adherent of Wickliffe's doctrines, which he propagated with such zeal, that in the reign of Henry V. he was sent to the Tower, from whence he made his escape, but was taken in Wales. Being conveyed to London he was condemned to be hanged and burnt, which was executed with circumstances of peculiar barbarity in St. Giles's, in 1417. He wrote Twelve Conclusions, addressed to the parliament of England.—Great Hist. Di. Fox A. & M.

OLDENBURG (Henry), a native of Germany, who was appointed consul for the town of Bremen, at London, during Cromwell's usurpation. He afterwards became tutor to some English gentlemen, and resided at Oxford, where he was admitted a member of the philosophical society, of which he was appointed secretary, and published thirty-six numbers of their Transactions. He died in 1678.—Great Hist. Di.

ORIGEN, a father of the church, was born at Alexandria A.D. 185, of christian parents. He devoted much of his time to the study of the scriptures, and by his exhortations his father was encouraged to endure martyrdom. Origen taught grammar for his support, and that of his mother and brethren. Demetrius bishop of Alexandria relieved him from this employment by appointing him catechist of his church. His austerities were very great, and taking the scripture in the most rigid sense, he castrated himself, to become qualified for heaven. From Alexandria he went to Rome, where he began his famous Hexapla, or the Bible in different languages. At the command of his bishop he returned to Alexandria, and in 228 was ordained. Soon after this he began his Commentaries on the Scriptures; but Demetrius, who envied his great reputation, persecuted him with extreme violence, and in a council, which assembled in 231, it was decreed that Origen should desist from preaching, and quit the city. On this he went to Cæsarea, where he was well received by the bishop, and permitted to preach, which gave additional offence to his persecutors, who caused him to be excommunicated. Though he was thus treated at home, he met with the greatest respect wherever he went. He was also consulted in several episcopal synods; but in the persecution under Decius he was thrown into prison, where he was put to the rack. On his release he applied himself again to his ministerial labours, and to writing. He died in 254. In the works of Origen, which make 4 vols. folio, there are many conjectural opinions, particularly with respect to the Trinity, and the punishment of devils and sinful men.—Cave. Dupin.

ORIGEN, a platonic philosopher, who was the disciple and friend of Porphyry. He made a panegyric on the emperor Gallienus. There was an Egyptian of the same name, who said that marriage was the invention of the Devil.—Moreri.

ORIONY (Peter Adam de), a French soldier and writer, who published a History of Ancient Egypt; and a System of Egyptian Chronology. He died at Rheims in 1774.

ORKAN, son of Othoman, emperor of the Turks, seized the throne in 1326, after defeating his elder brothers. He extended the bounds of his empire by taking Gallipoly and several cities from the Greeks. His reign was long and cruel. He married the daughter of John Cantacuzenus, and died in 1360.—Univ. Hist.

ORLANDI (Pellegrini-Antony), an Italian bookseller, who died in 1730. He wrote on the Origin and Progress of Printing from 1457 to 1500, in Italian; a History of Writers of Bologna, 4to.; Abecedario Pittorico, 4to.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

ORLAY (Bernard van), a Flemish painter, was born at Brussels, about 1490. He was the disciple of Raphael, and became principal painter to the governor of the Netherlands. He died in 1560.—Pilkington.

ORLEANS (Charles, duke of), the son of Louis of France, bore the title of duke of Angouleme during the life of his father. He was made prisoner at the battle of Agincourt in 1415. He remained in England twenty-five years, and on his return to France he undertook the conquest of the duchy of Milan, to which he conceived himself entitled in right of his mother. He was not, however, successful in this enterprise, and died in 1465. Charles was an encourager of letters, and wrote some poems, which have been printed.—Moreri.

ORLEANS (Louis, duke of), a prince of the blood royal of France, was the son of Philip regent of the kingdom, and born at Versailles in 1703. In his youth he led rather a dissipated life, but after the death of his father and spouse, he resolved to renounce his former course, and to devote himself to works of piety, and to the study of religion and science. In 1730 he retired to the abbey of St. Genevieve, where he practised extreme austerities, but performed numerous acts of humility and charity. He died in 1752. The duke understood the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages; and was well versed in ecclesiastical and civil history, botany, geography, philosophy, and the fine arts. He translated the Psalms from the original Scriptures, and wrote Paraphrases on several books of the Old Testament; Dissertations against the Jews; a literal translation of St. Paul's Epistles, and several other works. His son, Louis Philip, duke of Orleans, died in 1785, aged 60. He was also a very benevolent prince.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

ORLEANS (Philip Louis Joseph, duke of), was born at St. Cloud in 1747. He had the title of duke of Chartres in his youth. In 1778 he served on board the fleet commanded by count d'Orvilliers, and in the action with admiral Keppel, the young duke went down into the hold, and would not come up till the engagement was over. His conduct afterwards was extremely dissipated, and he joined all the parties of malecontents against the court, for which he was exiled. On the death of his father he took the title of duke of Orleans. In the beginning of the revolution he displayed the greatest hatred to his royal relations, and became a member of the national assembly. He also assumed the title of citizen Egalist. This sanguinary monster voted for the death of Louis XVI.; but some time afterwards he was abandoned by his partisans, seized at Marseilles, from whence he was removed to Paris, where he was condemned to suffer death by the revolutionary tribunal, which sentence was executed Nov. 6, 1793.—Novw. Dict. Hist.

ORLEANS (Louis), an advocate in the parliament of Paris, who signalized himself by his fanaticism in the wars of the league. He wrote against Henry IV. with great virulence; but was pardoned by that monarch. He died in 1627, aged 87. He wrote an Address to the Catholics of England; Commentaries on Tacitus and Seneca, and other works.—Moreri.

ORLEANS (Peter Joseph), a jesuit, was born at Bourges in 1641. He was professor of the belles lettres in his society, and died at Paris in 1698. Father d'Orleans wrote a History of the Revolutions of England, 3 vols. 4to. and 4 vols. 12mo. a work of some merit; History of the Revolutions of Portugal, 5 vols. 12mo.; a History of the two Tartar Conquerors, Chunchi and Canhi, 8vo.; the Life of Father Cotton, the Jesuit, 12mo.; Lives of Lewis de Gonzaga, and other Jesuits; 2 vols. of Sermons, &c.—Moreri.

OROSIO (Balthasar), a famous Spanish jew, was born at Seville, and secretly bred up in the jewish religion, though he outwardly professed the roman catholic, and became professor of metaphysics at the university of Salamanca. He applied to the study of medicine, but being suspected of judaism, he was seized by the inquisition, and kept in prison three years, during which he suffered dreadful tortures. On regaining his liberty he went to France, and from thence to Amsterdam, where he practised physic, and was circumcised, on which occasion he changed the name of Balthasar to Isaac. He died in 1687. Orosio wrote a book against Spinoza, entitled Certamen philosophicum. Limborch had a conference with this jew on the subject of the christian religion, and of which he published a celebrated book with this title, Amica Collatio cum erudito Judeo, 4to.—Basnage's Hist. of the Jews.

OROSIUS (Paul), a Spanish divine in the 5th century, was the disciple of St. Augustin, who sent him to Jerusalem to consult Jerome concerning the origin of the soul. By the advice of the same father, he undertook a History of the World to A.D. 916. He also wrote a Treatise on Free Will, and other works.—Moreri. Dupin.

ORPHEUS, of Thrace, a Greek poet, who flourished before Homer. He was the disciple of Linus, and the master of Musæus. His works are lost, except a few fragments, but their authenticity is doubted.—Vossius.

born at Padua in 1617. He wrote several volumes of lyric poetry in Italian; the History of Padua, and several works on antiquarian subjects. He died in 1678.—Tiraboschi.

ORSATO (John Baptist) a learned physician and antiquary, was born at Padua in 1673, and died in 1729. He wrote, Dissertatio epistolaris de Lucernis antiquis; I'c Sternis veterum; Dissertatio de Paterna antiquorum.—Tiraboschi.

ORSI (John Joseph), an Italian writer, was born at Bologna, in 1652, of a noble family. He studied mathematics and natural philosophy with ardour, and had also a good taste for poetry. He died in 1733. His works are, Sonatas, Pastorals, and other poems; a Defence of some Italian Authors; Letters; Life of Louis de Sales. He is not to be confounded with Francis Joseph Orsi, a dominican and cardinal, who wrote an Ecclesiastical History in 20 vols. 4to.; and a Treatise entitled, Infallibilitas Act. Romani Pontificis, 3 vols. 4to. He was a native of Tuscany, and died in 1761.—Ibid.

ORTELIUS (Abraham), a celebrated geographer, was born at Antwerp in 1527. He became so eminent for his mathematical and geographical knowledge as to be called the Ptolemy of his age. He was also appointed geographer to the king of Spain. He died at Antwerp in 1598. His works are, Theatrum Orbis Terrarum, folio; Synonyma Geographia; Aurei Seculi Imago; Itinerarum per nonnullas Gallie Belgice partes; Syntagma herbarum encomiasticum.—Moreri.

ORTON (Job), an eminent non-conformist divine, was a native of Shrewsbury, where he received part of his education, which was completed under Dr. Doddridge at Northampton. On entering into the ministry he became pastor of a congregation at Kidderminster, and afterwards at Shrewsbury: some years before his death he retired from ministerial duty, and died in 1783, aged 66. Mr. Orton wrote, 1. the Life of Dr. Doddridge, which is a very excellent piece of biography; 2. Sermons to the Aged, 12mo.; 3. Sacramental Meditations, 12mo.; 4. Discourses on Christian Worship, 12mo.; 5. Discourses on Practical Subjects, 8vo. After his death was printed his Practical Exposition of the Old Testament, 6 vols. 8vo.; and Mr. Stedman, a clergyman at Shrewsbury, published a volume of excellent Letters, which shew Mr. Orton's piety and liberality of sentiment to great advantage.—Biog. Brit. Orton's Letters.

ORVILLE (James Philip de), a learned critic, was born at Amsterdam in 1696. He became professor of history, eloquence, and Greek, at his native place, but resigned that office in 1742, and died in 1751. He wrote, 1. Observationes miscellanee novæ, in conjunction with Burman; 2.

Critica Vannus in iuanes Joannis Cornelii Pavonis paleas, &c. 3. Observations on Sicily.—Novæ Diss. Hist.

OSBORNE (Francis), an English gentleman, was born in Bedfordshire about 1588. He became master of the horse to the earl of Pembroke, and in the troubles during the reign of Charles I. he joined the parliament. Mr. Osborne wrote, Advice to a Son, and Letters and Poems, 2 vols. which were once popular. He died in 1638.—Great Hist. Diss.

OSIANDER (Andrew), a German divine, was born in Bavaria in 1498. He studied at Wittenberg and Nuremberg, and was one of the first disciples of Luther. Osiander became minister and professor at Konigsberg, where he distinguished himself by a peculiar doctrine on justification, which he asserted to be effected in us by the union of God with our souls. This notion he zealously defended, and opposed Luther with great fury. He died in 1552. He wrote, Harmonia Evangelica, folio; Epistola ad Zuinglium de Eucharistia; Dissertationes duæ de Lege et Evangelio et Justificatione; Liber de Imagine Dei, quid sit. His son, Luke Osiander, became a Lutheran minister, and died at Tübingen in 1604. He wrote, an Institution of the Christian Religion; an Abridgement of the Centuriators of Magdeburg, and other works. There was another Luke Osiander, who was chancellor of Tübingen, and died in 1638. He wrote on the Omnipresence of Christ as Man, &c.—Melch. Adam. Vit. Germ. Teol.

OSIUS, bishop of Cordova in Spain, was born in 257. He became the confidant of the emperor Constantine in ecclesiastical matters, who, by his persuasions, convened, in 323, the council of Nice, where Osius presided. The emperor Constantius persecuted him with so much cruelty to make him turn Arian, that Osius, at the age of 100, was induced to sign a confession of faith prescribed to him. He was then permitted to return to his diocese, where he died soon after extremely penitent for the weakness which he had betrayed, and renouncing the arian heresy with great fervour.—Dupin.

OSIUS, or OSIO (Felix), a learned Italian, was born at Milan in 1587. He became professor of rhetoric at Padua, where he died in 1631. His principal works are, 1. Romano-Græcia; 2. Tractatus de Sepulchris et Epitaphiis Ethnicorum et Christianorum; 3. Elogia Scriptorum illustrium; 4. Orationes; 5. Epistolarum duæ; 6. Remarks on the History of Mussati; 7. Collection of Writers on the History of Padua.—Tiraboschi.

OSMAN I. emperor of the Turks, was the son of Achmet I. and succeeded his uncle Mustapha in 1618. He declared war against Poland in 1621; but after several defeats he was obliged to conclude a disadvantageous peace. Attributing his bad success to the janissaries, he resolved to substitute a militia of Arabs in their room, which so provoked them that they deposed Osman, and placed Mustapha on the throne, who caused the young emperor to be strangled in 1622.—Univ. Hist.

OSMAN II. succeeded his brother Mahomet in 1754, and died in 1757.

OSMOND (St.), was born in Normandy of a noble family. In 1066 he followed William the Conqueror to England, and was made by him chancellor of the kingdom, and bishop of Salisbury. He reformed the liturgy for his diocese, which form became general throughout the kingdom, under the name of the liturgy of Salisbury. He died in 1099, and was canonized by Calixtus III.—Dupin.

OSORIO (Jerome), a Portuguese bishop, was born at Lisbon in 1506. He was professor of divinity at Coimbra, and afterwards bishop of Sylves. He died in 1580. His works were collected at Rome in 1592, into 4 vols. folio. On account of the elegance of his Latin style he was called the Cicero of Portugal. His nephew, Jerome Osorio, wrote his Life. He was canon of Evora.—Moreri.
